The entrance into the old dock from the old harbour was through its basin, situate within of the respondents' parishes. The liability of the appellants to be rated in the parish of Sculcoates established in Reg. v. Sculcoates, 12 East, 40.

The 42 Geo. 3, c. 91, ss. 1, 6, provides for making additional basins and docks at Kingston-upon-Hull, viz. "The Humber Dock and Basin," and sec. 6 renders the 14 Geo. 3, c. 56, applicable to the additional basin or dock and works. Sec. 56 gives power to purchase land for a third dock to meet the probable wants of the port.

By the 45 Geo. 3, c. 42, the same rights and privileges as then belonged to the port of Kingston-upon-Hull are extended to the docks and basins formed under the 42 Geo. 3, c. 91, and the same regulations and duties are imposed upon vessels entering into or loading or unloading therein, and upon goods, &c. loaded or unloaded in or passing through the same, as they were subject to in the port of Kingston-upon-Hull.

The Humber Dock and Basin and then the Junction Dock were completed. Additional docks were next made,—the Victoria Dock and the Railway Dock,—under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 103, and the provisions of the former Acts incorporated into this last Act.

The dock master had power to remove the vessels from one dock to another, when obstructing the despatch of business. All the docks with the exception of the Victoria Dock, communicate with each; but it is intended that, when the works in progress are complete, the Victoria Dock shall communicate with the others, so that vessels entering one dock will be able to pass through and use all the docks.

No separate accounts are kept for the several docks, but the whole expenditure is carried to one general account. One set of officers superintend the entire docks (with the exception of interior officers or servants for each separate dock). The duties of the dock master extend over all the docks, but his assistants are assigned to separate docks. There are no separate or distinct rates or duties of tonnage payable for the use of any particular dock, or of the old harbour; but the same rates and duties are payable into whatever dock vessels may go, and whether they use only one dock or more, or all the docks, and whether they use the old harbour or not, and whether they load or unload all the cargo in one dock, or part in one and part in another. The duties attach and are payable as soon as the vessels enter any of the docks or old harbour.

Tonnage dues are received for vessels using the old harbour only, and since Reg. v. The Hull Dock Company, 7 Q.B. 2, are only rateable to the relief of the poor for the dues paid by vessels which use the docks, and not for dues paid by vessels which enter the port or use the old harbour only, a separate account of the latter dues being kept.

The area of the docks within the different parishes of Holy Trinity and St. Mary, and Sculcoates and Drypool respectively was admitted.

The net rateable value on which the appellants were rated, and the rate appealed against, had been fixed as follows:—From the gross receipts in respect of all the tonnage dues for the use of all or any of their docks, or the old harbour, were deducted first, the proper deductions usual in such cases, and then the amount of tonnage dues received in respect of vessels using the old harbour only. The balance, after making these deductions, was then divided into two parts in the proportion which the area of the docks and basin situate within the parishes of Holy Trinity and St. Mary bears to the area of that part of the old dock which is situate within the parish of Sculcoates; from the amount of this proportionate sum in respect of the area of land in the parishes of Holy Trinity and St. Mary the sum of 525*l.* was deducted for tonnage dues in the Victoria dock only.

The appellants contended that the entire rateable value of all their docks and basins, including the Victoria Dock and basin, ought to be jointly taken and then apportioned among the several parishes and places within which the same docks and basins are respectively situated in proportion to the areas of such docks and basins respectively within such parishes and places.

The respondents contended that both the rateable value and the area of the Victoria Dock and Basin ought to be excluded in calculating and apportioning the rateable value of the docks and basins situate within the parishes of Holy Trinity and St. Mary.

The Court held that the principle contended for by the respondents was right. But if this Court shall be of opinion that such principle is wrong, the order of Sessions and the rates are to amended as agreed upon.

W. H. Watson and Archbold, in support of the Order of Sessions, contended that the acreage principle ought not to be adopted, for in the case of the Victoria Dock the profits were earned wholly in the parish of Drypool. (Reg. v. Hull Dock Company, 7 Q. B. 2.) [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—That case will not assist us in deciding the present, for it does not enter into the principle of distribution. There the question was, whether the docks were rateable at all; here that is not disputed.] The part of the docks in one parish may be exceedingly valuable, and the part in another parish of very little value, and yet it is said the profits are to be clubbed together, and a division made according to the land in each parish, without regard to its actual value. Here the docks are separate and distinct, and one or another may be blocked up altogether, and if one should be blocked up would the acreage principle be applied in favour of the parish in which that might be? Take the case of a canal, that is one continuous line, and one common concern, with one common staff of officers, yet the parochial principle is applied; why not, then, here also? (Reg. v. Kinglssinford, 7 B & C. 236.) [ERLE, J. That is because you do not use the whole line of canal. But in these docks a general ship for the same toll may go round and unload or pick up her cargo at all the different warehouses.] Reg. v. The South-Western Railway Company, 1 Q. B. 563; and Reg. v. Woking, 4 A. & E. 40, were then cited. [WIGHTMAN, J.—How can you distinguish this case from one dock in different parishes?] Suppose the company were to let the Victoria Dock, of course the lessee would be entitled to the tolls on a vessel coming into that dock, and would be rateable only to the parish of Drypool. (Reg. v. The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company, 15 Q. B.)

Hall and Campbell Foster, for the appellants, were not called upon.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that our judgment should be for the appellants for the reasons thrown out during the argument. The question here is not as to the rule for rating these docks, but as to the mode of distributing the proceeds of the rate among the different parishes. The parochial principle is, no doubt, to be adopted whenever it is practicable, but can that be adopted where the whole concern is one concern, and part in one parish and part in another? I do not see how any other than the acreage principle can be adopted in this case. The toll is paid for the use of land in two different parishes, and the land in one parish is just as much the meritorious cause of the toll as the land in the other parish. When the toll is paid a party has the right to carry his vessel into the other dock as well as into the dock in which the vessel first entered. The parochial earnings principle is clearly not applicable to such a case, and the acreage principle is the only other that can be applied.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The Court consistently with its former decisions would apply the parochial principle to this case if it could be applied, but here it is wholly inapplicable. These docks consist of different compartments in different parishes. And there is one toll for using the whole of the docks. It is impossible to apply the parochial earnings principle, and it cannot be distinguished from the case put in the course of the argument of one dock comprising an area parts of which are in different parishes.

ERLE, J. It appears to me that the whole of these docks form one entire rateable subject, and that the profit is derived from each part, but the toll is paid for the power of using the whole. If so then the rateable value must be apportioned to each parish in proportion to the quantity of land in each parish. This is like Reg. v. Hammersmith Bridge Company, 15 Q. B. 369, where a bridge was half in parish H. and half in parish B. and the toll was taken in parish H. only for use of the bridge, and it was held that the company was to be assessed on an equal sum in each parish. So here the rate must be apportioned on the same principle.

CROMPTON, J. concurred.

REG. v. THE LEEDS AND BRADFORD RAILWAY COMPANY.

Jervis Act—11 & 12 Vict. c. 13—8 Vict. c. 20. The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43 (relating to justices of the peace), is retrospective; and therefore where a complaint which arose in 1847 was not made till nearly four years afterwards, and the justices made an order thereon, this Court quashed the order, as having been made upon a complaint the matter of which arose more than six months before the order. (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11.)

Rule nisi for quashing an order of justices removed by certiorari, whereby they awarded a sum of money to be paid by the Leeds and Bradford Railway Company, pursuant to the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 Vict. c. 20.

The damage in respect of which the compensation had been awarded was done in the years 1846 and 1847, and the complaint and order were made nearly four years after.

Addison shewed cause.—The first ground on which this rule was obtained was, that it does not appear that the cause of complaint arose within six months from the time when the complaint to the justices and the order were made. This objection is founded on 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, which limits the time for making any complaint to six months from the act done. This provision is not retrospective; and before this Act there was no limited time—the party might have laid his complaint at any time. And it is a principle of construction not to defeat rights unless the construction of an Act of Parliament is clearly to destroy them. (Moon v. Durden, 2 Ex. 22, and cases there cited.) This is an order not made under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, but under the 8 Vict. c. 20. [It is unnecessary to report the argument on the other points.]

Hall, in support of the rule.—The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, was intended to apply to every complaint laid after the passing of that Act, and its coming into operation on the 2nd October, 1848, sec. 38. [He was then stopped by the Court.]

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—If the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, has a retrospective operation, this case falls within it. Now, if it had been that the Act had come into operation immediately, the hardship would have been so great that we should not have construed it retrospectively, for the legislature could never have intended to inflict such hardship. But here by sec. 38 they give a time from the 14th August, 1848, when the Act passed, until the 2nd October, 1848, a period of upwards of six weeks, within which bygone complaints may be brought before the proper tribunal. That removes the difficulty; and Towler v. Chatterton, 6 Bing. 256 is strongly in point to shew that this Act is retrospective.

The rest of the Court concurring.

Rule absolute.

REG. v. WILSON and ANOTHER. (a)

Road—Person having management of—8 Vict. c. 20, s. 57—Public road cut through by railway.

A person who dedicates a road to the public, and voluntarily repairs it, who makes sewers under it, and manholes, and whose consent had been always obtained by parties wishing to communicate with the sewers, or interfere in any way with the road, is not a person having the management of the road within the meaning of 8 Vict. c. 20, s. 57 (Railway Clauses Consolidation Act), and is not entitled to sue for the penalty thereby imposed on railway companies, for not restoring within the given time a road through which the railway has cut.

A person having the management of the road within that section, must be a person clothed with some public duty, as trustee, commissioner, surveyor, or the like.

Mandamus against the defendants, two of the justices of the county of Kent.

The writ recited an information laid before the said justices, that the South Eastern Railway Company had cut and crossed a carriage-road (the Plumstead Villas-road). That Lewis Davis alone had the management thereof, and that he had not consented to an extension of the period allowed to the railway company for restoring the road, and that the road was not restored, whereby the railway company had forfeited to the said Lewis Davis 5*l.* and that he prayed that the company might be summoned to answer the premises.

The issuing of the summons and the hearing were then recited, and also that it was proved that Davis was seised in fee of the land over which the road was made, and that he made and dedicated it to the public in August 1846, and that he had from that time, at his own expense, repaired the road, and made a sewer under it, and drains and man-holes and frames for the gratings in the road, and that when any communication was made with the sewer, or any interference made with the road, Davis's leave was first obtained, and that the road was a public highway, and that the parish had never adopted it, or become liable to keep it in repair. It was further recited that the justices had refused to determine that Davis was the person having the management of the said road, within the meaning of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845.

(a) June 2, 1851, a rule nisi was granted, calling on the defendants and the railway company to shew cause why the defendants should not proceed to adjudicate and determine upon the said information; but, on shewing cause before Wightman, J. it was contended that this was not a case within the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, and that the question ought to be decided by mandamus. The rule was made absolute by consent for a mandamus.

The writ then commanded the justices to proceed to determine that Davis was the person having the management of the road, &c.

Return.—That it was not proved before the justices that Davis held the office of surveyor of the highways, wherefore the justices thought it doubtful whether Davis was in point of law the person having the management of the said road within the meaning of the said Act.

General demurrer to this return.

Needham (Raymond with him), in support of the demurrer. The sole question is, whether Davis is the manager of the road, within the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 57 (The Railway Clauses Consolidation Act). That section enacts, "That if any such road be not restored within the periods fixed for that purpose, the company shall forfeit to the trustees, commissioners, surveyor, or other person having the management of the road interfered with by the company, if a public road, or, if a private road, to the owner thereof, 5*l.* for every day after the expiration of such periods during which such road shall not be so restored." Every person who dedicates a road to the public and de facto or de jure has the management of it, is a person having the management within the meaning of the above provision. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—In what sense do you use the word management in your argument?] In comprehending such acts as appear in the mandamus to have been done by Davis. Certainly nothing has been done to make the parish liable to repair this road under the Highways Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, s. 23. And if Davis is not liable to repair the road, no one is. He might be indicted for a public nuisance, if the road was suffered to be out of repair. (Bac. Ab. Highways, F.; Reg. v. Kerrison, 3 M. & S. 526.) A party may by his acts impose on himself the liability of repairing a road. (The Grand Surrey Canal Company v. Hale, 1 M. & G. 395.) Here Davis created the road, has always repaired and superintended it. [WIGHTMAN, J. If Davis sold the land, would the purchaser be bound to repair?] Davis would be bound to keep the road free from obstructions. (Roberts v. Hunt, 15 Q. B. 17.) The term manager is as extensive as possible, and was intended to include such persons as Davis.

W. H. Watson, for the defendants, was not called upon

The defendants' points were:—1. That the words "any other person having the management of the roads," in sec. 57, are to be construed as applicable to persons ejusdem generis with those before described, and as designating a person having a statutable or official authority or duty in reference to public roads. 2. That Davis does not appear to be liable to repair the road. 3. That if he is so, he is not thereby the person having the management of the road. 4. That if Davis be owner of the soil of the road, this does not make him a person having the management of the road. 5. That a private person, as such, cannot be a person having the management of a public road.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. — The question entirely turns on whether Lewis Davis is a person having the management of this road within the 8 Vict. c. 20, s. 57. If he has the management, then the penalty has been incurred, and he has a right to resort to his remedy for it; but if he is not the manager, the penalty has not been incurred. The manager must correspond to the persons described by the words used before, trustees, commissioners, and surveyor. In what respect was Davis the manager of the road? If it had been shewn that the dedicator of a road to the public was bound to keep it in repair, or if he had been liable to repair it ratione tenuræ, there might be reason to consider him as having the management of the road for the purpose of this Act. Before the Highway Act the dedicator was not bound to repair the road, but the obligation was thrown on the parish; and the exempting of the parish in that Act, unless certain things are done, cannot be said to throw the burden on the dedicator. It seems to me that that Act has no such operation. Here, if the railway company do not remove the obstruction, and restore the road, they may be liable to an indictment; but I think the Highway Act does not throw the onus of repairs on the dedicator. By dedication, he means the road to be used by the public when it can be used as such; and if he is guilty of any obstruction to it, he may be liable to be indicted; but if there is no obstruction, and the public have not the enjoyment of the road from the state of the weather, or from its being out of repair, the burden of repair is not thrown upon the dedicator. There is no duty here on the dedicator ratione tenuræ, and in that respect, the cases of bridges formed by canal companies are not applicable. Neither is he bound to repair ratione clausuræ, as in the case of lands adjoining a road inclosed by a party, who is thereby bound to repair as long as the inclosure exists. There is no authority to be found that the dedicator of a road is bound to repair, and the Acts that have been done by Lewis Davis to this road are voluntary and not compulsory.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The question is, not whether the railway company is not liable by indictment for having interfered with this road, but whether it is liable to this particular penalty to Davis as the manager of the highway? The Act treats a person as the manager on whom the duty is cast by law. Is any such duty cast on Davis? It is said that there is, by reason of his having dedicated the road to the public, and that therefore he is bound to repair it, unless it is the duty of some other person to repair it. Before the Highway Act it was the duty of the parish, and not of the dedicator, to repair it. No duty is cast upon him by that Act, and in all that he does to the road he is a volunteer.

ERLE, J.—The penalty is given on account of the interference with a public right, and no one but a trustee, commissioner, surveyor, or a person having the management of the road can sue for it. The claimant is not entitled to recover it unless he is within one of the classes above mentioned; and it appears to me that he is not within any of those classes, unless he is charged with some duty to the public. Davis has acted throughout as a private proprietor, and for his own private purposes. I know not his motive for acting at all; but he is not clothed with any duty to the public, and certainly there is no duty incumbent on him to repair the road in order to protect the rights of the public as passengers.

CROMPTON, J. delivered a similar judgment.

WALKER AND OTHERS v. THE BRITISH GUARANTEE ASSOCIATION.

Building society - Liability of treasurer.

A treasurer of a building society having received money for the society, which it was his duty to carry to the society's bankers, was robbed of it by irresistible violence, without any default of his, before he could pay it into the bank:

Held, that his sureties were not liable to the society for such money upon a covenant for his duly accounting for all moneys received on account of the society, the declaration alleging the receipt of 170l. on account of the society, and, as a breach, the not paying over that sum.

Covenant by the plaintiffs, trustees of a building society, against the defendants, as sureties, for the due performance by one Jones of his duty as treasurer to the society.

The declaration alleged that John Jones, as such treasurer, received 170*l.*; and that, according to the rules of the society, as such trustee he ought to have paid over the same moneys to the members of the society, to the credit of their account, within a certain time after he received the same, namely, during the next day: that he did not do so, nor had he paid the same, whereby the said moneys were lost to the association.

Plea That after Jones had received the moneys, and before the time when he ought to or could have paid the same, he, without any default or negligence, or want of due care on his part, was robbed by violence of the whole of the said moneys, by the same being feloniously and violently stolen and carried away from his person, and thereby he was unavoidably, and without any default of his, prevented from paying the said moneys to the bankers of the society. Issue thereon.

At the trial the verdict was found for the defendants upon this issue.

Knowles (Mellish with him) moved to enter up judgment for the plaintiffs upon this issue non obstante veredicto. The plea is no answer to the action. The accounting in this covenant, means not the rendering of an account, but paying over the money to the society. By the Friendly Societies Act (10 Geo. 4, c. 56), incorporated into the Building Societies Act, the duty and liability of treasurer are regulated, and sec. 20 gives priority to the society for moneys due to it from him over other creditors of the treasurer; and by sect. 22 the treasurer is to be personally responsible and liable for all monies actually received by him on account of the society. So that by the receipt of this money Jones became a debtor to the society, and the plea affords no answer for the breach of this covenant. This section makes the treasurer a debtor for the moneys received, and nothing but payment will discharge the covenant. It is no excuse for a debtor to say that he has been robbed; and by the operation of this statute a treasurer is more than a mere bailee of the moneys entrusted to him. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. —Do you say the statute makes the treasurer responsible in all cases?] No, only that the treasurer stands in the same relation to the society as regards liability as an innkeeper or carrier to their customers, and robbery is no answer to an action against them.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Wednesday, April 21.—Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—We are of opinion that there ought not to be judgment for the plaintiffs non obstante veredicto. We consider the plea found for the defendants to be clearly a sufficient answer to the action. The condition of the bond is that John Jones should duly discharge the duties of his office as treasurer to a building society, and obey the directions of the trustees, and duly account to the trustees for all the money, goods, and chattels which he might receive on account of the society. [His lordship then stated the pleadings.] Jones is charged as bailee of specific moneys, which identical moneys it was his duty to carry to the bankers of the society. And the plea being found to be true; the defence is the loss of the money by irresistible violence. The general doctrine is not denied, that if the subject-matter be lost by "vis major" (which we translate "irresistible violence"), the bailee is not responsible. If, then, J. Jones, the principal, was guilty of no default, the defendants, as his sureties, cannot be. Reliance was placed upon the statute referred to, by which it is said, that as soon as the treasurer of such a society receives any moneys for such society, he, eo instanti, becomes the debtor of the society, and that payment alone can discharge him from his liability. We think that this must be confined to moneys received by him which he might use as his own, he being at liberty to pay the debt with other moneys. He cannot, in respect of the general receipt by him as treasurer, be considered both as bailee of the specific money and a debtor to the same amount, with the power of discharging his engagement by paying an equivalent sum from any source, or in any denomination of coin. According to the averment of this declaration, John Jones was undoubtedly bailee, and therefore he was not a debtor to that amount. As bailee in the relation in which he stood to the society, he was discharged by the robbery. If this were not so, his liability would be greater than that of a common carrier, for he would not be discharged by the act of God or the king's enemies; and, indeed, Mr. Knowles was driven to contend that if, while carrying to the bankers a bag of gold containing 170*l.* an earthquake had swallowed it up, he would still be a debtor to the society for the amount. But we are of opinion that the statute relied upon was not intended to cast such an extraordinary liability on the officer of such a society or upon his sureties. We, entertaining no doubt upon the point, think Mr. Knowles should not take a rule.

Rule refused.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE.

Lunatic order - Appeal—To what sessions—Stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, s. 62.

The appeal against an order for the maintenance of a lunatic pauper in an asylum under sec. 62 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, must in all cases be made to the Quarter Sessions within the jurisdiction of which the parish from which the pauper was removed to the asylum is situate.

A rule had been obtained for a mandamus to the Justices of Lancashire to hear an appeal against an order for the maintenance of a lunatic pauper, made under s. 62, of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, by two justices of the county of Lancaster, within the borough of Liverpool. On the 5th Aug. 1851, the pauper being then lunatic and chargeable to the parish of Liverpool, which is wholly situate within the borough was removed to a lunatic asylum by order of a magistrate who was in the commission for the borough as well as the county. Subsequently, the settlement of the pauper was adjudged to be in the parish of Llandudno, in North Wales, and the order in question made upon that parish for the costs of maintenance. The borough of Liverpool has a separate Court of Quarter Sessions; but the charter of the borough contains no non-intromittant clause. Against the last-mentioned order the parish of Llandudno gave two notices of appeal, one to the borough and the other to the county sessions; but the former was abandoned. Upon the trial of the appeal at the Lancashire County Sessions, an objection was taken that the appeal ought to have been to the Liverpool Borough Sessions; and the Court so holding, the appeal was dismissed.

Pashley now shewed cause.—This case is governed by R. v. The Recorder of Liverpool, 4 New S. C. 116, where it was held that the appeal against an order of removal must be to the borough sessions, when the removal has taken place from a parish within the borough, overruling a dictum in R. v. The Justices of Lancashire, 12 Q. B. 305. The 62nd section of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, gives an appeal against the order for the maintenance of a lunatic pauper, "in like manner as if the same were a warrant of removal;" and if this had been a warrant of removal, the appeal must have been to the borough sessions, the sessions of the locality from which the pauper was removed. (3 & 4 Wm. & M. c. 11, s. 10; R. v. The Justices of Suffolk, 2 Q. B. 85.) The Court has exhibited its desire fully to carry out the intention of the Legislature by rendering the proceedings in the two cases as nearly as possible uniform. (R. v. The Justices of Glamorganshire, 3 New S. C. 515; R. v. St. Peter's in Barton-on-Humber, 15 Jur. 153.)

Archbold and Welsby, contrà.—The order for the costs of maintenance cannot be made by borough justices; and it would be strange if the appeal was given from an order by t[...]unty justices to the borough, and not to th[...] county sessions. Sec. 62 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, is satisfied by holding that the formal requisites of the appeal should be the same in both cases; and when it says, "in like manner as if the same were a warrant of removal," it means a warrant of removal made by county justices; in which case the appeal would be to the county sessions. R. v. The Justices of Lancashire, is expressly in point.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—This case turns entirely upon the construction to be put upon s. 62 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126; and we have merely to see what the Legislature intended by that enactment. This is matter positivi juris; and it cannot be doubted that it was competent to the Legislature to give an appeal to the borough sessions from an order made by county justices. The question is, whether they have done so. The appeal against this order is given "in like manner as if the same were a warrant of removal;" then what is that? It is an appeal to the Quarter Sessions of the place from which the removal takes place. So, therefore, the appeal against this order of maintenance must be to the Quarter Sessions of the place from which the pauper lunatic was removed to the asylum. That place was the parish of Liverpool; and the appeal, therefore, is given to the sessions of the borough of Liverpool, and to no other sessions. This follows from R. v. The Recorder of Liverpool, in which R. v. The Justices of Lancashire was considered; for that case was decided upon the ground that the removal took place from the borough, and not in the least upon the fact that the county justices who made the order were sitting in Liverpool at the time.

Rule discharged with costs.

BROUGHTON v. JACKSON.

False imprisonment—Justification—Suspicion.

To an action of false imprisonment and putting the plaintiff in irons, the defendant pleaded that he was commander of a ship, and the defendant was his servant, and had charge of his cabin and its contents, and access thereto: that two sums of money were stolen on two occasions out of defendant's desk in his cabin, which had been opened by means of a key: that plaintiff had access to where the key of the desk was kept, and that defendant believed no one could have had access to the key without the plaintiff's knowledge, and that defendant believed the plaintiff was either guilty or concerned in the stealing of the money. The plea averred that putting in irons was a reasonable mode of detainer.

At the trial the verdict on this plea was found for the defendant: and upon a motion in arrest of judgment, it was held to be a good defence to the action.

Trespass, for falsely imprisoning the plaintiff and putting him in irons.

Plea.—That the defendant was a lieutenant of the navy and commander of her Majesty's ship The Lucifer, on the high seas; and that the plaintiff was a servant of the defendant and steward on board, and had access to the defendant's cabin and charge of the goods and chattels of the defendant therein. That 2*l.* and 10*l.* were stolen on two several occasions from a desk in the defendant's cabin, and that the desk had been clandestinely opened by means of a key; that plaintiff had access to the place where the key of the desk was kept, and that defendant believed no other person than plaintiff could have had access to the key of the desk without the plaintiff's knowledge. That defendant having reasonable and probable cause of suspicion, and suspecting the plaintiff to have been guilty of, or concerned in, the stealing of the said moneys, committed the said trespasses in the declaration. The plea justified the putting of the plaintiff in irons "as a reasonable mode of detaining the plaintiff."

At the trial the jury found for the defendant on the plea of justification.

A rule nisi was obtained by the plaintiff to enter up judgment on that plea, non obstante veredicto, to come on as a concilium.

Keating (Pigot with him) shewed cause.—It is for the Court to say whether the facts in the plea shew a sufficient justification. The cases of actions for a malicious prosecution, without reasonable or probable cause, are analogous, and there [...] many which shew that such facts as are here pleaded would be amply sufficient evidence of a reasonable and probable cause for prosecuting. Mure v. Kaye, 4 Saun. 31, cited in moving for the rule, was on demurrer, and not after verdict. The following cases were then cited:—Beckwith v. Philby, 6 B. & C. 631; Musgrove v. Newell, 1 M. & W. 582; 2 Q. B. 186, S. C. mentioned per Alderson, B.; Davis v. Russell, 5 Bing. 354; and West v. Baxendale, 9 C. B. 141.

Prideaux, in support of the rule.—The plea ought to have shewn such grounds of suspicion as would justify a reasonable man in imprisoning a person. As captain of a ship of war the defendant had no power to act magisterially or to imprison the plaintiff. (22 Geo. 2, c. 23; 19 Geo. 3, c. 17.) Larceny is not cognisable by a court-martial. On general grounds this plea is insufficient. The suspicion of felony must be well grounded. At any rate there is no justification for putting the plaintiff in irons. [CROMPTON, J.—The plea justifies the putting in irons, "the same being a reasonable mode of detainer," and the jury found that it was.] The plea amounts to no more than this, that there was a felony committed at sea, and that defendant suspected the plaintiff on grounds that are not sufficient, and such as would place every servant in peril.

Keating, in reply. If the coercion was excessive the plaintiff should have new assigned.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that the plea is sufficient, and that it would have been sufficient on demurrer. The plea must shew reasonable and probable grounds of suspicion. It seems to me that the facts in the plea are sufficient. It is enough if the plea sets out facts which raise a reasonable suspicion, without setting out all the evidence thereof. The plaintiff contends that some positive act should have been alleged, and that the defendant's belief is not sufficient. But irrespective of the defendant's belief the facts pleaded do shew that it might be reasonably inferred that the plaintiff was the thief. As to the second objection that there is no justification pleaded to putting the plaintiff in irons; that is not so. That act is justified as a reasonable mode of detainer, and that has been proved. If there had been any excess of restraint that should have been new assigned.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It is for the Court to say whether the facts in the plea shew a reasonable cause for the acts done by the defendant. I think the jury having found the plea for the defendant that they do shew ample and sufficient cause. As to the second objection, there is a direct allegation in the plea that the putting in irons was a reasonable mode of detainer, and there is nothing to shew to the Court that it was an unreasonable one.

ERLE, J. delivered a similar judgment.

CROMPTON, J. I agree that the plea states a sufficient ground for the acts done, but I do not proceed on the ground that the defendant was justified, because he believed plaintiff to be the thief, or because he acted bonâ fide. The facts stated are rather slighter than those in any case that has yet come before the Courts, but taking them all together I think the plea sufficient. As to the second objection, if any circumstances can be imagined under which it would be right to have placed the plaintiff in irons the plea may be sustained.

Rule discharged.

STAPLETON v. CROFT.

Husband and wife—Competency of wife as witness—14 & 15 Vict. c. 99.

The Evidence Amendment Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99) does not render a wife competent as a witness for her husband in an action to which he is a party.

ERLE, J. dissentiente.

A rule nisi for a new trial having been obtained by Humfrey, in this case, which was tried before Erle, J. and a verdict found for the defendant,

M. Chambers and Welsley shewed cause. The only question is whether the wife of the defendant, who was admitted and examined as a witness on behalf of the defendant, was a competent witness under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99 (the Evidence Amendment Act). It was contended that the grounds on which a husband and wife were not admissible for or against each other, previous to the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, were different in civil and criminal cases, and that they were not admissible in civil cases for each other, on the ground that their interests were identical, nor against each other on grounds of public policy. (Co. Litt. 6 b; 1 Bl. Com. 443; 2 Hale P. C. 279; 2 Hawk. P. C. sec. 67, p. 600; Bul. N. P. 286; Rex v. Cliviger, 2 T. R. 265; 4 T. R. 678; Bentley v. Cook, Brownl. 47; O'Connor v. Marjoribanks, 4 M & G. 410: 2 Stark on Evid. 549; Taylor on Evid. 898.) [WIGHTMAN, J.—Where neither is a party to a suit, the wife may be called as a witness to contradict her husband, or even to depose, as was done in Doe d. Annesley v. Anglesey, 17 St. Tri. 1276, that he is not to be believed upon his oath.] Then the effect of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, which is an enabling statute, and to be construed so as to advance the object contemplated by its provisions, is to remove the reason of the rule excluding the wife as a witness on behalf of her husband, which was identity of interest, and that being removed, the wife's disability ceases, and the exclusion of her evidence by sec. 3, in criminal cases, is a strong argument to shew that it was intended that she should be admissible in civil cases.

Huddleston and Holl, in support of the rule.—There is no distinction in the grounds of the wife's inadmissibility in civil and criminal cases. (Rex v. Serjeant, R. & Moo. 352, Abbott.) It is necessary to look at Lord Denman's Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, and see how much of that is repealed by 14 & 14 Vict. c. 99, the 1st and 2nd sections of which latter Act apply to civil cases, and the 3rd to criminal cases. The wife is not a party to a suit in which her husband alone is suing, or being sued; nor is an action by her husband alone an action on her behalf. If she is competent, she is also compellable to give evidence by the same provision. Barbat v. Allen, 19 Law T. 65, Ex. is an unanimous decision of the Court of Ex. against the admissibility of the wife in this case.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. was sorry to say that, in his opinion, this rule ought to be made absolute, upon the ground that the wife had been improperly admitted as a witness. He said he was sorry, because, in his opinion, it would be an improvement of the law of evidence to admit her evidence, subject only to some restrictions. Thus she ought not in criminal cases to be admitted as a witness for or against her husband, and no communication that had passed between them in confidence ought to be disclosed. But with this limitation the proper administration of justice, and the investigation of truth, would be furthered by admitting her as a witness. However, on this matter he could not consult his private opinion, but must look to the language of the Act of Parliament, and see what the Legislature had enacted. It was clear that before Lord Denman's Act she could not be a witness for or against her husband; but in questions between strangers she might be a witness against her husband, or in contradiction of the evidence; as, for instance, in a case from the State Trials, where, in a contest between third persons, the husband had been called on one side, and the wife was produced on the other, to prove that he was not worthy of belief, for that she would not believe him on his oath. But where the husband was a party, it appeared to him (Lord Campbell) clear that she was not admissible as a witness, either for or against her husband. Such had been the general law before Lord Denman's Act, and that Act did not change the law in that respect. Then came the recent statute, which was known as Lord Brougham's Act, and for which in his opinion the country was much indebted to Lord Brougham, and that Act contained, in the second section, an enactment making the parties to the suit competent and compellable to give evidence; but it neither expressly nor impliedly made the wife a witness for or against her husband when he was a party to the suit. It did not expressly make her a witness—about that no one entertained any doubt; nor did it impliedly make her a witness. For she was not in law a party to suit, nor was it a suit brought on her behalf, when it was brought in the name of her husband, and in virtue of his rights. He need not refer to the account related by the late Lord Chancellor Truro, which shewed that the 3rd section of the statute could not be used impliedly to make the wife a witness, since that section had only been introduced to prevent the too extensive application of another section that had now been struck out, for in his opinion the statute itself was too clear to allow of the admissibility as a witness of the wife for or against her husband, in suits in which he was a party. He, therefore, entirely concurred with the construction which had been put upon this statute by the Court of Ex.; and as the wife had been admitted—and, as he thought, improperly admitted—as a witness, he was of opinion that the verdict could not be sustained, and that the rule for a new trial must be absolute.

WIGHTMAN, J. said that it was contended that the objection to the admissibility of the wife as a witness in a suit where her husband was a party was removed by the late statute. He was not of that opinion. In the first place, the terms of the statute only enabled and compelled the parties to the suit to be witnesses, and the wife was in such a case not a party. But, independently of the objection, on the very terms of the statute, it appeared to him that it never had been the intention of the Legislature to remove the objection of the wife's admissibility in such cases. The only ground of inadmissibility that was removed was that which was occasioned by the interest of the parties to the suit, and he did not think that, by any implication, the wife was thereby made admissible. The wife was properly excluded from being a witness for or against her husband, not only on the ground of the confidence which existed between them, and which, for the sake of the peace of their families and their own happiness, ought not to be disturbed, but also because the public had an interest in the preservation of domestic peace, and could not safely allow it to be exposed to danger.

CROMPTON, J. was clearly of the same opinion, and should have entertained no doubt whatever upon the question but for knowing that his brother Erle entertained a strong opinion the other way. The question depended entirely on the construction of the Act of Parliament, and he disclaimed any desire to express an opinion on the ground of what would be more or less politic, or what would be worse, or what might be better done by the Legislature. He should say nothing, therefore, on the question of what public policy required, or what was prudent or proper with a view to the preservation of the peace of families. He looked to the words of the Act alone. It was clear that the wife was not an admissible witness before the Act; and he thought that, as to the Act itself, neither in express words nor by implied intentions had she been made admissible. The learned judge went very minutely through the provisions of the Act, and said that neither the legal unity of person nor identity of interest of husband and wife could make the wife a party to a suit brought by her husband, and consequently she did not come within the second section of the statute. Nor could the third section, which contained the exceptions as to criminal cases, make her admissible as a witness, for those exceptions were directed to criminal cases, and could not be used to shew that in civil matters, because civil matters were not likewise excepted, the wife and the husband could be witnesses against each other. He was therefore of opinion that the construction which had been put upon this statute by the late Lord Chancellor (Lord Truro), and the Court of Ex. was correct; and that the evidence of the wife, in this case, had been improperly admitted, and that the rule for a new trial must be made absolute.

ERLE, J. was of opinion that this statute making parties competent witnesses had rendered the wives of those parties likewise competent. By the principles of law the interests of husband and wife were united; the old law prevented the husband from giving evidence because he was a party interested. When that ground of objection was removed, and he was made a witness notwithstanding his interest, the wife likewise became capable of being a witness, for her interest was the same as his. The competency of the husband being restored, that of the wife was restored with it. Though she had not a direct, she had an indirect, interest in a suit brought by her husband, and the law took no distinction of direct or indirect interest, but made all persons competent witnesses in civil cases, notwithstanding their interest. The same reason excluded and exempted the husband and the wife, and that reason being removed as to the one it was removed as to the other. It seemed to him that when the statute took away the incapacity of the husband, so far as the interest was concerned, it also took away that of the wife. That brought him to the question, whether there was any other principle of exclusion besides that of interest. It was said that there was, and the other principle thus referred to was that of preserving the peace of families. There was no doubt that the law did desire most carefully to protect all interests connected with marriage; but it gave a definite meaning to its restrictions, and merely prevented the wife from being a witness for or against the husband, where their joint interests were concerned, and it did so, no doubt, with a view to avoid anything that had a tendency to promote domestic discord. But if the suit applied to other persons, then the wife was a witness equally with the husband, and might be called, as in the case in the "State Trials," even to contradict her husband. That case shewed that the fact of marriage alone did not render her incompetent. The law, as it seemed to him, ought not to be inconsistent with itself, and yet it would be so, if, after getting rid of this objection of interest, it refused to allow the husband and wife to be called as witnesses in cases where the interests of the husband were concerned, while it allowed them to be called in opposition to each other in cases where the interests of other parties were concerned. And so again it would, according as the proceeding was of a civil or a criminal nature. If the husband was assaulted or libelled he might seek a remedy either by action or indictment. If he brought an action, it was now declared that his wife would be excluded, though he himself might be a witness; but if he proceeded by indictment both would be admitted. Most of the authorities were cases in which the testimony of the husband as well as that of the wife was excluded, and of course both ought to be admitted or both excluded. His lordship here went through the various authorities, and then proceeded. In the County Courts a wife had been admitted, and so she had in the Courts of Bankruptcy; and therefore it seemed to him that the Legislature had been guilty of great inconsistency if the construction to which he was opposed could be put upon the Act. If the case was considered with reference to the interests of truth, the restriction seemed to be absurd, and if with reference to the peace of families, it seemed to him that the supposition that a husband would suborn a wife to perjure herself in his behalf, or would punish her if she spoke the truth against him, was one which could not be made in the present day. The wife often possessed essential knowledge of her husband's affairs, and in some instances, as in this particular case, she acted as the agent, and managed the business as to which she was called upon to give evidence. It was important that, under such circumstances, her evidence should be admissible: and he thought he had shewn enough to excuse himself for dissenting from his brethren, and for saying that his opinion as to the admissibility of the wife as a witness in a suit where her husband was a party remain unchanged.

Rule absolute for a new trial.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, April 22.

Doe dem. MALLEY v. EVERITT.—Bramwell moved for a rule for a new trial herein, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. Rule refused.

BAKER v. BLACK.—Trespass q. c. f.: tried before Coleridge, J. in the Bail Court, when a verdict was found for the defendant. The defendant had pleaded several pleas, justifying on the ground that the locus in quo was a public highway or paved public place within the meaning of the 57 Geo. 3, c. 29. Knowles now moved for a new trial, on the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury that this was a paved public place or highway. It could not be a paved public place within the statute unless it was a highway; and it could not be a highway because it led only to a few private houses. (Hawk. P. C. Lib 1, c. 76, s. 1; Daniel v. North, 11 East, 375, n.; Woodyer v. Hadden, 5 Taunt. 125; Wood v. Veal, 5 B. & Ald. 454; Poole v. Huskinson, 11 M. & W. 827.) Lastly, an individual cannot abate a public nuisance unless he has sustained a particular injury. (Dimes v. Petley, 15 Q. B. Rep. 276.) Rule nisi.

POOLE v. PAYNE.—Trespass to a messuage, with a count de bonis asportatis, tried before Coleridge, J. in Surrey. There were several pleas, and the verdict was found for the plaintiff on some, and for the defendant on the other issues. Horn now moved to enter the verdict for the plaintiff on the latter issues. Rule refused.

BURLINGTON v. RICHARDSON.—This was an action on an award, tried before Coleridge, J. in Surrey, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff. Willes now moved to enter a nonsuit, or reduce the damages by 25*l.* or in arrest of judgment. The award was made upon a reference of an action of debt, in which, as to 25*l.* the defendant had suffered judgment by default; but as to the residue, had pleaded payment and set off; and by the terms of the submission, if the arbitrator found more than 25*l.* due, the defendant was to pay all the costs of the action, reference, and award. The arbitrator had found that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in 20*l.* beyond the 25*l.*; but the award was now objected to, on the ground that it contained no order to pay, and no finding as to the residue of the plaintiff's claim beyond the two sums of 20*l.* and 25*l.* Lastly, the damages are at all events too large, because they include the 25*l.* which cannot be recovered in this action. He cited Donlan v. Brett, 4 Nev & M. 854, Watkins v. Philpotts, 1 M'Clel & Y. 200, Doe v. Horner, 8 A. & E. 235. The COURT thought that there was nothing in the objections made to the award, but that the damages ought to be reduced, unless the plaintiff will consent to reduce the damages by 25*l.* Rule nisi.

FORIER v. MORRIS.—Crowder moved for leave to plead several matters. This was an action by the payee against the drawer of a foreign bill of exchange upon the refusal of the drawee to accept. The question was, whether the defendant should be allowed to plead that he delivered the bill on the terms of being paid, according to the usage of merchants, on the first foreign post-day after delivery; but had not been paid. (Byles on Bills, p. 97, citing Munroe v. Borther, 19 L. J. C.P. 133.) Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF ST. MARY, ISLINGTON.—Pashley moved for a mandamus to the inhabitants of the above-named parish to assemble in vestry, and ascertain the sum which would be necessary to make provision for the relief of the poor and other charges, pursuant to a local Act, 5 Geo. 4, c. cxxv. s. 30. Writ granted.

REG. v. THE YORK AND NORTH MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.—Hugh Hill moved for a rule calling on the defendants to shew cause why they should not permit the prosecutor of the mandamus to inspect their books, so far as they relate to the matters in question. (Burrell v. Nicholson, 1 Moo. & Rob. 304; 1 Myln & K. 608; Smith v. Duke of Beaufort, 1 Hare, 507.) Wigram on Discovery, was also cited. Rule nisi.

WHITING v. HOWE.—Milward moved for a distringas to compel appearance. The only difficulty was, that since the calls were made the writ had expired.

Rule refused.

REG. v. THE TITHE COMMISSIONERS.—Archibald moved to set aside a rule for a prohibition. Since the judgment of this Court for the defendants on a mandamus, the reason for the prohibition had ceased. Rule nisi.

KEANE v. STUART.—Watson and Maynard shewed cause against a rule for a new trial. The Attorney-General and Keane contrà.

Rule absolute for a new trial on payment of costs.

REG. v. WHITEHOUSE and OTHERS.—Motteram moved for a rule to shew cause why the commissioner who had sworn one of the affidavits, upon which a rule for a new trial had been granted in this case, should not attend at the Crown Office to complete the jurat. He had omitted the words "Before me." (Reg. v. Bloxam, 2 D. & L. 108, was mentioned.) Rule nisi.

Friday, April 23.

THE PROPRIETORS OF THE KENNET AND AVON CANAL v. WITHERINGTON.—Phipson (Keating with him) for the plaintiffs. Whateley (Gray with him) for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

THE CROSS KEYS BRIDGE COMPANY v. THE COMMISSIONERS OF MENE OUTFALL.—Special case. J. Wilde (Bubb with him) for the plaintiffs. Keating (Phipson with him) for the defendants. Cur. adv. vult.

SMITH v. JAMES.—Demurrer to plea. Macnamara in support of demurrer. H. J. Hodgson contrà.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Saturday, April 24.

REG. v. LONGWOOD. Cur. adv. vult.

REG. v. REV. E. WILLIAMS.—Welsby shewed cause. Pashley contrà. Rule absolute.

REG. v. SLAWSTON.—Pashley and Merewether in support of the Order of Sessions. Maunsell and O'Brien contrà.

Rule discharged.

REG. v. WICKENBY.—Wilmore in support of the Order of Sessions. Boden contrà. Rule discharged.

Monday, April 26.

REG. v. RAMSDALE.—Rule to impose a fine for non-repair of a highway. Knowles, for the prosecution. Hall, for the defendant. Rule absolute.

Ex parte THE TOWN CLERK OF MORPETH.—Adolphus moved for a rule for a mandamus to the Mayor to elect two auditors and an assessor.

Rule absolute in the first instance.

MEYER v. THORNTON.—T. Jones moved for a commission to examine witnesses viva voce at San Francisco. The plaintiff and witnesses were resident there, and the agent in London had not sufficient instructions to enable him to frame interrogatories. By the COURT.—The plaintiff must give to the defendant a statement of the points as to which he proposes to examine the witnesses, and the names of all the witnesses whom he now knows and intends to examine. Upon those terms, Rule nisi.

REG. v. DANIEL.—Willes moved for a rule for an attachment for disobedience to a subpœna from the Crown-office, obtained by the overseers of Merthyr Tydvil.

Rule nisi.

SIGRIST v. DRUMMOND.—Wordsworth shewed cause against a rule to enlarge a peremptory undertaking, unless the defendant or Emma Drummond should be produced as a witness at the trial. Watson, contrà.

Rule absolute to postpone the trial indefinitely, until the defendant or Emma Drummond should be produced as witnesses.

REG. v. EDWARD MASON.—Couch moved for a certiorari to remove an indictment for obstructing a footpath, which stood for trial at the last Cambridge Assizes, but was postponed, with the consent of the parties, on account of the pressure of business.

Rule refused, unless the other side will consent.

Re THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY and THE VESTRYMEN OF ST. PANCRAS.—Enlarged rule. Struck out.

MONTGOMERY v. ROSS.—Rule calling on an attorney to pay money. Hawkins shewed cause, and objected that the affidavits were improperly entitled; they were entitled in the cause, but described it as an action by two plaintiffs instead of by three. Lush, contrà. By the COURT.—We cannot proceed upon these affidavits; but we will discharge the rule without costs, and give the party leave to renew his application on amended affidavits.

Rule discharged upon those terms.

LLOYD v. FRANCE.—Rule to amend a certificate of Master Turner, that 638*l.* 5s. 7d. was due from defendant to plaintiff. Lush shewed cause. Shee, Serjt. contrà.

Referred back to the Master as to one item, on payment of the costs of this rule.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF TURWESTON.—Rule to impose a fine for non repair of a road. Power shewed cause on affidavit, that the road was now repaired. A certificate of justices had been obtained, but not in time to be verified, and filed in answer to this rule. Worlledge, contrà. By the COURT.—When the certificate of justices is produced and verified, then the rule may be discharged.

Order accordingly.

REG. v. EVAN GRIFFIN.—Enlarged rule. Struck out.

REG. v. DUNNICLIFFE.—Rule for a quo warranto information, requiring the defendant to shew by what authority he exercised the office of Mayor of Derby. The objection was, that he had been improperly elected councillor, in the room of one Brampton, who had not lawfully vacated the office. The Attorney-General (with him Milward), shewed cause. Sir A. Cockburn, contrà, admitted that he was answered by the affidavits.

Rule discharged with costs.

REG. v. THE CLERK OF THE COUNTY COURT OF SURREY.—Bramwell and C. Clark shewed cause against a rule for a mandamus to issue a warrant of execution for the balance of a partially satisfied judgment. Cur. adv. vult.

REG. v. THE YORK, NEWCASTLE, AND BERWICK RAILWAY COMPANY.—Knowles shewed cause against a rule for a mandamus to summon a jury to assess compensation for the lands of Jane Fairless, comprised in a notice dated February 1849. The ground of objection to the rule was, that an arbitrator had already awarded liberal compensation upon the same claim. The Attorney-General and Addison, contrà.

Upon the company paying the sum awarded, rule discharged.

Tuesday, April 27.

DOE dem. HUGHES v. DAVIES. Rule refused.

DICKSON v. KAY. Rule refused.

DOE dem. TREVANION v. LAMBE.

Rule nisi for a new trial as against evidence only.

DOE dem. ROWLANDS v. PEARCE. Rule refused.

MARDELL v. THELLUSSON.—Shee, Serjt. moved.

Rule nisi for judgment, non obstante veredicto.

POPPY v. POPPY.

Rule nisi as to the point whether the growing crops passed.

FARDEN v. HORNSBY.—Point raised by the arbitrator for the opinion of the Court. Gray for the plaintiff. Whitmore for the defendant, not called upon.

Judgment for the defendant.

SIR T. R. GAGE v. THE NEWMARKET RAILWAY COMPANY.—Demurrer to plea. Addison in support of the demurrer. Bramwell contrà. Cur. adv. vult.

BOUVERIE v. PERCEVAL.—Point raised was, whether the reservation of 5½ per cent. on loan, secured by mortgage of lands in Ireland, the deed being made, and the parties resident in England, was valid. Maude for the plaintiff. Malcolm, for the defendant, admitted that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment. Judgment for the plaintiff.

KNIBB v. WARD.—Field moved to set aside an order of Pollock, C.B. for an inspection of documents.

Rule nisi.

FARROW v. MAYES.—Manisty, for the plaintiffs; O'Malley, for the defendant. Cur. adv vult.

MORRWOOD v. THE EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Demurrer. W. L. Jones prayed the judgment of the Court, the defendant's counsel consenting.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Wednesday, April 28.

REG. on the prosecution of the Mayor, &c. of Ashton-under-Lyne v. SLATER.—Special case. Cowling, for the prosecutors; H. Hill and Maynard, for the defendant.

Judgment for defendant.

RAYNER v. ALLHUSEN.—Watson and Willes shewed cause. Crowder and Manisty in support of the rule.

Rule absolute for new trial.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

Reported by DANIEL THOMAS EVANS and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Tuesday, April 20.

CROUCH v. NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Liability of railway companies as common carriers—Effect of notice that they will not be responsible for parcels unless the contents are declared.

The North-Western Railway Company published a notice, with which the plaintiff was acquainted, that they would not be responsible for packed parcels unless the contents were declared, and that they would not carry them unless the contents were declared, and that the senders would be taken to warrant that parcels were not packed parcels. The plaintiff sent a parcel which the defendants knew to be packed, but declined to give the particulars. The parcel was taken by the company. It being left to the Court to say whether the notice and the sending of the goods under the circumstances was sufficient to prove a special contract under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 68, s. 6:

Held, that it was not sufficient, and that the defendants were bound to prove an assent to the terms of the notice.

The plaintiff Crouch is a carrier at Birmingham, who collects parcels to send by railway; these, when collected, are packed in one parcel and so sent to their destination and distributed. On the 27th of May last, and also on the 7th of June, some parcels were left at the plaintiff's office, and, according to his witnesses, sewn up in a canvas bag, and conveyed to the railway station to be taken to Liverpool. On the arrival of the bag it was, on both occasions, immediately received by the plaintiff's agent, and opened by him, and the goods (a packet of gold studs, another of cameos, and another of other jewellery) were missed. The declaration stated that the defendants were common carriers, and that plaintiff delivered to them certain goods to be safely and securely carried. The second plea traversed this allegation. In other pleas the Carriers' Act was set up as a defence, to which there was a replication that the goods were stolen by a servant of the defendants. A rule had been obtained to shew cause why the verdict (which had been found generally for the plaintiff) should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendants on the traverse in the second plea, and why there should not be a new trial as to the felony on the ground of the evidence being insufficient. In April 1849 the defendants had published a notice that they would not be responsible for collected packages in one parcel unless the contents were declared with the names and addresses of those to whom they were sent, and that they would not carry such packages unless such declaration were made, and that the senders of parcels would be taken to warrant that they were not packed parcels. 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 68 (the Carriers' Act), in s. 4, enacts that no notice shall be deemed to limit the liability at common law of carriers; and in s. 6, it is provided that nothing in that Act contained should be construed to annul, or in anywise affect, any special contract; and in s. 8, that nothing in the Act should protect carriers from liability for felonious acts of servants.

Wilkins, Serjt. and J. Brown now shewed cause.—As to the question of evidence, there was sufficient to support a verdict finding a felony on the part of the company's servants. As to the other point, the notice does not protect the company from responsibility. [JERVIS, C. J.—Crouch, jun. in his evidence, says, "When I was asked to declare the contents, I said I could not give the particulars." The goods were, however, left, and carried by the company. What is the effect of this? Is it a fresh contract? The notice at the end of it says, "You must warrant that it is not a packed parcel." Does that throw the responsibility on Crouch?] No. Crouch never consents to the terms of the notice. This notice is published after the cases which shew that the company could not charge more for packed parcels than other parcels. (Parker v. The Great Western Railway Company, 7 M. & G. 291; Pickford v. The Grand Junction Railway Company, 10 M. & W. 399; and Crouch v. The North-Western Railway Company, 2 Car. & Kirw. 789.) The company had no right to insist on the addresses being given. (Parker's case, 7 M. & G. 292.) [JERVIS, C.J.—Might they not require a declaration of the contents and addresses that they might not afterwards be made liable on the ground of felony by their servants when the articles said to have been lost might not have been there at all?] The notice is inoperative under the Carriers Act, sec. 4, and it is not brought under the proviso in sec. 6, as a special contract. Before this Act was passed a notice of this kind brought home to the parties would, in the absence of all contravening circumstances, have limited the liability of the company. (Story on Bailments, s. 558-560.) Sec. 4, therefore, must have this operation, that even though it be brought home to the party, it shall not limit the common law liability. Otherwise it has no operation at all. You must now, in order to make it a special contract, shew assent on the part of the person to whom the notice is given. In Austen v. The Manchester and Sheffield Railway Company, 20 L. J. 440, Q. B. the plaintiff himself had signed the ticket. So also in Chippendale v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 21 L. J. 22, Q.B. Shaw v. The York and North Midland Railway Company only shewed that a company which had given a notice was not bound to carry according to their common law liability. Here there was no evidence of any assent.

Atherton, Q.C. and Cowling, in support of the rule. As to the question of evidence, the plaintiff was bound to shew that a felony was committed, and that it was committed by some one or more of the servants of the company, and by which of them. As to the question of contract, the defendants rely not only on the notice and the fact of its being brought home to the plaintiff, but on the evidence of the younger Crouch as to what took place at the time the parcel was delivered to the company. The plaintiff knew the terms of the notice; and young Crouch was asked, as was always done, what were the contents of the parcel. And he answered, I cannot give them. The parcel, however, is delivered to the company; and it must be taken on this evidence, that inasmuch as Crouch knew that one of the terms of the notice was, that the company would not be responsible for any parcel, unless the contents were declared, that he was content with and agreed to their taking his parcels without being responsible for any loss. [JERVIS, C.J. But the notice goes on to say, that the company will not carry unless the contents are declared; and then they do carry, knowing the parcel was a packed one. Their remedy was not to take, and as they did take, why should they not now be liable? Do they not by carrying waive the notice of non-responsibility?] Before the passing of the Carrier's Act, it was necessary to prove that notice had been given; now more is necessary, namely, that it should be brought home to the sender of the goods. Railway companies are not necessarily common carriers, only so sub modo. And here a notice, of which the plaintiff is proved to be cognizant, is given as to the terms upon which they would carry. And they must be taken to say to the plaintiff upon the delivery of the goods, "You, knowing the terms of the notice, must be taken to send them on those terms." [JERVIS, C J.—Suppose a notice given into a man's hands now, would that be an agreement?] No; but here there is more shewn, questions are asked. [JERVIS, C.J.—Yes, as to the particulars, but that is all. WILLIAMS, J.—What else does the plaintiff do but decline to give the particulars?] He does something more; he acts upon the notice. [WILLIAMS, J. I do not see that; suppose he had only shaken his head. CRESSWELL, J.—If the servant had reminded Crouch that the company would not be liable, and then the goods were left, perhaps in such case the company would not be responsible; but if he reminded him that the company would not carry without a declaration of the contents, and then they were left and carried, they must be taken to be liable. JERVIS, C J.—Yes, it is a question of fact, and the burden is upon you to prove it to the Court acting as jurymen.]

JERVIS, C J. delivered the judgment of the Court.—The rule for a new trial must be made absolute. I was not satisfied with the verdict upon the issue of felony by the company's servants at the trial. As to the other point, it being admitted, as it must be, that the notice itself was not sufficient to prove a special contract, it is for the defendants to make it out, and they have not done so to satisfy our minds.

Rule absolute for a new trial on payment of costs.

HAYES v. KEENE.

County Court—Prisoner, detention of, after expiration of warrant of commitment—Demurrer—Construction of Rule 121.

A debtor, having judgment against him in a County Court, and an order made on him to pay the debt and costs by instalments, made default, whereupon a judgment-summons was issued, and on his non-appearance thereto, a warrant of commitment was issued against him under the 131st rule of the "Practice and Proceedings of the County Courts," which directs that "such warrant shall bear date on the day on which the order of commitment was made, and shall continue in force for three calendar months and no longer." The warrant authorised the arrest of the debtor, and his commitment to prison "for the term of ten days from the date of the arrest." The warrant bore date on the 19th of September, 1851, and on the 16th of December following the debtor was arrested and delivered into the custody of the keeper of the prison to whom it was directed, who detained the debtor until the 25th of the same month, being seven days beyond the three months during which the warrant was to be of full force and effect.

The debtor brought his action of trespass against the gaoler for assault and false imprisonment, and the latter pleaded a justification under the warrant. To this plea the plaintiff replied that the warrant, by the 121st rule of the "Practice and Proceedings of the County Courts," was to continue in force three calendar months, and no longer, and that although he was arrested within that period, and was imprisoned under colour thereof ten days, yet he was unlawfully detained in prison seven days beyond the three calendar months during which the warrant had to run:

Held, on general demurrer, that the replication was no answer to the plea; for that, although the warrant was to remain in force only three months from the date of the order of commitment, the debtor, having been arrested within that period, was to be imprisoned for the number of days specified in the warrant, notwithstanding the three months during which it had force were expired before the debtor had completed the term of imprisonment which the County Court judge had ordered.

Trespass for assault and false imprisonment. The declaration stated that on the 16th of December, 1851, the defendant assaulted the plaintiff, and seized and laid hold of the plaintiff and imprisoned him in a certain gaol or prison for ten days then next following, contrary to law, and against the will of the plaintiff, whereby, &c.

The defendant pleaded that before the committing of the alleged trespasses in the declaration mentioned, and after the passing of the 9 & 10 Vict. c 95, to wit, on, &c. a County Court called the County Court of Surrey was duly constituted to be holden at Wandsworth, in the said county, and from thence hitherto hath been duly holden there under the said Act of Parliament; and after the constitution of the court, and before the trespasses in the declaration mentioned, to wit, on, &c. one Peter Plumley, then being the clerk of the said court, duly issued under the seal of the said Court a warrant of commitment, intituled,—"In the County Court of Surrey, holden at Wandsworth, between Alfred Rosling, plaintiff, and William Hayes, defendant," and directed to the high bailiff and others the bailiffs of the said Court, and to the Governor or Keeper of the Common Gaol at Horsemonger-lane, by which said warrant, after reciting that a Court holden at Wandsworth on the 2nd of May, 1850, the said Alfred Rosling, by the judgment of the said Court in a certain suit wherein the said Court had jurisdiction, recovered against the now plaintiff the sum of 6*l*. 17*s*. 1*d*. for his the said Alfred Rosling's debt, and the sum of 2*l*. 3*s*. 1*d*. the costs of the said suit, amounting together to 9*l*. 0*s*. 2*d*. and that, therefore, it was then and there ordered that the now plaintiff should pay to the clerk of the said court in Wandsworth, by instalments of the sum of 8*s*. every four weeks; and reciting that the now plaintiff, not having paid the said sum pursuant to the said order, a summons was, upon application of the said Alfred Rosling, duly issued from and out of the said court against the now plaintiff, by which summons he was required to appear at the said County Court holden at Wandsworth on the 6th of March, 1851, to answer such questions as might be put to him touching his estate and effects, and the manner and circumstances under which he contracted the said debt, and as to the means and expectations he then had, and as to the property and means he still had of discharging the said debt, and as to the disposal he had made of any property; and reciting that it was duly proved on oath at the said mentioned court, that the now plaintiff was personally served with the said summons; and reciting that the now plaintiff did not attend as required by such summons, or allege any sufficient excuse for not so attending; and thereupon it was ordered by the judge of the said Court that the now plaintiff should be committed for the term of ten days to the common gaol at Horsemonger-lane, in the said county of Surrey, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, or until he should be discharged by due course of law, the said high bailiff, bailiffs, and others, were thereby required to take the now plaintiff and deliver him to the governor or keeper of the common gaol at Horsemongerlane, and the said governor or keeper was thereby required to receive the now plaintiff; and him safely keep in the said gaol for the term of ten days from the arrest under the said warrant, or until he should sooner be discharged by due course of law, for which that warrant should be a sufficient warrant to the said high bailiff, bailiffs, and others, and to the governor and keeper of the said common gaol, which said warrant bears date, to wit, 19th September, 1851, and was duly signed and sealed, which said warrant afterwards, whilst the same was in force, and before committing of the said trespasses, &c. to wit, &c. was delivered by the said clerk to one William Goff, then being one of the bailiffs of the said court, to be executed in due form of law, by virtue of which said warrant afterwards, and before three calendar months from date thereof, &c. and before committing, &c. and whilst said warrant was in force, to wit, on 16th December, 1851, the said William Goff, &c. did then, within the jurisdiction of the said court, take and arrest the now plaintiff by his body, and did then forthwith convey him to the said common gaol at Horsemonger-lane, and did then, under and by virtue of the said warrant, deliver the now plaintiff to the defendant, who then was, and still is, governor and keeper of the said gaol, and the defendant did then receive the now plaintiff into the said gaol into his custody, as such governor and keeper; and the defendant further says, that he being such governor and keeper of the said common gaol, under and by virtue of the said warrant, safely kept and detained the now plaintiff in prison in the said common gaol from the time when he received the now plaintiff into the said common gaol as aforesaid, until he, the now plaintiff, was discharged from prison by due course of law, to wit, for the said time in the declaration mentioned, as the defendant lawfully might for the cause aforesaid, which are the said several trespasses in the declaration mentioned, &c.

Replication.—That after the passing of the County Courts Amendment Act (12 & 13 Vict. c. 101), and before the issuing of the warrant in the said plea mentioned, to wit, on 2nd February, 1850, Charles Lord Cottenham then being Lord Chancellor, duly authorised and appointed five judges of the County Courts to frame such general rules and orders as to them should seem expedient for and concerning the practice and proceedings of the County Courts, and for the execution of the process of such courts, &c. which said judges afterwards, and before the issuing of the said warrant under and in pursuance of the said appointment and authority, framed divers general rules and orders; and, amongst others, the following general rule and order (rule 121), that is to say: "Warrants of commitment whenever issued shall bear date on the day on which the order for commitment was made, and shall continue in force for three calendar months, and no longer, but no order for commitment shall be drawn up or served," which said rule or order was afterwards duly certified to Thomas Lord Truro, then being Lord Chancellor, under the hands of the said five judges, and was then submitted by the Lord Chancellor to three of the judges of the Superior Courts of Common Law, which said three judges then approved of the said rule, and the said rule was forthwith laid before the two Houses of Parliament, and became of the force of law. And the plaintiff further said that, although he was arrested under the said warrant within three calendar months from the date thereof, to wit, on the 16th December, 1851, and was imprisoned under colour thereof by the defendant for a term not exceeding ten days from the said arrest, to wit, until the 25th day of December, in the year aforesaid, yet the defendant imprisoned the plaintiff and detained him in prison in the said gaol and prison under and by colour of the said warrant after the expiration of three calendar months from the date thereof, to wit, from and after the 19th day of December, until and upon the 25th day of December, in the year last aforesaid, which is the imprisonment and trespass in the declaration mentioned, &c.

To this replication the defendant demurred generally "that the said replication is not sufficient in law," &c.

Joinder in demurrer.

At the foot of the warrant set out above in the plea there was this notice: "N.B. This warrant remains in force for three calendar months from the date thereof."

Channell, Serjt. and D. T. Evans, in support of the demurrer, contended that as the plaintiff was arrested and received by defendant into gaol under the warrant within three calendar months from the date of the warrant, the defendant was thereby justified, as keeper of the prison, acting under the warrant, in keeping the plaintiff in prison for the space of ten days, being the term of imprisonment mentioned in the warrant, notwithstanding three calendar months from the date of the warrant as limited by rule 121 of the Rules and Orders concerning the Practice and Proceedings of the County Courts, had expired before the term of the plaintiff's imprisonment mentioned in the warrant—that is to say, before the ten days' imprisonment had expired.

JERVIS, C.J.—Have we not considered this case on habeas corpus?

Giffard.—No.

JERVIS, C.J.—There was a case in which a similar question was raised; I mean Re O'Neill (20 L. J. 69, C.P.; 16 Law T. 235).

CRESSWELL, J.—What plaintiff has to contend for is very much like saying that after the expiration of a writ of summons the cause is at an end.

Giffard, in support of the replication.—It is submitted that judgment on this demurrer should go for the plaintiff. The rule set out in the replication is both clear and explicit. It provides that the warrant of commitment shall be of force and effect for three calendar months, from the date of the order of commitment, and no longer. Here the justification is that defendant was detained by a warrant, the force of which had expired; for he was detained seven days after expiration of three months from the day on which the order of commitment was made. The warrant is not only the warrant for capture, but also the warrant for detention; and its force under the rule recited had expired before the discharge of the plaintiff from prison. [WILLIAMS, J.—The warrant of detention and that of commitment are different.] Not in this case. The only authority the keeper of the gaol has is the judge's warrant of commitment, which also is the warrant of detainer. [CRESSWELL, J.—With your view of the point the man, though taken only three days before the expiration of the warrant, cannot be imprisoned for the period directed by the judge, except by fresh warrant.] The defendant might have gone to the judge under the 135th rule for another warrant. [CRESSWELL, J. How can you have a second warrant of commitment, the first having expired?] If the judge pleases he can grant successive warrants. [JERVIS, C.J.—Yes; but that is for a fresh offence: a manifest absurdity follows this argument. The man is held by reason of the judgment, and the purpose of the warrant is to apprise the gaoler of the judgment and subsequent proceedings, and to authorise him to hold.] The only manner in which the gaoler can justify is by the warrant, which expired before the release of the prisoner. As far as the gaoler is concerned, this is a warrant of detention,—and that only; he has nothing to do with the capture of the plaintiff; he has only to receive him and detain him during the period in which the warrant of commitment has force. There is but one order or warrant, which, therefore, serves for commitment and detainer. [TALFOURD, J.—There is the judgment of the County Court.] Yes. [JERVIS, C.J.—A summons issues, judgment follows, and then the warrant. The judge says, "Commit the debtor for ten days," which is the authority for the warrant, and the clerk, acting under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 111, makes a minute of the order, and the warrant issues. WILLIAMS, J.—You say this is the only authority for detention?] Yes. There is no other, unless the minute of the order of the judge made by the clerk in the court-book can be said to be such. [JERVIS, C.J.—What is the authority for commitment under the statute?] It is given in the 102nd section of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. [JERVIS, C.J.—As I understand that clause, it means that the gaoler shall be bound to receive and keep the defendant until the period for which he was committed expires by effluxion of time or by habeas corpus. There is here good ground of justification.] This case is different from one under a capias, because there are words imported in this warrant—that it shall not be of force and effect beyond three months—which a capias does not contain.

JERVIS, C.J. I should be very sorry if the Court felt constrained by any technical construction to give judgment for the plaintiff on this demurrer, because, in fact, by so doing, the Court would be impeding the operation of the County Courts Act, and such a decision would necessarily have the effect of obstructing the full execution of all warrants where a defendant kept out of the way until the term of the warrant was nearly expired. Either he could not be taken at all, or, if taken, must be discharged without having undergone the term of imprisonment awarded by the County Court judge. I am happy, however, to say, that, in the opinion of the Court, it is not necessary to adopt that construction. Construing the rule in the strictest way,—namely, that the warrant of commitment should bear date from the day that the order of commitment was made, and should continue in force for three calendar months, and no longer, having received the warrant which directed him to keep the defendant for the term of ten days from the arrest, the gaoler was bound to keep the plaintiff for the term so mentioned in the warrant. Those who made the rule had well considered the necessity of it; and the necessity was, that a party should not obtain a warrant of commitment, and keep it suspended over the head of a defendant for an indefinite period of time, for the purpose of harassment and intimidation; but there is no reason whatever, when the warrant was once executed within three calendar months, as prescribed by the rule, why the judgment recited in it should not be fully carried out. The defendant, therefore, is entitled to the judgment of the Court on this demurrer.

CRESSWELL, J. concurred.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the meaning of the 131st rule is, that when once the warrant comes into operation, it is to operate fully as to the terms contained it.

TALFOURD, J. assented.

Judgment for the defendant.

COUNTY COURT APPEAL.

(Before MAULE, WILLIAMS, and TALFOURD, JJ.)

Wednesday, Feb. 24.

JUSTICE v. GOSLING and OTHERS.

County Court—Trespass and false imprisonment—Arrest by police constable—Conviction for furious driving—2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, ss. 54 and 63.

The plaintiff having been arrested and imprisoned by the defendants, who were police constables, on a charge of furious driving, brought an action of tort against them in the County Court. At the trial the plaintiff, in opening his case, stated that the defendants had taken him into custody and detained him for some time in a station-house on a false and unfounded charge of furious driving, and that on their evidence he had been convicted of the offence by two justices of the peace and fined 20s. For the defendants it was thereupon objected that by that admission the plaintiff had put himself out of Court. A copy of the conviction was put in evidence, the plaintiff admitted he had paid the penalty, and had not appealed against the decision of the magistrates; and the County Court judge, considering that the conviction was a conclusive answer to the action, so directed the jury, and a verdict was accordingly found for the defendants. The judge stated the case for this appeal, but it did not shew that the plaintiff committed the offence of furious driving within view of the defendants, so as to justify the arrest of plaintiff under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 54:

Held, on appeal, that the direction of the County Court judge was wrong, and the judgment must be reversed.

This was an action brought in the County Court of Herts, holden at Barnett, before the deputy judge of that court, and now came before this Court by appeal from the direction of the judge at the trial of the cause.

The case was settled by the deputy judge, the parties themselves being unable to agree as to the statement of the same. The plaintiff brought his plaint in the above-mentioned County Court against the defendants, Gosling, Sumner, and Surman, for a tort in taking him into custody and detaining him at the police station at Barnet on (as he alleged in his particulars) a false and unfounded charge of furiously driving a horse and gig to the danger of passengers in the public highway. The plaintiff claimed 25*l.* damages. The cause was tried in the County Court before a jury on the 29th of August, 1851. On the hearing, the plaintiff stated that the two defendants first named arrested him between ten and eleven o'clock at night on the charge above mentioned; that the charge was false and unfounded; that before they took him into custody he informed them of his name and residence, gave them his card, and offered to verify his statement by a person in the neighbourhood; that the two defendants, notwithstanding, took him into custody, and delivered him to the third defendant, who, at their request, detained him in the police station at Barnet until he gave bail to answer the charge; that the charge was afterwards heard before the magistrates, who convicted him of the offence charged against him and fined him 20s. Thereupon the attorney for the defendants insisted that by this statement the plaintiff had put himself out of court. The judge then asked if the defendants could prove the conviction, on which an examined copy of the following conviction was proved and put in by the defendants:

"Metropolitan Police District and County of Middlesex, to wit.

"Be it remembered, that on the 28th day of April, A.D. 1851, Walter Justice, of Bernard-street, within the said metropolitan police district and county of Middlesex, solicitor, is brought before us, James Dickins, esq. and Charles Herbert Cottrell, esq. two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county of Middlesex and county of Hertford, sitting at the Barnet Petty Sessions Court within the metropolitan police district and the said county of Hertford, and is charged before us with having, on the 22nd of April, A.D. 1851, at the parish of Finchley, in the said district or county of Middlesex, in the public thoroughfare there situate, there and then furiously driven a horse and gig along such thoroughfare to the common danger of the passengers in such thoroughfare; and it appearing to us, James Dickens, esq. and Charles Herbert Cottrell, esq. upon the oath of William Gosling and John Sumner, credible witnesses, that the said Walter Justice is guilty of the said offence, we do hereby adjudge the said Walter Justice to forfeit and pay for his said offence the penalty of twenty shillings, to be applied as the statute in that case made and provided directs. Given under our hands the day and year first mentioned.

"James Dickens.

"Charles Herbert Cottrell."

The plaintiff admitted he had paid the penalty so adjudged against him, and had not appealed from the conviction or taken any other steps to impeach its validity. The case concluded by stating "that thereupon the said deputy judge being of opinion that, under the circumstances hereinbefore mentioned, the said conviction was an answer to the plaintiff's claim for damages, directed the jury to find a verdict for the defendants. The plaintiff being dissatisfied with the said determination and direction in point of law, appeals against the same."

Raymond, for the plaintiff.—The direction of the County Court judge to the jury, that they should find for the defendants, was manifestly wrong. The judge never allowed plaintiff to go into his case; but the moment evidence of the conviction before magistrates of furious driving was admitted by the plaintiff, he seemed to think there was an end of the case, and he directed the jury to find for the defendants. The conviction was not admissible in evidence, so as to put the plaintiff out of court, as was here done. The conviction before magistrates was under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 77, secs. 54 and 63. [WILLIAMS J.—The proceeding was similar to an ordinary case at Nisi Prius, where the judge directs a nonsuit. MAULE, J.—It comes to this,—the plaintiff is taken into custody on a charge of furious driving, and convicted before a magistrate, as he says, on a false charge; the question, then, is, "was he ever convicted?"] A conviction of an offence is no evidence against a party in a civil action; it is not a proceeding between the same parties. It is also inadmissible, because the conviction might possibly have gone upon the evidence of the defendants themselves. (2 Phil. Ev. 23.) Secondly, a conviction for furious driving cannot be evidence where the question is not whether plaintiff was furiously driving, but a question of false imprisonment. The conviction, therefore, as regards this case, was wholly irrelevant. Thirdly, if the conviction was not irrelevant, and was conclusive as to furious driving, it was not conclusive evidence in a question of false imprisonment. Supposing the conviction exonerated the defendants from punishment for arresting the plaintiff, it would not justify their assaulting the plaintiff, and keeping him in custody for a length of time. The plaintiff was not allowed to state his case in full, but was cut short by the judge directing a verdict for defendants. There is nothing in the statute to justify this arrest. The 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, authorises police constables to arrest individuals in certain cases, but it does not protect them in an arbitrary proceeding such as this. By sec. 54 police constables are authorised to arrest persons who, in their view, are guilty of furious driving in a public thoroughfare; but that power is limited by sec. 63, which enables a constable to take into custody any person committing offences within his view, provided that person does not give the constable his true name and residence. In this case the plaintiff gave the police constables his card containing both. [MAULE, J.—I observe sec 54 applies to particular offences therein specified. If a person commits either of these within view of the constable, whether he gives his name or not, the constable may take him into custody.] It was on the defendants to shew that they had good cause for imprisoning the plaintiff, and that the offence was committed within their view.

Ellis, interposing.—The case does not anywhere shew that the offence was committed within the view of the constables. You, therefore, cannot enter on that objection. It was not taken in the court below, and cannot now be entered into on appeal.

Raymond.—I reply to that by reference to a case of Simmons v. Millingen, 2 C. B. 524. The part of the marginal note most material is this:—"In trespass by A. against B. for false imprisonment, B. justified, on the ground of A. having wilfully and without excuse, within view of the constable who apprehended her, annoyed and disturbed the plaintiff and his family by knocking and ringing at his door. Held, that to support this plea under secs. 54 and 63 of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, it was necessary to prove the offence to have been committed within view of the constable." A justification for trespass, where it rests upon a statute, must be strictly followed. (Matthews v. Biddulph, 3 M. & G. 390.) On the statement of this case as settled by the deputy-judge, it is impossible to say how plaintiff opened his case.

MAULE, J.—There is a statement in the case that thereupon the judge was of opinion that "under the circumstances above mentioned the conviction was an answer to the plaintiff's claim." By this the judge must be taken to mean under the circumstances mentioned in the plaintiff's opening.

Ellis, for the respondents, was then called on.—The opening of the plaintiff is analogous to a declaration in case for malicious arrest and taking into custody on a false charge. The burden of proof lay on the plaintiff. [MAULE, J.—The present is an action of trespass for assault and false imprisonment. If you take hold of a man and convey him to a police office, that is a trespass, and you must justify it.] I rely on secs. 54 and 63 of the statute. The latter clause not only empowers a constable to take into custody persons who commit offences within view, but any one suspected of having committed or being about to commit a breach of the peace. In the present case the defendants had strong reasons for believing that the plaintiff had committed such an offence. [MAULE, J.—They did not say so; or, at all events, it is not shewn by the statement of the case.] As the case is incomplete, perhaps the Court will allow it to be re-stated.

MAULE, J.—We cannot order that. The decision of the Court below must be reversed with costs. There will be a new trial, with costs of appeal to the appellant. Judgment reversed.

Saturday, April 21.

RANDALL v. MOON.

Continuing action for costs.

Indorsee of a bill of exchange on its becoming due commenced actions both against the drawer and the acceptor. The drawer paid the principal, interest, and costs in the action against him under a judge's order, which was resisted by the plaintiff, who then continued his action against the acceptor for the costs of the writ. The acceptor had accepted the bill for the accommodation of the drawer, but that fact was not known to the plaintiff

Held, the plaintiff was entitled to continue his action against the acceptor for the costs.

Quære, whether payment under a judge's order resisted by plaintiff can be pleaded as a payment in satisfaction to him?

Macnamara moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter a verdict for the defendant, or to reduce the damages to 2*l.* 2*s.* the costs of the writ. This was an action by an indorsee of a bill of exchange for 49*l.* 18*s.* drawn by one W. A. Turner, and the defendant had pleaded to the further maintenance of the action that after bill due, and after action brought, the said Turner, on behalf and at the request of the defendant, paid the plaintiff, who then accepted the moneys in the declaration mentioned in full satisfaction of the causes of action, and that the plaintiff did not sue as Turner's trustee, &c. The replication denied the payment modo et formâ. At the trial before Maule, J. at the first Middlesex sittings in Term, it appeared that the defendant had accepted the bill for the accommodation of Turner, but that fact was unknown to the plaintiff, and that after the bill became due, the plaintiff commenced actions simultaneously against Turner and the defendant. A summons was taken out in Turner's action to stay proceedings on payment of debt and costs; it was resisted by the plaintiff, but an order was made and the money paid. It was now contended that such payment satisfied the causes of action; that is, the damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the nonpayment of the bill of exchange, that the costs of the writ were not part of the causes of action; and that the plaintiff could not continue his action against the acceptor for nominal damages and costs only. The payment by the principal (drawer) was also contended to be a discharge of the surety (acceptor), except as to the mere costs of the writ then issued against the acceptor, and these costs formed no ground for commencing or continuing an action. Jones v. Broadhurst, 9 C. B. 173; Thame v. Boast, 12 Q. B. 808; Beaumont v. Greathead, 2 C. B. 494; and Nosotti v. Page, 2 L. M. & P. 8, were cited upon the point of continuing the action for costs, and Lord v. Ferrand, 1 D. & L. 630, as to reducing the damages.

JERVIS, C.J.—We are of opinion there ought not to be any rule in this case. Even if the payment under the judge's order can be considered a payment and acceptance in satisfaction by the plaintiff of the drawer's liability within the meaning of this plea, yet it was not a satisfaction of the causes of action, as against the acceptor. The plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the writ in that action, and although the judgment in Thame v. Boast at first sight appears to go the length of saying that an action cannot be continued for costs merely, yet, on closer examination, it will be found to have proceeded upon the special facts in that case, and not to be an authority to that extent. The damages ought not to be reduced, because the plaintiff is entitled to the full amount secured by the bill, and may have to answer to some other party for that amount. But if it be not so, he will of course issue execution only for the amount actually due.

Rule refused.

DOE dem PANTON v. ROE.

Practice.

In an action of ejectment, where two Terms have been allowed to elapse since the service of the declaration, the Court will not grant a rule nisi for judgment against casual ejector, although it be shewn that the delay occurred from indulgence to the tenant.

Power applied for a rule to shew cause why judgment should not be entered up against the casual ejector. Two Terms had elapsed since the declaration was served, but the delay arose out of indulgence to the tenant, who had promised to pay the rent, and had several times renewed his promise until February last, when he refused to pay or quit. The Court after two Terms have elapsed will in some cases grant a rule nisi. (Doe dem. Crooks v. Roe, 7 Jur. 970.) The declaration there had been served more than two Terms, there being a Chancery suit pending. The principle is the same here, where the delay has taken place out of indulgence shewn to the tenant, and on the faith of his promises. [JERVIS, C.J.—You have lost the benefit of the service by your own laches.] No, by our indulgence. [JERVIS, C.J.—That may or may not be. If we grant you a rule it will enable you vexatiously to increase the costs; you can serve the declaration again, and be in time for the Assizes, this being a country cause. CRESSWELL, J.—If the tenant had been shewn to have made these promises and then to have run away, there would be some reason for our granting a rule.] Rule refused.

BEAVAN v. WALKER.

Insolvent—Protection.

An insolvent to whom a protection has been granted after a verdict has been obtained against him in an action of tort, is not protected from arrest on a judgment signed after the protection granted.

A verdict in an action of tort was found against A. on the 5th December, 1851. He filed his petition on the 17th. Bill of costs in the action delivered 12th December. Final order made 20th January, 1852. Judgment signed the 5th of April. A. was subsequently arrested on the judgment:

Held, that the final order made under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, s. 4, did not protect him from such arrest; and that the words "protection from all process" in that section, mean from all process arising out of the subject matter of the Insolvent Debtors' Acts, which do not deal with actions of tort.

Held also, that where a verdict has been obtained and the bill of costs delivered, but judgment not signed before the final order, the sum for which the judgment will be signed is a matter of calculation, and comes within the words "debts and sums of money due or claimed to be due at the time of filing the petition," in 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 22.

Petersdorf shewed cause against a rule nisi which had been obtained for discharging the defendant out of custody. A verdict had been found against the defendant for 30*l.* 1s. 6d. for falsely representing himself to be lawfully in possession of a shop, and selling the good-will to the plaintiff, when, in fact, an action of ejectment was pending. He afterwards, and before judgment was signed, filed his petition under the Insolvent Debtors' Acts. The bill of costs was delivered before the filing of the petition. The question is, 1st. Whether the amount of the verdict and the costs is a sum due at the time of the filing of the petition; and, 2ndly. If so, whether the final order will protect an insolvent from arrest on a judgment in an action of tort. The words of stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 22, shew that the petitioner is protected only from debts or sums of money due or claimed to be due. A verdict is not a debt, but only an inchoate proceeding ending in a judgment which is the debt. But however that may be, the insolvent is not protected from arrest on judgments in actions of tort. Ss. 4 and 10 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and s. 24 of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, shew that actions of debt, and not actions of tort, are contemplated. There are no cases on the point.

Hawkins, in support of the rule.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, s. 4, protects the insolvent from "all process." 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 26, makes the final order a protection from all process, and may extend to all costs, and may protect from damages. [CRESSWELL, J.—That is in an action brought by creditors. Would it protect an insolvent from arrest on a judgment in a case of crim. con.?]

JERVIS, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rule must be discharged. The express words of the various sections shew that they apply only to debts of creditors. It is manifestly absurd to suppose that "all process" may be applied to all cases. They only apply to all process which may arise out of the subject-matter with which the insolvent commissioner has authority to deal. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 22, applies only to debts or sums of money due to different parties as creditors. This is a sum of money due certainly, but not to a person as a creditor. It applies where a sum is clearly due, but unascertained.

Rule discharged with costs.

ANDERSON and ANOTHER v. HILLIES and ANOTHER.

Shipbroker—Authority of master to receive payment by bill—Effect of admissions.

Where a balance is due from a broker to the owner of a vessel, and is settled between the broker and the master, if the broker offers to pay it to the master by cash, but he prefers to take it by bill, such payment is good against the owner.

Upon a settlement of accounts between the brokers and the master, the brokers offer to pay the master the balance due to the owners by a cheque. He wishes to transmit the money to Jamaica, and the brokers, at his request, establish a credit for him at a bank here having a branch bank at Jamaica, to enable him to do so. The money is paid to his order by the bank there, and the brokers accept a bill drawn by him upon them for the amount, which is paid in due course:

Held, that the master was authorised to receive payment in that way, and that the brokers were entitled to charge it against the owners.

Where admissions are made on the faith of an account which is stated to have misled, the Court will hold the parties bound by the admissions, where it appears that no injustice was done.

A rule had been obtained to shew cause why the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendants, or why the verdict should not be reduced by 24*l.* 12s. The plaintiffs are shipbrokers in London, trading under the name of James Thompson and Co. The defendants were part-owners of the ship Hastings, and resided at New Brunswick. Thomas Gautt, the master, was a co-owner, and died on the 5th of October, 1849, having acted as master during the years 1848 and 1849, up to the time of his death. In those years the plaintiffs were employed as brokers of the ship. At the trial, most of the facts were proved by admissions. It appeared that in July 1849, on the return of the vessel from a voyage, a settlement was made between the plaintiffs and the master, in which 286*l.* 5s. 11d. was stated to be due from the plaintiffs to the owners, and they then offered to give the master a cheque for that amount. He was then about to sail for Jamaica, and having letters from the brokers enabling him to obtain money there for disbursements, did not want to carry the money with him, and, at his request, the plaintiffs, instead of paying him by cheque, established for him a credit at the Bank of British North America, they pledging their credit for repayment here of the sum paid by the Bank of British North America in Jamaica, to the order of the master. The bank in Jamaica accordingly paid to one Hastings the sum of 250*l.* and a bill for that amount was drawn by the master, and accepted by the plaintiffs on the 4th of September, 1849; it became due on the 6th of November, and was paid by the plaintiffs. And the first question was, whether this was a good payment to the master as against the owners. The second question depended on the form and effect of the admissions, leave being given to move to reduce the verdict by 24*l.* 12s. if the form of the account precluded its recovery. The account in question, marked B. and delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendants, charged them in one item with a sum of 92*l.* odd, for which the master had drawn upon them in Jamaica for disbursements. And in another item, with the sum of 24*l.* 12s. set down as money paid to the master. It appeared on the evidence that the master had received at Jamaica for the plaintiffs, who were on that voyage both charterers and brokers of the shop, some money for freight; and that the plaintiffs' agents then, instead of receiving that money from the master with one hand, and paying to him for disbursements money with the other, had allowed him to keep this sum of 24*l.* 12s. and had set it off against the freight that he had received; so that, in fact, the aggregate sum made up of 92*l.* odd, and 24*l.* 12s. had been disbursed by the captain; but having in his hands 24*l.* 12s. of the plaintiffs he had kept that, and drawn upon them for the 92*l.* odd.

Lush now shewed cause. The payment of the 250*l.* is good against the owners. The master was authorised to receive it in cash, and we offered to pay him by cheque, which is equivalent to cash. It was at his request that it was paid, in the manner stated. When he had the option of being paid in cash, but chose to be paid in another form, for the convenience of transmitting the money, he was paid so as to discharge us. Marsh v. Reddie, 4 Camp. 257; and Strong v. Hart, 6 B. & C. 160, are in our favour. As to the second point, Mr. Scott, one of the agents who happened to be in England, explained, that the master had received the 24*l.* 12s. for freight, and was allowed to keep it for disbursements.

Hugh Hill, in support of the rule.—Anderson, who was called at the trial, said, he never knew a payment made to a master in the manner this 250*l.* is said to have been paid. It was an unusual mode of payment, and being so is not made in a manner in which the master is authorized to receive it, and therefore bad against the owners. (Story on Agents, ss. 430, 431.) [CRESSWELL, J.—A bill is as good payment as cash, if taken by election of the party entitled to receive it.] As to the 24*l.* 12s. we were deluded in making the admissions, by the way in which the account was drawn up. If the whole sum had been charged in a lump for disbursements at Jamaica, attention would have been called to it as an unreasonable amount; and we should not have made the admissions, but have put them to the proof that such disbursement had been made. We ought not, therefore, to be strictly bound by the admissions.

CRESSWELL, J. to Lush.—You do not communicate to the other side how the 24*l.* 12s. was made out.

Lush.—No; we did not know, but Mr. Scott stated that the account had been shewn to the master, and that he had approved of it.

JERVIS, C.J.—We have some doubt as to the second point, can you not agree as to that?

Hugh Hill declined to agree.

JERVIS, C.J.—I should have been glad if the last point had been settled between the parties; the other is of considerable importance, and depends on this, namely, whether the master whose owners are entitled to the balance in cash of an account settled between the brokers and the master, was authorised to receive payment in the way he did, and could by so receiving it, bind the defendants the co-owners. I am of opinion that he could, according to Marsh v. Pedder, 4 Camp. 257. The money being offered him in cash or by cheque, which is equivalent to cash, and he declining so to take it, but preferring it by bill, or in the way he received it here, which is equivalent to taking it by bill, such payment was good. The second point is one of mere form. There is no doubt that Anderson paid the money, and although it is said that if the defendants had known that it was for disbursements, they would not have made the admissions, still, as the money was paid, I am not disinclined to view the matter strictly, and as the admissions were made, the rule will be discharged on both points.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. The entry of the 250*l.* is as a payment to the master, made to him by bill. Under the circumstances mentioned such payment was good. As to the other point, there is an entry in the account of money paid to the master by persons who had shipped goods on board the vessel. That shews how the money got into the hands of the master. He disbursed it at Jamaica, and I think the plaintiffs are entitled to charge it against the defendants. The objection urged by Mr. Hill is to the form of the account, and is such a one as is generally made where there is no other. Taken strictly, it is not a good objection.

WILLIAMS and TALFOURD, JJ. agreed.

Rule discharged.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, April 22.

RICKETTS v. EAST AND WEST-INDIA DOCKS AND BIRMINGHAM JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.—J. Brown asked leave for defendants to be at liberty to deliver the paper, books, with points of argument in this demurrer. JERVIS, C.J.—They may deliver them de bene esse; subject to any objection brother Byles may offer. In his absence we cannot say more than this.

Leave conditional granted.

GLADSTANES v. ALLEN.—This was a special case, part heard yesterday. Lush, for defendant, contended that the lien having attached on the goods the moment they were put on board the ship, nothing could divest the ship-owner of his right to freight. He relied on Small v. Moats, 9 Bing. 574. Channell, Serjt. for plaintiffs, contended that the case of Small v. Moats, was distinguishable. This would be a good bill of lading if it stopped at the first clause. (Abbot on Shipping, 289.)

Judgment for the defendant.

HOLMES v. SPARKES.—Phipson for defendant. This was a demurrer to the declaration in an action against the sheriff for extortion. The defendant demurred to the declaration as being insufficient because it did not set forth the facts so as to shew whether a levy had been made. If there is no levy there is no poundage. In an action on the statute the declaration must state the facts so as to demonstrate how the case comes within the statute. (Comyn. Dig. tit. Pleader, C. 76.) As to the word "levy," Halkin v. Wells, 5 T. R. 471. The question what is a levy was considered in Chapman v. Boulby, 8 M. & W. 252, Ashby v. Harris, 2 M. & W. 673; the principle in the last is the same as in the present case. (28 Eliz. c. 4; Usher v. Walters, 4 Q. B. 553.) Another ground of demurrer is, that this is in the declaration called the stat. 28 Eliz. whereas it has been held in many cases that such a misrecital of that statute is a fatal ground of demurrer. Willes, contrà.—As to the last ground of objection, no doubt it is a mistake to call the stat. 29 Eliz. it being properly stat. 28 Eliz; but as the description of the stat. is laid under a videlicet, it is not at all material. With regard to the principal ground of objection, as to the levy, that is not maintainable. The defendant complains that plaintiff has not stated what took place under the writ; it is not necessary he should have done so; he is only required to shew what has not taken place under the statute. In either case the sheriff does that which amounts to a levy. The other side contend that it is stating the result in law to say there was no levy; I say it is stating the result in fact. The cases cited in support of the demurrer do not apply here. (Pilkington v. Cooke, 16 M. & W. 615; Form of Declaration, Chitty Pl. 635; Burton v. Lawrence, 5 Ex. 816.) Phipson, in reply. The question is, whether this is a sufficient averment of circumstances from which the Court can infer there was no levy. JERVIS, C.J.—It seems to me that there is nothing in either of the points ingeniously urged by counsel for the defendant. It turns out that the statute, as recited, is shewn as being stat. 29 instead of stat. 28 Eliz; but it was referred to under a videlicet, and the objection cannot prevail. As to the other point, it is sufficient to say, "You have not levied," leaving it to the other side to raise that question on demurrer. But it is not necessary to go that length; for if the statement is, as here, sufficiently certain, it may be traversed. Judgment must therefore be for the plaintiff. CRESSWELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. The year is laid under a videlicet, and therefore that objection is of no avail. As to whether there was a levy or not, it was a question of law for the judge; and the other side, if dissatisfied with his ruling, might tender a bill of exceptions, and there would be full consideration whether he had wrongly decided on the point or not. WILLIAMS and TALFOURD, JJ. concurred.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

NOVELLO v. SUDLOW.—This was a special case stated for the opinion of this Court, the question being, whether the multiplication by lithography of Part songs, the property of the plaintiff, for distribution amongst the members of a choral society, was an infringement of the plaintiff's copyright. Phipson was heard for the plaintiff. Part heard.

Friday, April 23.

JUPE v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—This action was brought to recover the value of a truss of silk sent by the railway of the defendants to London, with seven others; the other seven arrived safe. The eight trusses were proved to have arrived at Paddington, and to have been deposited in a warehouse there. It was also sworn that they were all placed on a cart of the defendants on the Monday morning, having been in the warehouse all Sunday. There was no evidence of the loss, but that only seven trusses arrived. There was no evidence of the defendants' carter and his boy loitering on the way, which, it was said, might have given a stranger an opportunity of stealing the truss. The jury found a felony by the company's servants. Byles, Serjt. with whom was Brown, shewed cause. Sir A. Cockburn, with whom was Willes, was heard in support of the rule. Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to support the verdict.

New trial on payment of costs.

HEALD v. CAREY.—Bramwell applied to the Court to review Master Rae's taxation. Three briefs had been delivered to counsel; one had been disallowed. The fees of counsel had been reduced. He had disallowed counsel's brief on moving for a new trial. The bill amounted to 700*l.*; the pictures, for which the action was brought, were worth about 150*l.* JERVIS, C.J.—It is a largish bill; it is a big bill. We will speak to Master Rae.

Saturday, April 24.

BEAVAN v. WALKER.—This was an action in the case, in which a verdict had passed for the plaintiff for 31*l.* 1s. 6d. which sum, with 55*l.* costs, the defendant had become liable to pay. He was arrested for this sum, and detained in custody. Hawkins now moved for a rule calling on plaintiff to shew cause why the defendant should not be discharged from custody of the sheriff of Middlesex, on the ground that after the delivery of bill of costs, and before judgment had been signed against him, the defendant petitioned the Insolvent Court, and filed a schedule, in which the debt and costs above mentioned were inserted. A final order of that Court was made for his discharge on 30th January; but, nevertheless, on the 5th April judgment for the debt and costs was signed, and the defendant was arrested on the 20th, and has since been detained in custody. By the COURT.—You may take a rule.

Rule nisi.

WHITE v. JOLLY.—Dowdeswell moved to enter a suggestion on the Roll, under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, to deprive a plaintiff of costs. The case arose before the passing of the late Act, and the question was as to concurrent jurisdiction of the Courts, and the pleading of a set-off. The Court, thinking the case was not distinguishable from a former case in this Court (Woodhams v. Newman), refused the rule. Rule refused.

HOTCHKINS v. BROOKS.—Barnard applied for a distringas to compel an appearance. The affidavit was held insufficient, because it did not state that the whole of High-street, Wapping, was in the county of Middlesex.

Rule refused.

Monday, April 26.

JOHNSON v. BINGHAM.—Prentice moved for a rule to shew cause why the judgment should not be set aside, as having been obtained by fraud. The action was on a bill which the defendant had accepted for the accommodation of one Osborne, the drawer, who was to raise money upon it. He was in difficulties, and other bills had been accepted for his accommodation, which had been asserted to have been forged. This bill was then given by him to the plaintiff for the sole purpose of its being shewn to other creditors to prove the other bills were genuine. (There was no pretence for saying they were forgeries.) Defendant, believing the plaintiff to be a bona fide holder, had suffered judgment to go by default, and had been arrested. It was now discovered that plaintiff was not a bona fide holder. Defendant was in prison.

Rule nisi, returnable on Thursday.

AUSTEN v. BROMLEY HILL IRON COMPANY.—Raymond applied for a rule to shew cause why a judgment having been obtained against the company, judgment should not issue against one Collins, a shareholder. Rule nisi.

BAKER v. SUMMERS.—Crouch applied for a summons to revive a judgment obtained in November 1841.

Granted.

MESSER v. ROPER.—Charnock applied for judgment on issue of nul tiel record.

Tuesday, April 27.

NOVELLO v. SUDLOW.—Phipson prayed that this case, fixed for to-day, might stand over, Willes, who had to argue for the defendant, being engaged, moving in the Ex. JERVIS, C.J.—We must go on. Phipson.—I must leave the case then to the Court. I do not wish to reply upon myself. By the COURT.—We will take time to consider our judgment. Cur. adv. vult.

RICKETTS v. THE EAST AND WEST INDIA DOCKS AND BIRMINGHAM JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.—This was a demurrer to three pleas of the defendants, but in course of argument, counsel agreed to waive objections in point of form and turn the case into a special case for the opinion of the Court. Tompson Chitty for plaintiff; Jos. Brown for defendants. To be reported.

Judgment for defendants.

NOVELLO v. SUDLOW.—This case was, at request of Willes, re-opened, and he argued for the defendant. Phipson was heard in reply. The Court took time to consider judgment. Cur. adv. vult.

FOSTER v. CRABB.—J. Brown in support of demurrer.

Part heard.

BEER v. BEER.—This was an action of account. Hake now moved the Court to assign auditors to take the account within time to be fixed by the Court. (Godfrey v. Sanders, 3 Wils. 89.) We propose to meet at Serjeants'- inn or in the Masters' room, on Monday, the 3rd of May. Fooks, for the other side, consented. JERVIS, C.J.—Settle amongst yourselves the place, and let the meeting be fixed for Monday, the 3rd of May. CRESSWELL, J.—Two of the Masters will attend in their room for that purpose on that day. JERVIS, C.J.—Let a rule be drawn up according to the form. Rule accordingly.

Wednesday, April 28.

——— v. BROOKS.—Pearson applied for a distringas to compel appearance. Granted.

BLAKE v. COOPER, a Lunatic.—Collier moved for a rule to enter appearance for the defendant. Granted.

GASSIOT v. CARPMAEL.—Edwin James, Q.C. and Lush shewed cause against a rule to shew cause why the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside and a verdict entered for the defendant. Shee, Serjt. in support of the rule. The defendant had ordered a load of manure, which had been left at his door in the evening after his gardener had left. The question was whether he was liable for the loss of the plaintiff's horse and damage done to his carriage by reason of an upset caused by the heap of manure. The Court were of opinion that the verdict which had been found for the plaintiff was unsatisfactory.

New trial on payment of costs.

UNWIN v. DEEDY.—Deighton moved for leave to enter an appearance for the defendant. Granted.

Reported by FREDERICK BAILEY, and C. J. B. HERTSLET, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

REG. v. ELIZABETH JONES.

Vagrant Act—Reputed thief—Form of conviction.

The stat. 5 Geo. 4, c. 83 (the Vagrant Act), s. 4, does not render any suspected person or reputed thief who may be found frequenting a street with intent to commit felony, liable to be punished as a rogue and vagabond, unless the street be, and be described to be a street leading to some river, canal, or navigable stream, dock, or basin, quay, wharf, or warehouse, near or adjoining thereto, or a place of public resort, or place adjacent to some public resort, or avenue leading thereto.

Where the conviction of a person stated her to be a reputed thief who was found frequenting "Regent-street, in the county of Middlesex," with intent to commit felony, it was Held insufficient, and the party having been brought up by habeas corpus, was entitled to be discharged.

The defendant had been convicted and sent to the Westminster House of Correction as a rogue and vagabond under the 4th section of the Vagrant Act (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), and the conviction alleged that on, &c. the defendant being, &c. was frequenting a street called "Regent-street, in the county of Middlesex," with intent to commit felony, and a rule nisi having been obtained (see antè, p. 66) for a habeas corpus, and the rule having been yesterday made absolute, no one appearing to shew cause against it, the writ issued, to which a return had been made, and the prisoner was in Court.

Huddleston moved that she be discharged out of custody, on the ground that the conviction was informal and insufficient: he referred to the case of Re Brown, 18 Law T. 238, where a similar point had come before the Court of Q.B. and the majority of that Court there held the conviction right, Patteson, J. differing in opinion; he submitted that the opinion of Patteson, J. upon the construction of the Act was the correct one, and that the word "street," as used in the Act, intended a street leading to some river, canal, or navigable stream, dock, or basin, or quay, wharf, or warehouse near or adjoining thereto; or to a street of or adjacent to public resort; in this conviction Regent-street was described only as in the county of Middlesex, without saying which Regent-street, and there were several in the county, or without even alleging it to be a place or street of public resort.

No one appeared to oppose the application.

POLLOCK, C.B.—This is an application to us to determine whether the party who has been brought into court pursuant to the writ, is upon this conviction correctly in custody, and the language as used in the commitment is, "that the said Elizabeth Jones was frequenting a certain street, called Regent-street, in the county of Middlesex, with intent to commit felony." Every other allegation required to satisfy the terms of the statute appears to be complied with, and all would seem to be right except the place described, where the party is stated to have been frequenting; and that as set out is literally nothing more than this,—that one Elizabeth Jones, being a suspected person, was frequenting some Regent-street, in Middlesex. The question is whether frequenting a street, or any street, by a suspected person, is sufficient to bring it within the terms and meaning of the Act, without describing the street to be a street of public resort, or leading to any river, canal, or navigable stream, dock, or basin, or any quay, wharf, or warehouse near or adjoining thereto? The case of Re Brown, decided by the Court of Q. B. has been cited, in which it appears three of the learned judges there were of one opinion, and Patteson, J. differing from them, of another. The conviction in that case was somewhat different to the present in its terms, yet notwithstanding that, I doubt whether I could have agreed with the majority of the members of the Court in the decision come to: the words of the Act are, "Every suspected person or reputed thief, frequenting any river, canal, or navigable stream, dock, or basin; or any quay, wharf, or warehouse near or adjoining thereto; or any street, highway, or avenue leading thereto; or any place of public resort, or any avenue leading thereto; or any street, highway, or place adjacent;" street adjacent, means street adjacent to the subject-matter referred to, not to any or every street of whatever description, whether public or private. The liberty of the subject is in question, and the Act is one which should not receive, I think, such laxity of construction. For these reasons I am of opinion the conviction cannot be supported, and the prisoner is therefore entitled to be discharged.

PARKE, B.—I am of the same opinion with the Lord Chief Baron, and we are bound to pronounce our opinion, although certainly it is different to the Court of Q. B. upon the decision in Re Brown. I think Mr. Justice Patteson's judgment there is the correct one, as also in the former one, which in the report is stated to have been before him at chambers; the cases upon principle are alike, and the conclusion he came to upon the construction of the Act I think was right; looking at the words of the Act, the object and meaning seem to me to be plain. "Every suspected person or reputed thief frequenting any river, canal, or navigable stream, dock, or basin, or any quay, wharf, or warehouse near or adjoining thereto, or any street, highway, or avenue leading thereto;" if it had stopped there, there could have been little doubt about it; but street is again repeated, and the words "leading thereto" must have a reference to the subject-matter preceding in every case; but then it goes on, "or any place of public resort, or any avenue leading thereto;" the word "thereto" means the same in both cases; then it says, "or any street, highway, or place adjacent;" place adjacent means adjacent to some place of public resort. If it had intended that a person should be apprehended under the circumstances required by that section of the Act in any street, or in any highway, the Legislature should have inserted street or highway only.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion; according to the interpretation which it is said has been given to this Act it would be only to find out that a person has an intention to commit a felony, and I do not then see where he can go. The Act must certainly mean any canal, dock, quay, wharf, or warehouse,—and the intention was to protect such places from depredation,—or any street, avenue, or highway leading thereto; then it goes to another description of place which it might well have been the object also of the Legislature to protect, that is, places of public resort; where, in fact, pockets go, and are very likely to be picked,—as also in any avenue leading thereto, or street, highway, or place adjacent. It would be a very difficult thing for me to construe this statute to mean that any suspected person having an intention to commit felony, and being in a highway, is to be sent off finally to prison without trial except on a mere inquiry before a justice.

MARTIN, B. had left the Court.

The prisoner was ordered to be discharged.

GARNEY v. HARRIS.

County Courts Extension Act—Construction of—Costs.

The 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 11, provides that if in any action of trespass plaintiff shall recover a sum "not exceeding five pounds," he shall have no costs, and the 12th section provides, that if the plaintiff shall recover "a sum less than the sum in that behalf hereinbefore mentioned," and the judge shall certify, he shall be entitled to his costs. Plaintiff in trespass recovered the exact amount of 5l.

Held, that the judge had power to certify for costs under the 12th section.

This was a case on the construction of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61 (the County Courts Extension Act). An action of trespass for assault had been brought in the Superior Court, and the plaintiff had recovered a verdict, with damages, 5l. and the judge who tried the cause had certified for costs under the power given by the 12th section of the Act.

Collier now moved for a rule to show cause why the Master should not review his taxation of costs, and why the judge's certificate for costs should not be set aside. The 11th section of the County Courts Extension Act provides that, "if in any action commenced after the passing of this Act in any of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record, in trespass, trover, or case, not being an action for malicious prosecution, or for libel, or for slander, or for criminal conversation, or for seduction, the plaintiff shall recover a sum not exceeding 5l.: the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover that sum only, and no costs;" and the 12th section provided, "that if the plaintiff shall in any such action as aforesaid recover a sum less than the sum in that behalf hereinbefore mentioned, by verdict, and the judge or other presiding officer before whom such verdict shall be obtained shall certify, on the back of the record, that it appeared to him at the trial that the cause was one for which a plaint could not have been entered in any such County Court as aforesaid, or that it appeared to him at the trial that there was a sufficient reason for bringing the said action in the court in which the said action was brought, the plaintiff in such case shall have the same judgment to recover his costs that he would have had if this Act had not been passed." The plaintiff in this case could not have recovered his costs without a certificate from the judge under the 11th section, because he had recovered a sum "not exceeding five pounds," and he cannot be entitled to them with such certificate under the 12th section, because the power to grant such certificate is only given where the sum recovered is "less than the sum in that behalf mentioned," that is in an action of trespass less than a sum not exceeding five pounds. Now, in this case, the plaintiff recovered the exact sum of 5l., which is not less or more, but equal to a sum not exceeding 5l. No doubt this is a casus omissus on the part of the legislature, but the Court is bound to adhere to the strict grammatical construction of the Act, and not usurp the province of the legislature by altering the words of the enactment to meet the presumed intention, and supply any supposed omission. According to the grammatical construction, "not exceeding five pounds" is the antecedent referred to in the 12th section. Reg. v. The Inhabitants of the Parish of Mahe, Cornwall, 5 N. & M. 241, decided that the provisions in 37 Geo. 3, c. 111, exempting from the stamp duties thereby imposed on every indenture of apprenticeship, "where a sum or value not exceeding 10l. shall be given, or contracted with, or in relation to the apprentice," does not extend to an indenture where no consideration passes. It is evident that the legislature never intended that when there was no consideration passed, there should be imposed a duty, and Lord Denman recognised the mistake of the Legislature in his judgment, but felt bound to take the act as he found it.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I am of opinion that there should be no rule in this case. Where the language of an Act of Parliament admits of but one interpretation, as in the case relied on, the Courts of Law have no right to alter it, however absurd the conclusions to which the words lead; but if there are several ways of construction, then I think we are bound to take that most in accordance with the spirit of the Act. There must be a difficulty of construction before we have any power to deal with an Act, so as to interpret its meaning; but in this Act I think it is quite clear that it was intended that the judge should have the power to certify in all cases in which, without his certificate, costs could not have been recovered; well, then, what is the meaning of the words "a sum less than the sum in that behalf hereinbefore mentioned?" Why a sum that would have been sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover costs.

PARKE, B.—I also think there should be no rule. According to the strict grammatical rule of construction, Mr. Collier may be right; but according to the rule acted on by the Courts of Law of late years, and a very valuable rule it is, we may depart from the strict grammatical construction when it leads to inconsistency, repugnancy, or absurdity, to be collected from the entire Act, and that would be so in such a case as the present.

PLATT, B.—An Act of Parliament should be read as anything else would be, with a view to understand the true meaning; and these two sections must be so read, with a candid mind, and with a disposition to ascertain the true meaning of the Legislature. It cannot be believed, but that the Legislature intended that the judge should have the power to grant his certificate, when costs were taken away by the 11th section, and nothing could be more absurd than the state of affairs which would ensue if the argument relied on should be permitted to prevail; to avoid this absurdity, we must construe these sections, so as to give them a reasonable construction when taken both together; and if there appear to be a mistake, it seems to me we are at liberty to correct, if we can clearly discover what the intention of the Legislature was. It is perfectly clear to my mind, that in this Act, the words "less than," ought to be substituted for "not exceeding," and taking them in that sense, the argument in favour of this rule must fail.

MARTIN, B.—I am of the same opinion, and I think, that on a literal construction of the words this application must fail, the words are, if the plaintiff shall recover a less sum than in that behalf hereinbefore mentioned, which means a less sum than would entitle him to recover costs without a certificate. We ought to read Acts of Parliament with a desire to arrive at the intention the Legislature had in framing them. Rule refused.

Replication.—That the goods were not the goods of Thomas, nor were they clandestinely removed to avoid the distress. Demurrer to the replication, on the ground that it was double, and for multifariousness, as a traverse of either of the facts alleged in the replication would have been a good answer to the plea. Prideaux, contrà.—The plaintiff here may have replied de injuria, if he had chosen. (See Bowler v. Nicholson, 12 A. & E. 341.) If he could, then he is not bound to do so; but may traverse two or more facts instead, as was decided by Gorton v. Robinson, 2 Dowl. N. REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF ABINGER.
Highway—Repair—Costs.

Right of the prosecutor to his costs where, upon an indictment preferred pursuant to an order of justices, the defendant succeed upon a plea of liability of a third person to repair ratione tenuræ.

Pitt Taylor moved for a rule calling upon the justices of Surrey to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding them to direct the costs of the prosecutor in this case to be paid to him, as directed by sec. 95 of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50.

The following were the facts:—Application having been made to justices, under sec. 94 of the above Act, for an order for the repair of a highway, the duty and obligation to repair were disputed, whereupon the justices, pursuant to sec. 95, directed a bill of indictment to be presented at the next Quarter Sessions for Surrey, which was accordingly done. To this indictment the defendants pleaded the liability of another party to repair ratione tenuræ. At the trial the jury found for the defendants, and hereupon the prosecutor of the indictment applied for his costs under sec. 95, which enacts that "The costs of such prosecution shall be directed by the judge of assize before whom the said indictment is tried, or by the justices at such Quarter Sessions, to be paid out of the rate made and levied in pursuance of this Act in the parish in which such highway shall be situate," &c. The justices, however, refused to give the prosecutor his costs.

It was now contended that the justices were wrong, for that the section is imperative and gives them no discretion upon the subject, the prosecutor being entitled in any event to the costs of the prosecution. Articled clerk—Dispensing with the usual notice of admission under special circumstances.

Needham moved, on behalf of Mr. John Atkins, an articled clerk, that he may be allowed to take out his certificate on the last day of next Term, giving in the meantime such notice as the time will admit of. The circumstances under which this application was made were these:—This gentleman was articled to his father, and his period of service duly expired in January last, but he had as yet given no notice of his intention to apply for admission. His father being possessed of landed property in South Australia, it had been arranged that the applicant should proceed thither and superintend the property, and practise in his profession; and it was of consequence that the present season for the voyage should not be lost.

His LORDSHIP thought that, under the circumstances, the application might be granted. Application granted.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

FIRST SITTINGS IN EASTER TERM.

Friday, April 16.
(Before COLERIDGE, J.)
BATEMAN v. BLUCK.
Highway—Cul de sac—47 Geo. 3, c. 29—Public paved place—Dedication.

A. the owner of a passage and court leading from the street to thirteen cottages, with gates at the entrance and without a thoroughfare, requested the commissioners for paving the parish to pave the Court; they did so, and a public gas-lamp was placed in it:

Held, strong evidence of the dedication of the passage and court to the public:

Held, also, a public paved place within 47 Geo. 3, c. 29, and a public highway.

A passage may be a highway, though it is not a thoroughfare.

This was an action of trespass for pulling down a wall which had been erected by the plaintiff in Hat and Mitre-court, St. John-street, Clerkenwell. The defendant pleaded "Not guilty;" secondly, that the close was not the property of the plaintiff; thirdly, that the wall was erected in a public paved place within the 47 Geo. 3, c. 29; that the wall incumbered it, and therefore the defendant entered and threw it down; fourthly, that it was a public footway and highway; that the wall obstructed it, and therefore the defendant entered and pulled it down. The plaintiff in his replications denied that it was a public paved place or a public footway and highway.

It appeared that the plaintiff was possessed of a house in St. John-street; that behind it were thirteen cottages approached only by a passage seven feet wide, leading from the street by the side of the plaintiff's house. The passage was inclosed by iron gates, which were put up by the plaintiff. The defendant was possessed of a house on the other side of the gateway. There was a public gas-lamp in the court, and the name of the court, "Hat and Mitre-court," was up over the entrance. Eighteen years ago the court was paved by the plaintiff's husband, but some time since the commissioners for paving and lighting the parish paved it at the request of the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed the court under a deed. Some years ago a door was opened from the defendant's house into the passage, though the plaintiff then objected. The defendant subsequently used the door for the purposes of his trade, to the annoyance of the plaintiff and the injury of her property. The plaintiff then caused a wall to be built so as to prevent the defendant from using the door; this wall the defendant pulled down, and the present action was brought against him for so doing.

M. Chambers, Q C. for the defendant, contended that the court and passage in question formed a public highway. It had been once dedicated to the public by inviting the commissioners to pave it, and that dedication could not be withdrawn or retracted. No one had a right to say he would call upon the public to repair or improve his court, and still treat it as his own private court. If the public repaired, the public were entitled to enjoy it. The paving by the parish was such a dedication as precluded the court from remaining any longer private. It was also a public paved place within the statute 47 Geo. 3, c. 29. He also contended that the plaintiff's deed did not include the whole width of the passage, and therefore that the wall was not built upon her property.

Knowles, contrà, urged that the locus in quo was the property of the plaintiff; that it was not a public paved place within the statute, for unless it was before the paving a public place, the commissioners had no right to pave it, nor could the expense of such paving be allowed to the commissioners from the parish funds. (Paul v. James, 1 Q.B. Rep. 832.) Nor was it a public highway; it was without doubt originally private, and the invitation to the commissioners to pave it made no difference. They had no right to pave, and could not pave as public commissioners. And even if they could, it would not amount to a dedication. There could be no dedication to the public of a mere private passage leading to a few private houses. Such passage could not be a public highway. [COLERIDGE, J.—The commissioners have paved up to the defendant's door and considerably beyond it; is not that strong evidence of a dedication?] A dedication to the use of the inhabitants of the cottages, but not of the public generally. There can be no dedication of such a passage to the public; it is only a cul-de-sac and cannot be a highway. (Wood v. Veal, 5 B. & A. 454.) [COLERIDGE, J.—That case only decided that a dedication by the tenant was not sufficient.] That was the point decided, but Best, J. adds, if the road is for the accommodation of particular persons only, it is not a highway. If in this case the plaintiff and the tenants of the cottages had agreed to keep the gates locked, could they not do so? [COLERIDGE, J.—That amounts to the same thing. The question is, whether it is public or not? I shall direct the jury that this passage may be a public highway though there is no thoroughfare, with leave to the plaintiff to take the opinion of the Court upon it.]

COLERIDGE, J.—In summing up the case told the jury, that in point of law the passage might be a public highway, and left it to them to say whether the place was the property of the plaintiff, whether it was a public highway, and whether it was a public paved place. Verdict for the defendant.

Knowles, Q.C. and Garth, for the plaintiff.

M. Chambers, Q.C. and Lush, for the defendant.

BANKRUPTCY.

LEEDS DISTRICT COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner AYRTON.)

Monday, Nov. 17, 1851.

Re WILSON.

Proceedings after an adjudication of bankruptcy are not void because there exist clerical errors and omissions in the duplicate of the adjudication served on the bankrupt.

Cariss, for the bankrupt, moved that the proceedings after adjudication be set aside in consequence of no duplicate of such adjudication having been served upon the bankrupt, as required by section 104 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. That section enacts, "that before notice of any adjudication of bankruptcy shall be given in the London Gazette, * * * a duplicate of such adjudication shall be served on the person adjudged bankrupt." Now, in what is called the duplicate said to be served on the bankrupt, there is a blank where there ought to be the month "October," and the figure "1" is omitted in 1851. Then the name of the solicitor is erroneously written on the back of this duplicate.

Ford, for the petition, contrà.

Mr. Commissioner AYRTON.—The copy of the adjudication served is defective in omitting "October" and the figure "1" in the date (1851). It therefore is not, in fact, a duplicate. But the object of section 104 is, that the bankrupt may have full notice of the adjudication, in order that he may, if expedient, appear within seven days and dispute such adjudication. In this case the bankrupt does not wish to dispute the adjudication, but says all done since is null and void. If, indeed, the bankrupt had held himself aloof from the Court, and when written to by the official assignee, had answered, "What do you mean? I know nothing about you" he might have placed the petitioning creditor in a difficulty; but the bankrupt appears by his solicitor in court, and thereby admits he very well knows what is going on, and he has not taken, nor does he now take, any objection to the adjudication itself. I do not think the omission of "October" and "1" fatal to all subsequent proceedings, so as to render them absolutely null and void; and in point of equity, no injury has been done nor will accrue to the bankrupt by these clerical slips; the object of the clause is satisfied; the bankrupt has had notice of the adjudication, which he does not dispute. His appearance to-day cures the blot. I therefore do not perceive any reason for my interfering to stay proceedings.

March 26 and April 23.

Attorney—Lien.

The bankrupt's attorney has a lien on books deposited with him for a proper purpose prior to the act of bankruptcy.

This was a petition presented by the assignees, praying that a former attorney of the bankrupt might be ordered to give up the bankrupt's books of account, which had been deposited with him before the bankruptcy.

JUDGMENT.

Friday, April 23.—Mr. Commissioner WEST.—The bankrupt, being sued by Mr. Pulleine before his bankruptcy, placed his books containing his accounts with Mr. Pulleine in the hands of his attorney, for the purposes of his defence. The action resulted in a reference, and an award was made against the bankrupt for a reduced sum, for which Mr. Pulleine has proved under the bankruptcy. His costs remaining unpaid, the attorney claims a lien on these books, which the assignees seek by this petition to have delivered up to them. An attorney has a right to ask for some security for his costs. If he refuses to go on, he must deliver up the papers; but if the client discharges him, he may retain them until his bill be paid. This being undoubtedly the law as between the parties themselves, I conceive that where the books were deposited with the attorney before the act of bankruptcy, the assignees have no better title than the bankrupt: and that as he could not insist upon these books being given up, neither can they. (Lambert v. Buckmaster, Ex parte Bowden.) If deposited after the act of bankruptcy, of course no lien could attach. Ex parte Hardy was cited as in point; but it went on the ground that the books were part of the proceedings. The solicitor there held them in the bankruptcy, as solicitor to the assignees, and his possession of them was their possession. The decision merely was, that the solicitor to the assignees should deliver them up to the assignees. Here they were deposited for a proper purpose before the bankruptcy. There may be a difference of opinion as to whether they are part of the proceedings, and in this case I incline to think they are not, although it is alleged that the bankrupt could make out a more satisfactory balance-sheet if he had them to refer to. A point was made as to whether I had jurisdiction, as the party claiming the lien did not seek to prove before me. I think I have jurisdiction; but I decide the case on the ground that, for the reasons I have stated, the attorney's lien, in my opinion, still attaches. The petition will be dismissed; but as it is a point of some importance, I should not be sorry to have it taken to the Court of Appeal, unless an arrangement can be come to.

INSOLVENCY COURT.

PROTECTION CASE.

Re EDMUND HENRY LENTHALL.

Death of assignee—Appointment of new assignee.

An assignee having been chosen at an adjourned first examination, and having died before the final order was granted,

Held, that a day might be named for the creditors to proceed to a choice of another assignee de novo.

This insolvent appeared for his final order, and it transpiring that the assignee chosen by the creditors at the previous examination had died in the interval,

Dowse and Macrae, for the opposing creditors, said it was desirable that a new assignee should be appointed to manage the estate.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS doubted his power to appoint an assignee on the day for the final order.

Macrae said that this was the first case of the kind that had occurred since the transference of these statutes to that court. There could be no doubt of the power of the Court to appoint a new assignee in the place of the deceased (5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, s. 7, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 3), and he apprehended the same course should be pursued as in bankruptcy (7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 73), and a day named upon due notice to creditors for a new choice.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS doubted whether an appointment would be good on the day for the final order.

Macrae thought that under these circumstances it did not matter whether it was the day for the final order or any other day after the death of the original assignee. He apprehended the same course should be pursued as if the assignee had died a week hence instead of a week ago.

Cooke said that his learned friend had put the case correctly. He apprehended the same notice and the same course should be pursued as for a choice of assignees in bankruptcy.

A day was then named for a meeting of creditors for a new choice of an assignee. The usual notice, as in bankruptcy, to be given to the creditors of the day appointed for the meeting.

The treasurer for the time being of a charity was appointed executor of a will. The person who filled that office at the death of the testator had ceased to do so at the time he applied for the probate:

Held, nevertheless, that he was entitled to the grant.

The testator appointed A., B. and C. "together with the treasurers for the time being," of six charitable institutions, executors of his will, and residuary legatees in trust, and residuary legatees, beneficially as to one-third of the residue of his estate. He died on the 17th of November, 1851, and on the 3rd of December following probate of his will was granted to A. and B. (C. having died in the lifetime of the testator) as the two surviving executors, power being reserved of making the like grant to the treasurers for the time being of the charities. At the time of the testator's death, L. H. was the treasurer of one of these charities, but he resigned that office on the 17th of December, when another person was appointed in his place; but the testator having died on the 17th of November previous, L. H. was at that time treasurer, and not the person who now filled that office. All the six treasurers now applied for probate, and were each described in the jurat as treasurer of their several respective charities at the time of the testator's death, and as such an executor named in this will. A question arose whether L. H. or his successor, was entitled to be joined in the grant.

Deane moved the Court to decree the grant to go in the words of the jurat, contending that the Court must look to the words of the will rather than to the intention of the testator. The same words were used in the bequest of the residue as in the appointment of the executors. L. H. was entitled to his third of the residue upon the death of the testator, as executor of the will; he was clearly, therefore, entitled to be joined in the grant of the probate; that he was, moreover, treasurer for some time after the testator's death, and was so when the grant was made to A. and B. and that he might then have been joined in the grant; that an executor might do many acts, such as bringing actions, paying and receiving debts due to the testator's estate, &c. before probate; the death of the testator clothed the executor with that character; and that L. H. was clearly entitled to be joined, he not having renounced, but rather power having been reserved for him to come in and prove when he should think fit.

Dr. LUSHINGTON.—Although I have some doubts whether a person appointed executor as treasurer of a society is entitled to be treated as an executor when he has ceased to be such treasurer; yet I do not feel disposed to refuse this grant. The case is a very peculiar one, looking at the manner in which the testator has bequeathed his property. I shall let the motion pass.

REG. v. VINCENT and WEST.

Larceny—Allegation of property—Amendment.

A. was sent by his master, a carman, to the London Dock Company for two hogsheads of sugar, the property of B. By mistake, the Dock Company delivered two hogsheads belonging to C. On the road from the premises of the Dock Company to those of B., A. broke bulk and abstracted a quantity of sugar. He was indicted for larceny, and the indictment laid the property in A.'s master, but during the trial an amendment was made, and the property was laid in the Dock Company:

Held, that the amendment was authorised by the stat. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1; and that the property was properly laid in the Dock Company.

William Vincent and William West were indicted, at the Middlesex Sessions, for stealing, also for receiving, forty-five pounds weight of sugar, the property of Matthew Orchard. It appeared in evidence that Orchard was a carman, and was employed by Mr. Buck to convey two hogsheads of sugar, his property, from the London Docks to his warehouse, and that Orchard accordingly sent the prisoner Vincent with two delivery notes, and one of his horses and carts for that purpose; but that the clerk of the London Docks delivered to him by mistake two hogsheads of sugar belonging to a third person. It was then contended that as the hogsheads so delivered to Vincent were not the hogsheads he was authorised to receive, no property in them passed to his employer Orchard; and upon the application of the counsel for the prosecution, the Court amended the indictment by describing the sugar as the property of the "London Dock Company."

The case then proceeded, and it was proved that after the hogsheads were delivered to the prisoner Vincent he conveyed them to a considerable distance from the premises of the London Dock Company, and was then met by the prisoner West with a horse and cart, and that, assisted by West, he abstracted the 45 lbs. from one of the hogsheads, and delivered the same to West, who drove away with it. It was then contended, by the prisoners' counsel, that the ownership of the property was still wrongly described, inasmuch as the property in the London Dock Company was founded on possession only, and therefore ceased as soon as they had parted with the possession, although under a mistake, and the goods had been removed from their premises.

The jury found both the prisoners guilty of larceny, and not guilty of receiving.

Two points were reserved:—1st. Whether the amendment was an amendment within the meaning of the statute, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1. 2ndly. Whether the property was rightly laid in the London Dock Company.

Judgment was postponed, and both prisoners were committed to prison to abide the decision of this case.

The case was now argued before Pollock, C.B., Parke, B., Erle, J., Talfourd, J. and Crompton, J.

O'Brien for the prisoner Vincent, and.

Metcalfe for the prisoner West.—Assuming that the amendment was properly made, the property is wrongly laid in the Dock Company. The special property which they had was lost when they voluntarily delivered possession of the hogsheads to the prisoner. That act was a conversion by them, and they were immediately liable to an action of trover, at the suit of the real owner. (Devereux v. Barkley, 2 B. & Ald. 702.) At that time no larceny was committed; the larceny, if any was committed subsequently by breaking bulk; and when the sugar was abstracted, the Dock Company had no longer any possession, or special property in it. They cited R. v. Mucklow, 1 Mood. C.C. 160; R. v. Harding, Russ. & Ry. 125; R. v. Walsh, Russ. & Ry. 218; R. v. Thurborn, 1 Den. C.C. 387.

Parry, contrà, was not called upon.

POLLOCK, C. B.—I believe that we are all of opinion that the conviction is right. Two points are reserved by this case: first, whether the amendment made, was an amendment made within the meaning of the statute; about which, I understand the learned counsel for the prisoners now to make no doubt; and, secondly, whether the property was rightly laid in the London Dock Company. We must assume that every thing else necessary to constitute the offence was properly proved; that a larceny was committed against some one; the only question is, was it against the London Dock Company? Now the London Dock Company certainly had a special property, as bailors of this sugar; and it is a mistake to suppose that whenever a person who has a special property, parts with the possession, he parts also with the special property. I think he certainly would not, where, as in this case, he merely by mistake, delivers over a wrong parcel. By that delivery no change is effected in the property, which remains as before. Under the circumstances of the present case it seems to me that the London Dock Company might be considered as bailors of the sugar to the prisoner, who, during the journey, broke bulk. No doubt the property might have been laid in the real owner of the sugar, to whom the company were responsible; but I think that it was not necessary so to lay it.

PARKE, B.—I am of the same opinion. No doubt the amendment was right; because the consignee never gave authority to the Dock Company to send these particular hogsheads; but it is an established rule of law, that either the bailor or bailee may maintain trespass (2 Roll. Abr. 551); and if so, the taking being felonious, the property may be laid in either; and I think that here the Dock Company must be considered as bailors.

ERLE, TALFOURD, and CROMPTON, JJ. concurred. Conviction affirmed.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

April 29, 30, and May 2, 1851, and Feb. 26, 1852.

MONRO v. TAYLOR.

Specific performance—Land partly freehold, partly leasehold—Abandonment of contract—Waiver of abandonment—Interest on purchase-money—Costs.

A. agreed to sell premises partly freehold and partly leasehold to B. The leasehold portion of the premises was held under a renewable lease from an ecclesiastical corporation. Previous to the contract, A. had applied for a renewal, when the lessors required that a plan of the demised premises should be inserted in the new lease shewing the boundaries and dimensions thereof. After the contract for sale, a plan was found on an old surrendered lease of the date of 1810, drawn on the scale of a chain to an inch, stating the superficial quantity to be two roods. The lessors insisted that the statement of the quantity of the demised premises as being two roods only was incorrect, and was merely an approximation to the true dimensions, which they insisted ought to be ascertained by admeasurement, according to the scale, which would make the dimensions about two roods and a half, and refused to grant a lease unless the plan of the premises in the said lease was drawn in conformity with that of 1810, omitting the expression, "of the superficial quantity of two roods." On the defendant refusing to complete, save on the terms of the lessors' granting a lease the same, except as to dates, as the existing lease, on a bill filed by the vendor for specific performance of the contract of sale:

Held, affirming the decree of the Court below, that under the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff, by the production of an attested copy of the lease of 1810, had sufficiently shewn what part was leasehold and what part freehold, or, even if it were uncertain whether the dimensions of the leasehold should be considered as two roods or two roods and a half, such uncertainty was not an objection to specific performance:

Held, also, allowing the plaintiff's exception to the Master's report, which was overruled by the Court below, that the interest ought to be allowed on the purchase-money from the time fixed for the completion of the contract, and not from the time when the attested copy of the lease of 1810 was produced.

The description of property in a contract for sale as being "partly freehold and partly leasehold," is not of so indefinite a nature as to constitute an objection to a decree for specific performance.

In a correspondence between a vendor and purchaser, a mode pointed out by either of them, by which a difficulty in the way of the completion of the purchase can be obviated, cannot be considered as the abandonment of the original contract or the substitution of a new one.

Abandonment of a contract may be waived by the subsequent conduct of the parties.

Semble, that a vendor contracting to sell property "partly freehold and partly leasehold" is, in the absence of a specific stipulation relieving him therefrom, under an obligation to shew the purchaser which is freehold and which is leasehold.

A contract by a lessee of an ecclesiastical corporation, whilst he was in treaty with the corporation for a renewal of his lease, to sell the leasehold premises, and although the renewal may have been intended for the benefit of the purchaser, does not create an obligation on the part of the vendor to renew the lease.

In the year 1832 the plaintiff purchased from the devisees and executors of the late Duke of Brunswick an estate and premises called Belmont House, at Vauxhall, part of which was freehold and part held under a lease from the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury for the residue of a term of twenty-one years. Since the purchase, the plaintiff twice procured renewals of his lease, and the last of such renewals was made on the 30th of June, 1838, by an indenture of that date, in which, amongst other clauses, there was a proviso that the lease should not be assigned without licence of the Dean and Chapter. On the 31st of July, 1845, the plaintiff entered into an agreement in writing with the defendant for the sale to him of the estate. That agreement was in the following terms:—"Memorandum that G. L. Taylor, of, &c. agrees to purchase of Robert Monro, of, &c. the premises called Belmont House, partly freehold and partly leasehold, for the sum of 7,750*l.* the purchase to be completed on the 1st day of November next. Possession to be given on signing the formal agreement to be drawn out agreeably to the terms of this minute, when the sum of 2,750*l.* is to be paid by Mr. Taylor on account of the purchase-money. The residue of the purchase-money is to be secured by a mortgage on the premises, payable at the end of three years, with 5*l.* per cent. interest in the meantime. Mr. Taylor to have the option of paying off the same at any earlier period on giving six months' notice in writing. Mr. Taylor agrees to take the same title as Mr. Monro took on purchasing from the devisees and executors of the late Duke of Brunswick. The stables now occupied by Mr. Robins are also to be purchased by Mr. Taylor, subject to such yearly tenancy, at a sum to be agreed upon between Mr. Taylor and Mr. Nelson or their umpire. The amount to be paid on the completion of the purchase. The fixtures and barges also on the premises, according to the schedule, to be agreed upon between the same parties, are to be purchased by Mr. Taylor at a valuation to be made by two appraisers, or their umpire, and paid for at the above period. The moveable furniture and other things on the premises are to be removed by Mr. Monro; Mr. Taylor to have the option of purchasing any part thereof at a valuation. Mr. Monro to bear such expenses as are usually borne by a vendor, and Mr. Taylor those usually borne by a purchaser, and each party to pay the expense of his own surveyor." That agreement was entered into by the defendant as chairman and on behalf of the Western Gaslight Company for the purpose of enabling the company to erect on the freehold part of the premises buildings of large dimensions, of great value, for the manufacture of gas, and to unite such buildings with others intended to be used for the like purpose, on land adjoining that which had been purchased by the company.

A formal agreement was prepared, but was not executed, and no part of the sum of 7,750*l.* was ever paid. The sum of 840*l.* was fixed upon by the appraisers or their umpire as the price of the stables, and the sum of 317*l.* 10s. 3d. as the price of the fixtures.

Anterior to the memorandum of agreement, the plaintiff had applied to the Dean and Chapter for a renewal of the lease. A negociation had taken place upon that subject, in the course of which the plaintiff had paid the fine for such renewal, but the Dean and Chapter refused to grant such renewal except on the condition that, for the proposed new lease, a plan of the demised premises should be inserted shewing the boundary and dimensions thereof. The boundary and dimensions of the estate in the whole were perfectly ascertained, and the freehold and leaseholds were not intermixed, but yet a visible boundary did not appear to have ever existed between the freehold and leasehold portions of the estate. The description in the lease was the same as that which had been contained in the immediately preceding lease and in the lease of 1832, under which the premises were held at the time of the plaintiff's purchase; and neither that description nor the description contained in the conveyance of the freehold part of the estate afforded any assistance in determining the precise boundary line between the freehold and leasehold part; but in a prior lease of the demised premises granted in the year 1810, there was a plan purporting to shew the boundaries of the demised premises, which plan is stated to be drawn on a scale of one chain to an inch, and having the quantity two roods specifically stated in the body of the plan; but upon applying the scale to the formal dimensions of the plan, it gives rather more than two roods in point of quantity. The Dean and Chapter contended that the specification of two roods, in words, was to be treated as an approximation only to the true quantity, and not binding upon them, and that the actual dimensions ought to be determined by admeasurement according to the scale, and therefore in any renewed lease, that the plan should be drawn in exact conformity with that of 1810, but omitting the specification in words of two roods as the quantity, and that they refused to grant a new lease, without such plan omitting the specification; and at one time they said they declined to grant leave to assign the lease of 1838, except on the condition, that when an assignee should require a new lease he would consent to the insertion of such a plan, with the omission, as aforesaid, in such new lease. Ultimately, however, they did grant an unconditional license to assign.

A long correspondence took place between Messrs. Few and Company, as the solicitors of the plaintiff, and the Honourable Daniel Finch, as the agent of the Dean and Chapter, and also between Messrs. Phillips and Son, the solicitors for the defendant, relating to the difficulty about the boundary of the leasehold estate, but it is only necessary to notice a few of the many letters that passed between them.

On the 17th of June, 1846, Messrs. Few and Company wrote to Messrs. Phillips stating, "The Dean and Chapter of Canterbury having positively declined to accede to the terms of the plan settled by their surveyor, and Mr. Nelson, we fear we have no alternative but to accept the lease they have tendered, and to obtain the license to assign to Mr. Taylor, and we beg to submit to you that according to the contract this is all we can be required to do, although we have had every desire to meet your views, and have used every exertion in our power to induce the Dean and Chapter to grant the lease with the plan containing, as settled, the boundaries, dimensions, and gross quantity."

On the 9th of July, Messrs. Phillips and Son wrote as follows:—"In answer to your letter of this day, we beg to say that we will recommend our clients to complete the purchase with Mr. Monro, if you will carry out our suggestions, and which we think we are fairly and strictly entitled to, viz. if you obtain a lease from the Dean and Chapter, agreeing verbatim in all respects with the language of the lease granted to Mr. Monro of the 30th of June, 1838, except as to dates, and you obtain also a license to assign the same to Mr. Taylor, or the trustees of the company, as may be required. We are," &c. Those are the terms which they suggest.

On the 21st of July, Messrs. Phillips write to Messrs. Few and Co. thus:—"If a new lease be granted, why not in precisely the same terms as that of 1838? and if it be desirable to have a plan, why not a copy of that in 1810? Such a lease we should recommend our clients to take without any hesitation; or if you can obtain a license for assigning to our clients the existing lease without any condition, so that we may hereafter object to any unreasonable deviation, we think they ought to be satisfied, and therefore shall recommend it."

On the 25th of July, Mr Finch, the agent of the Dean and Chapter, wrote to Messrs. Few and Co. as follows:—"I have had an earlier opportunity than I had expected of laying your application for a license to assign this lease before the Dean and Chapter, and they have agreed to grant a license, provided notice is given to Mr. Taylor that the fine set and paid for the renewal of the lease was expressly on an understanding that the new lease should contain such a description and plan of the demised premises as should be approved by the Dean and Chapter. I have written to Mr. Taylor to this effect, and shall therefore prepare the license of alienation, and get the Chapter's seal as soon as I can, provided I hear nothing from you or Mr. Taylor which offers any obstacle thereto."

On the 28th of July, Messrs. Phillips write to Messrs. Few and Co. thus:—"This purchase having been made on the part of a public company, we were under the necessity of submitting the papers to counsel, and being advised by him that we ought to require from the vendor a definition of the boundaries between the leasehold and the freehold, and that we ought to require the description of the property to be similar to those in the leases of 1810 and 1838; we regret that we cannot recommend our clients to deviate from that advice by taking the license subject to the condition referred to in your letter to Mr. Taylor of the 25th instant. The contract entered into by Mr. Taylor will, we believe, justify us in taking an assignment of the lease of 1838, with a plan affixed to it similar to that of 1810, or without any plan, but then it must be without any conditions that the plan or parcels are hereafter to be altered. More than this we have not the power to agree to, and trust, therefore, that it will not be pressed."

On the 29th of July, Mr. Finch wrote to Messrs. Phillips and Son that the license to assign would not be granted. On the 3rd of August, Messrs. Few and Co. wrote to Messrs. Phillips and Son thus:—"We have just learned that a considerable quantity of the glass upon the premises contracted to be purchased by your client has been broken and destroyed by the thunder and hail storm of Saturday last, and also that other damage has been occasioned by reason thereof. We have thought it right to give you the earliest information of the fact, so that your client may have the earliest opportunity of repairing the loss, which, of course, will fall upon him. In regard to your last letter, we beg to say, that we had a personal interview with Mr. Finch, on Saturday last, and we hope to be able to send you a reply to-morrow."

Then Messrs. Phillips and Son wrote to Messrs Few and Co. this letter: "At a meeting of the Board of the Western Gas Light Company, held yesterday afternoon, your letter as to the damage done to this property by the storm of Saturday last was taken into consideration, as also the position of that property generally, and we are directed to acquaint you that as the leasehold and freehold portions of the property have not been defined as requested, and as the license to assign has been refused, the company had no alternative but to abandon the contract, and hold your client responsible for compensation."

On the following day, Messrs. Few wrote to Messrs. Phillips and Son, stating that the plaintiff would not accede to the abandonment of the contract, and that an arrangement had actually been made on the previous day with Mr Finch for granting a license to assign; and on the 10th of August Messrs. Phillips write to Messrs. Few, saying.—"We have only to repeat that as you have neither defined the boundaries between the freehold and leasehold parts of the property, nor obtained a license to assign, our client has been left no alternative but to abandon the contract, particularly as we have received notice that the Dean and Chapter claim a greater part as leasehold than has hitherto appeared to be such."

On the 11th of August Messrs. Phillips and Son write to Messrs. Few, stating that "it is with great reluctance that Mr. Taylor has been obliged to abandon the contract, the injury occasioned thereby to the Western Gas Light Company, for whom he acted in the transaction, being very considerable: after, however, having had notice that no new lease would be granted with parcels similar to the last, or with a plan like that of 1810, and without being able to induce your client to distinguish the leasehold from the freehold, he really had no alternative, and acting, therefore, under the advice of counsel, which he as the representative of a public company feels bound to do. We have only to confirm our former letters, the abandonment of the contract being determined upon."

Mr. James Phillips, a partner in the firm of Phillips and Son, deposed in the cause to the following effect:—That in the verbal communications which he had with Messrs. Few or their agents, a distinct statement was made that the defendant was quite ready to complete the contract on having the same unconditional title that the plaintiff was entitled to when he purchased from the Duke of Brunswick, but not otherwise.

In December 1846 this bill was filed by the plaintiff for a specific performance. The defendant put in his answer. The bill was afterwards amended at great length, and an answer was put in to the amended bill. The plaintiff and the defendant then entered into evidence, and the cause was heard before Vice-Chancellor Wigram, who made a decree dated the 26th of June, 1848, whereby it was declared that the plaintiff was entitled to the specific performance of the agreement of the 31st of July, 1845, subject to his making a good title according to the terms of the agreement; and it was referred to the Master to inquire whether the plaintiff could make such a good title; and if so, when it was made. The Master, by his report, found that the plaintiff could make such good title, and that he first shewed such good title on the 3rd of November, 1849, the day when an attested copy of the lease of 1810, and the plan thereto annexed, were produced by the plaintiff's solicitor and left in the Master's office. To this report the defendant excepted, on the ground that a good title could not be shewn, and on the other hand the plaintiff excepted, on the ground that a good title was shewn, and that before the filing of the bill.

The cause came on to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Wigram on these exceptions, and further directions; and a decree was made on the 20th of February, 1850, whereby the exceptions of both parties were overruled; and the Master was directed to compute the purchase-money due to the plaintiff, and to compute interest on the 5,000*l.* part of the purchase-money for three years commencing from November 1845, at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. and on the residue of the purchase-money for three years at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. and the whole of the purchase-money from the expiration of the three years from the date of the report, according to the agreement; and the Master was to take an account of the rents and profits from the 1st of November, 1845, and that what should be coming on the account of rents and profits should be deducted from what should be due to the plaintiff for interest; and upon the plaintiff executing a proper conveyance, it was ordered that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff what should remain due for principal and interest. Against both decrees the defendant appealed.

The Solicitor-General and Amphlett for the plaintiff.

Rolt, Malins, and Mickelthwait for the defendant.

The points raised in the arguments of counsel are sufficiently noticed in the judgment of the Lord Chancellor, and the cases cited thereon were Price v. Strange, 6 Madd. 159; Green v. Pulsford, 2 Beav. 70; Grove v. Bastard, 2 Ph. 619; De Visme v. De Visme, 1 Mac. & G. 336; and as to costs, Long v. Colier, 4 Russ. 269; Scoones v. Morrell, 1 Beav. 251, Sidebotham v. Barrington, 5 Beav. 261.

The LORD CHANCELLOR (Lord Truro) after stating the facts at considerable length.—I am of opinion the decree was perfectly right, except so far as it relates to the plaintiff's exceptions. It has been objected that the agreement ought not to be enforced on account of the generality of the expression, "partly freehold and partly leasehold," but I think this objection is groundless. I am not aware that it ever has been held that a contract for the purchase of a freehold and leasehold property must define the precise boundary of what it is of each; nor do I think, on principle, the indefiniteness of such a description in the purchaser's contract ought to be deemed a justifiable reason for not enforcing it. If the boundaries are known to the parties at the time of the contract, the indefiniteness of the description is manifestly immaterial; and even if it is not known at the time, and the purchaser should find the quantity of freehold is less than he expected, and this should be prejudicial to him, still if, as in the present case, there is no proof of concealment or misrepresentation on the part of the vendor, the purchaser would only have to blame himself for his own imprudence for not inquiring what were the relative quantities of the freehold and leasehold premises before he entered into the contract. As to the statement that representations respecting the boundaries were made prior to the contract, I think there is no sufficient proof of that whatever. But it is alleged that the correspondence shews that the original contract had been abandoned, and a treaty for a new agreement had been entered into. This, however, I do not think is the case. The letters merely amount to a mode of obviating the difficulty, which, in the opinion of the purchaser, stood in the way of completion of the purchase. It is further said that the defendant gave notice of his abandonment of the contract, and that notice had the effect of putting an end to the contract; but it appears to me, from the passage in Mr. James Phillips's evidence, that that notice was afterwards waived by the subsequent conduct of the firm; but besides, the circumstances of the contract were not such as, in my opinion, to entitle the defendant to give a notice of abandonment—to abandon the agreement. It is objected that this dispute, which has arisen respecting the division between the freehold and leasehold portion of the estate, is a reason why this Court should not enforce the agreement; but I cannot assent to that. I will assume, for the purpose of argument, that a vendor who contracts to sell property described as "partly freehold and partly leasehold," in the absence of specific stipulation relieving himself from the obligation, is obliged to shew the purchaser what part is freehold and what part is leasehold;" and in the present case, the stipulation that the purchaser should take the same title as the vendor had from the devisees and executors of the Duke of Brunswick, does not remove that obligation (for a knowledge of the tenancy of the different portions of the estate may be of the utmost importance as regards the beneficial use of the property). But assuming this to be the law, I think that by the production of the attested copy of the lease of 1810, the vendor sufficiently fulfilled his obligation to shew what part was leasehold and what part was freehold, even supposing it to be wholly uncertain whether the specification of "2 roods" is to be taken as conclusive as against the Dean and Chapter; or whether the dimensions ought to be determined by the application of a scale, and the larger quantity be thereby determined to be leasehold. I put out of the question the argument that the uncertainty is only an uncertainty in law, and an uncertainty that could be determined by a decree when pronounced which would determine what the contract was from the beginning, and I will assume that there is an uncertainty which could not be thus determined, and assuming this, it is such an uncertainty as ought not to be raised as a ground for refusing specific performance under the circumstances of the case. It is agreed on all hands that the leasehold part occupies the whole of the river frontage, and that the freehold occupies the whole boundary of the turnpike-road. The only uncertainty is, what is the exact position of the division line between the freehold and leasehold, and consequently whether the leasehold is only two roods or somewhat more, say two roods and a half. I lay no stress on the smallness of the quantity claimed by the Dean and Chapter, and I will suppose it to be of the utmost importance to the purchaser that the leasehold should consist of two roods only. Supposing this to be so, and assuming, nevertheless, that the additional part which is claimed by the Dean and Chapter really is freehold, and assuming what certainly may not be more prejudicial to the purchaser, that it is wholly uncertain whether that part is freehold or leasehold, and such an uncertainty can never be removed, the purchaser has sustained no damage, he has all that the vendor had, and all that the purchaser contracted to buy; for, considering the value of the goodwill of a tenant holding under the Dean and Chapter, he was satisfied to take the estate without stipulation as to the respective quantities of freehold and leasehold. All he has to do is to see that the leasehold embraces the larger rather than the smaller of the two quantities of the one or the other, of which it is admitted to consist, and to deal with the estate accordingly for the purposes to which he might think fit to apply it. After such a contract as that entered into, if two roods and a half had been the quantity mentioned in the body of the plan of the lease of 1810, it cannot be contended that the purchaser would be entitled to resist the specific performance, when it was under a general description which did not define the relative positions of the freehold and leasehold, and when there is no proof that any representations were made to him as to the quantity of the one or the other, or the boundaries between them; and how then can it be maintained that the purchaser is entitled to resist the specific performance, merely because the quantity mentioned in the body of the plan was two roods, while the scale on the plan from the Dean and Chapter, gives about two roods and a half when he purchased under a general description of "partly leasehold and partly freehold," and when there is no proof that at the time of the contract he was ever led to suppose, or had any reason to suppose that the leasehold consisted only of two roods, or the boundary line between the freehold and leasehold was of the one portion rather than of the other? To resist the specific performance upon those grounds when it could not have been resisted if the quantity specified in the body of the plan had been two roods and a half is to resist the specific performance merely on account of the possibility of the quantity of the freehold being greater, and the bargain somewhat more beneficial in the present case than it would have been if the quantity mentioned in the body of the plan had been two roods and a half, and there had been no doubt that the leasehold consisted of as great an amount. As to the notice mentioned in Mr. Finch's letter of the 25th of July, which was to this effect:—"That the fine set and paid for the renewal of the lease was expressly on an understanding that the new lease should contain such a description and plan of the proposed premises as should be approved by the dean and chapter,"—that furnishes no reason why the contract should not be performed; for, independently of the consideration that the defendant purchased without any stipulation as to the relative quantities of the leasehold and freehold, the letter of Messrs. Phillips and Son, of the 21st, renders that notice immaterial, for they say,—"If you can obtain a license for assigning to our client the existing lease without any condition, so that we may hereafter object to any unreasonable deviation, we think they ought to be satisfied, and shall therefore recommend it." If the Dean and Chapter should hereafter insist when a renewal is applied for, that the plan in the lease of 1810 should be adopted, omitting the specification, of the quantity, and that the leasehold should be stated to amount to the quantity for which the Dean and Chapter have contended, that would merely be a demand which the defendant would be prepared to expect, and notwithstanding the expectation of which, in this case, his solicitors expressed their willingness to accept the assignment of the lease. But it is further contended that the delay which has taken place, and the position of the company on whose behalf the defendant purchased, furnishes a reason why the Court should not enforce the agreement. It is submitted by the answer, that by reason of the serious and prejudicial delay that had arisen previous to the month of August 1846, in the completion of the purchase, which would prevent the company from commencing the manufacture of gas, and proceeding with building operations which were absolutely necessary, and which had been determined on by the company on the defendant entering into the contract, the defendant was justified in abandoning the contract, and the more especially as the company had been compelled by reason of such delay to purchase other and less advantageous premises for the purpose of carrying on the manufacture of gas; there does not appear to me to be any evidence of this, or that the plaintiff or his solicitor was aware of the purpose for which the defendant or the company made the purchase. But even if that were otherwise, the defendant might have at once put an end to the delay by assenting to the claim of the Dean and Chapter, which he might have done without having any stipulation or understanding as to the quantity of the leasehold. Another objection urged by the defendant is, that the plaintiff contracted and was bound to procure a renewed lease for the defendant, but this is not so. It is true, the plaintiff, prior to the contract, was in treaty for a new lease, and he made an exertion to procure it; but the contract itself is silent in respect of any renewal, and the plaintiff, in the absence of express words, must be taken only to have assigned what he himself had, either in law or in equity, unless there were special circumstances creating an obligation independent of the contract. It was expected that the plaintiff would endeavour to procure a renewal, if it were only with a view to his own benefit in the event of the contract breaking off. But admit he did so for the benefit of the purchaser alone—and from the general tenor of the correspondence that would appear to be the case—that did not create an obligation on the part of the plaintiff to procure such a renewal. There is no proof of its being for any consideration, and therefore it is not one which a Court of Equity would enforce, even if it had not been waived by the defendant, as it seems to me to have been by the letter of 1846. With reference to the defendant's exceptions, I am of opinion for the reasons I have already given, that a good title is shewn, notwithstanding the uncertainty as regards the boundary line to which I have adverted. With regard to the plaintiff's exception to the report as to the time when a good title was shewn, I think the exception ought to be allowed. Looking at the correspondence, I conceive that the defendant, or his agent, must be deemed to have known, in the course of the correspondence before the institution of the suit, what was the precise point in dispute between the plaintiff and the Dean and Chapter; and consequently, for the reasons I have already given, the dispute did not shew that a good title could not then be made, and I think that interest ought to be allowed from the time fixed for the completion of the contract. With regard to the costs, even supposing that a good title was not shewn until the attested copy of the lease of 1810 was produced in the Master's office, I agree with the Vice-Chancellor, that the same kind of litigation would have arisen, even if the lease of 1810 had been produced before the filing of the bill, and the plaintiff is therefore entitled to the costs of the suit. The result is, that the appeals must be dismissed with costs, and the plaintiff's exceptions to the report must be allowed.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

April 19, 20, 28; May 4.

LORD JAMES STUART v. THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway company—Agreement to purchase land—Conditional or absolute agreement—Agent—Claim to a specific performance refused—Action at law directed—Undertakings for trial.

In 1817, a railway company being desirous of making a branch line through lands of the Marquis of B. in consideration of his withdrawing his opposition to their Bill, by their agent E. D. entered into an arrangement termed " heads of an agreement," which referred to a map annexed, by which the company agreed to purchase certain portions of the land marked A. B. C. and D. The company was to give the following sums:—As to A. 400l. an acre for land required for the railway, and an additional 100l. for making a road; as to B. 1,250l. an acre; as to C. 400l. an acre for what was required; as to D. 250l. an acre, and to pay 1,000l. for depreciation of homesteads. And the agreement contained the following clause:—" The above prices refer to the quantities of land required for the railway, and to the contents of the roads and severed portions, which are respectively to be accurately measured. The Marquis having withdrawn his opposition, the Bill passed on the 9th of July, 1847. On the 1st of September, 1817, a formal draft agreement was sent by the company to the Marquis's solicitor, which endeavoured to convert the " heads of agreement " into an agreement conditional on the company requiring the lands of the Marquis. A correspondence ensued of considerable length, which ended in nothing. The Marquis died on the 18*th of March,* 1848, having appointed the plaintiffs his devisees in trust, and executors. On the 14*th of October,* 1848, notice of the abandonment of the railway was given, but although a correspondence between the parties went on, the claim was not filed until the 18*th of June,* 1850, which was not brought to a hearing until the 21*st of February last. The compulsory powers of the company ceased on the* 9*th of July,* 1850, but the time to complete the construction of the railway does not terminate until the 9*th of July next:*

Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that it was not a case for specific performance, and that the plaintiff should be left to his legal remedy, the defendants entering into certain undertakings, necessary for the trial at law.

This was an appeal from the decision of his Honour the Master of the Rolls, who, on a claim filed by the plaintiffs as the devisees in trust of the late Marquis of Bute, decreed specific performance of certain heads of agreement entered into by the defendants, the London and North-Western Railway Company, by their agent, Mr. Edward Driver, on the 1st of April, 1847, for the purchase of certain lands belonging to the Marquis, in the parish of Luton, Bedfordshire, for the purpose of making a branch line from Watford to Dunstable. The facts of this case, which are somewhat similar to those of Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company, 9 Hare, 129; reversed on appeal, 19 Law T. Rep. 2; are fully reported, 19 Law T. Rep. 13; and as it was heard before his Honour the Master of the Rolls, before the reversal of the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, Sir George Turner, in Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company, his Honour considered himself bound by the authority of the Vice-Chancellor.

Roundell Palmer and Steuart Macnaghten for the plaintiffs, contended this was a more favourable case for specific performance than Webb's case, as there the Company was insolvent, and had lost the power of completing the line; in this case, the Company was powerful and solvent, and although they had abandoned, or postponed, the making of the line, their powers to make it would not cease until the 9th of July next. That the Company did not now want the land was no answer to claim for the specific performance of the agreement: suppose a person contracts to buy land in order that it might be added to the ground of his house, if his house be burnt down, surely he could not resist specific performance, because he no longer wanted the land. That the map annexed to the agreement formed part of it; that the terms "land required for the railway" mentioned in, and for which a sum per acre was to be given according to, the heads of the agreement, meant the land which had been required, not which should be required, viz. the land coloured blue in the map; there was, therefore, no uncertainty as to the lands to be taken by the company. (Preston v. The Liverpool, Manchester, &c. Railway Company, 1 Sim. N.S. 586; Peacock v. Penson, 11 Beav. 355; Hawkes v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 20 L.J. N.S. Ch. 243; Edwards v. The Grand Junction Railway Company, 1 Myl. & Cr. 650.)

[During the argument of the plaintiff's counsel, Mr. Willcock, in answer to a question put by Lord Justice Knight Bruce, said that in case an action should be directed, the company would admit at law that the contract termed "the heads of the agreement" was a contract under the seal of the company.]

Bethell, Willcock, and Speed, for the company, insisted upon the laches of the plaintiff. That the Act of Parliament passed and received the Royal Assent in July 1847, the notice of the intention to abandon the railway was given on the 14th of October, 1848, and the claim was not filed until the 18th of June, 1850, and not brought to a hearing until the 21st of February last. That the agent had no power to enter into an unconditional agreement; that the agreement was conditional on the railway being made, as that was the purpose for which it was entered into. The company were to pay for land "required for the railway," but that meant the land which was actually wanted, and as none would be wanted the company could not be called upon to make any payment; that there was, at all events, an uncertainty and ambiguity in the contract, especially as to what was meant by the terms "lands required for the railway," and "severed portions." Moreover, 1,000l. was to be paid for depreciation of homesteads, and the depreciation could not be ascertained until it was shewn what lands would be taken by the company. [Palmer hereupon waived all claim to the 1,000l. for depreciation.] That assuming the agreement to be unconditional, though it might be a proper case for damages at law, it was not for specific performance in equity. They cited Moore v. Blake, 1 B. & B. 69; Heaphy v. Hill, 2 S. & S. 29; —— v. White, 3 Swanst. 108 n.; Clarke v. Moore, 1 J. & L. 728; Harnett v. Yielding, 2 S. & L. 556; Gervais v. Edwards, 2 Dru. & War. 82; Watson v. Reid, 1 Russ. & My. 236.

Steuart Macnaghten, in reply.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—This case was decided by his honour the Master of the Rolls on the authority of the case of Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company; not as the case now stands, it having been brought by appeal to this Court, but as it was after the decision of the case by his honour the Vice-Chancellor Turner. As I understand from counsel, the Master of the Rolls seemed to intimate an opinion that but for that authority probably his decision might not have been such as in fact it was. If that be so, inasmuch as that case of Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company has since been decided otherwise than it was decided by Vice-Chancellor Turner, we have not in fact the duty of substantially overruling anything that was meant to be decided by his honour the Master of the Rolls, and we shall be acting in conformity with what would probably have been his opinion but for a decision which he then thought binding upon him, though in fact that decision has since been overruled. Now I confess I think that this case is a weaker case than Webb's case, so far as the plaintiff is concerned, inasmuch as it was offered that this should be put into a train of inquiry at law. It is perhaps, not necessary, and perhaps not proper, to give any opinion about what the construction of the agreement is, but it seems to me much more doubtful whether there was any binding contract at all, which was the case in Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company. Upon that however I give no opinion. It may be that there was such a contract, or it may be there was not such a contract. The ground on which we proceeded in Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company was this, that whether it was a contract or not, the circumstances of the case made it such that it was not fit for this Court to interfere by way of specific performance, because these two circumstances conspired that complete relief might be obtained at law, if the parties were entitled to any relief,—and the principle of mutuality wholly failed, for it was impossible for this company to take the land which was their benefit in consideration of the money which they were to pay. Now it appears to me that that principle applies precisely in this case the same as it did in that. Supposing that this was a contract by Mr. Driver amounting to a positive contract, that if the Railway Act passed these specific pieces of land, assuming them to be defined, should be taken and a given sum paid for them, supposing that was so, then the only difficulty which the present plaintiffs are in is this, that it was a contract, not as it was in Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company, binding on the defendants, because it was entered into by Mr. Driver, as agent, who had no authority to bind them; therefore the interference of this Court on the principle of the case of Edwards v. The Grand Junction Railway Company, and one or two others, which were decided on the same principle, is not to be entertained. Now that may give a title to relief in this Court, but the only relief that that could give would be to put the parties in the same situation as they were in in the case of Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company, when, in point of fact, the company, after the Act of Parliament had been obtained, entered into a contract binding themselves to adopt the contract entered into by the parties before the company came into existence. That is the course which appears to me, and, I think, my learned brother, and will be the course that will do substantial justice in this case. It was agreed in the outset that the defendants would enter into any admissions or stipulations that might be necessary to enable the plaintiffs to raise the question at law, and therefore what we propose to do is this, to make an order that the defendants consenting and undertaking that in the event of an action being brought against them before the end of Trinity Term next (for they must not have it hanging over their head), by or for the benefit, or under the direction, of the plaintiffs, touching or concerning the agreement of the 1st of April, 1847, the defendants will, in such action and for all the purposes thereof, admit that on the 10th day of July, 1847, a deed was duly executed by the defendants under their common seal, whereby they covenanted for themselves and their successors with the late Marquis of Bute, his heirs, executors, and administrators, that they would perform all agreements entered into, if any, previously to the 9th of July, 1847, by Edward Driver, acting, or purporting to act as their agent for the purchase of any land from the said Marquis to be taken and used by them for their intended railway, and for compensation to be made for any damage to be occasioned by the railway, (that is a matter for subsequent consideration), in the same way as if such agreement had been duly entered into by them under their common seal, after the passing of the said Act, the defendants consenting to dispense with profert in the said action

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—Perhaps the time that the plaintiffs suffered to elapse after the passing of the Act of 1847, or, if no time before November, 1848, ought to count, then after October, 1848, before they filed in July, 1850, the present claim is fatal to it; but assuming that not to be so, I am unable to view the case as one for specific performance. In the first place, if the parties were reversed, could the defendants, as plaintiffs, have obtained a decree for specific performance? Against this, probably the mere circumstance of the abandonment of the undertaking for the purpose or alleged purpose of executing, which the land in question, or so much of it as in truth was proposed or agreed to be purchased, was purchased or agreed to be purchased, would have formed an insurmountable objection; if so, it may be thought to dispose of the actual contention, but, independently of any such consideration, I doubt whether to enforce specifically the terms, or any parts of the terms of the document before us, that of the 1st of April, 1847, would not, in the actual condition of circumstances, be against public policy, or, in other words, contrary to law, but, setting aside this point also, I am of opinion that the language of the document in parts of it necessary to be construed and acted upon, if there is to be a decree of any kind for specific performance against the defendants, it is too vague, too uncertain, too obscure, to enable this Court to act with safety or propriety for any such purpose for this very possibly is the intention of the agents concerned, that a more formal document, not merely by way of conveyance, but by way of contract, should be prepared and executed may account. But however this may be, the plaintiffs must, I conceive, be left to proceed at law as they may be advised; they will have the benefit of the concessions for facilitating their proceedings there, which the defendants have made by their counsel.

Bethell having requested the Court for further time to consider the terms of the undertaking, the minutes of the order ultimately drawn up were as follows: "Car. The defendants, by their counsel, consenting and undertaking that, in the event of an action being, before the end of Trinity Term next, brought against them by or for the benefit or under the direction of the plaintiffs, for the purpose of obtaining damages for the breach of the alleged agreement of the 1st day of April, 1847, and such action being prosecuted with due diligence, the defendants will in such action, and for the purposes thereof, admit that on the 10th day of July, 1847, a deed was duly executed by the defendants, under their common seal, whereby they covenanted for themselves and their successors, with the late Marquis of Bute, his heirs, executors, and administrators, that they would perform all agreements, if any entered into previously to the 9th day of July, 1847, by Edward Driver, acting, or purporting to act, as their agent for the purchase of any lands from the said Marquis, to be taken by them for the intended railway, and for compensation to be made for any damage to be occasioned by the said railway, in the same way as if such agreements or agreement, if any, had been duly entered into by them under their common seal on the day of the date thereof, and as if they had then been duly authorised by law to enter into such agreement or agreements, the defendants also consenting to dispense with profert in such action; and any of the parties are to be at liberty to apply to this Court as there shall be occasion.

THORNTON v. ELLIS.

Will, construction—Enjoyment in specie by tenant for life—Mortmain Act—Shares in railway, whether real or personal estate.

A testator by his will made a bequest in these words "The residue of my property of every description it may be at my death I bequeath the interest and produce thereof to my sisters for life, and to the survivor of them for life, and after the death of the survivor I bequeath the said residue as follows:" viz., to two charities in mortmain. The residue consisted of a sum of money in the funds, some furniture, a small sum of cash, and twenty railway shares.

Held, that the testator's sisters were not entitled to the income of the property in specie, but that it must be converted and invested in the Three per Cents. A question as to the Mortmain Act was raised, but was deferred till after the death of the survivor of the tenants for life.

This was a suit instituted by the British and Foreign Bible Society for the administration of the estate of John Ellis, late of Park-road, Stockwell, one of the record keepers in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. Mr. Ellis by his will, dated 12th October, 1843, made a bequest in these words:—"The residue of my property of every description it may be at my death, I bequeath the interest and produce thereof to my sisters, Elizabeth Ellis and Sarah Charlotte Ellis for life, and to the survivor of them, and after the death of the survivor to "several other persons, for life successively," and after the death of the survivor I bequeath the residue as follows, that is to say, as to one moiety thereof to the British and Foreign Bible Society, and as to the other moiety thereof to the Home Missionary Society, for the benefit of the said society, and for carrying out the designs of those institutions." The testator appointed his said two sisters the executrixes of his will. The property of the testator consisted of a sum of money (about 2,000*l.*) in the funds, some furniture, 189*l.* cash, and twenty shares in the Great Western Railway Company. The testator died in May last, and on the 17th July a letter was written by the solicitors of the British and Foreign Bible Society to the executrixes respecting the residuary estate, and on the 8th of August, without waiting for a reply, they filed a bill for recovery of one moiety of the residue, and now asked for a decree to pay in the small sum of cash in hand, and to sell and convert the twenty railway shares, and invest the produce in Consols, and to pay the costs of all parties as between solicitor and client. Two questions, however, were raised: first, whether the railway shares were to be sold or to be enjoyed by the tenants for life in specie; and, secondly, whether they constituted real or personal estate, and whether or not therefore they were within the statutes of mortmain.

R. Palmer and Baggallay for the plaintiffs, the British and Foreign Bible Society.

Roupell and Beavan for the testator's two sisters, the tenants for life, contended that though the ordinary rule was to convert personalty and invest it in Three per Cents. yet that rule yielded to the intention of the testator to give it for life to the parties in its existing state; and here the words were "of every description it may be at my death;" that is not a simple gift of the interest of the residue, but a qualified gift. It means the whole interest and proceeds thereof—"every description it may be at my death." (Collins v. Collins, 2 Myl. & K. 703; Bethune v. Kennedy, 1 Myl. & Cr. 114.) As to the other point of the Statute of Mortmain it would be concluded by Sparling v. Parker, 9 Beav. 115, 450; Walker v. Mylne, 11 Beav. 507; and Tomlinson v. Tomlinson, 9 Beav. 459, but for the cases of Myers v. Perigal, 16 Sim. 533; and Ashton v. Lord Langdale, now on appeal before the House of Lords. The estate was small, and it would be a great hardship on the tenants for life to convert, as the suit itself had been a great hardship. The principle of Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 150, did not apply, for the property is not leasehold, nor a perishable interest, but as lasting as Consols; and it is not absolutely necessary that there shall be a conversion at all events without reference to the circumstances. It is not the rule of Court to call in a good mortgage, for instance. Then again what would be done if there were no Consols; and what was done when there were none? No danger to the fund was suggested, and there was no dispute, and no occasion for a suit to absorb the fund in litigation. At all events the costs ought not to be thrown on the estate, but ought to be postponed till the plaintiffs' moiety comes into possession, and paid out of that. They referred to Morgan v. Morgan, 14 Beav. 72; Hinves v. Hinves, 3 Hare, 609; King v. The Hull Dock Company, 1 T. R. 221.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—There is nothing to be found in this will to entitle the successive tenants for life to enjoy these shares in specie; they must therefore be sold and converted, and the proceeds must be invested in Consols. With respect to the strong observations by Mr. Beavan that these shares are an investment of a permanent nature, and that the rule of conversion and investment in Consols could not have existed prior to the existence of that stock, it is to be observed that the rule has been settled by the decisions subsequent to Prendergast v. Prendergast, 11 Jur. 989, to be the invariable course of the Court, where one interested in the property requires it, to order the property to be got in and invested in Three-per-Cent. Consols. The Court held such to be the right of the parties entitled even prior to the determination of the case of Prendergast v. Prendergast. In that case the trustees had the absolute discretion to leave the property in its existing state of investment, and having refused to exercise the discretion, the Lord Chancellor required the property to be got in and invested. I do not intend to decide anything further than that these shares must be sold, and the produce invested in Consols, as proposed by the plaintiffs. I do not determine any question as to the Mortmain Act, except that the Master's report does not, I think, conclude the question, or that exceptions were necessary. There is considerable difficulty arising in the conflict of decisions, and I am not desirous of expressing any opinion on that point, but if I were to do so I should probably be found to follow the last decision. I feel the hardship of the case as to the testator's sisters; it is certainly a great hardship that they should have to bear the costs of the suit, but that is the fault of the testator himself, and if by his will he raises a question which requires the adjudication of the Court, his estate must bear the expense. I regret it should be so, but the Court is constrained to make a decree, as Mr. Palmer suggests.

GREENWOOD v. ROBERTS.

Will—Construction—Remoteness—Parties.

Gift of an annuity to T. N. for life, and after his decease to such of his children as may be then living equally during their lives, and at the decease of any of them, the capital sum producing his or her share of the annuity, to be divided equally amongst the children of him or her so dying. T. N. had one child, R. N. living at the date of the will:

Held, that the gift over to R. N.'s children was void for remoteness.

The widow of R. N. was plaintiff:

Held, that she had a sufficient interest to support the suit.

This was a special case on the construction of a will, raising a question of remoteness. It appeared that Richard Nicholson, late of Boroughbridge, by his will, dated 18th April, 1827, bequeathed all his stocks, securities, and personal estate and effects to his brothers Thomas and Joseph Nicholson, his nephew Richard Greenwood, and his nephew Richard Nicholson, the son of his brother Thomas, upon trust immediately after his decease to appropriate and set apart so much thereof as would produce an annual dividend of 700*l.* and to pay therewith or thereout the several annuities therein mentioned, being annuities to his brother Thomas and others for life, amounting in the aggregate to 700*l.* The testator then proceeded thus:—"And from and immediately after the decease of the said annuitants or any of them (except the said Richard John Greenwood, and the son, and three first named daughters of my said sister Mary Pickup), it is my will and design to continue and extend the annuity of each of them to the persons and in manner following, that is to say, my said brother Thomas Nicholson's annuity of two hundred pounds to and amongst such of his children as may be then living in equal shares and proportions during their respective natural lives, and at the decease of any of them, I order and direct that so much principal or capital stock as had been adequate to the payment of the annuity to which the child so dying had been entitled during his or her life shall be forthwith sold and converted into money by my said trustees, or the survivor or survivors of them, his executors or administrators, and the actual produce thereof shared and divided equally amongst the children of him or her so dying, as and when they shall attain the age of twenty-one years, with interest in the meantime to be applied for their benefit and advantage. And I give them vested interests therein. And I further direct that if any of the children of my said brother Thomas shall at his decease be dead and have left issue, that such shall nevertheless be entitled amongst them, if more than one, to the same sum of money as they would eventually have been entitled to had their parent outlived the said Thomas Nicholson the father." And the testator thereby also extended and continued the other annuities in like manner, and provided that if any of the parties therein mentioned should sell or dispose of their share previous to the time of its falling due and payable, then the interest and share of such parties should be forfeited and cease and should be applied and paid in manner thereby directed in the event of the death of such parties before the time of their legacy falling due. And after giving several pecuniary legacies the testator concludes thus: "I do hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint the said Thomas Nicholson, Joseph Nicholson, Richard Greenwood, and Richard Nicholson, executors of this my will, and also my residuary legatees revoking all former wills by me made."

The testator died on the 6th of May, 1829, and on the 13th of June following his will was duly proved by all the executors therein named, and the sum of 23,333*l.* 6s. 8d. Three per Cent. Consols was appropriated to satisfy the said annuities. The annuity of 200*l.* was duly paid to Thomas Nicholson till his death, which happened on the 16th November, 1832. Thomas Nicholson left six children him surviving, viz. his son Richard, who was living at the date of and was mentioned in the will, and five others, and no child died in his lifetime leaving any issue surviving. After Thomas Nicholson's decease an annuity of 33*l.* 6s. 8d. being one sixth-part of the said annuity of 200*l.* was paid to his son Richard Nicholson till his death. Joseph Nicholson died on the 8th of June, 1834, and no severance of the joint tenancy created in the testator's residuary estate having been made the then surviving residuary legatees, Richard Greenwood and Richard Nicholson, by indenture dated 16th April, 1847, conveyed the real and personal estate to which they were entitled as residuary legatees to John Wood, his heirs, executors, &c. to the use of, and in trust for, Richard Greenwood, as to one moiety, and Richard Nicholson, as to the other moiety. Richard Nicholson died on the 26th of June, 1847, having by his will, dated 16th October, 1841, appointed his wife, Mary Frances Nicholson, sole executrix thereof, who duly proved the same on the 31st July, 1847. Richard Nicholson had issue four children, one of whom was still-born on the 10th of December, 1825, and the other three are still living; that is to say, Frances Amelia, born 5th June, 1824, and married to William John Roberts 13th July, 1842; and Richard Thomas Nicholson and George William Nicholson, who were born respectively on the 2nd of June, 1833, after the testator's decease. A question having arisen as to the construction of the gift or bequest contained in the testator's will of the principal moneys or capital stock producing the annuity of each child of the testator's brother Thomas in favour of the children of each such child, a special case was prepared for the opinion of the Court: the question for its consideration being, whether the children of the said Richard Nicholson, or any, or either, and which of them became, upon his decease, entitled to the principal moneys or capital stock, producing the annuity to which the said Richard Nicholson was entitled during his life, under the testator's will, or to any part or parts thereof, or whether such principal moneys or capital stock upon such decease fell into and became part of the testator's residuary personal estate.

Richard Greenwood, the surviving executor and residuary legatee of the original testator, and Mary Frances Nicholson, the widow and executrix of Richard Nicholson, were the plaintiffs, and William John Roberts, and Frances Amelia his wife, and Richard Thomas Nicholson, and George William Nicholson, infants, by Thomas Burleigh Scott, their special guardian, were defendants, T. B. Scott having been appointed, by an order of the 24th July, 1851, special guardian for the purpose of concurring in the special case on behalf of the infants.

Baggallay for the plaintiffs.

Rogers for the defendants, the infants.

F. T. White for the defendants, Mr. and Mrs. Roberts.

Monday, Dec. 22.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The question in this case arises on the construction of a bequest in the will of Richard Nicholson, dated the 18th of April, 1827, and the question is, whether the bequest of the principal of an annuity is good as an absolute gift over after a gift for life to Richard Nicholson, one of the nephews of the testator, or whether it is void as being in violation of the law against perpetuities, and falls into the residue, or, in other words, whether the children of Richard Nicholson became entitled to their father's share under the limitations in the will. It is admitted that the gift to the children of the children of Thomas Nicholson not living at the date of the will, is void for remoteness. On the question of the right of the plaintiffs to maintain the suit, the case of Roberts v. Roberts, 2 Phil. 534, has a material bearing, that being a decision that the contingent interest of the widow of the testator was sufficient to constitute her a proper party. It is to be observed also in decisions as to parties, that they are sometimes necessary, though it may afterwards turn out that they have no interest to be enforced; and in the above case the Lord Chancellor only decided that the widow had interest enough to support the suit. The case of Leake v. Robinson, 2 Mer. 363; Lord Dungannon v. Smith, 12 Cl. & F. 546; Blagrove v. Hancock, 16 Sim. 371, have a strong bearing in this case. The real question is, whether Richard Nicholson, the nephew, took as one of a class, or as an individual; if as one of a class, then the gift over to the second class is bad, if any of them are incapable by law of taking. I am of opinion I must treat the children of him or her so dying as a class, and then the testator has given the property to a class to be determined at a future period, and after that he has given it to another class, of which some are incapable by law of taking; therefore the case of Leake v. Robinson applies, and the gift over is void for remoteness.

THACKWELL v. GARDINER.

Married woman—Defective execution of power of appointment.

A. was indebted to B. on a bond for 1,500l. Upon the marriage of B. to C. this bond was assigned to a trustee for B. for life, for her separate use, without restraint on anticipation, and after her decease for the children of the marriage, and in default of children, for such persons as B. should, by deed, attested by two witnesses, appoint, and in default of appointment, for her next of kin. B. and C. afterwards, in 1832 and 1836, received a part of the debt. C. having opened a banking account with E., F., G. and H. became indebted to them for advances, and they, being anxious to have B.'s guarantee, prepared a letter, to which C. obtained B.'s signature. The letter was dated in April, 1843, and stated that in consideration of the bankers having advanced money to her husband, B. guaranteed the repayment thereof upon demand to the extent of 600l. and deposited the bond as a collateral security, which bond she undertook to assign to them, at her expense, when called upon to do so. The bond was accordingly deposited with the bankers. In November, 1842, K. had been appointed trustee of the settlement. In 1844 B. took out administration to A. who was then dead. In 1846 the banking partnership was changed, E. and F. remaining in the firm, and having two new partners, L. and M. C. became bankrupt. E., F., L. and M. instituted a suit for the purpose of enforcing their claim against the bond debt, claiming a right to have a legal appointment by B. in their favour, there being no children of the marriage, and charging K. with wilful default in not recovering the moneys already paid on the bond to C..

Held, that the life interest of B. was charged by the letter of April 1843, with the balance due in 1846, when the banking firm was changed, but the bill, so far as it sought to charge K. with wilful default, was dismissed with costs.

By a bond dated the 1st of March, 1827, under the hand and seal of Harriett Gardiner (afterwards the wife of James Barrett), a sum of 1,500*l.* and interest thereon, was secured to be paid by Harriett Gardiner to Charlotte Gardiner (afterwards the wife of Richard William Gardiner). By a settlement dated the 1st of October, 1829, made upon the marriage of C. Gardiner and R. W. Gardiner, the said sum of 1,500*l.* and interest was assigned to Thomas Gwillim, upon trust, after the solemnization of the marriage, to call in and invest the same as therein mentioned, and to stand possessed of the said trust moneys and securities, and the interest and dividends thereof, upon trust, to pay the interest and dividends of the said trust moneys and securities to, or permit the same to be received by, the said C. Gardiner, during her life for her separate use, or to or by such persons as she, by writing, should from time to time, notwithstanding her coverture, direct or appoint; and it was by the said indenture declared that after the decease of the said C. Gardiner, the said trust moneys and securities, and the interest and dividends thereof, should be in trust for the children or child of the said C. Gardiner by the said R. W. Gardiner, as therein mentioned; and if there should be no child of the said C. Gardiner by the said R. W. Gardiner, who should become entitled to the said trust moneys and securities under the trusts thereinbefore declared, then that the said trust moneys and securities, and the interest and dividends thereof, should remain and be in trust for such persons or person, and in such manner as the said C. Gardiner alone, notwithstanding her coverture, should by any deed or deeds, or instrument or instruments in writing, with or without power of revocation, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of, and to be attested by, two or more witnesses, from time to time direct or appoint, give or bequeath, and in default of such direction or appointment, gift or bequest, and so far as any such appointment, gift, or bequest, if incomplete, should not extend, in trust for the next of kin of the said Charlotte Gardiner, according to the statutes for the distribution of intestates' estates, and as if the said C. Gardiner had departed this life unmarried and intestate. In March 1836, the said James Barrett was appointed a trustee in the place of Thomas Gwillim. On the 9th of December, 1841, James Barrett died, and on the 16th of November, 1842, John Brown was appointed the trustee of the said settlement. Upon the bond were two receipts indorsed, the one for 100*l.* dated the 18th of June, 1832, and signed by R. W. Gardiner and C. Gardiner, and the other for 645*l.* 18s 11d. dated the 26th of January, 1836, and signed by R. W. Gardiner, C. Gardiner, and James Barrett. In July 1842, R. W. Gardiner opened a banking account with Thackwell, J. Webb, Spencer, and Holbrook, who, under the firm of Webb, Holbrook, and Spencer, carried on the business of bankers at Ledbury, in the county of Hereford. On the 17th of April, 1843, R. W. Gardiner owed to the said bankers, on balance of the said account, 158*l.* 17s. 9d. The bankers having declined to continue the account unless R.W. Gardiner gave security for the said balance, and the balances which might thereafter be owing from them, the following letter, signed by C. Gardiner, was delivered to the firm:—

"Hepton, 17th April, 1843.

"Messrs. Webb, Holbrook, and Spencer.

"Gentlemen,—In consideration of your paying, or having already paid the cheques of my husband, Mr. Richard William Gardiner, or otherwise advancing him sums of money, I hereby guarantee the repayment thereof upon demand to the extent of 600*l.*; and I furthermore deposit as a collateral security a certain bond, bearing date the 1st March, 1827, from Harriett Gardiner to me, which bond I undertake to assign to you at my expense whenever called upon to do so.

"I am, Gentlemen, your obedient servant,

"C. GARDINER."

On the same day, the bond was deposited by C. Gardiner with the said firm. On the 31st of December, 1845, R. W. Gardiner owed on the balance of his account, 715*l.* 15s. 5d. On the 1st of January, 1846, Holbrook retired from the partnership, and a new partnership was formed between the present plaintiffs, Thackwell, J. Webb, Spencer, E. J. Webb, and Moore, and the debts and effects of the former partnership (including the said debt of 715*l.* 15s. 5d.) became the debts and effects of the new partnership. On the 17th of February, 1847, a fiat in bankruptcy was issued against R. W. Gardiner, and he was thereunder declared bankrupt. The plaintiffs proved their said debt under the fiat, and by the dividend paid thereunder, and sums received from sureties, the debt was reduced to 321*l.* 6s. 2d. which sum, with interest thereon from 17th January, 1847, and costs, the plaintiffs now claimed to be due to them. The original bill in this case was filed by the plaintiffs for the purpose of obtaining a declaration by the Court that by virtue of the said letter and deposit of the bond, they had a good equitable lien for the amount remaining due to them from R. W. Gardiner upon the balance of his banking account, upon such rights and interests of C. Gardiner, to and in the said bond and the moneys remaining secured thereby, as under the settlement of the 1st of October, 1829, she was entitled for her separate use, or which she had power to appoint or dispose of; for an account to be taken of what was due upon the balance of the said banking account, &c.; and for the sale of C. Gardiner's said rights and interests; or that she might be decreed to execute to the plaintiffs an assignment and appointment of her rights and interests, subject to redemption, &c. and for foreclosure. By the answer of Mrs. C. Gardiner, she stated that the bond had been deposited with the bankers by R. W. Gardiner, without her knowledge or consent; and that in April 1843 R. W. Gardiner hastily and suddenly placed before her some paper written, and by him stated to be written by Mr. Spencer, one of the said firm, and requested and urged her to sign the same immediately, saying that he, the said R. W. Gardiner, was in a great hurry, that the bank had become very troublesome, and that if she did not at once sign the paper put before her, it would go badly with them both, or words to the like purport and effect; and that in consequence of his urgent request she did sign such paper, but without having read or been made acquainted with its contents. From the evidence of Mr. Holbrook, it appeared that the body of the letter was written by a clerk of the bank, as the deponent believed, in his presence, and that it was then delivered to Mr. Gardiner to get signed by Mrs. Gardiner, and when signed was returned to the bank by Mr. Gardiner, with whom all the communications on the subject of the transaction had taken place. A supplemental bill was afterwards filed, stating, among other things, that on the 27th of July, 1843, letters of administration of the estate of Harriett Barrett were granted to Charlotte Gardiner by the Consistory Court of Hereford, and that on the 17th of May, 1844, like letters of administration were granted to Charlotte Gardiner by the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, and charging Brown with wilful default, in not compelling payment of the two sums of 100*l.* and 615*l.* 18s. 11d. and praying accounts of Harriett Barrett's estate, and that Brown might be decreed to pay the two sums of 100*l.* and 615*l.* 18s. 11d. and such part of the personal estate of H. Barrett as might be found to have been misapplied by her administratrix, &c.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—There are various points raised in this case, some of which I think it right to postpone my opinion upon; some of them I dispose of at once. The original bill is filed by the plaintiffs as bankers, asserting their title under a certain instrument of deposit against these defendants seeking to have an interest in the bond. A supplemental bill has been filed, proceeding upon that, and assuming that they have a title in the bond, seeking, as it were to realise the amount due on the bond, partly calling on Mr. Brown, the trustee, to make good some payments that had been made by the obligor on the bond, and partly to administer the estate of the obligor for the purpose of recovering the balance due on the bond, and seeking relief against Mr. Brown, the trustee, on the ground of wilful default. I have already said, with respect to one part of the wilful default charged against Mr. Brown, I can see no foundation whatever for it, because one part of the title of the plaintiffs proceeds on this, that Mrs. Gardiner dealing for value was able to make over the corpus of the fund. It appears that long before Brown became a trustee payments were made on account of the bond by the obligor to Mrs. Gardiner, for which Mrs. Gardiner had joined with her husband in a receipt. Surely she was able to join with her husband in receiving part payment of what was due on the bond. Nobody claiming under her can possibly dispute the propriety of those payments. Then there is a further case of wilful default made, that Mr. Brown after his appointment as trustee, allowed the money to remain out the hands of the representatives of the obligor, who was dead, and that he ought to have taken proceedings to have compelled the payment. The husband of Mrs. Gardiner, the personal representative, had become bankrupt; and it was alleged that on that ground there may be a loss; but I think this charge of wilful default admits of the same answer. The bond was to be paid out of the assets of the obligor, Mrs. Gardiner being the personal representative, and of course any claim in respect of the assets must have been a claim to be asserted against her and her husband. Her consent would be a complete justification of anything that Brown did; and it must be supposed, that if Mr. Brown forebore to institute proceedings against her and her husband, that that was a proceeding which had her concurrence; and, therefore, it appears to me the parties claiming under her cannot complain of Brown's conduct in not taking those proceedings. Therefore, it appears that so far as this bill seeks to charge Mr. Brown with wilful default, the case fails, and that part of the supplemental bill must be dismissed, and, I think, with costs. Then it is said on the other side, that the title of the present plaintiffs is not sufficiently made out to sue; that the persons who were bankers at the date of the memorandum on which the plaintiffs proceed were four persons, who constituted the firm, and only two of those persons are plaintiffs, and that two others have been joined with them. Assuming there is interest enough, upon which I do not give an opinion, and that the firm had a right to sue on the deposit, that right has continued in two of them, present plaintiffs, and I think the admission read by Mr. Bacon is quite sufficient to sustain the right of the present firm to sue, the objection in that view resolving itself merely into this, that the two persons having a right to sue are misjoined with persons whose right to sue was not proved. That is quite a different point from the point taken by Mr. Russell, which was this, that the security, which I must consider was a security given to four, was a security given to them at the time they were partners, and would not be a security for an altered firm. That is one of the points as to which I shall consider how the Court would direct a decree. The main point in the case is, whether this is one of those cases in which the Court would relieve against a defective execution of the power by a married woman, and that point, supposing the plaintiffs to make out their title, would depend on whether they could fasten themselves on the corpus of the fund, or for a life interest only? I reserve my judgment on that point. There are one or two other points,—one on the Statute of Frauds, and one or two others that I should like to consider before I dispose of the case. The bill is dismissed with costs, so far as it seeks to charge the trustee with wilful default, and I think the objection which has been urged to the form of the supplemental bill is an objection which resolves itself merely into a question of costs. I think if there is a decree to be made in the original bill there must be in the supplemental bill also. It appears to me that Mr. Brown is a necessary party, because he is the person to whom the bond was to be made over on the trusts of the settlement.

Tuesday, Dec. 2, 1851.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In this case of Thackwell v. Gardiner, the plaintiffs' title is founded upon a letter of the 17th of April, 1843, signed by the defendant, Mrs. Gardiner, and addressed to Messrs. Webb, Holbrook, and Spencer, which is in these words:—"Gentlemen, In consideration of your paying, or having already paid, the cheques of my husband, Mr. Richard William Gardiner, or otherwise advancing him sums of money, I hereby guarantee the repayment thereof upon demand to the extent of 600*l.* and I furthermore deposit, as a collateral security, a certain bond, bearing date the 1st March, 1827, from Harriett Gardiner to me, which bond I undertake to assign to you at my expense whenever called upon to do so. I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant, C. GARDINER." It was contended by the defendants that this letter states no consideration moving to Mrs. Gardiner, and that for that reason it cannot be put in force as against her; and the cases of Wain v. Warlters, 5 East, 10; Raikes v. Todd, 8 Ad. & Ell. 846, and other cases, were referred to. It is to be observed that the instrument in question is not a mere letter of guarantee. It purports to deposit with the bankers as a collateral security the bond which is the subject of this suit; and it cannot be doubted that a conveyance pledge made by one man as a security for the debt of another, is supported by sufficient consideration. The plaintiff sues on Mrs. Gardiner's letter as an equitable assignment or appointment, and, viewed in this light, the decisions on the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds do not appear to me to have any material bearing on the present case. The next question is as to the effect of the instrument. Mrs. Gardiner, under the settlement of October 1829 is entitled to the income of the money secured by the bond for her separate use for her life without any restraint on anticipation. To the extent of this interest she is to be regarded as a feme sole, so that her life interest is bound by the security given to the bankers. Subject to this life-interest, and in default of issue of the marriage (and it appears there are none) the trust-moneys were to be held in trust for such person or persons, and in such manner as Mrs. Gardiner alone, "notwithstanding her coverture, should by any deed or deeds, or instrument or instruments in writing, with or without power of revocation to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of and attested by two or more witnesses, from time to time direct or appoint, give or bequeath, and in default of such direction or appointment, gift or bequest, and so far as any such direction or appointment, gift or bequest, if incomplete, should not extend, in trust for the next of kin of the said C. Gardiner, according to the statutes for the distribution of intestates' estates, and as if the said Charlotte Gardiner had departed this life unmarried and intestate." It is contended by the plaintiffs that Mrs. Gardiner's letter operated as an execution of this power in favour of the bankers, who, it is said, as creditors or purchasers for value, are entitled in this Court to have an execution of the power, though defective for want of the formalities prescribed, established in their favour. There is no doubt that this Court will aid the defective execution of a power in favour of a creditor, or a purchaser, and that it will do so, although the donee of the power be a married woman. But the Court in such cases must be satisfied that the formalities which have not been observed, are no more than matters of form, and that the donee of the power has not by their non-observance been deprived of any of the protection which a due exercise of the power would have afforded her; and the Court looks with especial jealousy on a transaction in which the wife may have acted under the influence of her husband. The case of Hopkins v. Myall, referred to in the argument, illustrates the principles of this Court in this respect. In the present case the plaintiffs' case proved nothing beyond Mrs. Gardiner's signature to the letter. Mrs. Gardiner, by her answer, states that her husband placed the letter hastily and suddenly before her, saying it had been written by Mr. Spencer, one of the banking firm, and wished her to sign it immediately, saying that he was in a great hurry, and that the bank had become very troublesome, and that, in consequence of his urgent request, she signed it. In support of this case she has examined Mr. Holbrook, who proves in substance that he and his partners were desirous of having Mrs. Gardiner's guarantee, and that the body of the letter was written by a clerk of the bank, as he believes, in his presence, and that it was then delivered to Mr. Gardiner to get signed by Mrs. Gardiner, and when so signed, was returned to the bank by him; that all the communications on the subject of the transaction took place with Mr. Gardiner, and that he never saw Mrs. Gardiner on the business at all. It thus appears that Mrs. Gardiner's signature was obtained by her husband for his own purposes without that protection against his influence which the power contemplated in requiring any appointment by her to be made in the presence of, and attested by, two witnesses; and I am of opinion that the Court cannot regard the power as duly exercised to bind Mrs. Gardiner, as if she had signed it in the presence of witnesses. The consequence of that will be a declaration that the life interest of Mrs. Gardiner, under the settlement of the 1st October, 1829, and the bond of the 1st March, 1827, was charged by the letter of the 17th April, 1843, in favour of the banking firm of Messrs. Webb, Holbrook, and Spencer, and that such charge included any interest, or arrears of interest then due on the bond; and there must be a reference to the Master to inquire and state to the Court whether any and what balance was due at the time when the banking firm was changed, the security being only to the existing firm, and whether any or what balance on that day was due from Mr. Gardiner to the banking firm of Webb, Holbrook, and Spencer, in respect of their having paid or otherwise advanced him sums of money, and whether any such sum, or any or what part thereof, still remains due. That is the decree the Court would make on the original bill; and with respect to the supplemental bill, I think it right to dismiss it, so far as it seeks to charge the trustee with wilful default.

STEAD v. BANKS.

Foreclosure—Judgment creditors.

The Court will make a decree of foreclosure as against judgment creditors of the mortgagor, fixing one time for all of them to redeem.

This was a claim filed by the first mortgagee, of certain freehold, leasehold, and copyhold hereditaments, against two subsequent mortgagees, some judgment creditors of the mortgagor, and the mortgagor for the purpose of obtaining a foreclosure.

Bazalgette appeared for the plaintiff, and submitted that as to the judgment creditors there should not be successive periods fixed for their right to redeem, but that one time should be mentioned in the decree for all of them.

L. Field, for the two subsequent mortgagees, consented to an immediate foreclosure decree.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that the decree might be made as proposed. The only possible inconvenience would be if more than one of the incumbrancers were to go to the Rolls at the time named prepared with money to redeem, but if that should happen, the Court would, upon application, set it right. Judgment creditors ought not to stand exactly in the position of parties who advanced money on the security of the property. The decree would be for an immediate foreclosure against the first and second mortgagees, and the ordinary decree against the mortgagor and the judgment creditors together.

GREGORY v. WILSON.

Agreement for lease—Specific performance—Forfeiture—Breach of covenant.

An agreement was entered into to take a lease of land, and to build a house, and when built, to repair and insure, and that the lease should contain a proviso for re-entry on nonpayment of rent or nonobservance of covenant. No lease was executed, but one was prepared, in the draft of which the tenant made pencil alterations, but not affecting the covenant to repair, and insure in some office. The tenant entered, built, and remained in possession thirty years. The rent fell into arrear, and no insurance was effected. The landlord gave notice that he should proceed by ejectment for a breach of covenant; whereupon the representatives of the lessee, who had died, filed a bill praying an injunction to restrain the action being brought, and praying a specific performance of the agreement:

Held, that as the lessor could have determined the lease, if it had been executed, for breach of the covenants, specific performance ought not to be decreed.

The bill in this case was filed by Barnard Gregory and wife for the specific performance of an agreement for granting a lease. The statements in the bill were, that in 1813 Lady Wilson was seised for her life, and that Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson, her son, was seised in remainder in fee-simple, of a certain piece of land at Hampstead, in the county of Middlesex; that John Thompson, deceased, entered in that year into a contract with the agent of these two persons for the grant of a lease of part of the same piece of land for seventy-five years, for the purpose of a dwelling-house being erected by the lessee thereon; that a lease should be executed for the term of seventy-five years from the 29th of September, 1814, at the yearly rent of 42*l.*; and that the lessee should build a substantial dwelling-house on the land, at a cost of not less than 1,500*l.*; that a lease was prepared pursuant to the contract, but was never executed; that the draft was prepared, wherein various alterations were made in pencil by the lessee; that the lessee entered on the land, and expended, with the full knowledge of Lady Wilson and Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson, a sum not less than 4,000*l.* in the erection of a dwelling-house, with outbuildings, stables, and other erections, which were thereafter called or known as "Frognall Priory;" that Lady Wilson died in 1818, leaving her said son surviving, who, by his will, dated in 1806, devised his freehold estates to his eldest son for life, with remainder to his sons and daughters and their issue, with divers remainders over; that the said Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson died in 1821, leaving his eldest son, the tenant for life under his will, the present Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson, surviving; that the lessee, John Thompson, remained in quiet possession of the premises down to the year 1843, when he died. The bill then stated various legal proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court respecting Mr. Thompson's will, and the ultimate grant of probate to Mrs. Margaret Gregory, the wife of Barnard Gregory, and proceeded to state, that on the 19th of March, 1847, a notice was served by the present Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson, as the lessor, to quit and deliver up possession of the premises at Michaelmas then next; that an action of ejectment was threatened, if compliance was not made with the demand, and it was prayed that Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson might be restrained from bringing or prosecuting any action of ejectment for the recovery of the premises, and that he and all other necessary parties might be decreed specifically to perform the agreement of 1813, by a grant of a lease in conformity therewith. The defendants (Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson and others), by their answer, said that the agreement was made for a lease containing the usual covenants to pay rent, to repair, to insure, and other ordinary stipulations: that the rent was in arrear, that the premises were out of repair, and that no insurance had ever been effected, and, therefore, that had there been a lease granted, it would have been forfeited by reason of the nonperformance of covenants, and agreeably to the power of re-entry for breach of the same. The draft of the lease, as prepared by the agent of the lessor, was proved in the cause, and this contained a covenant by the lessee to repair and keep in repair; for the lessor to have liberty to enter and view the state of repair, and to have power to distrain for all expenses he should be put to in repairing, in case he should do the repairs: that the lessee should insure in the Sun Fire-office, in the name of the lessors, and deposit the policy with, and hand the receipts for the premium to the lessor: that he would pay the rent of 42*l.* And it was mutually covenanted and agreed, that if the lessee should fail to pay the rent or to observe the covenants, the lease should be void to all intents and purposes; and it should be lawful for the lessor to re-enter and to evict him. On this draft lease it was proved Mr. Thompson had made many pencil alterations, but none of them related to the covenants to repair, or to the right of re-entry; and that relating to the insurance was altered so as to be effected in the names of both lessor and lessee, and to be in any office in London or Westminster.

Evidence was entered into as to the state of the external repairs, the several witnesses differing as to the amount of money necessary to be laid out, but all proving that the premises were out of repair. No evidence was offered of the insurance having been effected since 1836, nor did the plaintiff attempt to prove the payment of rent after 1845, or thereabouts; but the defendants produced evidence shewing that the representatives of the lessees, namely, the plaintiffs, Mr. and Mrs. Gregory, and their servants, obstructed the agents of the landlord when they went for the purpose of viewing the premises in order to ascertain the actual state of repair internally.

Bethell and W. P. Murray for the plaintiffs.—None of the agreements on which the defendants insist, formed any part of the original contract, for none of them were ever definitively consented to, but, on the contrary, Mr. Thompson, by his pencil alterations, shewed that he had not come to any precise and definite agreement. But even supposing this were not so, how can the Court, after such a lapse of time, and after such a degree of acquiescence refuse to throw its protection round a lessee who has expended money in building a house, and now is threatened with ejectment? Lapse of time, acceptance of rent, and every conceivable form of acquiescence, stand in the defendant's way. It is to be remarked, that in all cases where this Court has refused its assistance to a lessee to resist such an aggression of his landlord, there has been a lease duly executed, and not a mere contract; and more especially a contract undefined in its terms and uncertain in its stipulations. When a tenant, under a legal form of instrument, obstinately refuses to repair, the Court will no doubt deny to him its aid to defend himself against such an attempt; but no such case is shewn here, even if the actual lease were granted. The draft lease as to the covenant to insure being altered, shews that the terms in that respect were unsettled. The cases of Hill v. Barclay, 18 Ves. 60, and of Reynolds v. Pitt, 19 id. 134, were cited. Other points were also taken, which are referred to in the judgment of the Court.

Walpole and W. M. James, for Sir T. M. Wilson.—It is quite plain that the lessor was always willing to grant, but the lessee was always reluctant to have the lease; and as events have happened which, if they had occurred after the granting of the lease, would have worked a forfeiture, the Court will not lend its aid to the lessee to enforce a specific performance. To enforce a performance of an agreement, and thereby compel the execution of a lease which is in fact forfeited, would be an absurdity; and therefore the plaintiffs have ventured to ask for an injunction against the lessor pursuing his legal rights, and enforcing his legal remedies. With regard to the alleged waiver, it is to be remarked, that the covenants which have not been performed, have been continuing covenants, and therefore the breaches of them since the death of Mr. Thompson,—and they have been broken since that event, cannot be said to have been acquiesced in; on the contrary, the notice served on the lessees in 1847, shews the fact to be otherwise.

Rogers and Swift, for the remaindermen.

Bethell replied.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The question in this case, under the particular circumstances, is, whether a specific performance of the agreement to grant a lease will be decreed; and the plaintiff argues that a Court will so decree; while, on the other hand, the defendant says it will not, because default which has been made in effecting insurances, and performing the repairs agreed to be done, amount to breaches of the covenants which would have been contained in the lease made in pursuance of the agreement, if such lease had ever been executed; and that they are breaches which, if the lease had been executed, would have entitled the lessor to re-enter and take possession of the premises. The plaintiffs insist that the cases where the Court has refused relief to tenants against the consequences of breach of their covenants, have only been where the legal relation has been fully established, and that such a relief has never been refused in cases like the present, where the rights of the parties are wholly in contract. They insist, moreover, that there has been a waiver on the part of the lessor; and that as to repairs, it is only in the case of a tenant obstinately refusing to perform his covenant that the Court declines to relieve against the breach. For the first argument no authority was cited, and I do not see any principle upon which the distinction can be maintained. The plaintiffs, and Mr. Thompson, under whom they claim, took possession of the premises under the contract, and have had the full advantage and benefit of that contract. Why should not those who have the benefit of the contract have also the liability? It is true, that until the legal relation is fully established, the lessor could not have the stipulated remedy; but there are many cases which shew that the Court will not interfere to create a legal relation, which, under the circumstances, could be dissolved immediately. Then the plaintiffs say that the covenant to insure was never finally settled, and rely on the draft lease, and the fact of the pencil alterations upon it made by Mr. Thompson. Looking however, at the nature of the alterations, and at the whole negotiation, it is clear that it was fully agreed that the lease should contain some covenant to effect the necessary insurances and repairs, and for the avoidance of the lease in case of neglect to insure and repair, and the rights of all parties must now be on the same footing as if a lease had been formally executed containing some covenant, on a breach of which the lessor would now have had a right to enter. It was then contended, that even if the lessor were in a position to avoid the lease, in consequence of the breaches of the covenant, or intended covenants, he had lost the right to do so by his continued acquiescence in the tenant's conduct. But the covenants are continuing covenants, and there is no ground for extending the acquiescence and waiver up to the present time, or beyond the life of Mr. Thompson. When, as in the present case, the ultimate right which is sought to be restrained is the legal right, it is necessary to make out a case fully for so doing. A Court of Equity will, no doubt, interfere in a proper case to control the legal right; but, as I said before, a strong case must be made out to induce it to do so. It was also argued, that the consequences of breach of covenants to repair and insure, and other covenants intended to be in this lease, would be relieved against, unless such breaches were obstinate and wilful: that considerable repairs have at one time been executed, and that the plaintiffs were only delayed in executing thorough repairs by the long litigation which ensued on the decease of Mr. Thompson. The cases of Hill v. Barclay, and Reynolds v. Pitt, were relied on. But it is obvious, from Lord Eldon's expressions in those cases, that his inclination was against extending relief to tenants from the forfeiture of their leases through non-observance of covenants. His lordship says, "There may be cases where, morally speaking, a Court of Equity would interfere with much less reluctance than in another sort of case;" and he then proceeds to distinguish wilful and obstinate refusals to comply with covenants from the cases of mere neglect or accident: but he does not distinguish them so far as to say that the Court will, in all cases of accident even, relieve against the breach. It was said that the Court will not permit any advantage to be taken of any default in observance of the covenant after the notice to quit has been given, for that the lessor taking upon him to determine the tenancy at a particular time, must be held to shew that he had a right then to determine it; and Dowell v. Dew, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 345, was cited for that. But that case by no means carries out the consequence attempted to be put upon it. I do not understand the expressions of the Vice-Chancellor at page 361 to mean that the tenant is relieved from all obligation of looking to his covenants on the mere ground that a notice to quit is pending. On the contrary, so far from a notice to quit being a waiver by the landlord of all subsequent observance of the covenants by the tenants, I am disposed to treat it as a notice by the lessor to the tenant to be more vigilant in the performance of his covenants. A tenant who had been lulled into negligence might, with far more justice, complain of any advantage which was attempted to be taken of that negligence; and the plaintiffs would have a far better ground for asking the favourable attention of the Court, if they had immediately gone to work to remedy, as far as possible, the breaches complained of. It is clear, moreover, that the refusal on the part of the plaintiffs to permit the surveyors and agents of the lessor to enter and view the state of repair of the premises, was in itself a material breach of covenant on their part. It is to be observed, that the covenants to repair generally, and the covenant to repair after notice, are separate and distinct covenants; and the cases of Doe dem. Morecraft v. Meux, 4 B. & C. 608; and Hill v. Barclay, to which I have before referred, shew this. As to the ground of hardship which was endeavoured to be set up, I do not think it is entitled to much weight. The observations of Lord Cottenham, in the case of Mundy v. Joliffe, 5 My. & C. 177, seemed to be relied on, where he says, "If, assuming the existence of the agreement, the landlord never complains of the conduct of his tenant, but permits him to act on the faith of the contract, it would require a strong case to enable the landlord to raise such objections for the first time when the tenant claimed the benefit of it." And I agree that a strong case would be necessary; for by refusing a specific performance of the agreement, this Court takes upon itself to determine the materiality and effect of the breaches in question, and refuses to allow the question to be tried at law; and therefore the Court must, as Lord Cottenham says, be well satisfied of what the issue of a trial at law would be as to the breach of covenant, and the consequences. Such being the principles which are found to guide the decision of the Court in such cases, it remains to apply them to the present case. And here there is no evidence of any insurance whatever having been effected from the year 1836 down to the date of the notice to quit, a period of eleven years; during all which time the lessor was deprived of that protection which he had a right to expect; and even before 1836, the evidence goes to shew that the insurance was irregularly kept up, and deficient in amount. As to the state of repairs, there is not an exact agreement in all particulars among the surveyors who have been examined; but they agree in this, that the premises were out of repair in 1813; that their condition was still worse in 1845; and that this state of things still continued in 1817 and 1848, notwithstanding the repairs, to some extent, which were actually executed in 1841. Surveyors employed by the lessor, and examined by him in this cause, have proved that they were repeatedly prevented by the plaintiffs from inspecting the state of repair of the interior of the premises; a refusal which was in direct contravention of the covenant in the draft lease, to permit the lessor and his agents to enter and view the premises comprised in the lease. On the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that this bill must be dismissed, and as to all the other defendants, except Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson, dismissed with costs. As to Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson, since he has by his answer disputed any valid agreement for a lease having ever been entered into at all, the bill must be dismissed as against him, but without costs.

Re HALL v. THE NORFOLK ESTUARY COMPANY. (a)

Transfer of shares—Payment of calls—Refusal of Secretary to register deed.

The secretary of an incorporated company refused to register, pursuant to sec. 15 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, a deed of transfer of shares, upon which calls were still unpaid.

Held, that he was justified in so doing.

This was a rule calling upon the secretary of the Norfolk Estuary Company to shew cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue directed to him, commanding him to enter and register a memorial of a deed of transfer of twenty-four shares in the said company, in the name of Robert Wheble Bennett.

It appeared from the affidavits in support of the rule, that the Norfolk Estuary Company was incorporated by stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c 388, which enacted that the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, should be incorporated into and form part of it; that 20*l.* per share should be the greatest amount of one call which the company should make on the shareholders, and that the number of shares into which the capital of the company should be divided should be 10,000, and that one month's notice at the least should be given on each call; that Robert Wheble Bennett was possessed of twenty-four shares in the company, and on the 13th of March last sold them to James Hall, and executed an assignment of them, bearing that date; that the vendor's broker on the same day lodged the deed of transfer with the secretary to the company for registration; that on the said 13th of March the vendor had paid all calls that had been made or were then due in respect of his said shares; that on the 27th of May the attorney for the vendor wrote a letter to the secretary of the company, demanding that the deed should be registered in the name of the vendees; that afterwards, the attorney for the vendor had an interview with the secretary, who required the city address of the purchaser, and stated that no such person as James Hall could be found at the place described in the deed of transfer, whereupon the attorney for the vendor stated that James Hall still resided there; that on the 11th of June the attorney wrote another letter to the secretary, stating that all the calls upon the shares had been paid up, and objecting to give a second address; that on the 13th of June the attorney for the vendor saw the secretary, when the secretary declined to register the deed, and it was returned to the attorney without being registered. The affidavit of the secretary of the company, in opposition to the rule, stated that on the 5th of February last, a call of 2*l.* 10*s.* per share was duly made by the directors of the company, pursuant to the powers of the Acts of Parliament enabling them in that behalf, upon all the shares in the said company, including the said twenty-four shares; that on the said 13th of March the said call in respect of the twenty-four shares remained wholly due and unpaid up to the 14th of April last.

Phipson shewed cause.

The following cases were cited:—Stikeman v. Dawson, 16 L. J. 205, Chan., Ex parte Tooke, 18 L. J. 343, Q.B; Sayles v. Blane, 19 L. J. 19, Q.B.

PATTESON, J.—The question turns upon sec. 16 of the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, which provides that no shareholder shall be entitled to transfer any share until all calls are paid. By sec. 14 the transfer of shares is to be by deed duly stamped; and then sec. 15 provides for the delivery of the deed to the secretary for registration. It seems, therefore, that the transfer of the shares and the deed are synonymous; and that the intention of the Legislature was to prevent any shareholder from transferring his interest in any shares except by deed, or until the calls due upon them should have been paid. Until the calls have been paid, therefore, the party has no right to have the deed registered; and the company are warranted in refusing to register it. They might, indeed, find themselves in a situation of some difficulty if they were to register a transfer which they knew to be ineffectual in consequence of calls not having been paid. This deed was not delivered as an escrow to take effect upon the payment of the calls; in which case a different question might have arisen.

COLERIDGE, J. concurred. The effect of sec. 16 is, that whilst calls remain unpaid the shareholder has no right to transfer them; and as on the 13th of March a call was unpaid, the deed of transfer of that date is altogether void for the purpose of registration by the company.

NORTHEY v. JOHNSON.

Mining copartnership—Cost-book principle—Verbal transfer of shares—Liability to third persons.

In an action by a creditor for goods supplied to a mine, conducted upon the cost-book principle against the defendant as a shareholder, it appeared that the goods had been ordered by the superintendent after the defendant had verbally agreed to transfer his shares to another partner, and had withdrawn from the partnership, into which he had originally entered by verbal agreement only. The learned judge told the jury, that if before the goods were ordered the defendant had agreed by word of mouth to transfer his shares to another shareholder, who had agreed to take them, or if he had given notice to the rest of the shareholders that he relinquished his shares to them, they had no longer any authority to pledge his credit:

Held, no misdirection.

This was an action for goods supplied to a mine in Cornwall, upon the order of one Dumont, the superintendent of the mine, and also a shareholder. At the trial, which took place before Erle, J. at the last assizes for the county of Cornwall, the only question was whether the defendant was a shareholder at the time when the goods were ordered. It appeared that the mine was conducted upon the cost-book principle, that the defendant had come into the partnership upon a verbal contract to take shares; and that before the goods were ordered, he had entered into a verbal agreement to give up his shares to Dumont or to relinquish them to the rest of the company. Several mine agents were called to prove that by the custom shares in such a mine could only be transferred by some written instrument; but the effect of their evidence was merely that they considered it prudent to get a writing. The learned judge, in summing up told the jury that if, before the contract with the plaintiff, the defendant agreed by word of mouth to transfer his shares to Dumont, and Dumont agreed to take them, or if the defendant gave notice to the shareholders that he relinquished his shares to the rest of the company, then that none of the shareholders, after that, had authority to pledge his credit, and the defendant was not liable. The jury found a verdict for the defendant.

Crowder now moved for a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Although the custom was not proved, still the general law as to the implied authority of one partner to pledge the credit of another applies to this case; because the mere verbal agreement amongst the partners themselves could not affect the rights of third parties, creditors of the mine, and, at least, some written notification to the purser or other officer of a change in the adventurers would be necessary in order to put an end to the liability of a shareholder to such third parties.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Mr. Crowder is obliged to admit that the custom was not proved to the requisite extent, and the question therefore is, whether enough has been done by parole to get rid of the defendant's liability; and it seems to me that enough has been done and that the verdict is properly found for the defendant; for he neither held himself out as a shareholder, nor did he authorise any one to pledge his credit.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The ground of this application is, that some formal act was necessary to get rid of the defendant's liability, and that there should be a written notice to the purser of a change in the adventurers; but I am not aware of any law to compel the shareholders in such an undertaking to pursue that course.

ERLE, J.—I think that it is a very important principle that a man cannot be made liable upon a contract, except it be made by himself, or by his authority. Here it is said that the defendant contracted by Dumont as his agent; but Dumont's authority to pledge his credit rested upon his consent to join in the mining undertaking; and I am of opinion that when one, who has by parole consented to join in such an undertaking, dissents from the mode in which it is conducted, or desires to withdraw, he has a clear right to give notice of that to the other partners, and to say, "You have no longer my consent to pledge my credit for the purposes of this undertaking. I am liable up to the present time; but I give you notice that I will not be liable upon any contracts which you may henceforth make." The usage proved by the pursers or mine agents was merely one of prudence, and does not create a law, or alter the rights of parties. But, although a shareholder may in this way get rid of his liability to third parties, this would not necessarily vary the mode of transferring the shares, or affect the question of title to them; and it must be understood that my observations apply to parties who have by agreement come into the working of a mine in the manner proved in this case.

CROMPTON, J. concurred. Rule refused.

CHATFIELD v. COX.

Stamp agreement relating to the sale of goods.

A. being indebted to B. the latter wrote to the former, requesting him to supply C. with goods to the amount of the debt, and charge the same to his credit. Upon which A. wrote. "In consideration of the above, I agree to supply goods to your order."

Held, an agreement relating to the sale of goods within the exemption in the Stamp Act.

Assumpsit on a bill of exchange for 47*l.* by indorsee against drawer.

Plea.—That Messrs. Cleaver and Watson were indebted to the defendant in 48*l.* and that it was agreed between the plaintiff, the defendant, and Cleaver and Watson, that the defendant should discharge Cleaver and Watson, that they should deliver to the plaintiff Roman cement to the value of 48*l.* and that plaintiff should accept, and that he did accept, this agreement in satisfaction of the note. That agreement being traversed, the defendant at the trial, which took place before Lord Campbell, C.J. in Middlesex, during the sittings after Hilary Term, produced in evidence in support of the plea an unstamped document to the following effect. It was addressed to Messrs. Cleaver and Watson, and signed by the defendant, and contained these words: "I request you to supply Mr. Chatfield with cement to the amount of 48*l.* and to charge the same to my credit standing with you." Under which was written: "In consideration of the above, we agree to supply Roman cement to your order." Signed "Cleaver and Watson." It was proved that the defendant had built a house for Cleaver and Watson, and that the arrangement was that they should supply the plaintiff with Roman cement to discharge a debt of 48*l.* due from them to the defendant. It was objected that the document was inadmissible for want of a stamp; but the learned judge received it, and a verdict was found for the defendant on that issue.

Hawkins now moved to enter a verdict for the plaintiff, pursuant to leave reserved. This is not within the exemption in the Stamp Act as an agreement relating to the sale of goods. It was a delivery of goods in discharge of an antecedent debt, and the sale of goods was not the primary object of the agreement. (Smith v. Cator, 2 B. & Ald. 778.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I think that this is an agreement relating to the sale of goods, although no money was to be paid after the goods were delivered. There was an existing debt, in satisfaction of which the goods were delivered; and it is a sale of goods where the property is transferred for a pecuniary consideration. I do not think it makes any difference that the goods are to be paid for by an existing debt, or by a set-off.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The question of stamp depends upon the terms of the instrument; and this instrument would certainly be good evidence in an action for goods sold.

ERLE, J.—If a debtor has goods to sell, and he and his creditor agree that they shall be delivered in satisfaction of the debt, and they are so delivered, I apprehend they are goods sold.

SMITH v. JAMES.

Demurrer—Promissory note—Giving time.

Plea to an action by payee against the maker of a note, that it was made by defendant as surety jointly and severally with A. and that it was agreed, without the consent of defendant, in consideration of A. paying more than five per cent. that plaintiff should give time to A. and that time was so given:

Held, bad on general demurrer.

Debt by the payee against the maker of a promissory note.

Plea—That defendant made the note jointly with one John James, whereby the defendant and the said John James jointly and severally promised to pay to the plaintiff the amount of the said note, and that defendant never had or received any consideration for the said note, but the same was made by him as surety for the said John James. That after the note became due it was agreed between the plaintiff and John James, without the consent of the defendant, that in consideration of the said John James agreeing to pay plaintiff interest at a greater rate than five per cent. upon the amount of the said note, &c. that plaintiff should give to John James time, and forbear to sue him for payment of the said note. That such time was given without the consent of the defendant. Verification.

General demurrer.

Macnamara, in support of the demurrer.—There is no allegation that plaintiff knew the relation in which the defendant stood to John James, and the note imports that the defendant was principal, and the giving of time to one of two joint and several makers of a note is no objection to the plaintiff's suing the other where the plaintiff had no notice of his being a surety merely. (Fentum v. Pocock, 5 Taunt. 192.)

H. J. Hodgson, in support of the plea.—The plea is good on general demurrer; it may be open to the objection of duplicity, but it is a good plea of want of consideration after pleading over. [CROMPTON, J.—The plea admits there was consideration to John James.] (Laxton v. Peat, 2 Camp. 185; Foster v. Jolly, 1 C. M. & R. 703; Abbott v. Hendricks, 2 Scott's N.C. 183; Thompson v. Clubley, 1 M. & W. 212.)

By the COURT.—The rule is clear that by a plea you may deny the consideration, but you cannot set up a different contract to that declared upon. Here the plea sets up a different liability. This plea is bad upon the authority of Harrison v. Cortauld, 3 B. & Ald. 36. Judgment for the plaintiffs.

REG. v. REV. E. WILLIAMS.

Tithe Rent-charge—Contribution by one of several owners of land charged—Order of Justices under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 54, s. 16.

An order of Justices under s. 16, of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 54, recited a complaint made before them by the tenant of certain lands charged with one amount of tithe rent-charge, but belonging to two owners in several portions; that he had paid the whole, and that the defendant had not paid his just proportion (stating the sums). It then proceeded: "and we, having examined into the merits, &c. determine that the just proportion to be contributed by the defendant is 10s. 6d. per annum," and concluded by ordering payment of the sum due and costs:

Held, bad, for want of an adjudication that the matters of the complaint were true.

This was a rule to shew cause why an order of two justices removed by certiorari should not be quashed. The order was made by two justices of Denbighshire, on the complaint of E. H. the tenant of the lands numbered 115 to 160. in the apportionment of the tithes of Llandyrnog, that the farm lands, numbered from 115 to 160 consecutively, were charged with one amount of rent-charge, namely, 13*l.* 10s.; that the Rev. E. Williams was the owner of 160, and Captain M. of all except the land numbered 160; that E. H. had paid the whole sum of 13*l.* 10s. for the years 1849, 1850; that the just proportion for number 160 was 13s. per annum; that it had been demanded by complainant of the defendant and not paid. The order stated the complaint: that the defendant had been summoned, and had appeared; and then proceeded thus: "and now having examined into the merits of the said complaint, we do, in pursuance, &c. determine, that the just proportion of the said rent-charge so paid by the said E. H. to be contributed by the defendant in respect of No. 160, is at the rate of 10s. 6d. per annum." It then ordered 1*l.* 1s. to be paid by the defendant, and 6*l.* 18s. 6d. costs; and in default ordered the same to be levied by distress. The rule was obtained on the ground that the order was bad for not finding the complaint to be true. The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 54, s. 16, enacts that in case any land charged with one amount of rent-charge shall belong to two or more landowners in several portions, and the owner of any one of such portions, or his tenant, shall have paid the whole of such rent-charge, or any portion thereof greater than shall appear to him to be his just proportion, and contribution thereto shall have been refused or neglected to be made by any other of the said landowners or his tenant, after demand in writing made on them, or either of them, for that purpose, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace acting for the county or other jurisdiction in which the land is situated, upon the complaint of any such landowner, or his tenant or agent, to summon the owner so refusing or neglecting to make contribution, or his tenant, to appear before any two or more such justices of the peace, who, upon proof of the demand and of service of the summons, as hereinafter provided, whether or not the party summoned shall appear, shall examine into the merits of the complaint, and determine the just proportion of the rent-charge so paid as aforesaid, which ought to be contributed by the landowner of such other portion of the said land, and by order under their hands and seals shall direct the payment by him of what shall, in their judgment, be due and payable in respect of such liability to contribution, with the reasonable costs and charges of such proceedings, to be ascertained by such justices; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the complainant to take the like proceedings for enforcing payment of the said amount of contribution and costs, and with the like restriction as to the arrears recoverable, as are given to the owner of the rent-charge by the said first-mentioned Act, or this Act for enforcing payment of the rent-charge."

Welsby shewed cause.—The Act says that the justices shall examine into the merits of the complaint. The order says, that "Having examined into the merits of the case," they find what the proportion is, and order that proportion to be paid by Mr. Williams, and direct distress in default. That is a compliance with the Act, and by implication, a finding, and adjudication of the facts stated in the complaint. There is no doubt about the land to which the finding applies.

Pashley, contrà.—The order does not contain any adjudication. It was the duty of the justices to determine "The just proportion of the rent-charge, so paid as aforesaid, which ought to be contributed." They, therefore, ought to have determined what the sum so paid was; whereas, by the order, they have only determined what the just proportion of that sum was. Unless, however, there was such sum paid as aforesaid, the justices had no jurisdiction. It is a settled rule of law, that all the facts necessary to furnish the jurisdiction must be found. (R. v. Pitts, 2 Dougl. 662) Thus in cases of removal under the statute of Car. 2, the place of settlement must be found, and in all the forms in Burns there is an adjudication that the facts are true. Jurisdiction cannot be given by intendment.

WIGHTMAN, J.(a)—The objection is well founded. No doubt the justices ought to have found all the facts stated in the complaint, for of course they must not take them for granted. The only question is, whether the finding of the facts appears by sufficient implication on the face of this order. We think it does not.

COLERIDGE, J. concurred. Rule absolute.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF SLAWSTONE.

Poor—Removal—Sending notice of appeal—Within what time—Mode of computation.

By the stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 31, s. 9, notice of appeal against an order of removal must be given within fourteen days after the sending of a copy of the depositions:

Held, that in computing the period of fourteen days, the time of sending, in case the sending is through the post, is to be deemed that time at which, in the ordinary course of the post, the depositions would be received by the person to whom they were addressed.

This was an appeal against an order of removal made at Market Harborough, Leicestershire, on the 5th of August, 1851, by which the settlement of the pauper, Thomas Ward, Ann, his wife, and of their five children, was adjudged to be in the appellant parish. It came on to be tried at the Leicestershire Quarter Sessions, held at the Castle of Leicester, on the 14th of October, 1851, and the order was quashed, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench upon the following

CASE.

The order was made at Market Harborough, Leicestershire, on the 5th of August, 1851, and on the 7th of the same month notice of chargeability, a copy of the order of removal, together with a statement of the grounds of removal, were sent by post from Market Harborough to the appellant parish. The solicitors to the appellant parish applied by letter, posted at Wisbeach, on the 26th of August, to the clerk of the justices by whom the order had been made, for a copy of the depositions, which was sent to them in a letter posted at Market Harborough on the 3rd of September, and received by the appellants' solicitor on the 5th of September. On the 17th of September, the solicitors of the appellant parish posted a letter at Wisbeach, containing a notice of appeal, which in the regular course of post ought to have arrived at Market Harborough, the post-town for the respondents' parish, on the 19th. On that day the pauper and his family were removed to the appellant parish. It appeared that the letter, in fact, reached Market Harborough upon the 20th. On these facts it was contended for the respondents that the appeal should be disallowed, as the notice thereof had not been given within the prescribed time. The Sessions allowed the appeal, and quashed the order. If the Court of Q. B. should decide that the notice of appeal was given in due time, the order is to be quashed; if otherwise, the order is to be confirmed.

Pashley and Merewether in support of the order of sessions. The use of the post-office instead of a messenger was first introduced by the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 79, which forbade actual removal until twenty-one days after notice of chargeability should have been "sent by post or otherwise" to the parish of settlement. The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 31, s. 9, gave to appellants a further extension of the time for giving notice of appeal of "fourteen days after the sending" of a copy of the depositions. The 10th section of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 105, empowered appellants to send their notices of appeal by post. Taking these statutes together it is clear that the same modes of sending as were lawful before any of them passed are lawful still; and the question always must be—was the notice given in due time? That being so, it follows that the appellants are not to suffer by the laches of the post-office. He cited Bishop v. Helps, 2 C. B. 45; Stocken v. Collin, 7 M. & W. 515; Dunlop v. Higgins, 1 H. L. Cases, 387. And if not, the posting the letter so that in the due course of the post-office it ought within the fourteen days to reach the person who is to receive it, is enough. [They were stopped.]

Maunsell and O'Brien, contrà.—The construction must be such as not to give the appellant a greater period than fourteen days; and that period must not be taken to be one that is to be made up to him at all events, but only as one within which he must come. That being so, there ought not to be any difference made between sending by post and sending by a messenger. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—A man must take the risk of the messenger whom he himself selects; but the post-office is by the Legislature made the agent of both parties to receive and take.] As the appellants might have applied by messenger, and yet substitute the post for the messenger, they made the Post-office their agent, and the time of sending dates from the putting the letter into the post-office, just as it would have dated from the putting the letter into the hands of the messenger.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—It seems to me that the notice must be supposed to have been given at the time when in the ordinary and regular course of the post it would have been delivered to, and received by, the person to whom it was addressed. If that is correct, the notice was in this case sufficient. Were the other computation adopted the appellants would still be right, for that other mode must be applied reciprocally, and a posting on the 17th would have been proper in the case of a sending on the 3rd. I think, however, that the time of sending contemplated was that in which in the ordinary course of post the notice would have been delivered.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF WICKENBY.

Insufficient notice of appeal against order for maintenance of lunatic pauper—Waiver—Question of fact.

Notice of appeal against an order for maintenance of a lunatic pauper was given on the 30th of June, after the time limited by law had expired. On the 4th of July a notice to produce documents was served on the appellants by the attorney for the respondents. At the trial, on the 8th of July, the Sessions found as a fact that the notice to produce was a waiver of the irregularity in the notice of appeal:

Held, that the question was one of fact for the Sessions, and that their decision on it ought not to be disturbed.

On appeal to the Court of Quarter Sessions, held by adjournment at Spilsby, in and for the parts of Lindsey, in the county of Lincoln, on the 8th day of July, 1851, against an order of maintenance of two justices, dated the 5th day of June, 1851, concerning one Henry Chambers, a lunatic pauper, whose settlement had been adjudged to be in the parish of Bardney, in the said parts and county, the Sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court, on the following

CASE.

A copy of the order and duplicate notice of chargeability were served on the overseers of the appellant parish on the 7th of June; and on the 30th of June the appellants delivered to the overseers of the respondent parish a notice of appeal to the next Spilsby Sessions to be held on the 8th of July following, containing also the statement of the grounds of appeal. The parts of Lindsey are divided into two sessional divisions, for and in each of which the General Quarter Sessions are invariably held as follows, namely, on the Friday of the week in which Quarter Sessions are by law directed to be held at Kirton for the first division; and on the Tuesday following, by adjournment, at Spilsby for the second division; and the Sessions of which those held at Spilsby on the 8th of July, 1851, were an adjournment, were held at Kirton on the 4th of the same month of July.

(a) Lord Campbell, C.J. and Erle, J. were hearing Crown Cases Reserved.

By the rules and practice of the Sessions, ten clear days' notice of appeal is required. The appellants and respondents both attended the Sessions by their attorneys, and both brought witnesses to give evidence on the issues raised by the grounds of appeal. On the appeal being called on for hearing, the respondents required the appellants to prove the service of their notice and grounds of appeal, and the delivery of the before-mentioned notice and statement of grounds of appeal on the 30th of June having been duly proved, the respondents objected to the appellants being heard in support of their appeal, on the ground that by the rules and practice of the Sessions, the notice of appeal was served too late; and also that the statement of grounds of appeal had not been delivered fourteen days before the Sessions, as required by law. The appellants then gave in evidence a notice to produce certain documents delivered the 4th of July, 1851, signed by the attorney for the respondents, and directed to the churchwardens and overseers of the appellant parish, of which the material part was as follows:—

"As attorney for and on behalf of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Wickenby, the above-named respondents, I hereby give you notice, and require you to produce on the trial of this appeal, at the next General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, to be holden by adjournment at Spilsby, in and for the parts of Lindsey, in the county of Lincoln, on Tuesday, the 8th day of July instant, all books, papers, letters, copies of letters, and all writings and other documents in your custody, possession, or power, relating to the matters in question in this appeal."

The following letter from the appellants' attorney of the 5th of July to the attorney for the respondents, and the reply of the latter thereto of the same date, were also given in evidence:—

"Lincoln, 5th July, 1851.

"Re Chambers, lunatic pauper.

"Sir,—Mr. Andrew desires me to write you with respect to certain admissions which he thinks it would be advisable for both parties in this matter to make on the hearing of the appeal. Mr. Andrew will admit, on behalf of the appellants—1st. The service of the orders, and notice of the 7th and 8th days of October last. These cannot be produced without some expense, and Mr. Andrew hopes you will dispense with their production. 2nd. The service of the order of settlement and maintenance, and notice of the 5th and 6th of June last, and will produce them. Mr. Andrew will require the admission by the respondents of the service of notice and grounds of appeal, and their production at the appeal. Would you favour Mr. A. with a note per next return from with your answer to the above.

"I am, Sir (for Mr. Andrew),

"Your very obdt. servant,

"R. H. Daubney, esq." "Wm. Vessey."

Copy of reply of the respondents' attorney to the above.

"Market Rasen, 5th July, 1851.

"Wickenby and Bardney.

"Dear Sir,—I fear that I cannot with propriety make the admission you refer to in your letter of to-day, as I intend to object entirely to your notice. The admission you propose to make would save Wickenby no expense, I think, as the persons will have to be there that can prove the facts, whether they have to prove the service you mention or not.

"Yours very truly,

"Robt. Hesford Daubney.

"W. Andrews, esq. solicitor, Lincoln."

The appellants then contended that the circumstances amounted to a consent on the part of the respondents to try at the then sessions, and that they were thereby precluded from objecting that the notice had not been served in time. The respondents contended the notice from their attorney of the 4th of July was not intended to be, and was not either in fact or in law, a waiver of their objection to the time of service of the appellants' notice and statements of grounds of appeal, and that they were not deprived of their right to avail themselves of such objection; and they denied that they had ever consented and then refused to consent to the trial of the appeal at the then sessions, but persisted in their objection to the appeal being heard on the grounds before mentioned. The Court of Quarter Sessions then decided against the respondents, and allowed the appeal to be heard, and ultimately quashed the order upon the objection raised by the appellants under one of their grounds of appeal, not relating to the merits of the settlement, and not material to the present case, but granted a case for the opinion of this Court on the points above mentioned. If the Court of Q. B. should be of opinion that the Sessions are right, under the circumstances above stated, in allowing the appellants to be heard in support of their appeal, then the order of Sessions is to be confirmed, and the order of justices is to stand quashed otherwise the order of Sessions is to be quashed and the order of justices is to be confirmed.

Wilmore, in support of the order of sessions.—The question was not one of law, but one of fact, which involved a decision on the practice of the Sessions. The Sessions have found that there was, according to their practice, a waiver of the irregularity, and the Court will not interfere with that finding.

Boden, contrà.—The question was, whether the notice itself, not the fact of sending it, was a waiver. That could only be ascertained by construing the language of the notice. The Sessions did not construe it, but, as on a matter of practice, held that the mere sending the notice was a waiver of an irregularity known to those who sent the notice. This was wrong. R. v. Sheard, 2 B. & C. 856, was referred to.

Coleridge, J.—This rule ought to be discharged. There could be no doubt if this were a simple question of fact, but perhaps it is not so, and is rather a question of practice. Here a notice of appeal was given, and grounds of appeal also, but both appear to have been served too late. Subsequently to that having been done, the attorney for the respondents gave notice to produce a copy of the deposition. There seems to have been some objection to their being bound by the act of the attorney; but in this case it must be taken that what the attorney did was done by the party. When the case came on for trial, it was said that the delivery of the notice of appeal, and of the grounds of appeal, was too late. To that it was answered that the objection had been waived by the subsequent act of giving notice to produce; but Mr. Boden says, that the notice to produce must be made the subject of construction, and that upon construing it we are to say whether it amounts to a waiver; and he contends that if the notice be properly construed, it will appear that there was not an intention to waive. I think it is not a question of construction, but of practice. The Sessions thought that it was to be considered as a step in the case, and being a step taken by the opposite party, was a waiver of the objection. The Sessions, therefore, did not proceed on the supposed intention of the party, but on the ground of the rule of practice. I cannot say that they were wrong in that. They might have come to a different conclusion if they had decided the matter as one of construction; but on the question of practice I think they were right. I do not think that the analogy of the practice of the Superior Courts much assists us in this matter. It is entirely one relating to the practice of the Sessions.

Wightman, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question is whether we shall review the judgment of the Quarter Sessions on a matter of practice, on the ground that the circumstances before them did not warrant the judgment to which they came. This is clearly a matter within their jurisdiction. There was an objection to the notice of appeal. Were the Sessions right in saying that it was waived by the act done by the attorney requiring the production of a certain document? The Sessions do not seem to have decided this question on the construction of the notice; but on the effect of the act done, in taking a step in the case which it was only necessary should be taken on the assumption that what had been previously done was sufficient so far for bringing the case to trial. The analogy of the practice in the Superior Courts is not in favour of our reviewing the decision of the Sessions; and I think that in this case the Sessions did quite right.

Lord Campbell, C.J. (a)—I have heard enough of this case to enable me to say that I entirely concur. It is allowed that the defect might have been waived; and the question is, whether there was any evidence of waiver. That was entirely a question for the Sessions. It was not a question on the construction of a document; it cannot be pretended that this is, like a contract, to be set forth with perfect accuracy, but it was an act done by the attorney for the parties, which had the effect of waiving a previously existing objection. It was a step taken in the case, and he had authority to take it.

Wightman, J.—I may observe, that the case relied on is clearly distinguishable, for there by Act of Parliament there could be but one ground of waiver.

Reg. v. The Mayor, Aldermen, &c. of Ashton-under-Lyne.

Highway-rate—The Towns Improvement Clauses Act—Special Act.

By a special Act for the improvement of a borough it was enacted that when any street should have been sewered, &c. and otherwise completed, &c. and declared to be a public highway, it should be for ever after repaired out of the highway-rate "hereinafter provided." The Act then provided that for maintaining the present highways when so sewered and completed as aforesaid, &c. a highway-rate should be made and levied upon all messuages, &c. lands, and tenements within the borough.

The borough consisted of A. division, subdivided into X. and Y. districts, and part of B. division, and each district and division, before the special Act, provided separately for its own highways.

In 1851 certain highways of the X. district being out of repair, and not being sewered, &c. or declared as highways within the meaning of the above-mentioned enactment, a rate was made upon the X. district for the repairs by the corporation, assuming to act as surveyors of the highways:

Held, that the effect of the special Act, in conjunction with ss. 48 and 49 of the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34 (the Towns Improvement Clauses Act), was to empower and direct the making of two rates over the whole borough, one for the repairs of the highways, declared to be such within the special Act, and the other for the repairs of the highways not declared to be such, and therefore that the above rate was bad, being made upon the X. district only.

Appeal against a highway-rate for the old town division of the borough of Ashton-under-Lyne made by the town council of the borough as surveyors by virtue of the General Highway Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50), and of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), and the Ashton-under-Lyne Improvement Act 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. xxxv.).

By consent the following case was stated for the opinion of this Court under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 45, s. 11.

The parish of Ashton-under-Lyne consists of four divisions: 1. The Ashton Towns division, subdivided into the Old Town and the Demesne districts; 2. The Audenshaw division; 3. The Hartshead division; 4. The Knott Lanes division.

The municipal borough of Ashton-under-Lyne consists of the Ashton Towns division and of part of the Audenshaw division.

Before the Ashton-under-Lyne Improvement Act 1849, the two districts of the Ashton Towns division and the three other divisions each maintained separately its own highways and had each separate surveyors.

The greater part of the Old Town district is a country district, and the Demesne district is nearly altogether covered by the town, and comprises a great number of houses and other rateable property.

Some of the highways in each of the Old Town and Demesne districts respectively had been before the rate now in question sewered, drained, levelled, flagged, and otherwise completed, and been declared to be public highways and been kept in repair out of moneys levied under the 25th section of the Improvement Act 1849. Others of the highways within those districts had never yet been sewered, drained, levelled, flagged, paved, and otherwise completed, nor declared to be public highways within the Improvement Act 1849.

In May 1851 certain highways in the Old Town district, not at that time sewered, drained, &c. being out of repair, the corporation assuming to be and acting as surveyors of the said Old Town district assessed and laid the rate in question upon the rateable property in the said Old Town district for the repair only of such highways within that district as had not at the time of the rate been so sewered, drained, &c. and at the same time assuming to be and acting as surveyors of the Demesne district laid another rate upon the rateable property within the demesne district for the repair only of such highways then out of repair within that district as had not been at the time of making the rate sewered, drained, &c.

The above rates are laid upon the rateable property within the said respective districts, to the exclusion of all other rateable property within the said borough, not within the said respective districts.

The respondents are occupiers of rateable property within the borough, but not within the Old Town district. They were liable to a rate for the repair of highways when made upon the borough, but not when laid upon the Old Town district exclusively.

The Old Town district contains arable, meadow, and pasture land, rated by the said rate to the full net annual value thereof.

In February 1850, the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the said borough laid a highway-rate on all rateable property within the borough under the Improvement Act, 1849, and collected and expended it in the repair of the highways throughout the whole borough, whether declared as such or not. In December 1850, another rate of the same kind was made, but expended in the repair of those highways only that were sewered, drained, &c. and declared as such.

The Improvement Act applies to the same district as that comprised within the municipal borough.

The mayor, aldermen, and burgesses are the commissioners entrusted with the execution of the Improvement Act. They have no revenues applicable to the repair of highways within the borough, except such as they may be entitled to raise by rates under the statutes above mentioned.

(a) His lordship had been sitting in the court for Crown cases reserved.

The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the rate upon the property within the Old Town division for the repair of the highways within that district as had not been declared as such, and were not sewered, drained, &c. was valid. If it was, the rate was to be confirmed, if not, to be quashed.

By the Ashton-under-Lyne Borough Improvement Act, sec. 11, the Towns Clauses Improvement Act is incorporated into it.

Sec. 24 of the Borough Act enacts, that when any street made, or to be made, within the borough, shall have been sewered, drained, &c. and otherwise completed, to the satisfaction of the corporation, they are to certify and declare the same to be, and the same shall become, a public highway, and be for ever afterwards repaired out of the highway-rate hereinafter provided.

Then sec. 25 enacts that for maintaining the present highways, when so sewered, drained, &c. and completed as aforesaid, and such of the present and future streets as shall be declared public highways as aforesaid, the corporation shall direct a highway-rate to be made and levied upon the occupiers of all messuages, houses, shops, &c. yards, gardens, curtilages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments within the said borough.

By the Towns' Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, its provisions, save so far as varied by the special Act, apply to the town or district comprised in such Act, and to the commissioners appointed for improving and regulating the same.

And sec. 48 of that Act enacts that the commissioners shall be the surveyors of all highways within the limits of the special Act, and have all such powers and liabilities as any surveyors of highways are invested with, or subject to, by the laws for the time being in force.

Sec. 49 enacts that the commissioners shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour for refusing or neglecting to repair any public highway within the limits of the special Act, and be liable to be indicted.

Cowling for the respondents.

H. Hill and Maynard for the respondents.

The 12 & 13 Vict. c. xxxv. ss. 13, 20, 23, 24, 25, and 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34, ss. 47, 48, 49, 50, 156, 157, 161, and 199, were referred to and commented upon.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rate cannot be supported, not on the ground that there can be only one highway-rate which is to be applicable to all cases within the district, for sec. 25 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. xxxv. will not bear that interpretation, being applicable only to the maintenance of the permanent ways. Looking at the general Act and the special Act, there are to be two general rates over the whole borough,—one for the urban streets, and to that the rural part of the district contributes, for the words of sec. 25 direct the rate to be made and levied upon all lands within the borough. Then the urban part should contribute in like manner to the rural ways in the borough, and that object is to be attained by sec. 48 of 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34. The commissioners, by that section, are to have all the powers of surveyors of the highways, and it seems that as such they have the power of making and levying a rate for the repair of the rural roads within the borough, treating them as one district, although they were in separate districts, with separate liabilities before the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 35. There is certainly no express power to rate the whole borough for this purpose, but I think that there is impliedly. This view is also supported by sec. 49 of 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34. The conflicting sections are reconciled by this conclusion, that there are to be two rates, one for the repair of the urban streets within the borough, and the other for the repair of the rural ways to which respectively all the property within the borough is liable to contribute.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of opinion that this rate is bad, because it is made upon a part of the borough, and not the whole. There is, no doubt, a difficulty in reconciling all the provisions of these statutes. The effect of them, however, I think, is to enact that there shall be two rates applicable to different descriptions of repairs within the borough, the one to the urban ways, and the other to the ways that are not within secs. 24 & 25 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 35, and that view is perfectly consistent with the justice of the case. The inhabitants of the rural part of the borough are bound to contribute to the repairs of the streets properly so called, and there is no reason why there should not be a reciprocity, and why the inhabitants of the streets should not contribute to the repair of the highways within the rural part of the borough.

ERLE, J. delivered a similar judgment.

Judgment for the appellants, with costs.

Thursday, April 29.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF SUFFOLK.

Disqualification of a judge—Interest—Conduct of magistrates at sessions—Certiorari—Notice.

At the hearing of an appeal against an order of removal, one of the magistrates present was a ratepayer in the appellant parish. During the hearing he pointed out documents and made observations to the chairman; but it was sworn that he took no part in the decision of the case: Held, nevertheless, that his interference was improper, and invalidated the order of sessions.

Notice of the application for a certiorari served upon that and another magistrate: Held sufficient.

A rule had been obtained for a certiorari to bring up an order of Sessions, quashing an order of removal, on the ground that one of the magistrates present, and taking part in the decision, was a ratepayer of the hamlet of Needham Market, to which the removal of the pauper had been directed. The affidavits in answer to the rule did not deny that the magistrate mentioned was present, or that he was a ratepayer in the appellant parish, or that he had during the hearing pointed out documents, and made observations to the chairman; but it was sworn that he sat on the left hand of the chairman, and took no part in, and exercised no influence upon the decision of the case; that the case was decided by the chairman and two other magistrates who sat on his right hand; that during the hearing the counsel for the respondents noticed the fact that the gentleman in question was a ratepayer, upon which the chairman said that he would take no part in the decision of the case, and the chairman swore that he understood the counsel to be satisfied with that assurance, or he would have requested the magistrate to withdraw.

Couch shewed cause.—The mere presence of a single interested magistrate would certainly not invalidate the proceedings, and here it is positively sworn that the magistrate abstained from taking any part in the decision. (The Grand Junction Canal Company v. Dimes, 19 L. J. Ch. 315; Re Dimes, 19 L. J. 158, Q. B.; R. v. The Cheltenham Paving Commissioners, 1 Q. B. 467; and R. v. The Justices of Hertfordshire, 6 Q. B. 753, were referred to). 2. Notice of this application was not served upon two of the justices who made the order, because the magistrate who was interested did not make the order; and he was one of the two served. (Reg. v. The Justices of Herefordshire, 14 L. J. M. C. 44.)

O'Malley and Power, contrà, were not called upon.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be made absolute, and I am glad for the sake of the pure administration of justice that the application has been made. There can be no doubt that this gentleman was an interested party; and his duty was to have withdrawn from the bench during the hearing of the appeal. That is the example set by the judges of the Superior Courts, which magistrates at sessions would do well to follow. But in the present case the interested magistrate remained on the bench until the appeal was decided; and after he had been objected to, and had stated that he would not interfere, he did actively interfere, by pointing out documents and making observations to the chairman; and then he takes upon himself to swear what effect those observations had. As to the point that notice of the application was not served upon two of the justices who made the order, I agree in the decision of my brother Patteson in R. v. The Justices of Herefordshire, but in that case there was no interference. Here the magistrate remained during the whole proceeding, and the case must be considered as having been decided by and before him.

WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

CROMPTON, J.—The question is, whether he interfered, not whether he influenced the decision.

Rule absolute.

TALLIS v. TALLIS.

Practice—Frivolous demurrer—Immaterial traverse—Striking immaterial averment out of the declaration.

Where the plaintiff demurs to a plea, on the ground that it is an immaterial traverse, the Court will not, as a general rule, put the plaintiff to the alternative of having his demurrer set aside as frivolous, or of striking out of the declaration the allegation traversed by the plea, unless the pleading should appear to have been framed with a view to entrap the defendant, but the question is one for the discretion of the Court or judge to be exercised according to the circumstances of each particular case.

Cutts v. Surridge, 9 Q. B. 1015, questioned.

This was an action for breach of a covenant not to carry on that part of the trade of a publisher usually known as the canvassing trade, in London or its neighbourhood, Liverpool, and other towns. The declaration alleged that the plaintiff was engaged in the canvassing branch of the publishing trade in the town of Liverpool, whereof the defendant had notice.

The defendant pleaded amongst other things, a traverse of the notice alleged; and to that plea the plaintiff demurred, on the ground that it traversed an immaterial allegation.

A summons was then taken out before the Lord Chief Baron, calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the demurrer should not be set aside as frivolous, or why the allegation of notice should not be struck out of the declaration; but that learned judge refused to make that order. A rule nisi in the same terms was then obtained; and against that rule

Dowdeswell now shewed cause.—Probably the allegation of notice is immaterial; but the question is sufficiently doubtful to render it prudent and proper for the plaintiff to insert it in the declaration. (Vyse v. Wakefield, 6 Mee. & W. 442; 16 Vin. Ab. tit. Notice.) Whether it be or be not material is a question which will be decided by the demurrer; and either party may upon that point carry the case to a Court of Error. The present application is founded upon Cutts v. Surridge, 9 Q.B. 1015; but that case does not rest upon very satisfactory grounds. [CROMPTON, J.—It has always seemed to me that in Cutts v. Surridge the plaintiff was compelled by the court to strike an allegation out of his declaration by the threat of treating as frivolous a demurrer which was not frivolous.] The averment of notice is commonly introduced; and is even found unnecessarily in the concise forms of declarations upon bills of exchange, settled by the judges.

Cole, contrà.—Cutts v. Surridge is expressly in point. The defendant traversed the allegation of notice, because it was deemed to be a material allegation; but if the plaintiff considers it immaterial, let him strike it out.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I think that this rule should be discharged. It cannot be made absolute unless it was imperative on the Lord Chief Baron to make the order either that the demurrer should be set aside as frivolous, or the allegation be struck out of the declaration; and I cannot think there is any such universal rule of practice. In Cutts v. Surridge the Court had reason to believe that a trap had been laid for the defendant, and that the pleading was not fair and bonâ fide. Here there is no reason to suppose anything of the sort. The allegation may be immaterial, but it cannot be said that it was intended for any dishonest purpose. Now we are called upon, in the first place, to set aside the demurrer as frivolous; but as at present advised, I think it a perfectly good demurrer; and that the traverse is bad, because it takes issue on a wholly immaterial allegation. Then am I to set aside as frivolous a demurrer which I consider to be perfectly good? Certainly not; but an alternative is proposed, viz. to strike the immaterial allegation out of the declaration. In this stage of the proceedings, however, I do not think that we should be justified in taking that course. If an allegation is improperly introduced into a declaration, application might be made at once to strike it out, instead of pleading to it, and then, after demurrer, applying to strike out that demurrer as frivolous; but I lay down no general rule. Each case must be left to the discretion of the judge to whom the application is made; and in this case, if the Lord Chief Baron had made the order, I by no means mean to say that I should have held that it ought to be set aside; but he dismissed the application, and I cannot say that he was wrong.

WIGHTMAN, J.—This is an application to the summary jurisdiction of the Court, to prevent the plaintiff from taking a step in the cause, which ordinarily he would be entitled to take, on the ground that it is wholly unnecessary, and would lead to fruitless expense. The case of Cutts v. Surridge is relied upon: but each case must depend upon its own particular circumstances; and we cannot make Mr. Cole's rule absolute without deciding against the position for which he contends. The rule cannot be made absolute unless we decide that the allegation of notice was wholly immaterial, and at present I certainly am of that opinion; but Mr. Cole says that he thinks it material; and Mr. Dowdeswell considers it doubtful. Under these circumstances, I think we ought not to interfere.

CROMPTON, J.—If Cutts v. Surridge is to be taken as establishing a general rule that whenever the plaintiff demurs to a plea on the ground that it is an immaterial traverse, he is to be put to the alternative of having his demurrer set aside as frivolous, or of being compelled to strike out of his declaration the allegation traversed, I cannot agree to that case; and I certainly see reason to doubt the grounds of that decision. If a practice has been adopted of requiring the plaintiff in such cases to strike the allegation out of his declaration under terror of having his demurrer set aside as frivolous, I think that that practice is not right. The demurrer is not frivolous if the allegation is immaterial. Here I think that the demurrer is good; and that, consequently, we cannot set it aside as frivolous. The defendant should, at all events, come at once, and not first plead to the objectionable allegation. The books are full of demurrers to immaterial traverses; but I am not aware of any instance in which the Court has ordered allegations to be struck out of a declaration unless they were scandalous or prolix, or introduced to entrap the opponent. The allegation supposed to be immaterial may after all be the very one which a Court of Error might think essential to the sufficiency of the declaration. By granting the present application we should be deciding summarily that which both parties are entitled to have on the record. Cutts v. Surridge is not a satisfactory decision to my mind, although perhaps it may be supported on the ground that the pleading there was supposed to have been framed with the design of entrapping the opponent.

Rule discharged.

REG. v. THE YORK AND NORTH MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Inspection of documents—Rule in equity as to discovery—Evidence to meet opponent's case.—Stat. 14 and 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6.

In answer to a mandamus to a railway company, to make a railway, the company returned that they had no funds; upon which the prosecutors pleaded that the company had funds, and upon that allegation issue was joined:

Held, that the affirmative of that issue being upon the prosecutors, they were entitled, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6, to inspect and take extracts from all the books of the railway company, relating to the matters in question.

This was a mandamus to the defendants to make a railway. Return that the company had no funds, nor the means of raising any; that they had raised and expended, according to their Acts of Parliament, all the money authorised to be raised. Plea, traversing those allegations, and issue thereon. A rule had been obtained, calling on the defendants to shew cause why the prosecutors should not be at liberty to inspect and take extracts from all books kept by the company pursuant to their Acts of Parliament, and all other books and accounts in their possession, relating to the matters in question. The matter had been before Coleridge, J. at chambers, who dismissed the summons, on the ground that the information sought for related to the defendants' case.

Addison shewed cause.—This is an attempt to enforce a discovery of the defendants' case; it is not an application for information necessary to the prosecutor's own case. It is true that the affirmative is upon the prosecutors; but the Act of Parliament authorising the company to raise funds, will be a sufficient primâ facie case to throw the burthen of proof on the other side. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Certainly, a Court of Equity will not interfere, and grant a discovery for the mere purpose of enabling a party to meet his opponent's case; and according to the stat. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6, we must be governed by the equitable rule.] Bolton v. The Corporation of Liverpool, 1 Mylne & K. 88; and Pepper v. Chambers, 16 Jur. 19, Ex. are in point. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—But would it not be very material evidence in support of the prosecution, to shew that the company had a balance at their banker's large enough for the purpose?] Then the rule ought to be limited to such books as relate to funds in hand, and to the particular branch line which the defendants are called upon to make.

Hugh Hill, contrà.—The rule is limited to such books and extracts as relate to the matters in question; but here the affirmative is to be made out by the prosecutors; and for that purpose they are entitled to the inspection prayed. (Burrell v. Nicholson, 1 Myl. & K. 608; and Smith v. The Duke of Beaufort, 1 Hare, 507; 1 Phill. 209.) Such orders as these are frequently made at chambers.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I think that this rule ought to be made absolute. The information, which is sought for is substantially in support of the prosecutors' case; for the issue is, whether the company had funds, and the prosecutors' case is that they had. Technically therefore the affirmative is upon them; and in support of that issue all this information would be material. Of course a fair compliance with the rule is all that can be required; but it seems to me that the case comes within the rule laid down by the Act of Parliament, for which we are referred to the practice in the courts of equity.

WIGHTMAN and CROMPTON, JJ. concurred.

Rule absolute; the costs of inspection to be paid by the prosecutors, and the costs of the application to be costs in the cause.

REG. v. THE LIVERPOOL, MANCHESTER, AND NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mandamus—Railway company—Abandonment of the line.

Where, after a railway company had virtually abandoned its project, and its compulsory powers had expired, and a small sum only remained in hand, shares had been transferred, a mandamus was refused to register the transfer of shares, the Court, upon the facts entertaining the opinion that the purchaser was desirous of having the transfer registered, not for the bonâ fide purpose of becoming the proprietor of the shares, but with the object of opposing the company and assisting the purchaser's father, who had instituted proceedings in Equity against the company.

This was a rule nisi for a mandamus to the company and secretary to register the memorial of a deed of transfer of five shares to W. T. Preston from a Mr. Smith, the registered shareholder. The company was incorporated in June 1846, and at a general meeting on the 3rd October, 1848, it was resolved, that in the then present state of monetary affairs it was expedient to defer the construction of the works till a more favourable season, and that 14s. per share of the amount paid up should be returned to the shareholders, and this resolution was confirmed on the 24th October, 1848. In pursuance thereof, an instalment of 10s. per share was returned, and received by Mr. Smith upon each of his shares. About 4,000*l*. now remained in the hands of the company. Soon after this resolution, the directors made a bye-law, that no shareholder should transfer his shares without the consent of the directors. Mr. Smith, it was shewn, was aware of the bye-law, and Mr. Preston did not state directly that he was not. The compulsory powers of the company expired in June 1851, and in July 1851 Mr. Preston purchased his shares of Mr. Smith. It was shewn that, as early as November 1848 Mr. Preston, the prosecutor, had made an application to the company to know whether the undertaking would be proceeded with or abandoned; and also that there was a suit in Chancery now pending between the company and Mr. Preston's father, who was a landowner upon the projected line of railway, relative to the purchase of lands for the line. The applicant had commenced an action against the company, which it was stated was for the refusal to register the transfer, and served the writ upon the secretary, but afterwards the service was countermanded.

Sir F. Thesiger for the company, and Atherton (T. Atkinson with him) for the secretary, shewed cause against the rule. This rule was granted upon secs. 14 and 15 of 8 Vict. c. 16 (the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act), which enact that shareholders may transfer their shares by deed, and that the secretary shall enter a memorial of the deed of transfer in the register of transfers. These sections contemplate an actually existing company, and not the case of one like the present, which is virtually abandoned, or exists only for the purpose of winding up its affairs. (Rex v. The London Assurance Company, 5 B. & Ald. 899.) Secondly, this is not a bonâ fide application; the applicant is now seeking to become a registered shareholder, not with the view of becoming the proprietor of these shares, but with the view of getting information of the company's proceedings and assisting his father in the controversy with the company. It is, therefore, submitted that this Court will not interfere by allowing the prerogative writ of mandamus to issue in such a case. They also contended that this writ would not be granted, as Mr. Preston had chosen his remedy by action, and also that Mr. Smith was estopped by what he had done from transferring his shares.

Bliss and Wheeler, in support of the rule.—This project has not been abandoned under the Railways Abandonment Act, nor are its affairs being wound up under the Winding-up Act. There is a sum of 4,000*l* in hand, and it was illegal on the part of the company to return part of the subscribed capital in October 1848, as they were bound by their contract with the public to form the line of railway, and their powers had not then expired. As one of the public, Mr. Preston has an interest in seeing that the company's funds are properly distributed; and as a shareholder he could, by a bill in Equity, enforce a proper distribution. Here there is such an interest still existing in the company, that Mr. Preston ought to be enabled by this writ to obtain the status of a registered shareholder, and exercise all the privileges of one. (Reg v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, 20 L.J. 399, Q.B.; Reg v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 10 A. & E. 531.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged. I do not proceed upon the ground of the estoppel on Mr. Smith, the purchaser, nor upon the bye-law, for I much doubt whether that was binding; nor upon the ground of the pending action, for that was virtually abandoned, but I proceed upon this ground, that it is quite clear that Mr. Preston is not proceeding bonâ fide for the purpose of becoming a shareholder. It is said that it is his object to see to the application of the funds, but that is a matter only affecting the shareholders among themselves.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am of the same opinion. I desire to limit my judgment to the personal disqualification of the party who applies for this writ, and not to express any opinion as to the validity of this bye-law, or as to whether the shareholders could estop themselves from transferring their shares by what they have done here. At a time when the existing shareholders were of the same mind, the project was suspended indefinitely. Mr. Preston then, with necessary notice of that fact, buys five shares. I say with necessary notice, because the transfer had the 10s. returned stamped upon the face of it, and that must have led him to make inquiries and get the necessary information. Then what motive could he have in becoming a member? I cannot resist the conclusion that it was for the purpose of opposing the company, and forwarding the interest of his father.

ERLE, J.—Before we could make this rule absolute, we should see that the applicant has a legal right to that which he asks for, and no adequate remedy. When the compulsory powers of a railway Act have expired, this Court has uniformly decided that the species of legal right it gives is at an end. That alone would be sufficient to discharge this rule.

CROMPTON, J.—I also think that the applicant in this case does not come bonâ fide, but for an indirect and improper motive.

Rule discharged.

LLOYD v. OLIVER.

Bill of exchange—Form of instrument.

In an action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill of exchange, the instrument sued upon was in the following form:—"London, July 17, 1851. Two months after date I promise to pay to E. R. L. or order, 99l. 15s. value received. (Signed) H. O." In the corner was the name of the defendant; and his acceptance was written across the instrument.

Held, that this might be treated by the indorsee either as a bill of exchange or a promissory note.

This was an action by the indorsee, against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, and the defence set up was, that the document on which the action was brought was not a bill of exchange. On the trial before Erle, J. at Guildhall, the verdict was entered for the plaintiff. The instrument in question was in the following terms:—"London, July 17th, 1851. Two months after date I promise to pay to E. R. Lloyd, or order, 99*l*. 15s. for value received. (Signed) Henry Oliver." In the corner were the words "John Edward Oliver, Birmingham," and across it was written "Accepted, John Edward Oliver." The action was brought against John Edward Oliver.

Gray now moved for a rule nisi for a nonsuit or new trial, on the ground that the instrument was a promissory note. The words "I promise to pay" could not be rejected. (Block v. Bell, 1 Moo. & Rob. 149; Edis v. Bury, 6 B. & C. 433; Edwards v. Dick, 4 B. & Ald. 212.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am clearly of opinion that as against the drawer this instrument may be treated as a bill of exchange, and that it might have been so treated even before it was accepted, because it was directed to John Edward Oliver. The meaning of this must be that J. E. Oliver was required to pay 99*l*. 15s. two months after date. I do not reject the words "I promise to pay," because they might be considered as an expression of what would otherwise be implied by law, that the drawer of the bill promised to pay if the person to whom it was directed did not pay. It might, as against Henry Oliver, also be treated as a promissory note, as Lord Ellenborough had frequently held that such an equivocal instrument as this might be treated either as a bill of exchange or as a promissory note, as against the person who framed it.

ERLE, J.—The language of this instrument, according to mercantile usage, clearly points it out to be a bill of exchange. It was proved at the trial that it had never been out of the hands of the person who framed it. Mr. Lloyd stated that he had given it to Oliver to get accepted, and he brought it back with the names of the drawer and the acceptor, but with the addition of the words, "I promise to pay." Such an instrument might surely be considered either as a promissory note or as an acceptance.

DOE dem KING v. GRAFTON.

Landlord and tenant—Notice to quit.

By agreement on the 19th April, the premises were let at the yearly rent of 42l. payable quarterly; the first payment, 7l. 13s. 6d. to be made on the 24th of June next, being the proportion of rent due up to that time. The lessee was to enjoy at the said rent until one of the parties should give to the other six months' notice to quit; and at the expiration of "any" such notice to leave the premises in as good condition, &c.

Held, a half-yearly tenancy, commencing from the 24th of June; and that a notice to quit given at Midsummer and expiring at Christmas was valid.

Ejectment, tried before Lord Campbell, C.J.

The defendant was let into possession of the premises in question, part of a house in Chancery-lane, under an agreement dated the 19th of April, 1841; the reddendum clause was at the yearly rent of 42*l.* payable quarterly, the first payment of 7*l.* 13s. 6d. to be made on the 24th of June next, being the proportion of rent to that time; and the habendum clause provided that the defendant should and might hold and enjoy the said premises at the said rent until one of the said parties should give unto the other six calendar months' notice, in writing, to quit; and the agreement then stipulated that the defendant should and would, at the expiration of any such notice, leave the said premises in as good condition, &c.

It was objected that the six months' notice to quit given by the lessor of the plaintiff at Midsummer and expiring at Christmas was bad, as it did not expire at the end of the year of the tenancy. On the other side it was urged that this was a half-yearly tenancy, and therefore that the notice was good, and the learned judge being of that opinion overruled the objection, and the verdict was entered for the lessor of the plaintiff.

A rule nisi having been obtained for a new trial, on the ground that the above ruling was wrong,

Hayes shewed cause.—The agreement creates a half-yearly tenancy. The clause as to payment of rent from 19th April to Midsummer removes that period altogether from the holding, and indicates that the term was to commence from Midsummer. No doubt the words "at the yearly rent of 42*l.*" if they stood alone, would import a yearly tenancy, but the clause as to notice to quit shews clearly that the tenancy was to be a half-yearly one, else no effect will be given to the words "at the expiration of any such notice;" for, if the tenancy is construed to be a yearly tenancy, there can only be one such notice expiring at the end of the current year. (Kemp v. Derrett, 3 Camp. 509; Wilson v. Abbott, 3 B. & C. 88; Doe v. Donovan, 1 Taun. 555; Brown v. Burtenshaw, 7 Dow. & Ry. 603.)

Warren, in support of the rule.—This agreement clearly delineates a yearly tenancy, with all its incidents, and the notice to quit should have expired at the end of the current year. The rent spoken of is a yearly rent; and effect may be given to the clause as to notice to quit, by holding that the word "any" refers to a notice to be given by either of the parties. (Doe v. Johnson, 6 Esp. 10.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C J.—I am of opinion that the notice to quit was sufficient. I never can doubt from the agreement, that it was the intention of the parties to create a half-yearly tenancy, commencing at the 24th of June. If there had been any authority shewing that a different construction was to be put upon this agreement, I should have felt bound by it, but none of the cases to which we have been referred shew that Mr. Warren has failed to make out that this agreement imports a yearly tenancy. I take it that the words "at the yearly rent of 42*l.*" were only introduced to form the basis of the calculation for the half-quarter, and to shew that the rent would afterwards be at that rate. That explanation satisfies the term "at the yearly rent of 42*l.*" Then, what is there next to shew that it was to be a yearly tenancy? The habendum clause contains the only language that shews what the term was to be, and how long is that? Not from year to year, but only until one of the parties should give to the other six months' notice to quit. That indicates the term, which is not to be less and need not be more than six months. This, then, not being a yearly tenancy, the rule does not apply that the notice to quit must expire at the end of the year when the tenancy commenced. Then, may the notice to quit commence from Midsummer? The express stipulation that the half-quarter is to be paid up to the 24th June, shews that the tenancy starts from that time; and the other clause shews that it is to continue until either party gives to the other six months' notice to quit. Then, six months' notice to quit having been given on the 24th of June, the lessor of the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

WIGHTMAN, ERLE, and CROMPTON, JJ. delivered similar judgments. Rule discharged.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF MONK'S KIRBY.—Hayes shewed cause against a rule to set aside the side-bar rule for costs. The defendants had been convicted upon an indictment for non-repair of a road, which they had removed into this court by certiorari. The question was, whether the prosecutor, the clergyman of a neighbouring parish, was entitled to costs as a "party grieved or injured," within sec. 3 of 5 Wm. & Mary, c. 11. His affidavit, in answer to the rule, stated that he had frequent occasion to go into a parish adjoining his own for the purposes of performing divine service there; that by reason of the nonrepair of the road in question he was obliged to go by a circuitous route, which increased the distance by two miles each way, and cost him two tolls each time he went. R. v. Taunton St. Mary, 3 M. & S. 465, was cited. Bittleston, contrà.—The prosecutor never had any use or enjoyment of this road, which had been quite out of repair, and fallen into disuse many years before he came into the neighbourhood. All the population of the neighbourhood for a great distance from the road might make out a case of grievance as strong or stronger than this. Besides sec. 3 of 5 W. & M. c. 11, does not apply to indictments for the nonrepair of highways, where the right to repair is in question. Such cases are provided for by s. 6. (R. v. Dewsnap, 16 East, 194; R. v. Incledon, 1 M. & S. 268; Ireson v. Moore, Salk. 15.) By the COURT.—The uniform practice has been to grant the costs in these cases, if the prosecutor appears to be a party grieved; and he is clearly so in this case. Rule discharged with costs.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

Reported by DANIEL THOMAS EVANS and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Tuesday, April 27.

RICKETTS v. THE EAST AND WEST INDIA DOCKS AND BIRMINGHAM JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway company—Liability to keep fences in repair—Negligence—8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 68.

The plaintiff's sheep escaped from his close through his own fence into a close belonging to N. and thence through the fence of the defendants (a railway company), which, by stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 68, they were bound "to make and maintain sufficient," into and upon defendants' railway, where they were run over by a train and killed.

The plaintiff brought his action on the case for the loss sustained, and the defendants pleaded the facts in answer thereto.

Held, that the defendants were not liable to the action, the plaintiff's sheep being trespassers on the close of N.

The duty imposed on railway companies by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 68, "to make and maintain sufficient fences for separating the land taken for the use of the railway from the adjoining land not taken, and for protecting such land from trespass, or the cattle of the owners or occupiers thereof from straying thereout by reason of the railway" extends only to fencing against the owners or occupiers of adjoining lands, and not against strangers. It does not extend the common law liability; and there is no obligation on railway companies to erect and maintain fences of more than ordinary strength, either against the occupiers of the adjoining lands or against strangers, by reason of their carrying on a dangerous business, the statute having provided all that is necessary for the rights of individuals and the security of the public.

Case for non-repair of fences, by which plaintiff's sheep strayed on the railway of the defendants, were run over by a train, some killed and others wounded.

The declaration contained two counts: the first count stated "that certain sheep of the plaintiff were depasturing and lawfully being in and upon certain lands, which were and still are situate, lying, and being, adjoining to, and abutting upon the railway of the defendants, and to and upon land taken for the use thereof." It then alleged that "it was the duty of the defendants to make and erect a sufficient fence in and upon the land taken for the use of the said railway, for protecting and preventing cattle or sheep depasturing, or being in or upon the said lands adjoining to or abutting upon the defendants' railway, from straying or escaping out of, or off, or from the said adjoining lands to or upon the said railway."

Breach, "that the defendants, not regarding their said duty, did not, nor would erect, or cause to be erected, in or upon the said land so taken for the use of their said railway, or adjoining to the same, a sufficient or any fence for protecting or preventing the sheep of the plaintiff so depasturing, and being in and upon the said lands adjoining to and abutting upon the defendant's railway, from straying or escaping out of the said adjoining lands upon the said railway of the defendants, but the defendants wholly omitted so to do, per quod, &c.

The second count alleged that the defendants made and erected a fence in and upon, &c. sufficient for protecting and preventing cattle depasturing on lands adjoining their railway from straying or escaping out of the said lands to or upon their railway; and having made such a fence, it became and was the duty of the defendants from time to time to maintain the said fence sufficient for protecting and preventing cattle and sheep depasturing upon adjoining lands from straying or escaping out of the same to or upon the said railway of the defendants.

Breach—Neglect of duty to repair and keep up the fence, &c.

The defendants pleaded several pleas. To the fourth, sixth, and seventh pleas the plaintiff demurred specially. But in course of the argument it was agreed between counsel, with the consent of the Court, to waive all objections of form, and argue the case on a statement of facts, in order to avoid further expense and litigation. The facts were as follow:—The plaintiff's sheep escaped through his fence into a close belonging to the Great Northern Railway Company, and from thence through a fence belonging to the defendants to and upon their railway.

The case was then argued as upon general demurrer to the seventh plea, which stated "that the Great Northern Railway Company, before the committing, &c. were seised in their demesne as of fee, and also possessed of, and in the said lands so adjoining to and abutting upon the said railway of the defendants, from out of which the sheep of the plaintiff escaped and strayed into and upon the said railway, and that the said sheep of the plaintiff when they so strayed and escaped as aforesaid were wrongfully and unlawfully in and upon the said lands of the said Great Northern Railway Company trespassing and doing damage there, without the leave and licence of the last-mentioned company, and that the plaintiff was not at any or either of the times aforesaid the owner or occupier of the said lands from and out of which the said sheep so escaped into and upon the said railway as aforesaid."

Demurrer and joinder.

Tompson Chitty for the plaintiffs.—It is submitted that both upon principle and authority the plaintiff must be taken as the occupier of the close through which his sheep escaped to the defendant's railway. The defence here set up is no answer to the plaintiff's claim. (Fawcett v. The York and North Midland Railway Company, 20 L.J. 222, Q.B.; 15 Jur. 153, 16 Law T. 439.) [Jervis, C.J.—That case differs so far as there the animals were on a public road. Cresswell, J.—The statute (5 & 6 Vict. c. 55) imposed a clear duty on the defendants to keep gates at level crossings closed against all persons and cattle in the highway whether lawfully there or not.] The 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, regulates the obligation on landowners as against the public. By the common law the defendants were bound to make and use their railway in such a manner as that injury may not accrue. There is authority for this in Barnes v. Ward, 19 L.J. 195, C.P.; 14 Jur. 334; and in Davies v. Mann, 10 M. & W. 546. [Cresswell, J.—In Barnes v. Ward the plaintiff was exercising a public right on a public highway.] Here he was in the enjoyment of a right conferred by statute made expressly to protect him. By the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 68, an obligation is placed upon railway companies as regards the owners and occupiers of land adjoining the railway "to make and maintain sufficient posts, rails, hedges, &c. for separating the land taken for the use of the railway from the adjoining land not taken, and for protecting such land from trespass, or the cattle of the owners or occupiers thereof from straying thereout by reason of the railway," &c. In the next place, I contend that as the plaintiff's sheep, as it were, involuntarily wandered from his close and got on the railway of the defendants, and as the defendants were exercising what may be called a dangerous business, there was a duty on them to take extraordinary caution for the avoidance of casualties and to fence off their land securely. It would have been different if the sheep had escaped into an ordinary field and not a railway. For these reasons it is submitted judgment should go for the plaintiff.

J. Brown for the defendants.—I submit that the defendants in this case are entitled to judgment. Is there any statutory or common law liability? If there be, the first will dispose of the second. In all the precedents I have discovered, wherever there was a right at common law, it was in a case where plaintiff's land abutted on the land of the defendant, or at all events plaintiff had a right of common adjoining to the defendant's land. The form of declaring in such cases invariably followed has been that given in Chitty on Plead. 592. The earlier precedents are much the same. (Lilly's Entries, 70; Hearn's Pl. 61; Morgan's Precedents, 166; 8 Wentworth's Index, 69, 70; Booth v. Wilson, 1 B. & Ald. 159; Powell v. Salisbury, 2 Y. & Jerv. 391.) Dovastone v. Payne, 2 Hy. Bl. 527, is a direct authority for this position. It was an action of replevin. The argument of Williams, Serjt. in that case was supported by the judgment of the justices of the C. P. so far as this, that "if cattle escape from an adjoining close through the default of the plaintiff's fences, the defendant must shew that he had an interest in that close, or a licence from the owner to put his cattle there." Eyre, C.J. in the judgment there, says,—"The party who would take advantage of fences being out of repair as an excuse for his cattle escaping from a way into the land of another must shew that he was lawfully using the easement when the cattle so escaped." If the present had been a case under the common law, Dorastone v. Payne would be an authority directly in point. Another case to the same effect is Sir Francis Leke's case, 3 Dyer, 365 a. Next, as to the defendant's obligation to fence. [Williams, J.—It turns between a statutory liability and a common law liability, whether the statute imposes an additional liability on the defendants to keep up the fences.] The liability created by sec. 68 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, extends no further than the common law liability—that which has existed by custom between neighbours, and nothing more. It is the owner of the adjacent land, and not a stranger, such as is the plaintiff, who has an interest in the fences of the railway so as to oblige the defendants to keep them in strong condition. The plaintiff's sheep being trespassers, the defendants were not bound to fence against him: his duty was to keep his cattle, at his own risk, from straying on our land. [Jervis, C.J.—I find it so laid down in 2 Wms. Saund.] Yes; and also in Viner's Abr.; Boyd v. Tamlyn, 6 B. & Cr. 337; Rex v. Pease, 4 B. & Ad. 30. The judgment of Parke, B. in Rex v. Pease altogether negatives the argument of common law liability. It has been decided that a man who uses his land in a negligent manner is not liable to trespassers unless the act of negligence is unlawful. (Gale on Easements, 299; Lynch v. Nardin, 1 Q.B. 29; Jordan v. Crompton, 8 M. W. 782.) The only injury imputed to defendants is, that they did not keep up their fence: the Court is satisfied that, as against the plaintiff, there was no obligation on them to do so, therefore the judgment should be, that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain this action.

Chitty, in reply.—The statute must have meant that the defendants should do something more than repair the fences as against the adjoining owner. They had to do more than is imposed by the Common Law on an ordinary person. (Vere v. Lord Cawdor, 11 East. C. 568.)

Jervis, C.J.—I am of opinion that the defendants are entitled to the judgment of the Court. This being a case of very considerable importance, the parties have very properly agreed to disencumber it of technicalities, and bring it before the Court on the facts. It is admitted that the facts are these. The plaintiff's sheep strayed through his fence on to a close of the Great Northern Railway Company, and thence through a fence of the defendants upon their railway, where several of them were killed. The matter has been viewed in three ways. Admitting that the defendants, by the Act of Parliament, were bound to repair the fence of the adjoining close, that was as against the owner of that close, and there was no liability to the plaintiff. It was by defect of the fence of the plaintiff's close adjoining that of the Great Northern Railway that the sheep had got on to the defendants' railway and had been killed. Under these circumstances it was said, admitting that the defendants were bound to repair the fence, as against the occupiers of the adjoining close, yet the present plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The rule had been well stated in a note to Pomfret v. Ricroft, in 2 Wm. S. in which it was laid down that this kind of action would only lie against a person who could be shewn to be bound by prescription or obligation to repair the fences of the adjoining land. The defendants would not be liable for injury to sheep escaped from the adjacent close, unless the plaintiff had an interest in that close, or a licence from the occupier to put them there. Applying that rule, had the plaintiff any right to have his sheep in the close adjoining the defendants' railway? It was admitted that they were there, not by right, but by trespass; by deficiency of the fences of the adjoining close. That being so, the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover damages. The next question was, in what respect did the Act of Parliament vary the ordinary responsibility of the defendants? So far from varying it, it had properly taken the general rule of law as the measure of liability. It said, in making the fences, the fences shall be made against the owner and occupier of the adjoining close. This view may at first sight appear to conflict with Fawcett v. The York and North Midland Railway Company, cited in the argument; but in reality it does not, for there the Act of Parliament imposed a positive and express duty to keep the gates at a crossing on the railway always closed, so that there, though the horse was a trespasser, as there was an undeniable breach of duty, it was properly held that plaintiff was entitled to recover. It was said in the third place, if this was not a common law liability, or given by statute, yet, by reason of the danger of the trade which is carried on, extraordinary caution was required. I think that is not so. The Legislature authorised the defendants to carry on the railway, and have done what they thought necessary to protect the neighbouring country from injury by reason of the railway. It seems to me, therefore, according to all the points put, that the defendants are entitled to the judgment of the Court.

Cresswell, J.—I am of the same opinion, that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover upon the facts before the Court. There is no complaint against the company of negligence, no allegation that they conducted their business in other than a careful manner. I think the obligation on the defendants is co-extensive with prescriptive liability to keep fences in repair against adjoining owners and occupiers, and against them only, and you cannot extend it further.

Williams, J.—I entirely concur with my learned brothers in opinion as regards this case. I think Dovastone v. Payne conclusive. The only question is, whether the obligation as regards fences imposed on the company by Act of Parliament, is similar to the common law obligation, or whether it is extended by the Act so as to come within the principle of Fawcett v. The York and North Midland Railway Company. I think it is not within that case, and that the plaintiff here, being a mere stranger, cannot found any action upon such a liability in the defendants.

Talfourd, J. concurred.

Judgment for the defendants.

Heap v. Barton and Another.

Landlord and tenant—Tenant's right to remove fixtures after the expiration of the term.

A. a mortgagee, who had dealt with the defendants as yearly tenants, demands possession of premises. B. & C. the tenants, on the 4th February, disclaim the tenancy. A. commences an action of ejectment; an agreement is entered into on the 19th of February, by which A. undertook not to issue the writ of possession until the 25th March, on condition of B. & C. not appearing to the action. B. & C. subsequently remove tenant's fixtures:

Held, that they were precluded by the form of the agreement from so doing.

In this case, which was tried at Liverpool before Cresswell, J. it appeared that in 1821 some stables and other premises were mortgaged by one Howard to the father of the plaintiff. In 1841 the premises were let by a son of the mortgagor, who had been left in possession, but was then dead, to the defendants, who put them into repair, and set up some fixtures, the subject of the present action, which were admitted to be tenants' fixtures. In 1851 there was a demand of possession made by the mortgagee, who had dealt with the defendants as tenants from year to year, a disclaimer of the tenancy by the defendant on the 4th February, and an action of ejectment commenced by the plaintiff, in which the demise was laid on the 5th February. On the 19th a memorandum of agreement was signed by the parties, by which the plaintiff undertook not to issue a writ of possession till the 25th March, on condition that the defendants would not appear to the action. Before the 25th of March, but after the day of the demise laid, and probably after the agreement was entered into, the fixtures were removed by the defendants. Declaration was for breaking and entering and removing the fixtures. The third plea justified the removal of the fixtures under the agreement. Verdict for the plaintiff, with leave to move to set it aside and enter it for the defendants on the third plea.

Atherton (with him was J. Brown) now shewed cause against the rule, which had been obtained on a former day. The third plea being confined to the removal of the fixtures, the plaintiff is at all events entitled to keep his verdict as to the breaking and entering. We do not deny that according to the evidence the mortgagee had treated the defendants as tenants from year to year; but that tenancy was terminated by disclaimer on the 4th of February, and after that time the defendants could not remove the fixtures, according to the general rule that tenants cannot remove fixtures after the end of their term (Hallen v. Runder, 1 C. M. & R. 275; Weeton and Others v. Woodcock and Others, 7 M. & W. 14.) And the memorandum of agreement is not to be extended in its meaning, that being merely that things were to remain as they were, and some costs be saved; and, besides, between the 5th and the 19th, the date of the agreement, the possession of the defendants was absolutely wilful. When the agreement was made the evil day was put off, and when it came it came with all its consequences; and when plaintiff entered, the entry related back so as to sustain this action. Penton v. Robarts, 2 East. 88, is certainly a strong case, and is the one most in favour of the defendants. In that case there seems to have been a continued possession, although after the term, and if it stood alone, would be considerably against us. But Davis v. Jones, 2 B. & Ald. 165; and Minshall v. Lloyd, 2 M. & W. 450; establish the rule that the tenant can only remove during the term, and that that right can only be extended if the former tenancy is continued with all its rights. If the tenant does not remove fixtures before the expiration of his tenancy, he is taken to have abandoned them to the landlord. That doctrine is recognised in Lyde v. Russell, 1 B. & Ad. 391; in which case Penton v. Robarts is in substance overruled. There is nothing in the agreement to shew that the defendants were to be continued as tenants, and if so Fitzherbert v. Shaw, 1 H. Blackstone, 258; in which case there was an agreement similar to the one in this, is directly in favour of the plaintiff.

Knowles, Q.C. and Cowling, in support of the rule, relied on Penton v. Robarts, and denied that there was any general rule, that if fixtures were not removed during the term they became a gift in law to the landlord. Lessee of tenant of life may remove within a reasonable time. The rule is, therefore, not inflexible, but variable according to circumstances, and if the tenant remains in possession, circumstances shew, or may shew, that he does not mean them to be a gift. Park, B. in Minshall v. Lloyd, uses the expression, "or while they remain in possession after the tenancy has expired," which agrees with Penton v. Roberts, where it was left to the jury to say, whether the removal was within a reasonable time. We have a right to remove independently of the agreement. The entry of the landlord relates back by fiction of law for some purposes, such as the recovery of mesne properties, but not for all; and Penton v. Roberts shews that the tenant, though in by a kind of sufferance, may remove until actual entry by the landlord.

JERVIS, C.J.—This rule must be discharged. The questions which have been raised in the course of the argument, as to the power of the tenant to remove fixtures after the term has expired, are questions of importance, and might require consideration, but I am of opinion, that in this case, the form of the agreement precludes the removal of the fixtures. I think it means that the matter should be suspended till the 25th March, and that the premises should then be delivered up in the state they were at the time of entering into the agreement. If it had been intended that the fixtures should be removed, it would have been so expressed in the agreement. Fitzherbert v. Shaw, therefore, is decisive of the case.

The rest of the Court concurred.

SMITH v. WINTER.

Where it is agreed that the amount due in the settlement of accounts should be carried on to the next account, and worked out, that is a good answer to an action brought on a subsequent account under the general issue.

This was an action, tried before Jervis, C.J. at Westminster, in which it appeared that the plaintiff in his particulars of demand, claimed 23*l.* 6s. 1d.; that 4*l.* had been paid into Court, and that, as to the rest, the defendant had a good defence under the pleas of payment and set-off, except as to the sum of 1*l.* 6s. 6d. about which there was some doubt. There had been a settlement of accounts between the parties more than six years before action brought, in which there was found to be a balance in favour of the defendant to the amount of 1*l.* 6s. 6d.; and it was then agreed that this should be carried on to the next account, and allowed for in it. It formed part of the defendant's set-off, and to it the Statute of Limitations had been pleaded in the replication.

A rule nisi had been obtained to enter the verdict for the plaintiff for that amount.

Byles, Serjt. and J. Brown shewed cause.

Miller, Q.C. appeared in support of the rule.

The COURT were of opinion that the rule must be discharged. The plea of payment cannot be established as covering the amount, but that does not entitle the plaintiff to have the verdict entered for him. The question arises under the general issue. The evidence shews that it was agreed that the balance should be worked out, and be taken as a payment, and therefore to that amount the defendant was never indebted.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, April 29.

FOSTER v. CRABB.—This was a question as to which of two parties was entitled to have continuing possession of title deeds. The case was part heard on Monday. Gray was heard, and J. Brown in reply this day. The Court took time to consider its judgment. Cur. adv. vult.

PARKER v. WALMSLEY.—This was an action on an agreement to transfer certain shares to the plaintiff in the Gloucester, Aberystwith, and Central Wales Railway. The declaration contained two counts, and the defendant, in one of his pleas to the whole declaration, pleaded that the sums of money in the two counts mentioned were one and the same. Montague Smith in support of the demurrer. JERVIS, C.J.—It is impossible this can be a good plea to the count on account stated. Macnamara in support of plea. Where two counts are identified as on one cause of action, and the plea thereto is good as regards the most material of the two counts, the Court will sustain it. It is immaterial whether it is good to both counts. There is a case not overruled, in which the same objection was considered. The plea does not set up illegality. JERVIS, C.J.—You must amend your plea on payment of costs, and within reasonable time, so as to enable the case to be tried or argued in three days. Leave to amend.

MOFFATT v. DIXON.—Thompson asked the Court to allow this case to stand over in order to accommodate the convenience of Byles, Serjt. who was then engaged. To stand over.

FISHER and ANOTHER v. BELL, P.O.—This case had been before the Courts of Ex. and Q.B. and conflicting judgments given upon it. It was a demurrer to the declaration. Channell, Serjt. was heard in support of the demurrer. Barstow and Rowley, contrà. Cur. adv. vult.

DOE dem. BENTHALL v. ROE.—Colquhoun made absolute a rule nisi obtained on a former day, for judgment against the casual ejector. It should have been moved last Term. Rule absolute.

Friday, April 30.

WILLIAMS v. BUTLER.—Reed applied for a rule nisi to compute, and for leave to serve notice of the rule by affixing it up in the Common Pleas Office, and by sending copies to defendant's lodgings in Victoria-square, and to defendant's residence in Ireland. JERVIS, C.J.—Before granting we must know how the declaration was served.

JOHNSON v. BINGHAM.—Fortescue shewed cause against a rule nisi which had been obtained for setting aside the judgment in this case, and for discharging the defendant out of custody. Prentice in support of the rule. The COURT discharged the rule, it appearing that the bill sued on, which the affidavits on the part of the defendant stated had been handed over to the plaintiff, not as a bonâ fide holder, but for another purpose, had been indorsed, and this indorsement not being explained.

Monday, May 3.

CROUCH v. THE NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Cowling moved for a rule to shew cause why he should not have leave to amend the pleadings. Rule nisi.

HOLMES v. PARKES.—Phipson moved for a rule to shew cause why, on the payment of 8*l* odd into court, all proceedings on the judgment should not be stayed, or why it should not be referred to the Master to review his taxation. Rule nisi.

Saturday, May 1.

ROBINSON v. GILL.—JERVIS, C.J. delivered written judgment in this case. To be reported.

BALDWIN v. BAUERMAN.—T. Jones moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff's attorney to shew cause why he should not give full particulars of the occupation, calling, and place of abode of the plaintiff in this action. An undertaking had been given by the defendant to appear to the action, and a summons was taken in the terms of this rule, but Maule, J. dismissed it on the ground that the application was too late; it should have been made, according to that learned judge, within four days after the undertaking to appear was given. Since that it has been discovered that the plaintiff is charged with felony, and has absconded. An advertisement [illegible] been published in the Police Gazette. (Rule of Court, 2 Wm. 4, c. 79, s. 19.) [JERVIS, C.J.—You lie by, and directly you find that the plaintiff's attorney is in such a position, through the absconding of plaintiff, that he cannot comply with your demand, you come for this rule!] The defendant swears in his affidavit that he has a good defence on the merits, and that he makes this application in order to be in a position to get security for costs. JERVIS, C.J.—As that is so, you may take a rule to shew cause, and in the meantime stay of proceedings. Rule nisi.

BELL, P.O. v. FISK.—This was a rule to enter up judgment on a warrant of attorney thirteen years old. Hayes shewed cause against the rule. The COURT made absolute the rule, without hearing Byles, Serjt. in support of it. To be reported.

BERR v. BERR.—Fooks applied to the Court to enlarge this rule, the defendant having undertaken to appear personally before auditors appointed by the Court in an action of account. The ground of application was dangerous illness of the defendant, as certified by the surgeon in attendance on him. Hake opposed the motion, on the ground that witnesses were on their way from Dorsetshire to be examined before the auditors according to the terms of the rule. Ultimately it was arranged that the witnesses for plaintiff should come up and be examined on Monday, but, as regards the defendant, the rule to be enlarged. Rule enlarged accordingly.

HEALD v. CAREY.—In this case the Court said there would be no rule.

WILLIAMS v. BUTLER.—In this case, which was mentioned yesterday, Reed applied and obtained leave to enter an appearance for the defendant sec. stat. Application allowed.

Tuesday, May 4.

Re THOMAS HAKEWILL.—Kenealey asked the Court to call Thomas Hakewell, against whom a writ of habeas corpus was yesterday granted by Maule J. ordering him to bring up five children and surrender them to the custody of the mother, or shew good cause for detaining them. Hakewell was then called, but as the writ was only issued yesterday and sealed to-day, the COURT ordered the case to be mentioned again before its rising. Stands over.

MOFFATT v. DIXON.—This was a demurrer to the 3rd plea of the defendant. Byles, Serjt. and Thompson in support of the demurrer. Mansty contra. Judgment for the plaintiff. To be reported.

FREEMAN v. LEE.—Raymond moved for judgment in this case, on the ground that the paper books had not been delivered four days before argument. [JERVIS, C.J. to Karslake.—The rule is, that they must be delivered four clear days, what say you to that?] Karslake.—We understood we were to deliver them by the 23rd or 24th of April. JERVIS, C.J.—The answer is insufficient, therefore there will be Judgment for plaintiff.

MYERS v. PERIGAL and OTHERS.—This was an issue directed by the Lord Chancellor for the opinion of the Court, the question being whether a bequest of sha[res in] a banking company, which had a beneficial interest in lands, not incorporated under the Joint-Stock Companies Act, were within the Statutes of Mortmain. The case was argued at great length. Byles, Serjt. Renshaw, and S. Lucas, appeared for the next of kin, and contended that the bequest was void. Cowling, for the defendants. Cur. adv. vult.

Re HAKEWELL.—W. M. Cooke prayed an enlargement of the habeas corpus in this case. The rule was only sealed at one o'clock to-day, and there was no personal service. Kenealey.—There was service at the house where the children are kept in duress, upon Hakewell's brother. We ask for attachment, as there is no return to the writ. [JERVIS, C.J.—According to the practice of this Court, you must shew there has been actual service.] The original writ was served at the house, according to the Act 56 Geo. 3, c. 100. JERVIS, C.J.—You may treat this as reasonable service to-day, and you may come here for return to the writ at the sitting of the Court to-morrow, but you must not move criminally till half-past [illegible] o'clock. Stands over.

LAMPLOUGH v. THE EAST-UNION RAILWAY COMPANY.—Dodson prayed the Court to allow this cause to stand over till Saturday. JERVIS, C.J.—If the other side are agreed, we will hear it on Thursday. Stands over.

Wednesday, May 5.

AUSTEN v. THE BROMLEY HILL IRON COMPANY.—On Raymond's application. Rule absolute.

GREGORY v. THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.—Mansty shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained to amend the record, by striking out the affirmance of the judgment of this Court by the Ex. Ch. and inserting the judgment actually pronounced (which slightly varied from the judgment of the Court). The case, after the mistake was made, was taken into the House of Lords; it was now referred by the Court to the Master, to ascertain, first, whether the plaintiff knew of the mistake before the writ of error was brought; secondly, when he first knew of it; and, thirdly, when the defendant first knew of it.

MESSER v. PARKER. Part heard.

Re HAKEWELL.—Cook appeared for Mr. Hakewell, and put in a return to a writ of habeas corpus, of which the purpose was to compel him to produce his children in court. Kenealey objected to the sufficiency of the return, and argued that the Court had power to compel Mr. Hakewell to deliver up his children. The COURT were of opinion that they had no such power over the father.

AUSTIN and ANOTHER v. THE MANCHESTER, &c. RAILWAY COMPANY.—Hawkins continued the argument in support of the rule. Cur. adv. vult.

SMITH v. WINTER. Part heard.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Monday, Jan. 19.

ATKINSON v. STEPHENS.

Pleading.

Declaration alleged that plaintiff shipped on board defendant's vessel at port B. bound for L. certain goods to be carried from the one port to the other, that such goods were afterwards sold for the benefit of the voyage, the master being unable during the voyage to obtain money in any other way, whereby defendant became bound to pay the plaintiff the value of such goods the amount they would have produced at their port of destination.

Plea (founded on the stat. 53 Geo. 3, c. 159), as to the damage beyond the value of the ship, that defendant was not liable, as before the goods reached their destination, and whilst on their voyage in the care of the master of the vessel, he sold them without the authority of the defendant. On demurrer thereto,

Held, that the plea was bad, as being a plea to the damages, and not to the cause of action; also, that the declaration was bad, as no such promise as that alleged followed as a consequence, of law from the facts stated, there being no averment that the vessel did arrive at her destined port of delivery. If a master sell the goods of a shipper at an intermediate port for necessary repairs, the shipper cannot claim the price of similar goods at the port of delivery unless the vessel arrives at the port; therefore the promise here to pay the value without any such condition, as if the goods had arrived at the port of delivery, does not follow as an inference of law from the premises.

This was a demurrer to the plea.

J. Wilde appeared for the plaintiff.

Willes, for the defendant. Cur. adv. vult.

Saturday, April 17.—POLLOCK, C.B. delivered judgment. The second count of the declaration states that the defendant before and at the several times mentioned in this count (to wit), on the 1st January, 1819, was the owner of, and interested in, a certain ship or vessel called the Harriett, then being at a certain port, Buenos Ayres, and bound from thence to a certain port, to wit, the port of London, in the United Kingdom; and the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, caused to be shipped on board the vessel certain goods and merchandise. Then the count sets out that the merchandise was sold for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the voyage, and then it alleges this promise,—after alleging that the goods were sold, and that the ship and freight would have been wholly lost, and that the master could not then obtain money in any other way, and that with the sum of money so realised by the sale of the goods, together with a sum of money realised by the sale of other goods, the costs and expenses incurred in and about the premises were unpaid by the defendant; and the defendant then, in consideration that he would, on the request of the plaintiff, pay him, the plaintiff, the value of the said goods and merchandise of the plaintiff so sold as aforesaid, and contracted to be carried as aforesaid, for which the same might have been sold, had the same been delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff at the port of London; and the plaintiff avers what the value of the goods would have been when they arrived in the port of London, and that is the amount claimed in the action by the plaintiff; and the plea professes to raise a defence, "and for a further plea to the second, third, and fourth counts, so far as the same claim or seek to recover damages, they are beyond, or to a greater amount than the value of the ship;" and with respect to the breach of promise says, "that the plaintiffs ought not to maintain their action against them to recover any damages beyond or to a greater amount than aforesaid in respect of the breaches of promise in the second, third, and fourth counts complained of, because the several goods and merchandise in the second, third, and fourth counts mentioned, were so caused to be shipped and loaded on board, the ship being the same ship in the several counts mentioned as therein alleged, at the same time, and to be carried on the same voyage as part of the same cargo, and afterwards the said ship sailed on her voyage; and after the said ship had so sailed with the said goods and merchandises on her voyage, and before any part of the said goods and merchandises were carried and conveyed to the port of London, and while the said goods and merchandise were in the custody and control of the master of the ship, for the purpose of being so carried and conveyed, the master of the ship wrongfully and without any authority in that behalf from the defendant, and without the knowledge, privity, or consent of the defendant, sold and disposed of the said goods and merchandise." The pleadings are similar on two other counts, namely the third and fourth counts, for two other parcels of goods. Tl first question raised on the argument was, as to the sufficiency of the plea, which was founded on the statute 53 Geo. 3, c 159. The Court intimated its opinion that the plea could not be supported in point of law. If this be a loss or damag within the statute, which is, to say the least, very doubtful, and indeed we think it is not, because it is only a lawful mode of borrowing money for the necessary purposes of the ship, the plea is bad in form, being a plea to the damages, and not to the cause of action. Mr. Willes, indeed, found himself obliged to give up the plea, and addressed himself to the declaration, and the only question now is whether the second count of the declaration is good? And the third and fourth stand on precisely the same footing as the second. The objection to the second count is that the part consideration alleged does not support the precise promise stated. No such promise follows as a consequence of law from the facts as previously stated, for it is argued that though the defendant may be bound to pay the price of the goods at the place of sale, or at the port of delivery at the option of the plaintiff, yet he is only to be bound if the ship arrives at the port of destination, and there is no qualification of that sort alleged in the promise, nor any averment that the vessel did arrive at her destined port of delivery; and we think that this objection ought to prevail. The authorities, indeed, in the English law upon this subject are few, and consist of the case of Richardson v. Nurse, 3 B. & Ald. 237; Alers v. Tobin, before Lord Ellenborough, cited in Abbot on Shipping, 372, Campbell v. Thompson, 1 Starkie, 490; Duncan v. Benson, 1 Ex. Rep. 537; and 3 Ex. Rep. 645, in Error; also in the case of Hallett v. Wigram, which is in the 19 L. J. 281, a decision in the Common Pleas. None of these authorities give any countenance to the doctrine that if a master sell the goods of a shipper at an intermediate port for necessary repairs, the shipper can claim the price of similar goods at the port of delivery, unless the vessel arrives at that port; and therefore the promise in this case, which is to pay the value without any such condition, as if the goods had arrived at the port of delivery, does not follow as an inference of law from the premises. In the case of Hallett v. Wigram, the vessel had arrived at the port of delivery; it was so averred in the declaration, and a promise to pay the value at that port on request, was a correct statement of the promise, which the law would infer. Whether the plaintiff be entitled to recover the price, for which the goods actually sold, which Lord Tenterden thinks he cannot do unless the vessel arrives, because the merchant ought not to be in a better situation than he would be if the goods had not been sold, is a question that does not arise on the record as it is now framed. Our judgment must therefore be for the defendant for the insufficiency of the declaration; but Mr. Wilde, for the plaintiff, having requested leave to amend if our opinion should be against him, he is at liberty to do so on payment of costs.

Judgment for defendant, leave to amend given.

Wednesday, April 29.

The JUSTICES of BEDFORD, Appellants, v. The OVERSEERS of ST. PAUL'S, BEDFORD, Respondents.

Rating—Houses occupied by officers of gaol.

Houses occupied by the governor and warder of the gaol, outside the gaol, but found to be proper and convenient for the performance of their duties in the gaol

Held, not to be rateable to the relief of the poor.

This was a special case stated for the opinion of this Court by consent of the parties, and by order of Martin, B under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, sec. 11; and the questions sought to be raised were, whether certain houses occupied by the governor and warder of the county gaol, which is situate in the parish of St. Paul's, Bedford, were liable to be rated to the relief of the poor of that parish as forming part of the gaol. The rate was made under the 43 Eliz. and it appeared that formerly these officers occupied portions of the gaol within the external walls, but that the county justices, under the sanction of the Secretary of State, rebuilt and enlarged the gaol, and by the rules laid down for their governance erected the houses in question outside and immediately in contact with the prison walls, there being no access from them to the prison except through the general entrance. Soon after this, the justices caused a door to be made through the back wall of the Governor's house to the prison; but the warder's have remained as originally erected. The houses stand on either side of the prison entrance, and are surrounded by a low wall on those sides which are not in contact with the external wall of the prison. This being the state of the premises, it appears that the churchwardens rated the justices for the gaol, and the governors and warders for their houses, and a joint appeal was entered for the borough sessions; but the churchwardens abandoned the gaol and persisted in their claim to rate the houses. This case was framed for the opinion of the Court.

Worlledge and Mills appeared for the respondents, and contended that as the officers had the exclusive occupation of these houses, which were more than was absolutely necessary for the discharge of their respective duties, they were rateable. The case finds that the houses are proper and convenient, but it does not say that they are actually necessary. If these parties lived in a different part of the town altogether, and received by way of remuneration, instead of a house to live in, a higher salary to find their own house, they would be rateable. He cited the Hampton Court and Chelsea Hospital Cases, and Reg. v. Sheppard, 1 Q. B. 170.

Tozer and Pearce, contrà, not called upon.

POLLOCK, C B.—I think this rate cannot be supported. These houses are by the case found to be proper and convenient" for the persons inhabiting them to perform their required duties at the prison. 'Proper and convenient," must mean "suitable," and the houses are not liable to be rated.

ALDERSON, B.—If they are necessary for the performance of their office and duties, surely they are not rateable. They are for them suitable for their convenience, that they may visit the gaol day by day, and every day. This case comes within Reg. v. Sheppard. there the premises were within the gaol, and here they are an excrescence only. The justices say the houses are proper and convenient, and we are bound by that, and I think concluded.

MARTIN, B.—I am also of the same opinion, and think Reg. v. Sheppard governs this case.

Rate set aside. Judgment for the respondents and costs allowed.

THE JUSTICES OF BEDFORD, Appellants, v. THE COMMISSIONERS OF BEDFORD IMPROVEMENT, Respondents.

The Commissioners of Bedford Improvement rated the county gaol, under a local Act of Parliament, for keeping the streets of Bedford in repair, and other purposes therein mentioned, "for every yard of running length in front of such building." The gaol had two fronts which were accessible, and for some time it was rated only for those two sides, but as its four sides abut on streets, the rate has lately charged all four sides as being "in front"

Held, that the county gaol was liable to be rated, and for the four sides; as each side abutted on a street, with the privilege of putting doors and windows therein, to open on each street; each side was in front, and could derive the benefit of the streets improvement.

This also was a special case by order of Martin, B. for the opinion of the Court under the Bedford Improvement Act, which appointed certain commissioners for keeping the streets of Bedford in repair, and for other purposes mentioned by the Act. The questions now raised were, first, whether the county gaol was liable to be rated at all by the commissioners; and, secondly, whether, if so, the commissioners were justified in the extent and principle to which they had assessed that building.

Worlledge (Mills with him) for the respondents.—By the local Act the gaol or such public buildings are to be rated at the rate of 1s 6d per yard "for every yard of running length in front of such build- The gaol, though it had at the passing of the local Act two fronts, which were accessible, and in respect of which alone it was then rated, does in fact abut on four streets in part, the sides being in front of two streets; and the commissioners now claimed to rate it for every yard of frontage on all sides which abutted on any street.

Tozer (Pearce with him), for the appellants, was called upon by the Court, and contended that the gaol was only liable for the extent of yards "in front," that is on the main front, through which alone was there now any access to the area inclosed by the walls. The gaol was not liable to be rated at all, because by the 4 Geo. 4. c. 64, s. 48, gaols locally situate out of the county shall be deemed part of the county, and subject to the jurisdiction of the justices of the county. The proviso at the end of the 8th section of the Municipal Corporation Act shews that every county gaol taken to be for any purpose within any county shall still for all such purposes be taken to be so. The 32nd, 50th, and 59th sections of the local Act are important, showing the construction to be given. The other question is upon the term "front," as used in the Act. Front cannot mean "back" or "side" of the gaol; so that if the four several sides were in four different streets, each side would not not be rateable as the front. Supposing the gaol to be situated in an inclosure some short distance back from the road, with a narrow gateway from the street leading to the prison, that whole side of the prison fronting the street would be rateable as the front, but not the sides or back thereof.

Worlledge, in reply, stopped by the Court.

POLLOCK, C.B.—We are all of opinion in this case that our judgment must be for the respondents on both points. The 4 Geo. 4 was intended to give jurisdiction to the county justices to commit to their gaols, which were often situated in a town, possessing exclusive jurisdiction, but no further; and if such property was rateable to the borough, it remained so after the Act. As to the meaning of the term "front," it is that part of the gaol which comes against the street. If the four sides come severally into four different streets, each side is front for the purpose of being rated. Doors and windows might be put in on every side, and every side derive the benefit of the street adjacent; and that is front wherever it abuts on the road. The rate is therefore, I think, perfectly correct.

PARKE, B.—I am of the same opinion. The question is, what construction should be put on the word "front," and I think each side abutting on the street is front; with respect to the benefit they derive, the side of the gaol coming against the street is certainly the front to that particular street; they may make use of those sides as fronts to those streets by putting in doors and windows there, and derive the advantages and benefits of those streets accordingly; front means fronting upon the street, and they must pay according to the number of yards each side of the gaol is abutting on the street.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion.

MARTIN, B.—I am also of the same opinion. The gaol is locally in the town of Bedford, and it is clear that the property is to be rated for its improvement, and for the repair of the streets, and whenever any building to which the assessment per yard of "running measure in front" is applicable, or fronted or abutted more than one street, it is liable on all, though there may be no access to it on more than one, because the owners might open doors and windows to all the streets on all sides if they pleased, and so avail themselves of the benefit of the expenditure of all the streets on which it abutted.

Rate affirmed. Judgment for the respondents, with costs.

STANSFIELD v. HELLAWELL.

Replevin bond 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, ss. 121—127.

The judge of a County Court took the bond provided for by the 127th section of the County Court Act to himself, instead of to the other party to the action, as desired by the Act

Held, that the bond was made to the judge as a trustee, and might be sued on by him. And also that by declaring in the Court above, the opposite party had waived the irregularity.

In this case a rule nisi had been granted in Michaelmas Term, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the judgment obtained herein should not be arrested, or why the damages should not be reduced to a nominal sum. The facts and pleadings fully appear in the judgment.

H. Hill (Cowling with him) now shewed cause, and contended that this was a perfectly good and valid voluntary bond, and was not avoided under the statute; the words of the statute are merely directory. Here the tenant obtained the removal of the goods by his own act, the landlord being no party to it, and the tenant received the entire benefit: the judge, by taking the bond to himself, merely took it as trustee. Many instances may be cited of bonds given under a statute being held valid, although the requisitions of the statute had not been strictly complied with. In the case of an administration durante minore ætate cum testamento annexo, which is not within the 21 Hen. 6, yet if the ordinary has taken a bond from the administrator conditioned for the due payment of debts and legacies, a breach may well be assigned that, though he had more than sufficient to pay all the debts, he has not paid a legacy. (1 Wms. Exors. b. 5, c. 4.) So also a replevin bond, with only one surety instead of two, as required by 11 Geo. 2, c. 12, s. 3, may be sued on. He cited also Blacket v. Crissop, 1 Ld. Raym. 278; Austin v. Howard, 2 Marsh, 352; Dunbar v. Dunn, assignee, 10 Price, 54; and called the particular attention of the Court to the judgment in the last case; Folkes v. Doeminique, 2 Str. 1137.

Watson (Hall with him) was called on to support the rule.—The 121st section points out the only method by which actions of replevin can be legally removed, and it is a condition precedent that the preliminaries required should be complied with. This bond is illegal and void. He cited Morris v. Chapman, Thos. Jones' Rep. 24; Martin v. Blithman, Yelv. 197; Beawfage's case, 10 Rep. 100, b.; Wright v. Lord Verney, 3 Dougl. 240. This was an illegal act done by mistake, and no one can take advantage of it. The judge cannot be considered as a trustee, for this was evidently an error, and a man cannot be made a trustee by an act done in mistake, and by ignorance of the law.

Cowling was called on to reply, and cited Com. Dig. tit. "Parliament R," 23 & 25; R. v. Pinney, 2 B. & C. 322; Cole v. Green, 6 M. & G. 872; Edmonds v. Challis, 7 C. B. 436. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

PARKE, B.—This was an action on a bond for the sum of 1,759*l.* 15s. 3d.; and there is a plea which stated that the bond was given to the judge of the County Court with a condition to prosecute a certain claim entered in the County Court, in which Hellawell was the plaintiff, and Eastwood and others were defendants, with effect, and without delay, to prove before the Court in which such suit should be tried that there was a ground for believing that the rent or damages in respect of which the distress had been taken was more than 20*l.* Then it proceeds to state the condition of another bond, which was also in another proceeding; and then it states that the bond was given in order to obtain the removal of a plaint to one of the Superior Courts at Westminster to the plaintiff, who was then the judge of the court; that the rent in respect of which the distress was taken was more than 20*l.*; and that it was entered into to the plaintiff instead of being made to the other party to the said plaint, Eastwood and others, contrary to the form of the statute. Then they aver that it was made to the plaintiff, being only as preliminary to the removal of the suit; and that the plaintiff accepted from the defendant illegally the said writing obligatory in the said first count mentioned as an inducement to the plaintiff to assent to such removal of the said plaint, and to make a return agreeable to a writ of certiorari which Hellawell might procure for removing the said plaint, and so it was void. And there is a similar plea to the second count of the declaration; and there is one issue as to the truth of the allegations contained in the pleas. And then breaches are assigned: and the breaches assigned are, that after the making of the said writing obligatory, the defendant Hellawell duly removed the suit out of the said County Court into the Court of Ex.; that Hellawell declared in that court against the defendants in the court below, but did not prosecute his suit in the Ex. with effect, such proceedings were had therein that it was adjudged that he should take nothing by his writ, &c.; and that the defendants should have a return of the goods under the distress irreplevisable with costs, &c. whereby the bond became forfeited. And he further says that the plaintiff commenced to prosecute the action on behalf of, and for the benefit of, the said Eastwood and others, who were the landlords of the plaintiff; and then there is another breach with regard to the second count. Upon the trial, my brother Platt reserved the point; the objection being taken. My brother Platt directed the damages to be assessed to the amount of the costs which Eastwood had sustained in that suit, and which were awarded in that suit. Then in arrest of judgment there was a motion made that the bond was void under the statute, and if not void under the statute, the damages instead of being assessed at 178*l.* ought to have been nominal, merely because the plaintiff was the judge of the Court, and had sustained no damages. With respect to the bond being void, we are clearly of opinion it is not void under the statute. By the 121st sec. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, there is a provision "in case either party to any action of replevin shall declare to the Court in which the action shall be brought that the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, or to any toll, market, fair, or franchise, is in question, or that the rent or damage, in respect of which the distress shall have been taken, is more than the sum of 20*l.* and shall become bound in two sufficient securities to be approved, of by the clerk of the court in such sums as the judge shall think reasonable, regard being had to the nature of the claim and the alleged value and amount of the property in dispute, or of the rent, or damage, to prosecute the suit with effect and without delay, and so prove before the Court in which the suit shall be tried, that such title is in dispute between the parties, or that there was ground for believing that the said rent or damage was more than 20*l.*; then, and not otherwise, the action may be removed before any Court competent to try the matter, in such manner as has been accustomed." Now, by the 127th section there is a provision, that every bond to be given on the removal of any action out of the County Court, or upon staying the execution of any such warrant of possession as aforesaid, or on moving for a new trial, or to set aside a verdict, judgment, or nonsuit, shall be made to the other party to the action, at the cost of such other party, and shall be approved by the judge and attested under the seal of the Court; and if the bond so taken be forfeited, or if, upon the proceeding for securing which, such bond was given, the judge before whom such proceeding shall be had, shall not certify upon the record in court that the condition of the bond has been fulfilled, the party to whom the bond shall have been so made may bring an action of debt and recover thereon. Therefore, in this respect, the judge of the County Court did not follow the direction of the Act, because he took the bond to himself, no doubt by mistake, instead of taking it to the defendant in the action, and the opposite party in the replevin suit. The pleas which aver that this was done illegally and intentionally were disproved, consequently the verdict was found for the plaintiff on those pleas, and the question arises entirely on the record. We are of opinion that the preliminaries pointed out in the section of the statute are not imposed as a condition precedent to the validity of the bond which they require should be taken. The only consequence is that the suit is not properly removed. The bond itself is not thereby made void; it was a voluntary bond, and may be sued upon by the judge of the Court. We are of opinion that the bond is good, and the rule in arrest of judgment must be discharged. The only remaining question is, what amount of damages the plaintiff is to have? Now, this is not an objection on the record, for there is a proper suggestion of breaches; the bond has clearly been broken; then, what damages the plaintiff sustains is a matter for the jury to decide. On the facts of this case there is no doubt ample evidence to shew that the judge of the court in this case took the bond in the nature of a trustee for the opposite party to the suit, and the damages he recovers will be for the benefit of the opposite party. There is clear evidence that being trustee, he is entitled to recover the full amount of the costs which the party for whom he is trustee is put to. We are of opinion, therefore, that in this case the plaintiff must be considered as having sustained damages to the full amount of the costs, and, consequently, both the rule to arrest the judgment, and the rule also to reduce the damages, ought to be discharged. The suit was improperly removed from the County Court, no doubt, but then the Court above having jurisdiction over the question, because they have a right to try replevins properly brought before them, they have general jurisdiction over the case; and then the irregularity in not removing the suit by a proper mode, viz. a certiorari, grounded on the proper bond, has been waived by the party declaring in the court above, and that Court proceeding to judgment, the opposite party getting his costs. The proceedings were coram judice, though irregularly brought here, that irregularity has waived, consequently the damages were properly given by the Court to the opposite party; and being given to the opposite party, the plaintiff may sue on this bond as a trustee for the opposite party. Rule discharged.

MAGUIRE v. KINCAID.

Plea of nul tiel record Issue—Notice—Practice.

Where to a plea of nul tiel record the plaintiff joined issue, and gave notice to the defendant on Saturday of his intention to produce the record on the following Monday it was Held, that the notice was sufficient.

This was an action on a judgment. Plea, nul tiel record. Replication, joining issue. The plaintiff had given notice to the defendant Saturday of his intention to produce the record on the following Monday.

Honyman now moved for a rule to shew cause why the judgment which had been signed, and all subsequent proceedings, should not be set aside, with costs, on the ground that the notice was too short. He contended that four days' notice should have been given.

PLATT, B.—Is not the notice given sufficient?

PARKE, B.—It is a notice of the plaintiff to produce his own record and support his own issue.

POLLOCK, C.B.—You can come here and see that it is all right. Rule refused.

WHITEHEAD v. LORD, Administrator, &c.

Attorney's bill—Statute of Limitations.

Where an attorney or solicitor undertakes a suit at law or in equity, he must carry it on to its termination, before a cause of action arises enabling him to sue for the amount of his fees: unless he gives a reasonable notice that he shall discontinue such suit if he be not paid or supplied with the necessary money required, or the client dies; in either case a cause of action would then arise, and the Statute of Limitations begin to run from that time, and from that time only.

This was an action upon an attorney's bill of costs tried in Middlesex before Martin, B. when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff for 68*l.* A rule nisi had been obtained to set aside the plaintiff's verdict on the issue raised on the plea of never indebted, or on the issue raised on the plea of the Statute of Limitations, and to enter a verdict thereon for defendant.

Bramwell and Gray shewed cause.—The defendant was administrator of Ann Lord, deceased, who had employed the plaintiff to defend her in a Chancery suit to which she had been made a party by bill of revivor; the last step taken therein by the present plaintiff, Mr. Whitehead, was eleven years previous to the 4th of November, 1851, when the present action was commenced. An attorney who undertakes a suit at law or in equity, is bound to conduct it to its termination before the cause of action properly arises to entitle him to sue for it, unless indeed he gives a reasonable notice to his client that he shall proceed no further without payment; at the expiration of that notice, being within a reasonable time, he may discontinue the suit, and a cause of action then arises for his bill of costs, and the Statute of Limitations would begin to run from the time such right of action accrued, and not before. (Harris v. Osborne, 4 Tyrwhitt, 445; and 2 Crompt. & Mees; Vansandan v. Brown, 9 Bing. 402; Williams v. Jones, 2 Q.B. 276.) [PARKE, B. —A Chancery suit has so many out-branches that if he is to wait till its termination he may have, in some instances, to wait nearly 100 years.] He has the remedy in his own hands by giving notice that he shall discontinue in a reasonable time unless money is furnished. No decree has ever yet been pronounced, and the notice given was shortly before the action, so that the Statute of Limitations did not begin to run till then, and is no answer to the claim now made. 1 Daniel's Chancery Practice was referred to.

Phipson, contrà.—The Statute of Limitations is a bar; the last step taken in the suit in Chancery was eleven years before this action was brought, so that for five years after the plaintiff did anything in the Chancery suit, and before the statute began to run, he had the opportunity to give notice—if such notice be necessary—or to enforce the payment of his costs, he was bound to take some course within a reasonable time, which length of such reasonable time is for the Court or jury to determine. The plaintiff waits over for eleven years, and then brings this action; there are other circumstances besides the giving reasonable notice of discontinuing, which may give a cause of action. (See Nicolls v. Wilson, 11 M. & W. 106.)

POLLOCK, C.B.—I am of opinion this rule should be discharged. The only question is, whether the Statute of Limitations is a bar to the plaintiff's claim, and on examination of the cases it would appear that an attorney is not entitled to bring an action for his fees in the duration of the suit, without some proper and reasonable notice requiring payment. There are, Mr. Phipson says, other circumstances which may give the attorney a cause of action from which the Statute of Limitations may begin, but probably this arises from the expression of opinion in the judgment of the case he referred us to, without its being at all necessary to the decision of the case in which it was expressed, and not of very much weight. The rule laid down is generally that as long as a suit at law or in equity is going on, so long is the attorney bound to attend, and so long does the Statute of Limitations not apply. It does not, in fact, apply until the attorney has a proper cause of action either by bringing the suit to a termination or giving some reasonable notice requiring payment. It has been suggested that this, too, must be in a reasonable time; and what is a reasonable time for such a purpose should be left to the jury to determine. I do not at all agree to that: leaving such questions for a jury would indeed bring matters into great difficulty, and be a most strange way to decide it,—as strange in principle as it would be mischievous in practice. Until some communication is made by the attorney to his client, or the suit determined, an action could not be brought; and the statute would apply only from that time.

PARKE, B.—I am of the same opinion. Harris v. Osborne is an authority in point, as far as it goes, with this qualification, that the attorney is to bring the suit to a termination as far as he can, and on the death of the client, as in this case, a cause of action at once accrues to the attorney for his charges in the suit he conducted for the deceased, and he can sue the executor at his death. Or on reasonable notice that he should discontinue the suit unless supplied with funds he would be entitled to do so, and to maintain an action for his fees unless paid. Mr. Phipson intimates another also, that is, if he permits the suit he is conducting for his client to sleep so long, he may sue after a reasonable time has elapsed; but I think not. There is no authority for it: he may adopt the course of giving notice as in Harris v. Osborne; that was not necessary however, in this case, although it was done just before the action was brought, because when the client died he had a cause of action, it then commenced, and from that time, and not until then, did the Statute of Limitations begin to run. The six years had not elapsed, and this rule must be discharged.

PLATT, B.—I am also of the same opinion. No doubt, an attorney may not stop in the middle of a suit; but if he wishes to be furnished with money to go on, he must give a fair and reasonable notice to the client to pay him, or furnish him with the funds necessary for the purpose. What is the case here? The plaintiff became solicitor for his client in the conduct of a suit in Chancery. There has been no decree in that suit up to this moment; but for eleven years it was allowed to sleep, no step being taken in it; the client then died, and this action is brought against the administrator. The Statute of Limitations, under such circumstances, is no bar to the action.

MARTIN, B.—I am of the same opinion; and the question to test when the Statute of Limitations began to run is, when could the plaintiff have first brought this action? I do not think he could properly have brought his action for his bill of costs until after the expiration of a reasonable given time requiring the money; or some step taken to put an end to the suit altogether. Rule discharged.

THOMAS v. CROSS.

Payment, or set-off—Evidence.

The defendant was indebted to the plaintiff on a bill of exchange then due, 25l.: the defendant handed to plaintiff 9l. and a 17l. bill of exchange in payment of the 25l.: the plaintiff kept the 9l. and returned the 17l. bill, he refused to keep both in satisfaction of the 25l. or return the 9l.

Held, by Pollock, C.B. and Platt, B. that the 9l. so paid must be taken as a payment of the 9l.: Parke and Martin, BB. that it could be treated only as set-off, and not payment.

This was an action tried before Platt, B. in Middlesex, and was upon a bill of exchange to recover 25l. 6s. The first plea was as to 9l. payment; and, second, as to the residue. Set-off. A rule nisi had been obtained to set aside the defendant's verdict on the first plea, and to enter it for the plaintiff instead. The facts appeared to be these:—The 25l. bill being due, defendant took to the plaintiff 9l. and another bill for 17l. to pay and satisfy the 25l. bill. The plaintiff received the 9l. on that offer being made, and refused the 17l. bill, declining to accept the two in discharge of the 25l. and said he should keep the 9l. on another account, and ordered defendant out of his office, so that the plaintiff would neither give back the 9l. as required, nor keep it with the 17l. bill, in lieu of the 25l. bill. The question now, therefore, became material in reference to the costs of the action under the County Courts Act, whether the 9l. so kept by the plaintiff should be treated as a payment or set-off; if the former, the plaintiff would not get his costs by reason of the County Court Act, but if it were held to be a set-off, then he would. The jury found a verdict for the defendant as to the 9l. on the plea of payment.

Bramwell, Q.C. shewed cause, and contended it was a payment; it was so treated by defendant and plaintiff at the time, and so found by the jury.

J. Brown, contrà.—This could only be treated as set-off, and the short test is this, had the plaintiff the right to keep it, the next hour after it was so paid to him, in the way that has been stated? If he had not, then it is set-off, and not payment. The defendant could have sued the plaintiff in an action for money had and received, for this 9l. and also in trover, if necessary, for the 17l. bill; therefore, it must be considered as a set-off only.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I regret there should be any difference of opinion upon the Bench as to this case; but after listening to the arguments, my own opinion is, that this was made a payment conditionally; the plaintiff had no right to keep the money, if he did not so receive it; but he received it at the time, it was paid by the defendant, as payment; he kept it as such, and I think this rule ought to be discharged.

PARKE, B.—The question is, what opinion should we form on the law as applicable to the facts here between payment and set-off; and I think the verdict should be for the plaintiff, on the ground that was not a payment, but a set-off. The 17l. bill, and the 9l. were offered to the plaintiff, on condition that he should take them for the 25l. bill; this he refused, but kept the 9l. and the condition, therefore, was not complied with. Defendant had then a right to demand it back, and I think upon the evidence it is only a set-off, not payment, and that there was no evidence for the jury to say it was payment; the circumstance of his so stating it on the record, shews he intended to treat as either one or the other. What evidence was there of payment? The plaintiff did not take it on the bargain, as it was offered, and the defendant could have brought an action to have recovered it back; in my opinion it is only set-off.

PLATT, B.—I think this rule should be discharged, and that there was evidence to go to the jury to shew it was payment; it was made on the faith of its being payment, and was so intended; the defendant went to the plaintiff with the 17l. bill and the 9l. and he parted with the 9l. only as payment; afterwards the plaintiff declined, and said to the defendant, "You may have back the bill, but not the money." I do not think it is competent for him now (to answer his purpose) to repudiate the payment, and say it was no payment; the jury have found from the evidence of the defendant, whom they believed, that it was a payment, and I think they were right.

MARTIN, B.—I regret much that I have to give any opinion upon this case; but as I do so, I agree with my brother Parke in thinking this is more properly a set-off; if a party is liable to pay money on a certain day, and takes it, that is payment; if not then paid when due, you must at any time afterwards get the assent of both parties to any proposition intended as payment; here, there was an overdue bill, it was a debt; both must then agree, one to pay, and the other to accept to make it payment; but that was not so here, the justice however of this particular case would appear to be the other way, so that I do not at all regret the result of the present rule. The rule drops—no costs.

Ex parte JOHN HARRISON.

Order of affiliation.

It is no objection to an order of affiliation that it is made after the lapse of twelve months from the birth of the child, if, in fact, the complaint of the woman was made within that period;

Nor that the summons was not issued till many months after the application for it;

Nor that the order directs payment of the weekly sums for a longer period back than thirteen weeks;

Nor that it was made more than forty days after service of the summons, the hearing having been adjourned from time to time, and the first hearing having been within the proper time.

This was a motion to quash an order of affiliation made by two justices of the county of Durham, whereby they adjudged one John Harrison to be the putative father of a bastard child. The order had been previously removed into this court by certiorari. The following were the circumstances:—

In August 1850, an order of affiliation was made by two justices of Durham, at the instance of one Mary Robinson, upon the said John Harrison, in respect of a bastard child, born on the 10th of May in the same year. Against this order he appealed at the next sessions, at which the order was quashed. Subsequently, he was again served with a summons, bearing date the 23rd day of July, 1851, to appear before justices to shew cause why an order should not be made upon him for the maintenance of the said child. To this summons he duly appeared on the 5th of the following August, when the hearing was adjourned to the 2nd day of September, on which day it was again adjourned to the 11th day of September, when an order was made upon him.

The summons was in the ordinary form, and recited that application had been made by Mary Robinson, who had been delivered of a bastard child, &c. "within twelve calendar months from the date hereof" (23rd of July, 1851). The following was the form of the order:—

"Durham, to wit.—At a petty session of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of Durham, holden in and for the north-west division of Darlington Ward, in the county of Durham, at Wolsingham, in the said division, on the eleventh day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, before us, William Nicholas Darnell, clerk, and George Darnell Wooler, esquire, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county.

"Whereas one Mary Robinson, single woman, residing at Daddry Shield, within this division, did on the twenty-eighth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty, having been delivered of a bastard child within twelve calendar months prior thereto, make application to William Nicholas Darnell, clerk, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace acting for this division, for a summons to be served upon one John Harrison, of Sidehead, in the parish of Stanhope, in the county of Durham, whom she alleged to be the father of the said child, and the said justice thereupon issued his summons to the said John Harrison to appear at a Petty Session to be holden on the fifth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, for this division, in which the said justice usually acts, to answer her complaint touching the premises. And whereas, the said John Harrison having been duly served with the said summons within forty days from the said fifth day of August last, from which day the hearing of this case was adjourned to the second day of September instant, and from which said second day of September the hearing of this case hath been further adjourned to this eleventh day of September and being now present; and the said Mary Robinson having on the said fifth day of August last, and also on the said second day of September instant, and on this eleventh day of September applied to us the justices in Petty Sessions assembled for an order upon the said John Harrison, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and it being now proved to us in the presence and hearing of the said John Harrison, that the said child was, since the passing of an Act, passed in the eighth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled, 'An Act for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England;' that is to say, on the 10th day of May, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and fifty, born a bastard of the body of the said Mary Robinson; and we having in the presence and hearing of the said John Harrison, heard the evidence of such woman upon oath, and such other evidence as she hath produced, and having also heard all the evidence tendered on behalf of the said John Harrison, and the evidence of the said Mary Robinson, the mother of the said child, having been corroborated in some material particular by other testimony to our satisfaction, do hereby adjudge the said John Harrison to be the putative father of the said bastard child, and having regard to all the circumstances of this case, we do now hereby order that, the said John Harrison do pay unto the said Mary Robinson, the mother of the said bastard child, so long as she shall live, and shall be of sound mind, and shall not be in any gaol, or prison, or under sentence of transportation, or to the person who may be appointed to have the custody of such child, under the provision of the said statute, the sum of two shillings and sixpence per week, from the said twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty, being the day upon which such application was made to the said justice as aforesaid, until the said child shall attain the age of thirteen years, or shall die, or the said Mary Robinson shall marry: and we do hereby further order, the said John Harrison to pay to the said Mary Robinson, the sum of one pound fourteen shillings and sixpence, being the costs incurred in obtaining this order, and the sum of ten shillings for the midwife.

"GEO. DILL. WOOLER, (L.S)."

By sec. 2 of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, it is enacted that any single woman who may be delivered of a bastard child may at any time within twelve months from the birth of such child make application to any one justice of the peace for a summons to be served on the man alleged by her to be the father of such child, and such justice shall thereupon issue his summons to the person alleged to be the father of such child to appear at a Petty Session to be holden after the expiration of six days at least for the petty sessional division in which such justice usually acts.

The 3rd section, after pointing out the course of proceeding at the hearing, empowers the justices, in the event of their adjudging the man to be the putative father, to proceed to make an order on the putative father for the payment to the mother of a sum of money weekly, &c. such sum (except in the cases pointed out) not to exceed "two shillings and sixpence per week from the time of the making of the application." The section then provides for compelling payment of these sums, but provides "that if the woman have allowed the weekly payment to be in arrear for more than thirteen successive weeks, without application to a justice, the man shall not be called upon to pay more than the amount due for thirteen weeks in discharge of the whole debt, and no warrant of distress shall be issued for more than the amount of arrears for thirteen weeks' payment in discharge of the whole arrears or debt."

Price now moved to quash the order of affiliation, and contended, first, that as the Act of Parliament limits the period for an application for an order of affiliation to twelve months from the time of the birth, and as the order in this case was made after such twelve months had expired, the justices acted without jurisdiction.

COLERIDGE, J.—I can see no objection upon this ground The statute only requires that the complaint should be made within twelve months after the birth of the child, which appears upon the face of the order to have been done: it is immaterial as far as their jurisdiction is concerned when the order was made.

Price.—Secondly, the order states that application for a summons was made on the 28th of October, 1850, whereas the summons itself is not issued until the 23rd of July, 1851, being nine months afterwards; and the summons itself states that the woman was delivered of a bastard child within twelve months from its date, which was not the fact.

COLERIDGE, J.—This is no objection to the order, which discloses that the application for the summons was made in due time. There is no defect of jurisdiction upon this ground.

Price.—Thirdly. The statute gives the mother a right to recover only thirteen weeks' arrear; but this order, by directing the payment of the 2s. 6d. a week from the 28th of October, 1850 (the date of the application), impliedly requires the putative father to pay for ten months.

COLERIDGE, J.—It is quite consistent their making such an order, and yet not enforcing the payment for more than thirteen weeks. They are empowered to make an order for such a payment from the time of the application, but are restricted from allowing more than the amount for thirteen weeks to be recovered.

Price.—Fourthly. The summons is dated the 23rd of July, and requires the defendant to appear on the 5th of August; but in fact the order was not made until the 11th of September, being more than forty days, and therefore contrary to the provisions of sec. 4 of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, which directs that "no such order shall be made unless applied for at such petty sessions within the space of forty days from the service of the summons after the birth of the bastard child on the person alleged to be the father of such bastard child."

COLERIDGE, J.—The delay in making the order arose in consequence of the adjournments, which cannot affect the validity of the order. It seems to me, therefore, that you are not entitled to a rule.

Rule refused.

Taxation of costs—Allowance to witnesses.

A party cannot claim costs incurred in qualifying a witness to give evidence. Where, therefore, on the taxation of the plaintiff's costs, he made a claim in respect of the loss of time of witnesses engaged in searching after the defendant in order to identify him:

Held, that he was not entitled to such costs.

This was an application on the part of the plaintiff for a rule for the Master to review his taxation The action was for criminal conversation, and was set down for trial at the sittings after last term, and by consent a verdict was taken for the plaintiff with 200*l.* damages. It being necessary that certain witnesses from the country should identify the defendant, a notice had been served upon the defendant's attorney requiring the defendant to be present at a certain time and place in order to be identified, which notice was not complied with, and with reference to which the defendant's attorney admitted before the Master he had recommended his client to keep out of the way. Upon the taxation of the plaintiff's costs, the master allowed for the foregoing witnesses in respect only of three days—namely, one for coming to London, one for the day of trial, and a third for returning to the country; but on the part of the plaintiff, it was contended that inasmuch as these witnesses were necessarily engaged several days in looking out for the defendant in order to identify him, a longer period than three days ought to have been allowed.

Barstow now contended that under the circumstances the costs of these witnesses ought not to have been limited to the three days.

WIGHTMAN, J.—What is this but qualifying a witness to give evidence? You say you ought to be allowed for the time you were engaged in looking out for the defendant.

Barstow.—This is not actually qualifying himself to be a witness; the defendant should have shewn himself as required by the notice; he has wilfully kept himself out of the way to avoid being seen. (Pilgrim v. The Southampton Railway Company, 8 C. B. 25.)

WIGHTMAN, J.—There is the case of Graratt v. Attwood, 1 Bail Court Cases, 27, which is precisely in point, which shews that you have no right to costs incurred in qualifying a witness to give evidence. This is just that case; you want to be allowed the costs of a witness engaged in endeavouring to speak to the identity of the defendant. It may be very well worth the plaintiff's while to obtain such evidence, but the cost of it must not be thrown upon the defendant.

Rule refused.

Ex parte JOHN HAYLOCK.

Habeas corpus to bring up a party from gaol in order that he may be discharged for want of jurisdiction in the justices to commit.

Prentice moved for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up one John Haylock, now a prisoner in the House of Correction at Ely, in order that he may be discharged. The commitment was for three months in default of not entering into his own recognizance with two sureties to keep the peace. The charge against him as appeared by the warrant was that he had on a certain day written upon the pavement of a certain lane called "Chapel-lane," in the parish of St. Mary, Ely, the words "Donkey Watts the Railway Jackass," which words were deemed to be offensive to one John William Watts, and which words had been frequently written for some time past.

EARL v. DOWLING.
NEW TRIAL.

A cause which stood No. 6 in the list for the day was duly reached by a quarter to eleven on that day, and was tried, and a verdict returned for the plaintiff, neither the defendant's attorney nor counsel being present. A rule subsequently obtained for a new trial, upon payment of costs, was discharged, nowithstanding the defendant swore to merits, and stated that he and his witnesses were present at the trial, no satisfactory reason having been assigned by his attorney for his own absence.

This was an action for false imprisonment, to which the defendant pleaded not guilty, and was entered for trial at the second sitting in the present Term, and stood No. 6, in the list of causes for Friday the 20th of April last. The Court sat at the usual hour of ten in the forenoon, and all the previous causes having been disposed of, the present cause was called on at a quarter to eleven o'clock, and neither attorney nor counsel for the defendant being present, the counsel for the plaintiff went through his case and proofs, and the jury returned a verdict, with 10*l.* damages. Shortly afterwards, when too late, the defendant's counsel and attorney appeared in court.

The present rule was subsequently obtained by Duncan, calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why, upon payment of costs, there should not be a new trial; and upon moving for the rule an affidavit was used, in which the defendant stated, that he himself was present with his witnesses in good time, although neither his counsel nor attorney was there, and that he had a good defence upon the merits.

Lilley now shewed cause, and contended, that as the cause was taken in its due course, and as there were no special circumstances stated in the affidavit, accounting for the absence of the defendant's counsel and attorney, the rule ought to be discharged, and that the fact of the cause being No. 6 in the list did not entitle the defendant's attorney to speculate on its not coming on so early as a quarter to eleven o'clock.

Duncan, in support of the rule, urged, that as there were five cases before the present on the day of trial, two of which, from their being brought by public companies, it was fair to presume, would last some considerable time, and as the case, though standing No. 6, was actually called on at a quarter to eleven o'clock, the defendant, as he swears to merits, ought to be permitted to have a new trial on payment of costs.

WIGHTMAN, J.—But the attorney himself assigns no reason for not being present. The cause is taken in due course. Neither attorney nor counsel is here, the action is tried, and a verdict returned for the plaintiff. If the attorney could assign any reasonable cause for not being present, it might alter the case. His Lordship then said, he would speak to Mr. Justice Coleridge, before whom the cause was tried.

To-day Mr. Justice COLERIDGE said, that Mr. Justice Wightman had requested him to direct the rule to be discharged.

Rule discharged.

It was now contended that as the plaintiff had chosen to discontinue the action, it was the same as though he had gone on to trial and had a verdict against him (Berwick v Symonds, Sayer, 196, Crosby v ———, 2 M & S. 335; Maclean v Phillips, 18 L. INSOLVENCY COURT.

Reported by DAVID CATO MACRAE, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Thursday, April 29.

(Before Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS.)

Re ISAAC GABRIEL COSTA.

Discharge from custody by detaining creditor—Adjudication by Court.

Held, that a prisoner who has been already legally discharged by his detaining creditor, may be discharged by the Court.

This insolvent came up in the custody of the gaoler in the morning, but at a later period in the day the governor of the prison arrived with his discharge by his detaining creditor. The discharge had been lodged at the prison upon the morning of the preceding day, between eleven and twelve o'clock. The discharge bore the red seal from the sheriff's office, which shewed that there had been a search at the sheriff's office, and that the prisoner was discharged from all detainers. The discharge had been duly lodged at the prison, but had been overlooked by the governor, and the result was, that the insolvent was not aware of his discharge until after he reached the court on the subsequent day in the custody of the gaoler. There had been some negociation with the insolvent on behalf of the detaining creditor, with a view to the payment of the costs of action on the bill, and to renewing the debt. Upon this failing the discharge was lodged at the prison.

Dowse, for the insolvent, said this was an attempt to commit a gross fraud upon the Court, and great injustice to the insolvent. There were cases in which the Court had discharged insolvents who had come up in custody, although their discharge had been lodged on the previous day. He therefore prayed the Court in this instance to adjudicate.

The insolvent had no counsel.

Mr Commissioner PHILLIPS said that the circumstances of this case were new to him. He was exceedingly glad to hear that there were precedents in other courts to adjudicate under such circumstances. This was an attempt to turn the machinery of this court into an instrument of torture. Was it to be endured that this Act of Parliament was to be turned to a purpose like the present? This man was not out on bail, and this creditor gave notice of opposition. He had a right to do all this, and the question for the Court was,—Is this right (of discharge) exercised bonâ fide, or as an instrument of extortion and fraud upon the other creditors? The day before the hearing the creditor goes to the sheriff's office and gets the discharge. If the discharge had been lodged instanter and without ambiguities, the circumstances might have been different, but he first sees the insolvent for a most unjustifiable and improper purpose, to get his costs in the first place, and his client's debt renewed by bills in the second place. Under these circumstances the Court would not have listened for a moment to any opposition by him, and he should discharge the insolvent.

The learned Commissioner pronounced the usual adjudication of discharge, as in the case of "a prisoner in custody."

NOTE.—Re Shine, before Mr. Commissioner ANDREWS, in the Irish Insolvent Debtor's Court (1 Cox & Macrae, 162). The note to that case is as follows:—"Where the case of an insolvent has been fully heard, and is postponed to the following day, with a view to give judgment, which the Court intimates will be adverse, and in the mean time the insolvent settles with his detaining creditor, and is discharged from custody, the Court has no jurisdiction over him." "Quære, are his bail discharged?" There is also another case to the sa[me] effect in the Court in London. Re Camillo Maper before Mr. Chief Commissioner REYNOLDS, 11 Law T. 103. In this case the hearing was adjourned, and upon the insolvent appearing upon the day named for his adjourned hearing, the attorney for the detaining creditor intimated that he had sent a discharge to the prison, but the governor having refused to receive it, he had lodged it at the sheriff's office. The insolvent was out on bail. The Chief Commissioner said "The insolvent is out of custody, and I have no authority further to interfere." The insolvent then left the court.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Reported by JAMES PATERSON, Esq Barrister-at-Law.

Monday, March 29.

HUTCHINSON v. FERRIER and ANOTHER.

Practice—Bill of exception—Documents affixed—Evidence—Stamp—Trespass—Demise.

A bill of exceptions, tendered to a judge's ruling, that certain documents could not be received for want of a stamp, did not set forth the documents, but after the seal of the judge were these words: "The following are the letters referred to in the bill of exceptions." They were then set forth, but not authenticated by the judge's seal:

Held, they did not form part of the record, and could not be looked at by the House.

In trespass qu. cl. fr. under a special traverse of plaintiff's title, plaintiff's witness said certain letters had passed annually between plaintiff and his lessor as to the demise.

Held, the demise sufficiently appeared to be by writing, and plaintiff was bound to produce the letters, whatever they were:

Held, also, the judge having on exception rejected the letters for want of a stamp, it not appearing in the bill of exceptions for what purpose they had been tendered, it must be presumed that they were tendered to prove a lease, and therefore were properly rejected:

Held, further, on the judge rejecting the letters for want of a stamp, it was not competent for plaintiff's counsel to except to this ruling, as implying that his case could not be proved without the documents, but he was bound to go on with any further evidence he might have had sufficient to maintain the issue, and then to have excepted to the rejection of that further evidence.

This was an appeal in the nature of a writ of error on a bill of exceptions from the Court of Session in Scotland. An action of trespass had been brought by the appellant, who alleged in the pleadings that he was tenant, under the corporation of Edinburgh, of a strip of ground, which lay along part of Morton-street, Leith. Adjoining this strip was a wood-yard, which he also had [occu]pied until 1837, as tenant of the respondents (defendants). During the time appellant had occupied both these premises, he had broken out a gateway in the wall which divided the wood-yard from the strip of grou[nd, an]d had thus used part [o]f the Strip as a road[way] or entrance to the wood-yard, to take in his logs of wood. In 1837, when he ceased to be tenant of respondent's wood-yard, the corporation of Edinburgh closed up the gateway, which was reopened by the respondent, who insisted on using it as an entrance for himself and tenants to the wood-yard as before. During a long series of litigation from 1837 to 1846, which followed the [reo]pening of the gateway, appellant admitted that [r]espond[ent]s had been in its exclusive po[ssession an]d enjoy[me]nt and the present action of 500*l.* damages was f[or] his being so long deprived of the use, and kept out of the possession of the small part of the strip used as such entrance. Respondents denied plaintiff's title, and pleaded what was equivalent to [a] [n]on tenent [insimul cum querente]. Such being the state of the pleadings, the Court gave out the following issues for trial:—"1. Whether, during th[e] period from Whitsunday, 1837, to Whitsunday, 1846, plaintiff was tenant of and under the corporation of Edinburgh of [a str]ip or piece of ground lying, &c. 2. Whether, during the said period, or part thereof, the defendants wrongfully took possession of a gateway or entrance in the wall of the said strip or piece of ground, and of a portion of the said strip or piece of ground as a roadway or entrance to, and exit from, the said [woo]d-yard, and during the said period, or part thereof, wrongfully continued to occupy and possess the said gateway and portion of ground, and to exclude the plaintiff therefrom." The plaintiff called two witnesses, and the bill of exceptions thus sets forth the evidence of the second witness, and what followed:—"James Robertson, is chamberlain of the city of Edinburgh, and has been so since 1838; knows the property occupied by Mr. Hutchinson, who had occupied it before witness's time; and his father had held it from year to year. There never was any lease to him. He was annually asked if he was to continue, and he answered; and ordinary 'missives' (or memorandums) passed every [year] relative to that ground in the form of letters. The counsel for defendants here objected that, in respect of the existence of these missives or letters which are in court, plaintiff cannot prove his tenancy otherwise than by their production.

The following statement was merely to explain the facts for informing the Court in reference to this objection, but not as evidence to the jury. 'Looks at letters. They began in 1836, and go down till 1846. The first year from 1836 was at a rent of 16*l.* and it has been the [sa]me ever since. Sh[own] two receipts by the city chamberlain: these are for 8*l.* each half-year, and it has continued 16*l.* ever since, he is quite sure.'

"The judge, after argument of counsel, sustained the objection, that the letters or missives which passed between the city chamberlain and the plaintiff, offered in evidence, were not stamped, and therefore could not be admitted as proving leases between Mr. Hutchinson and the Corporation of Edinburgh of the subjects in question; and that these being in existence, the tenancy cannot be proved without them. The counsel for plaintiff excepted to the above ruling, that the letters constituted written leases, and which, not being stamped, could not be given in evidence, nor the contents thereof, nor the plaintiff's tenancy proved without them. And it being stated by plaintiff's counsel that, in consequence of the deliverance of the judge, he would not give further evidence, nor ask for a verdict, the jury did then, under the direction of the judge, give a verdict for defendants. Whereupon plaintiff's counsel requested the judge to sign the said bill of exceptions, &c. (Sealed) D. Boyle, judge." The following are the missives or letters referred to in the bill of exceptions. Then follow a series of letters, of which we give the following two as a specimen:—"Edinburgh, Feb. 7, 1839. Sir,—Have the goodness to inform me whether you intend to continue for another year in the property belonging to the city of Edinburgh, in Morton-street, Leith, at the same rent as that of last year, from the term of Whitsunday next (May 15)." "Leith, Feb. 8, 1839. Sir,—In answer to your favour of yesterday's date, I beg to say, that I intend to continue for another year, from Whit Sunday next, as tenant to the city of Edinburgh, in the property, Morton-street, at the same rent as last year.—I am," &c. The other letters are nearly to the same effect, but contain allusions to other matters. The Court below, having disallowed the exceptions tendered, a writ of error was sued out, and the case now came before the House of Lords.

R. Palmer, Q.C. and Forsyth, for appellant.

Byles, Serjt. and Anderson, Q.C. for respondents.

The arguments turned chiefly on whether the letters in question were leases by the law of Scotland, and upon the effect of the evidence, which points are sufficiently alluded to in [the] judgment.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—My lords, in this case it was thought necessary by your lordships to consider the different points which were argued at the bar. Since the argument, the attention of my Lord Brougham and myself has been drawn by my Lord Truro to the frame and contents of the bill of exceptions, and upon that I apprehend now that our decision will turn. I always regret when we have to decide a case upon a question not argued at the bar, but still, as the point appears to be free from doubt, it is upon that point that the decision will rest. At the same time, I have satisfied myself, that the merits of the case will agree with the question of form, and that both upon the form and upon the merits, the order complained of must be affirmed with costs. The question in contention was simply upon a right of way between two pieces of ground, a wood-yard belonging to one party, and a strip of ground held under the city of Edinburgh by the other party, and the question now turns upon the right of the appellant to claim damages in respect of the wrongful entry and possession, excluding him from the possession of that gateway, which he asserted formed a part of the ground which he held under the city of Edinburgh. My lords, when the case was originally argued, the two issues were directed which appear upon the record. Now, at the trial two witnesses were examined for the plaintiff, who had the affirmative, both of whom swore that there had been no lease for years granted expressly, but one of whom stated that the property had been held from year to year, and that there never was any lease of it. This is Robertson's evidence. There never was any lease to him. He was annually asked if he was to continue, and he answered, and ordinary missives passed every year relative to that ground in the form of letters. The counsel for the defendants here objected, that in respect of the existence of these missives or letters which are in court, the plaintiff cannot prove his tenancy otherwise than by their production. Then comes this very singular statement, which is very well calculated to embarrass any body who has to decide this case. "The following statement was merely to explain the facts, for informing the Court in reference to this objection, but not as evidence to the jury." In point of fact, therefore, nothing went to the jury—it never got to the jury, and the question itself was never submitted to the jury. Then comes this statement: "Looks at letters." Who looks at letters? "They began in 1836, and go down till 1846. The first year from 1836 was at a rent of 16*l.*, and it has been the same ever since. Shewn two receipts for 1837 by Mr. Turnbull—these are for 8*l.* each half year, and it has continued 16*l.* ever since; he is quite sure." Your lordships will observe, that although it might be a fair inference here, that it is the witness who looks at the letters, it is not stated, nor is it stated what the letters were. So far as we have gone, there is nothing whatever to identify any particular letter. Then "the Lord-Justice General after argument of counsel sustained the objection that the letters or missives which passed between the city chamberlain and the plaintiff, offered in evidence." Now it does not appear that they were offered in evidence to begin with, for it is stated that they were only to instruct the Court, and not to be offered in evidence; "are not stamped, and therefore could not be admitted, as proving leases between Mr. Hutchinson and the city of Edinburgh of the subjects in question, and that these being in existence the tenancy cannot be proved without them." Your lordships will observe that there is no assertion that they are leases, or that they were tendered as leases, but the ruling is that the letters offered in evidence were not stamped, and therefore could not be admitted as proving leases. Now it will be seen in a moment that the exception is to a different point. The exception is not to the ruling; the exception is this: "The counsel for the plaintiff excepted to the above ruling that the letters which passed between the city chamberlain and the plaintiff during the period in question constituted written leases." There was no such ruling. He stated that to be the ruling, but the ruling which is the subject of the bill of exceptions is of a totally different nature. It is that not being stamped the letters could not be admitted as proving leases, but there was no ruling by the judge that they did constitute written leases. Then it goes on, "and which not being stamped could not be given in evidence, nor the contents thereof, nor the plaintiff's tenancy proved without them." The consequence of which is, that the ruling is one way and the bill of exceptions is another, and therefore does not meet the case. "And it being stated by plaintiff's counsel that in consequence of the deliverance of the judge he would not give further evidence nor ask a verdict, the jury did then, under the direction of the judge, deliver their verdict, finding for the defendant." The appellant, therefore, upon that occasion withdrew from the contest. He did not pursue the question as he should have done. He did not attempt to tender any other evidence, and therefore it appears clearly that there is nothing here which the House can deal with as regards the bill of exceptions. What are the letters? The letters are in an appendix, but although they are in the appendix they do not form part of the bill of exceptions; and it is perfectly clear, when your lordships come to look at the letters, that they could not have been tendered either according to the real ruling of the judge or according to the bill of exceptions, because many of those letters which are in the appendix are no more leases, or even agreements for leases, than any paper on your lordships' table. They are in relation to the property, but in no respect upon any construction constituting either a lease or an agreement for a lease, and therefore it is perfectly clear that those letters, so in the appendix which do not form part of the record, are letters which could not properly have formed part of the record according to the ruling in the bill of exceptions; and not forming part of the record, your lordships are not at liberty to look at them. It has been ruled in this house repeatedly from Galway v. Baker, 5 Cl. & Fin. 157, down to the Bishop of Derry's case, 12 Cl. & Fin. 641, that your lordships are not at liberty to look out of the record, and that in cases of difficulty infinitely greater than that now before your lordships. These letters, therefore, not forming part of the record, they cannot be looked at, and then there is no question to trouble your lordships with. My lords, that would be quite sufficient for the decision of this case. But as regards the merits of the case I think it is equally clear. The merits stand thus. The question to be proved was the tenancy, but it was not a question to be proved ordinarily between lessor and lessee, nor was it a common case in which a man had actually had demised to him property beyond dispute. But it was a question in which Ferrier, the defendant, setting up an adverse title which he had not succeeded in establishing in himself, but setting up an adverse title, it became essential that the plaintiff should have shewn a title in himself, not in the ordinary way of holding simply as a tenant, but shewing that he had from the city of Edinburgh a title superior to the title of Ferrier, because it really was a question of title in dispute. It was not a question of a clear undoubted demise by A. to B. and then an entry by C. but it was a case in which C. had held during the whole period of the supposed tenancy, and therefore claimed to hold in his own right, and adversely to the city itself; therefore it was a question of a totally different nature. Consequently in order to recover upon the merits, it would have been necessary for him to have shewn that he actually had held the property rightly under the city of Edinburgh. Now he has shewn no such thing, when the letters are produced, independently of the question of title. Now, my lords, the way in which Mr. Hutchinson held this property, if he did hold it under the city of Edinburgh, was by these missives or letters a yearly letting. They were restrained from letting for more than a year: a yearly letting took place by letters. "Do you wish to continue for another year at the same rent? Yes, I do." Or, "Am I to continue for another year? Yes, you are." Ferrier was all this time enjoying the gateway in question. Now, it did not seem to be disputed at the Bar that this property, so held by Ferrier, was capable, by the law of Scotland, of being demised. That point was not raised. It might have been made a question whether you could demise that which adversely was in the hands of another person, and for which possession could not be given. Looking at the nature of a contract for a lease in Scotland I shall say no more upon that point. It was admitted in the argument that if the letters in question amounted to an agreement and were not leases, they did not require to be stamped. So that the letters in that way were certainly considered to be valid, but it was urged at the Bar, and at the same time in the pleadings, your lordships find, that the question is always raised whether or not the property was let. Now, my lords, when I come to look at these missives or letters, which I am now looking at for the purpose of satisfying your lordships that you can decide upon the merits in perfect agreement with the strict rule of pleading to which I have referred, I find that it never could have been the intention of either of these parties to give Mr. Hutchinson any right to the property which would enable him to proceed against Mr. Ferrier, or, what is much more important, to proceed against themselves. If Mr. Hutchinson under these missives was at liberty to maintain this action, he could maintain an action against the city of Edinburgh for devising to him property which they had no title to do, and they might be liable to a similar action to this with 500*l.* damages laid for not giving to this gentleman the possession of that gateway, which formed part of that strip of ground, the whole of which was let at 16*l.* a-year, from year to year. Now, my lords, when we come to look at the letters, it is impossible to suppose that the parties had any such thing in contemplation as an actual letting, which should give a right of that sort. For if we put a fair and candid construction upon all this correspondence, looking at it not as a Court of Law, which your lordships are not entitled to do, but looking at it for the purpose of ascertaining whether the merits are with the party or not, against whom your lordships will probably decide, that this property was never intended to be demised in a way so as to create a tenancy absolutely as between the city of Edinburgh and this gentleman; and that therefore, upon that ground alone, he never, in the true sense of the question intended to be submitted to a jury, could have recovered the damages, or any portion of the damages, which he sought. I move that your lordships do affirm this order, with costs.

Lord BROUGHAM concurred, and merely referred to Lord Truro's written statement, which he had read, and with which he entirely agreed.

Lord TRURO, after stating the facts of the case, as already stated, and repeating the general argument of the Lord Chancellor, thus concluded:—My lords, the remaining exception refers to the opinion expressed by the judge that the missives or letters, being in existence, the tenancy could not be proved by any other evidence. Upon this point, I submit to your lordships that no exception lies, and that it was the duty of the appellant's counsel, if he had any other evidence which he was prepared to contend ought to have been received in maintenance of the issue, to produce it, and if rejected upon its being tendered, to except to the rejection, and that it was not competent to the appellant to rest upon the opinion so expressed by the judge. The respondent had a right to see what that evidence was, and he might not have objected to it, or might have waived any objection, although the evidence might have been objectionable, preferring to rely upon some answer to it, or upon its failing to satisfy the jury, rather than to risk the case upon the validity of the objection; but by the appellant choosing to rest upon the opinion expressed by the judge, the respondent was deprived of the exercise of that discretion, and the judge could not waive the production to the prejudice of the respondent. Upon the whole, it appears to me, by the appellant's evidence, that the letting by the corporation to the appellant was by writing; and that as the issue was a distinct precise issue, whether a specific defined spot of ground was included in the demise, the appellant was bound to produce the written document by which the demise had taken place. The distinction is obvious between the evidence receivable to prove the mere fact of A. being tenant of B. where the subject of the tenancy is undisputed, and where the sole question is, if A. is tenant of some precise disputed spot; in other words, where the question is, parcel or no parcel of the land let. I also think that, upon the bill of exceptions, even if it sufficiently appears that the letters were at all offered in evidence, it must be taken that they were offered as proving leases, and for no other purpose, and that so offered, they were properly rejected, not being stamped. I also think that the bill of exceptions ought not to be allowed, because the letters, the rejection of which is the ground of the exception, do not sufficiently appear upon the record to enable the House judicially to apply the ruling to them. It also appears to me, my lords, that if they had been read to the jury, they did not furnish sufficient evidence to warrant a verdict, that the ground purporting by the letters to be let comprised the disputed spot. That if the letters did purport to let the disputed spot to the appellant, there was no sufficient evidence of title in the corporation to that spot to warrant a verdict. Further, my lords, regard being had to the fact that neither the corporation nor the appellant were in possession of the disputed spot during any part of the time mentioned in the issue, I think even a formal lease would not—quoad the disputed spot—have created the relation of landlord and tenant as between the corporation and the appellant in a sense that would sustain the present suit. I am also of opinion that the ruling of the judge, that the tenancy could not be proved by any other evidence, did not furnish a valid ground of exception, for the reasons I have stated. I therefore agree with my noble and learned friend on the woolsack, that the judgment of the Court below ought to be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed with costs.

(Before LORD ST. LEONARDS.)

EVANS v. PROTHERO.

Issues at law—Evidence—Receipt inadequately stamped—Collateral matter.

Two issues were directed out of the Court of Chancery, one whether an agreement had been entered into by and between E. R. and J. R. for the purchase of certain premises situate at, &c., the other whether the purchase-money had been paid in pursuance of that agreement. At the trial, an inadequately stamped receipt from J. R. for 21l. "being the amount of the purchase for three tenements sold by E. R. at," &c. was received in evidence, and the jury found for the plaintiff on both issues. Upon a motion for a new trial on both issues, Vice-Chancellor Wigram held that the document had been properly received in evidence upon the first issue, and consequently refused a new trial upon that, but granted a new trial on the second. On an appeal by the defendant as to the first issue, and by the plaintiff as to the second, Lord Cottenham directed a new trial upon both issues, holding that the document had been improperly received in evidence, "the fact of the payment of the consideration-money being one of the means by which the affirmative might be established, and not collateral to the object and purpose of the document as a receipt." On the trial of these issues, Baron Parke rejected the document as inadmissible. The jury found for the plaintiff on both issues.

On an appeal for a new trial, Lord St. Leonards (affirming the order of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce) refused the motion with costs, holding that although the document might not be receivable in evidence as a receipt, yet that it might be so received as an agreement.

Where there appears on the face of a document every thing that will constitute a valid agreement within the Statute of Frauds, such a document may be received in evidence as an agreement, though by the reason of the insufficiency of the stamp, it can not be so received as a receipt.

This was a motion by way of appeal from his Honour the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, for a new trial.

The bill was filed by James Evans, as the executor of Jenkin Richards, who it was alleged had purchased the property in question from Evan Richards, against Henry Prothero, who alleged himself a purchaser from Thomas Richards, as the administrator of the said Evan Richards, and against the said Thomas Richards. Its object was to restrain certain proceedings at law, which had been instituted by the defendants for the recovery of the property, and for the specific performance of an alleged agreement for its purchase.

The facts were shortly these: Evan Richards was possessed of certain leasehold premises, situate at Merthyr-Tydvil, in which his brother, Jenkin Richards, came to reside with him. In 1827 he was said to have purchased those premises from his brother, the principal evidence of which was the following receipt:

"Received, this 25th August, 1827, of Mr. Jenkin Richards, now and before, the sum of twenty-one pounds, being the amount of the purchase of three tenements, sold by me adjoining the River Taff.

"Received the contents, + EVAN RICHARDS.

"Witness, JOHN SWAINE."

Jenkin Richards thereupon took possession of the property, and so continued till his death, in 1829. In 1828, he made a will, bequeathing the property to the present plaintiff, who thereupon took, and has ever since remained in possession, and in the course of his occupation improved the premises by building upon part of them a cottage. In 1841, the defendant Prothero brought an action of ejectment against the plaintiff to recover possession of the premises on two grounds:—1st. That they were not included in the lease under which the plaintiff made his title. 2nd. That if they were, the lease was forfeited, and the defendant Prothero entitled to enter as reversioner. On the trial of the ejectment, a reference was agreed upon, under which a verdict was awarded for the defendant (the present plaintiff). Prothero having subsequently discovered that the lease itself under which the present plaintiff claimed was also claimed by the personal representative of Evan Richards, viz. his son, the defendant, Thos. Richards, applied to him and procured an assignment of the lease to which he had entitled himself, subject to the right (if any) of the plaintiff. Upon this he brought a second action of ejectment, and having proved the assignment, obtained a verdict, which was afterwards set aside by the full Court under the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 9. In 1846, the plaintiff being then in possession, the defendant Prothero brought a third ejectment on a demise by the defendant T. Richards, and on the trial, it being stated that Prothero had obtained a fresh assignment since the last trial, and since the passing of the statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, he was put by the Court to elect the demise on which he would go: he took the demise of the defendant T. Richards. It was afterwards objected that a demand of possession ought to have been made, and that the stamp on the letters of administration was insufficient. On the latter ground, the verdict taken on the demise of T. Richards was set aside. On the trial of this third ejectment it was necessary, before ultimately deciding the question, whether a demand of possession should have been made, that the jury should find in what character the plaintiff was in possession of the property, whether as purchaser or under Jenkin Richards. They decided in favour of the former. Upon this the defendant Prothero brought a fourth ejectment, in which the present plaintiff allowed a verdict to be given against him without appearing.

In the mean time, in February 1846, the plaintiff filed his bill, stating the result of the last trial, and praying the benefit of what had taken place at law, and a restraint from proceeding further in the actions. On the original hearing of the cause before Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in 1848, his Honour directed the trial of two issues,—first, whether an agreement had been entered into by and between Evan Richards and Jenkin Richards, for the purchase of the premises in question; and, secondly, whether the purchase-money was paid in pursuance of that agreement.

These issues were tried at Cardiff on the 19th of July, 1848, and the above-stated receipt was [illegible] and proved in evidence. It was originally impressed with a sixpenny instead of a shilling stamp, but when produced it had an additional stamp of 1*l.* Wightman, J. refused to receive it in evidence. On both issues the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, although the learned judge directed them that no evidence had been produced to prove the agreement.

The defendants, on the 6th of December, 1848, applied to Vice-Chancellor Wigram for a new trial, but his honour refused the application. They then appealed to the Lord Chancellor, who, on the 16th of March, 1849, directed a new trial of the issues, holding that no evidence of the agreement and purchase had been produced. (Vide 13 Law T. 417.)

The new trial took place at Cardiff on the 16th and 17th of August, 1849, when the above-mentioned document was again tendered in evidence by the plaintiff. Its reception was objected to by the defendant, who contended that the document was not an agreement or conveyance of the premises in question. Platt, B. overruled the objection. The jury found for the plaintiff on both issues.

Whether the objection of the insufficiency of the receipt-stamp had been really taken at the trial did not very clearly appear, the affidavits on that point being contradictory.

A motion was again made to Vice-Chancellor Wigram for a second new trial, when the Court, on the 6th December, 1849, declared that the receipt was admissible in evidence to prove the first issue, but that there must be a new trial on the second (14 Law T. 308.)

The defendants then appealed to the Lord Chancellor. The plaintiff also asked to discharge the order of the Vice-Chancellor granting the new trial of the second issue; but the discussion before his lordship was confined to the question raised by the defendant. His lordship, in his judgment, said, that the fact of the payment of the consideration money was a most important fact upon both the issues, upon the latter, it was the whole question, and upon the first it was one of the means by which the affirmative might be established. The agreement might itself have been proved; a conveyance might have been proved, which would have assumed and so proved the agreement, or payment of the consideration-money might have been proved, which might have assumed the fact of the agreement. Upon both issues, therefore, the fact of payment was of the utmost importance, and went directly to the matter in issue; and if the document in question was properly received in evidence, and the jury were right in giving credit to it as genuine, the conclusion of the jury in favour of the plaintiff could not, with any prospect of success, have been disputed. But the question was, was that receipt, not being upon a proper receipt-stamp, receivable upon those issues? It had been rejected at a former trial by Wightman, J. but was received upon the last trial by Platt, B.; and it was then contended that it could not have been received to prove payment of the money, the object not being to prove such payment, but an object quite collateral, namely, to establish the fact of the agreement. The House of Lords, in the case of Matheson v. Ross, 2 H. L. Cases, 286, proceeded upon the ground that the paper there in question, though there was upon it a receipt for a balance, was also a statement and settlement of accounts, which was quite unconnected with the fact whether the balance had or had not been paid, which was not in question in the case; and the House thought that, for the purpose of shewing the state and balance of the account, the paper might be received, and being altogether collateral to the object and purpose of the paper as a receipt. In that case the opinion of his lordship in favour of the admissibility of the document was qualified by these observations. "Most of the cases go to shew this, that if, in a particular instance, the matter to be proved is the payment of money, and the payment is to be proved by the production of a written document of an acknowledgment of payment, or what is called a receipt, the Stamp Acts immediately apply to such document so produced, and for such a purpose, whether it is for the direct purpose of proving payment as a discharge between debtor and creditor, or whether it is for an indirect and collateral purpose, as to shew some right in, or advantage belonging to, a party, in consequence of such payment; where, for instance, a matter collateral is to be proved by the proof of the fact of payment, and that fact of payment is established by a receipt, such a case is clearly within the provisions of the Stamp Acts: that, however, is not the present case." It was, however, the case then under consideration. The object of producing the document was to prove the fact in the issue called collateral, namely, the agreement, by proof of the fact of payment, and that fact of payment was attempted to be established by a receipt not having a proper stamp. It appeared to him (the Lord Chancellor), therefore that under and upon the principle of the case referred to, the document ought not to have been received, and as he could not doubt but that the verdict of the jury was much influenced by that document, he was compelled to send these issues to another trial.

These came on to be tried at Cardiff in July, 1850, before Parke, B. On this last trial the document was again tendered, and described as a receipt, and represented as having been read as such on the former trial. His lordship rejected the document, and although the jury were particularly guarded by him against being influenced by its production on former trials, and were told that there was a powerful body of evidence for the defendant, and not much in favour of the plaintiff; the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff on both issues.

The defendants in December last moved before the Vice-Chancellor, Knight Bruce, for another new trial of the issues, which motion his Honour refused, with costs.

Hence the present appeal.

Walker and Pulling (of the Common Law Bar) appeared for the appellants, and cited the following cases: Beeching v. Westbrook, 8 M. & W. 411; Hawkins v. Warre, 3 B. & C. 690; Jones v. Ryder, 4 M. & W. 32; Doe dem. Wyatt v. Stagg, [illegible] Scott, 690; Corder v. Drakeford, 3 Taunton, 382; Math[illegible] . Ross, 2 House of Lords Cases; and also 9 Geo. 4, c. 14 (Lord Tenterden's Act.)

W. M. James appeared for the plaintiffs, but was not called on.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—In this case there have been altogether, as I understand it, seven trials, and the motion before me is for an eighth. There have been no less than three issues, and the property is stated to be worth a little more than 120*l.* It was said, and said truly, that justice does not depend on the amount of the property in dispute, yet in cases where the property is so small as it is here, and where the Court is convinced that no injustice will be sustained by refusing a new trial the discretion with which this Court is entrusted, when dealing with such matters, ought to be exercised; where there have been several trials it is most necessary to look to the value of the property, as to whether it can bear the expense of another; this is a case on which I consider it imperative to exercise that discretion. I therefore will not allow this contest to go on by directing a new trial. I consider that the time has arrived when these parties ought not to be allowed to tear each other to pieces for a property, the acquisition of which must be almost the ruin of even the person who ultimately obtains it. This case is a very simple one. Two brothers, both in very humble circumstances, Evan and Jenkyn Richards, lived together. One of them had a small leasehold property, of a very trifling value which was subsequently slightly increased by a cottage which had been erected. It seems to have been a cottage in which both dwelt, the alleged purchaser having come to reside with his brother; his brother died and he then took possession, alleging that he had purchased the property. In support of his claim he produced a document purporting to be a receipt to this effect: "Received this 25th August, 1827, of Mr. Jenkin Richards now and before the sum of twenty-one pounds, being the amount of the purchase of three tenements sold by me adjoining the river Taff. Received the contents." This document was signed by Evan Richards and witnessed by John Swaine; and this unfortunate document has been the cause of all the contention which has arisen out of this suit. Now this long litigation has been occasioned by the want of an additional sixpenny stamp; for if it had been properly stamped there would have been an end to all dispute. The want of this additional stamp has had the effect of rendering this document inadmissible as a receipt; but at the outset of these trials we find that this document was tendered in evidence as a receipt, but was rejected by the learned judge; so that the defendant, who is now moving for a new trial has nothing to complain of. Although this document was not then considered as admissible, yet the several learned judges before whom this case has subsequently come have differed upon this very point. Now is this document to be treated as a nullity simply because it is on a sixpenny instead of a shilling stamp? If this paper is not receivable as a receipt in consequence of the defect in the stamp, why should it not be so received as an agreement. It appears clear that the money expressed to be received is the amount of the purchase; the man who paid it was the purchaser; the man who gave the receipt was the seller; the property is described; there is, therefore, every thing on the face of this document to constitute a regular valid document within the Statute of Frauds; why, therefore, should it not be stamped as an agreement, and why should it not be received as such?—not, I admit, as a receipt, because the fiscal regulations of this country have excluded it; it is, therefore, I consider, a perfect agreement, and with all deference to the higher authorities (I do not mean to give a decided opinion, for it is not necessary for me to do so; and with the very learned decisions that are the other way, I should not do so without great consideration), yet I am bound to confess, that the inclination of my present opinion is, that I should have received it as such if it had been tendered to me. Now it has been said, that the tendering of this document had great influence over the mind of the jury. There is no doubt that it had, and if a new trial were now granted it would have the very same result, unless the Court prohibited the tender; a course which I am not prepared to adopt. I cannot help saying that it is a melancholy thing that the necessity for a stamp law should be the means of creating so much confusion in the transactions of men, and lead to the perpetration of so much injustice. But this case does not rest upon that document only. It must be recollected that the purchaser actually devised this property, and might so be considered as treating it as his own. It is not a very common thing for a man to deal with by his will property which does not belong to him. Men do not often bequeath property to which they believe they have no title. On the part of the defendant at the several trials, a great deal of evidence was adduced, and one of the learned judges before whom the case was tried, in his charge to the jury, said "the evidence for the plaintiff was very slight, the evidence for the defendant strong; if you believe the evidence for the defendant there is an end of the case." Yet with these observations the jury came to a conclusion in favour of the plaintiff, as they had done several times before, and, from what I have heard of the evidence, my impression is, that if the point were sent to twenty other trials, they would very likely come to the same conclusion. The object of the defendant is to get a verdict in his favour; and, so long as the case remains open, there will be grounds raised for new trials. I am perfectly satisfied with what has been done; and, in refusing a new trial, I feel I am saving the parties from endless and ruinous litigation, and facilitating the ends of justice, by putting the case in a way to be decided on its merits. Believing the case of the plaintiffs to be the true one, I, with as much satisfaction as I ever felt on such an occasion, refuse this motion, and I refuse it with costs.

Motion refused, with costs.

TURNBULL v. WARNE.

Order made on motion by a defendant, under the eighteenth order of April, 1850, to sue out writ of summons against persons certified by the Master to be proper parties, the plaintiff having since the hearing, neglected to take any proceedings in the suit.

W. D. Lewis moved, by way of appeal, from the decision of Vice-Chancellor Sir George Turner, that the defendant might be at liberty to sue out a writ of summons, under the eighteenth order of April, 1850, for the purpose of making certain persons parties to the claim, who had been certified by the Master to be necessary parties thereto. The plaintiff had not since the hearing appeared in any of the proceedings before the Master, or otherwise moved in the suit. The Vice-Chancellor thought, that as the order distinctly said that the plaintiff was to issue the writ, he had no power to make an order for the defendant to do so.

Their LORDSHIPS, however, were of opinion, that the defendant might issue the writ of summons, as the word "defendant," in the eighteenth order of April, 1850, meant the party prosecuting the decree; and, moreover, as the Court had general authority to make such order.

COOPE v. TOWNSEND.

Trustee—Executor—Inquiry as to wilful default when directed—Practice.

A bill sought to charge persons named as trustees of a settlement, for what they might but for their wilful default, &c. have received. At the hearing it was dismissed as against the representative of one of them, with costs, he never having acted as trustee, and the common accounts only were directed as against the representatives of the other trustee. The case coming on, on further directions,

Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that no inquiry ought to be directed as to wilful default.

This was an appeal from the order of his Honour the Vice-Chancellor Sir James Wigram, dated the 16th of February, 1850, made on further directions, whereby amongst other things it was referred back to the Master to inquire and state to the Court the amount and particulars of which the fortune of Frances Cresswell, assigned by an indenture of settlement of the 13th of May, 1815, consisted. And in case the said Master should find that the said fortune consisted of any other particulars than the 500*l.* Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent. Annuities in his report, dated May 7, 1849, mentioned, then it was ordered that the said Master should inquire and state to the Court whether R. L. Townsend, then deceased, could with due diligence, and without wilful neglect or default, have received any, and what part of such particulars, and that was to be without prejudice to any question in the cause, &c.; and the said Master was to be at liberty to state any circumstances specially, &c.; and the Court reserved the consideration of all further directions and costs until after the said Master should have made his report, with liberty for any of the parties to apply.

It appeared that Samuel Walbank, by his will, dated 21st November, 1803, gave to the Rev. Dr. Townsend and J. Pitt (both since deceased), 2,000*l* upon trust for his wife for life, and after making a bequest of his household goods, furniture, &c. he gave the residue of his personal estate and the said 2,000*l.* after his wife's decease, to his children by his said wife; and he appointed the said Dr. Townsend and J. Pitt executors. The testator died, leaving his widow and five children, one of whom, Frances, married Edmund Cresswell. On the 13th February, 1807, Dr. Townsend and J. Pitt proved the will. By a settlement made on the marriage of Frances Walbank with Edmund Cresswell, dated 13th May, 1815, she assigned to Dr. Townsend and R. Carter the fifth share, to which she was entitled under the will of the testator, upon certain trusts, under which the plaintiffs in these suits are interested. Dr. Townsend, it appears, alone acted as trustee. Frances Cresswell died in August, 1829. On the 2nd of April, 1830, the children of the testator and Edmund Cresswell executed a general release to Dr. Townsend and J. Pitt, as trustees and executors of the will of the testator, and the sum of 500*l.* Four per Cent. Annuities (afterwards reduced to Three-and-a-quarter per cent. Annuities) was transferred into the name of Dr. Townsend as trustee of the settlement of Frances Cresswell. Dr. Townsend died in June, 1830, having appointed the defendants, R. L. Townsend and John Haines, his executors; and on the 27th of April, 1842, the plaintiffs, J. R. Coope and H. M. Daniel, were appointed trustees of the settlement, in the place of R. L. Townsend and R. Carter. The original bill was filed on the 24th January, 1843, by the Rev. R. Coope and his co-trustee, J. R. Daniel, the wife of the Rev. J. R. Coope, and the other children of Edmund Cresswell, praying that the amount of the fortune of Frances Cresswell, which had been received by the late Dr. Townsend and R. Carter, who were alleged to have acted jointly as the trustees of her settlement, or which, but for their or either of their wilful neglect or default, might have been received, might be ascertained, and that it might be declared that the said R. Carter, personally, and the said R. L. Townsend and J. Haines, as executors of Dr. Townsend, out of his personal estate, might be decreed to pay or make good the whole or such part of the fortune of the said Frances Cresswell as should not have been duly invested pursuant to the trusts of the settlement. R. Carter afterwards died, and the suit was revived against his executor, W. Carter. On the 19th of January, 1846, by a decree made by his Honour Vice-Chancellor Wigram, it was ordered that the bills should be dismissed with costs as against the defendant, W. Carter (R. Carter, it appears, not having acted as trustee), to be paid out of the fund and cash in Court, and it was referred to the Master to inquire and state to the Court the amount and particulars of the fortune of Frances Cresswell assigned by the indenture of settlement of the 13th of May, 1815, which had been received by Dr. Townsend, deceased, or by any other person or persons by his order or for his use. And the said Master was to be at liberty to state any circumstances specially with regard to the matters aforesaid. No account as to wilful default was, it may be observed, directed, nor did the representatives of Dr. Townsend apply to have the bill dismissed, so far as it prayed wilful default. On the 7th of May 1849, the Master made his report, whereby, after stating certain facts and documents brought forward in his office, by which the plaintiffs alleged it was shewn that there had not been an equal division of the property of the testator between the five children, and that the share of Frances Cresswell ought to have been 1,000*l.* and not merely 500*l.* the Master, however, found that the amount and particulars of the fortune of the said Frances Cresswell assigned by the indenture of settlement of the 13th of May, 1815, which had been received by Dr. Townsend, deceased, or by any person or persons by his order, or for his use, consisted of the sum of 500*l.* Three and-a-Quarter per Cent. Annuities, appearing by the deed of release of the 2nd April, 1830, to have been transferred by the trustees and executors named in the will of the said testator, Samuel Walbank, on the 1st of April, 1830, into the name of Dr. Townsend, deceased, as trustee of the said indenture of settlement. Exceptions were taken by the plaintiffs to the Master's report, which were abandoned when the cause came on to be heard on further directions, when the order before mentioned, and from which the defendants now appeal, directing an inquiry as to wilful default was made by his Honour Vice-Chancellor Wigram, on the ground, it seems, of the facts and documents stated in the Master's report before alluded to. The question raised for the decision of the Court was, whether under the circumstances, the inquiry as to wilful default was properly directed.

Kenyon Parker and T. H. Hall, for the appellants, the representatives of Dr. Townsend, contended that no inquiry as to wilful default ought to have been directed. They cited and commented on Garland v. Littlewood, 1 Beav. 527; Green v. Badley, 7 Beav. 271.

Bethell and Daniel, for the plaintiffs, the respondents, contended, that an inquiry as to wilful default was properly inserted in the decree; that when the prayer for relief was not exhausted, the Court might, on further directions, on materials contained in the Master's report, make inquiries for the purpose of working out the relief asked by the prayer, and which was not touched in the decree on the original hearing: that the Vice-Chancellor was right, as the additional materials contained in the Master's report warranted an inquiry, especially as the Master was in the original decree directed to report circumstances specially. These materials warrant the inquiry, as it appears from them that Dr. Townsend paid more to one sister than another. The Bill also contains further charges against the person sought to be charged, namely, Dr. Townsend. [Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—Was there a different case made against Dr. Townsend and Mr. R. Carter?] It does not seem that there was. It must be remembered that Dr. Townsend was executor of the testator, as well as trustee of the marriage settlement, and that Carter was trustee of the settlement only, although it appears that he never acted as trustee, and the money was standing in the sole name of Dr. Townsend. They cited Rowley v. Adams, 7 Beav. 395, 548.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—This suit relates to a case of a trustee who died in the summer of the year 1830, and the suit was not instituted until the month of January, 1843. As the bill was framed, it did not state this deceased gentleman (Dr. Townsend) to have been sole trustee, or sole acting trustee; it represented him and Mr. R. Carter to have been, and to have acted, as trustees jointly. The error in that statement would have been of little importance had Dr. Townsend been alive, as he would have known the facts and circumstances of the case, but his personal representatives could not be supposed to know the facts or circumstances equally well, if at all. They were brought to a hearing, thinking that the acts complained of were the acts equally of Mr. R. Carter and the deceased Dr. Townsend; at the hearing, they find that Dr. Townsend is alone to be made the object of attack; Mr. R. Carter, or his estate, which is the same thing, being dismissed, on the ground, it is to be supposed, that Mr. R. Carter had never accepted the trusts. I am not quite sure that, as Dr. Townsend had died before the suit was instituted, that circumstance to which I have just referred, namely, the dismissal of Mr. R. Carter, is not of itself sufficient to support the present appeal. But I would rather not decide the case upon that ground. When the case came on at the original hearing, an account was directed, of which no complaint was made. Dr. Townsend was a trustee, and he was properly directed to account. Nothing more was done, of which, though Dr. Townsend's representatives could complain, they did not take the course which they might have done, namely, of having the bill dismissed, so far as it prayed wilful default, inasmuch as no direction was given on that subject. The account was taken, everything was duly accounted for, no complaint was made against Dr. Townsend or his representatives, but certain facts and documents were brought forward in the Master's office, and in consequence, on further directions, the Court made the inquiry, now complained of, which is not a finding on any adjudication. Whether the inquiry as to wilful default ought to have been directed is the point now before us. To go back to the original hearing: I apprehend that Lord Eldon often said, that, as a general rule, in order to obtain a direction for wilful default against an executor or trustee, you must allege a case, pray for it, and prove one act at least of wilful default; and, doing so, you may have a general decree as to wilful default; that is the course of the Court. But this state of circumstances may arise: namely, a case of wilful default may be alleged, and a prayer founded on it; but circumstances appearing, by admission or proof, may raise a case of suspicion in the mind of the Court on the question whether an act of wilful default has been committed or not. In such a case I can conceive that the Court, if it is likely that further evidence may be obtained, ought to direct an inquiry, short of directing wilful default, in order to ground upon that a new order to direct an inquiry as to wilful default at a future stage, but then the inquiry should be directed in such a way as to call the defendant's attention to the facts to be investigated. For instance, if the allegation be that a sum of 1,000*l.* be lost by wilful default, the inquiry ought to be under what circumstances it was lost and the facts bearing on the loss, and the nature of the transaction. Then the evidence will be supplied, and when it comes back to the Court, an inquiry as to wilful default may be directed. I can conceive the propriety or even the necessity of such a case, but it is not the habit of the Court, when a trustee, who, although he has acted erroneously, has acted in good faith, should be treated with severity. That however was not the case here, the case taken here was tantamount to an adjudication (it not appearing that there was any wilful default) that there was no wilful default to be inquired into, because the account was only a general account of the receipts of the trustee. It is said that there was a direction to report circumstances specially, but Sir William Horne, a Master of great learning and experience, said, and said most truly, that with regard to special circumstances, they must be stated with respect to the "matters aforesaid;" that is to say, the question of receipts and allowances. All other questions were not before him, and the danger of perjury in the event of false evidence in this case would not arise, because the evidence would not be material, as not addressed to matters in issue. It is said the evidence was documentary here, but the rule is the same, nor were the defendants called upon to address themselves to the evidence before the Master, because the Master was not to inquire as to wilful default. This decree was so worded as not to enable the Court on further directions to look at the new evidence produced before the Master, inasmuch as it was not evidence for such purpose; the consequence is, in my judgment, without denying that a case may exist in which on further directions an inquiry as to whether wilful default has been committed may be directed, this is not such a case, and, in my judgment, if there was nothing more in this case than this, the inquiry had better be erased from the decree. But assuming that, according to the ordinary practice of the Court, there is nothing to prevent an inquiry being directed, it still remains to consider whether there was matter enough on the facts and documents stated in the Master's report to render this inquiry before the Master probably useful. I am of opinion that at the utmost extent they raised a doubt as to an obscure matter as to which all the persons who could have given information have passed to their graves, and that is more or less matter of conjecture. There would be a great hazard of a miscarriage of justice if this matter should be gone into. I am of opinion, therefore, that the inquiry had better be struck out.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH concurred in the result, on the latter ground, namely, that, assuming that the state of the pleadings and the practice of the Court warranted the inquiry, that the facts of the case (which his lordship stated at some length) led irresistibly to the inference that the accounts had been properly taken, and a proper distribution made of the testator's estate; that Dr. Townsend had had transferred into his name the whole of the fortune of Frances Cresswell assigned by her marriage settlement, namely, the 500l. 4l. per Cent. Annuities: and that therefore there had been no ground shewn for an inquiry as to wilful default.

VICE-CHANCELLOR TURNER'S COURT.

Reported by J. HENRY COOKE, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

April 19 and 20.

THE EASTERN ARCHIPELAGO COMPANY. McBRIDE v. LINDSAY.

Chartered company—Shareholder—Demurrer.

A bill was filed by a party who had taken shares in a company established by a Royal Charter, against the directors and against the company, alleging that the charter had been obtained by misrepresentation and fraud, and that the terms of such charter had not been complied with, which rendered it revocable by the Crown, and praying that the directors might be decreed to repay to the plaintiff the money he had paid for calls on his shares, that the directors and the company might be restrained from proceeding against the plaintiff for any further calls, that the directors might be restrained from making any contracts in the name of the company whereby the plaintiff might be rendered liable, and that the defendants might indemnify the plaintiff against such liability. Demurrers for want of parties and for want of equity were put in:

Held, that as there was no proof that any misrepresentations had been made to the plaintiff individually, his case was that of the other shareholders, and as he asked for payment to himself, to which he was no more entitled than the other shareholders, no such decree could be made in their absence.

Held, also, that as the plaintiff had taken shares after the grant of the charter, which was not revoked, he became a member of the company, and that he [was] not entitled to relief merely because he [a]lleged that the directors and the other shareholders had [concur]red in the alleged illegal acts.

Held, further, that one partner cannot call on this Court for a decree to compel repayment to him of his share of the capital of the partnership on the ground of an alleged fraud committed by the directors of the same partnership. The demurrers were, therefore, allowed both for want of equity and for want of parties.

The bill in this case was filed by Mr. John David Macbride against Mr. Hugh Hamilton Lindsay, Mr. John Macgregor, Mr. C. R. Drinkwater Bethune, Mr. Henry William Barnard, Mr. Alexander Nairne, Sir John Nicholl, Mr. Henry Wise, and other persons described as the directors of the Eastern Archipelago Company, and the corporation of that company and others, and it stated, among a great number of facts, the cession of the island of Labuan to the British Crown, in 1846, and an agreement made in 1846, whereby the sultan of Borneo conceded the coal in a large district of the mainland of that island to Sir James Brooke, and that such grant was taken by Sir James Brooke, not for his own benefit, but that he might dispose of it in such a manner as should be most conducive to the promotion of British commerce with Borneo, and the advancement of civilisation among the native tribes; that the defendant, Henry Wise, who had been the agent of, and was in the confidence of, Sir James Brooke, in or previously to the year 1847, formed an idea of establishing a company for working the coal so granted to Sir James Brooke by the sultan, and the coal to be found in Labuan, and that Mr. Wise communicated his project to Sir James Brooke, who promised to make over the grant to him, if the Government approved of his doing so; that Mr. Wise applied to the Board of Trade, and obtained a charter under the great seal, dated the 17th of July, 1847, which, after reciting that it had been represented to her Majesty that John Melvill, Philip Anstruther, and Henry Wise, and others, had agreed to subscribe 200,000l. in 2,000 shares of 100l. each, and form a company to be called the Eastern Archipelago Company, for the purpose of purchasing, and acquiring, holding, settling, improving, cultivating and planting, letting, farming, selling, or otherwise dealing with and making a profit of lands in Labuan and the lands adjacent, and working the mines therein, and raising coals, stones, earths, minerals, and metals, and trading therewith, and with the inhabitants of the said islands and lands; her Majesty granted and ordered that Messrs. Melvill, Anstruther, and Wise, and all such other persons as should or might become members of the company, should be a corporate body under the said name, with the powers of dealing in and holding lands as therein mentioned, and that at the least 100,000l. part of the said capital, should be subscribed for, and 50,000l. paid up, within twelve months from the date of the charter, and that the company should not commence business until it should have been certified to the Board of Trade, by at least three of the directors, that such proportions of the capital had been so actually subscribed for and paid up, and which certificate was to be indorsed upon the charter; and it was directed that the deed of settlement should be prepared to the satisfaction of, and be deposited with, the Board of Trade, within twelve months from the date of the charter; and it was provided that if the company should fail to comply with any of the directions therein contained, it should be lawful for her Majesty to revoke the said charter. The bill charged that John Melville and Philip Anstruther had never any interest in the concern, and that their names were used by the defendant, Henry Wise, for his own purposes, to mislead the Board of Trade; that Sir James Brooke intended and believed that the contract would be used for the formation of a company with sufficient capital effectually to carry out his views, and develope British commerce in those island[s]; that the defendant, Henry Wise, obtained from the Crown a demise of certain coal in Labuan, for a term of years, that having obtained the charter and demise, the defendant Wise determined to assume that he had acquired such interests for his own benefit, and not for the purposes of a projected company; that in prosecution of his scheme he prevailed upon Alexander Nairne, Sir John Pirie, the defendant Lindsay, and others, "to enter into an agreement of the 31st of January, 1848, whereby he, Wise, was to be one of the managing directors of the company, and to be paid 6,000l. in six months after the formation of the company, and 3,000l. a-year during the first ten years of its existence, and receive 100 shares, the calls on which were to be paid out of the capital of the company, and 2l. 2s. per cent. on the dividends and bonuses of the company when the same should not be less than 7l. 10s. per cent. on the capital, and 800l. as a managing director, and 2l. 10s. per cent. ... the general dividends and bonuses; such salary and latter per-centage not to exceed 1,800l. in the whole, he, Wise, thereby binding himself to give his best services to the affairs of the company during its existence, and at the end of twenty years, or the dissolution of the company, his rights were to revert to him." After stating that prospectuses were issued and that the plaintiff and other persons solicited for shares, and after setting forth the deed of settlement the bill stated that Henry Wise and two others of the directors certified to the Board of Trade that half of the capital had been subscribed, and that 50,000l. had been paid up, but that the plaintiff had lately discovered that such certificate was untrue; that only 1,116 shares had now been taken, 100 of which were the shares to be allotted to Henry Wise; and that 100,000l. was not subscribed for; and that 50,000l. was not paid within the twelve months; that the deed was not deposited with the Board of Trade within a year, as the charter required: that it was from the beginning altogether impossible that the company could be carried on with such amount of capital, so as to produce profit or fulfil the intentions of the Government or Sir James Brooke; and that the directors ought at the end of the twelve months to have returned the deposits, and ought not to have commenced or continued business in the name of the company, or made any further calls. The bill then prayed that the directors of the Eastern Archipelago Company might be decreed to repay the plaintiff the sum of 300l. which he had paid for calls on his shares in the company, and that the company might be restrained from proceeding against the plaintiff for any further calls, and that the directors might also be restrained from entering into contracts, or carrying on business in the name of the company, whereby the plaintiff might be rendered liable, and that the defendants might indemnify him against such liabilities. To this bill demurrers were put in for want of equity and for want of parties by the defendants the directors, and by the Eastern Archipelago Company.

Russell and Freeling, for the demurrer of the directors.—All the statements in the bill were most slanderous and the charges most untrue, yet it must be admitted for the purposes of a demurrer that they must be taken as true. Admitting thus far, it is the duty of the advisers of Mr. Wise, who was only carrying into effect, or endeavouring to do so, the great project of Sir James Brooke for the civilisation of the natives, and for the cultivation of the resources of this distant region, to deny in the outset, as they do the charges thus made against the directors. Even supposing all the statements in the bill to be true, they afforded no ground for the interference of the Court. The plaintiff had executed the deed, in which the agreement he now complained of is recited, and he is therefore bound by it, especially as it was made openly and with full knowledge of all parties. The bill shews that a corporation was intended to be formed, which was intended to be bound by the charter and the deed of settlement. There was only one plaintiff, and he sued in his own account, and that could not be permitted. The charter was still in existence; it was still valid; it had not been revoked; it did not follow from anything which had been said that it ever would be. The company was an existing company and corporation, and the utmost extent of the charge was, some or one of the partners had acted improperly. It was not in the power of every member of the corporation, therefore, to withdraw from the concern. If the directors had acted improperly, the correct remedy of the plaintiff was to call a general meeting of the corporation and obtain redress by an act of that body, by removing their directors if necessary, or by otherwise correcting the error or irregularity. The corporation being an existing body until the charter should be revoked, no such relief as the plaintiff asks can be granted to him. The violation of the charter, if there has been one, may be the ground of the interference of the Crown to correct the error or repair the mischief done, or to revoke the powers conferred; but this Court cannot be called upon to annihilate the corporation, as in effect this bill asks. If it could be shewn by Mr. M'Bride that no corporation exists, either in fact or in contemplation of law, he might be entitled to what he seeks,—namely, to be repaid all he has advanced; but so long as the money he has subscribed forms part of the funds of an existing corporation he can have no such right. He has no remedy against the defendants at all, and if he ever had any remedy it was at law, but is not, nor ever was, in equity. No withdrawal of himself or his money can be effectual so long as the corporation is in existence. At any rate, he cannot proceed in the absence of all the other members of this commercial corporation. This is not only a body of that description, but it is a partnership, and must be governed by the principles laid down by Sir James Wigram in Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare, 191, in which it was decided that such a bill was open to a demurrer for want of equity. On another ground, that bill is not sustainable; it says the money was not paid up within the year, as required by the charter, but that has been already answered. The bill is wholly experimental; it is really a bill of discovery in aid of a writ of scire facias to repeal the charter of incorporation; one, in fact, to relieve the plaintiff from all the liabilities which he has deliberately incurred, and to throw them on the other members of the corporation. He does not venture to insinuate that this affair was, as in Colt v. Woolaston, 2 P. Wms. 153, a mere bubble. There the purpose was absurdly said to be to extract oil from radishes, here to confer civilisation on a large and valuable population, to raise and render available the large coal fields in Borneo and Labuan, and to develope the other resources of a rich province. No fraud is even alleged prior to the granting of the charter, excepting that one of the persons who intended to be one of the directors did not become so, and for this reason—he became bankrupt! The objections subsequently to the grant of the charter are both curious and unsubstantial. The plaintiff says there was delay in depositing the deed with the Board of Trade, and then obtaining the certificate of that body by false representations. The certificates are, however, conclusive, as appears by the case of The Bauven Iron Company v. Barnett, 8 C. B. Rep. 106; and the allegations of fraud relate to matters in which, if true, all the other members of the corporation are as much interested as the plaintiff, and without whose presence they cannot be heard or decided on. (Mozley v. Alston, 1 Phill. 790; Lord v. The Copperminers' Company, 2 De G. & Sm. 308; and 2 Phill. 740.)

Sir W. P. Wood, for the demurrer by the company. This bill is one of a hybrid character; and even if the allegation of fraud be capable of proof, still it is demurrable according to the authority of Wallworth v. Holt, 4 Myl. & Cr. 619; Richardson v. Larpent, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 507; and such cases. Were the Court to be induced to grant the prayer of this bill, the effect would be to paralyse the whole company at the instance of one of its members, and that, too, without the presence of the other parties. Nothing is so well settled as that where the acts complained of are those of the partners themselves, no one of those partners can sue on his own behalf alone. The certificate of the Board of Trade is conclusive, both on the authority already cited and on the authority of the charter itself; and if there be any informality, the charter itself states that the Crown may revoke it, or partially do so, and on such terms as to the Crown shall seem proper. This is only an indirect attempt to obtain aid in presenting a scire facias for its repeal. The demurrer of the corporation ought to be allowed, because the plaintiff seeks relief in the absence of the other members of the corporation, all of whom must be interested in the question—interested either in obtaining the same relief, if they have been deceived, as the bill alleges, or interested in opposing the attempt of the plaintiff to withdraw his subscription from the funds of the corporation, if their interests are identified with those of the company.

Rolt and J. V. Prior for the bill.—The arguments addressed to the Court in support of these demurrers have been such as would be of weight at the hearing of the cause, but are wholly inapplicable when the truth of the allegations must be taken as admitted. The bill relates exclusively to the personal interests of Mr. McBride, and not to the general interests of the company. [The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—How can the Court take a man out of a corporation?] All that the plaintiff asks is to have his money, and to be indemnified against future liabilities, on the ground that the condition on which the charter was granted has not been fulfilled. If the company think fit to carry on its business contrary to those conditions, there may be liabilities incurred from which he is entitled to be protected personally and individually. What can be a stronger fact against the defendants than that there existed an agreement previously to the formation of the company that two of its members, Melvill and Anstruther, were not to be called on to contribute anything towards its capital? The directors had no right to place in peril the plaintiff's credit, as they would do according to the allegation of the bill, although, of course, that is a matter to be proved; but if it be proved, it is a good ground of equity. It is very probable that the plaintiff has been induced to join the undertaking from connecting the name of Sir James Brooke with the progress of civilisation. That gentleman has, however, ceded his right to the coal mines, as the bill alleges; but this, the plaintiff states, has been concealed. It is clear that the plaintiff entered into his agreement upon certain conditions. These conditions were, that the company should be commenced and carried on according to the provisions of the charter. Sir James Brooke was, no doubt, actuated by no other motive than that of advancing the progress of civilisation, and he had transferred his interest to Mr. Wise with the same object, and in the confidence that they would be exercised for the same purposes. Mr. Wise, as the bill states, obtained a charter on fraudulent representations, which misled the officers of the Crown. The concession has not been accepted or transferred by Sir James Brooke for his own personal benefit, but for the benefit of the company which he expected would be formed. It now appears that the charter was obtained upon representations which were untrue, and as it was only upon the faith of the charter and of its provisions being observed, and for the purposes of promoting civilisation in the Archipelago, that the plaintiff took shares in the undertaking, he has never, in truth, become bound as a member of the corporation, and the calls which he has paid have been obtained by the concealment from his knowledge of the true facts of the case. This entirely removes all difficulty with regard to his obligations to the company, to which, in fact, he has never belonged. The plaintiff does not seek, as the argument of the defendants has sometimes represented, to dissolve the company. It is open to the plaintiff, as to any other subject of the Crown, to apply for a scire facias for the purposes of repealing the charter; but that must be an application to another court, and in a different form of proceeding. The plaintiff insists upon this,—that however the other members of the company may desire to go on, he (the plaintiff) is not bound to do so, and is entitled to withdraw his capital. [The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Have not all the shareholders a common interest in this question? Can the Court take this portion of the capital of the company away without giving every individual shareholder an opportunity of being heard by being made a party to the suit?] The shareholders are all parties in the corporation, which is made a defendant in its corporate capacity. The plaintiff contends, first, that he has never become a member of the company. He did not become such member by executing the deed, for the deed pointed to a future period. The business was not to commence until the 100,000*l.* were subscribed, and 50,000*l.* paid up according to the charter. That was the condition. Of course, some parties must sign first, but signatures do not bind them unless the company should be completely formed, and the three directors certified that it was so, but the company was never completely formed according to the provisions of the charter. Secondly, the plaintiff only became a member of a company of which Melvill and Anstruther were also members, and this they had not become, but, as the bill states, they only allowed their names to be used. Thirdly, the plaintiff cannot be held to have become a member of a corporation under a charter which he believes not to be effectually carried into effect, and which, therefore, appears to be no more than a piece of blank paper, which the Crown can revoke at any moment. But, supposing he did become formally a member, yet he has been made so only by means of a fraud—by means of a certificate given contrary to the truth, in order to comply literally with the terms of the charter. The existence of this certificate might deprive the plaintiff of the power of resisting the call in any action at law; but it is a fraud against which this Court will relieve, as it relieves in cases of certificates to be given by the engineers of railway companies to their contractors, where it is alleged that such certificates are fairly due, but are withheld by collusion with the company. The rules with regard to parties are rules of convenience, and in the case stated by the bill, the Court will be satisfied that the directors, who are defendants, sufficiently represent the other shareholders. It is not the law of this Court, that the certificate is a bar to any proceedings where it is alleged that the certificate was obtained by fraud. (Waring v. the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, 2 Hall & Twells, 239, and Macintosh v. the Great Western Railway Company, id. ib. 250.) It is no argument to say that the plaintiff must seek his remedy at law, as that course would be very circuitous, and probably not very satisfactory. As to the demurrer for want of parties, the company represent every shareholder, except the plaintiff, who denies his liability to be treated as one. One part of the prayer is against any future call on the plaintiff; this call could not of course be made by any body but the directors. Another reason for suing alone is that the names of the other shareholders cannot be easily ascertained, as the shares are transferable and very numerous.

Russell in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The case stated by this bill appears to be in some degree the private and individual case of Mr. M'Bride, and in some degree a case which he has in common with the other members of the corporation. The first point made by the bill is, that through the medium of false representations made to Sir James Brooke and to the Crown, Mr. Wise, acquired for his own interest, rights which had been intended by the Crown and Sir James Brooke to promote civilisation in the Eastern Archipelago; that these rights were obtained by representations, that they would be employed for the benevolent purposes intended by the Crown and by Sir James Brooke, and that they were devoted by Mr. Wise to his own private objects. Now, this Court has in this case nothing to do with these questions, as they may affect Sir James Brooke or the Crown. If it should be thought proper to institute proceedings, the facts stated, if they are true, may form a ground for applying to set aside the grant which has been obtained. The statements, however, are brought to bear on this case by the allegation that the directors knew of and fraudulently concealed these facts. It does not, however, appear by the statements of the bill, that any false representations have been made to the plaintiff individually. In this respect the case of the plaintiff is common with that of all the other members of the company. If the Court decrees repayment of his deposit and calls to the plaintiff, it must on the same grounds decree a like repayment to any other members of the company. The plaintiff, therefore, seeks relief for himself exclusively, to which relief other shareholders are equally entitled, and this I cannot do in the absence of such other shareholders. The demurrer must, therefore, be allowed for want of parties. It would not, however, be satisfactory to part with the case on that ground alone. It has been argued that the plaintiff has never become a member of the company. The charter provides, that if the provisions thereby prescribed are not complied with, it shall be lawful for her Majesty to revoke and make void the charter or determine the same upon such terms as her Majesty shall think fit. This clause does not determine or make void the grant, but only reserves power to the Crown, if it shall think fit, to revoke the grant. The charter does not, therefore, determine by anything which has been done. At a certain time after the granting of the charter the plaintiff took shares in the company, and I think that he thereby became a member of the corporation within the terms of the charter. I am of opinion that the charter and the deed executed by the plaintiff could not mean that the company should not exist antecedently to the certificate to be given by the directors. The plaintiff, by asking that his contribution to the capital of the company should be restored to him on the ground of a fraud, which he alleges has been committed upon him by the directors, seeks relief the effect of which would be prejudicial to all the other shareholders. It is, however said, that all the other parties have sanctioned and concurred in the acts of the directors; this, however, is not the allegation. The bill states that the defendants, the directors, "allege that the other shareholders have sanctioned and concurred," but the Court cannot make a decree which would be injurious to other parties in their absence, merely because the directors may have chosen to allege that the other parties have precluded themselves from asking similar relief. Upon the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that Mr. McBride has made himself a member of the company, and that there is not sufficient ground laid by the bill for granting the relief which it asks in the absence of the other shareholders. It is quite clear that one partner cannot call on this Court for a decree to compel repayment to him of his share of the capital of the partnership, on the ground of any alleged fraud which is said to have been committed by the managing directors of the partnership. When he asks that his capital may be restored, he asks that the interests of all the other partners of the company may, to the extent of the withdrawal of his capital, be prejudiced or diminished. The demurrers must be allowed, but the defendants may have leave to amend within a month.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by ADAM BITTLESTON and JOHN THOMPSON, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

CASTELLI v. GROOM.

Commission to examine parties as witnesses abroad.—If a commission can issue, under the 1 Wm. 4, c. 22, and 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, to examine abroad the parties to an action upon interrogatories, the party applying must shew that the issuing of such a commission would be conducive to the due administration of justice; and it is not enough to shew merely that the parties are resident abroad.

A rule nisi was obtained on a former day, for a commission to Leghorn and Constantinople, for a commission to examine the two plaintiffs as witnesses.

It appeared that the two plaintiffs had been adjudicated bankrupts; that that adjudication had been confirmed; that an appeal was made to the Lords Justices, who directed the present action to be brought to determine the validity of the petitioning creditor's debt and of the act of bankruptcy. One of the plaintiffs resided abroad, and had never been in this country. The other was now resident abroad.

Bramwell and Karslake shewed cause.—There may be cases in which it is expedient that a commission should issue to examine the parties to a suit; as where they are merely nominal parties, or are too ill to come to this country, or their evidence is only required as to some trifling matters, or to prove some formal documents; but in a case like the present, where the parties have taken every step they could to annul the proceedings in bankruptcy, and now absent themselves from the country to defeat their creditors, this Court will not interfere to assist them in avoiding a cross-examination vivâ voce. (Carruthers v. Graham, 9 Dowl. 947.)

Willes, in support of the rule.—As to one of the plaintiffs, he never resided here; and the objection as to his running away cannot apply. The words of 1 Wm. 4, c. 22, s. 4.—"it shall be lawful, &c. to order a commission to issue,"—are imperative on the Courts, being used to give jurisdiction; and the Courts have no power to refuse, unless a case of misconduct is made out on the part of the applicant. Then the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, renders the parties competent, and there is no reason why the 1 Wm. 4, c. 22, should not be applicable. The plaintiff is dominus litis, and the party to complain of delay. If the action is delayed, the defendants are not prejudiced. (Dye v. Bennett, 9 C. B.; 1 L. M. & P. 92, S. C.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged. I do not lay down any general rule that the parties to an action may not be examined upon interrogatories abroad, but that it must be shewn that the issuing of the commission would be conducive to the due administration of justice, and that it is not enough to shew that the parties to be examined are without the jurisdiction of the Court. If the rule contended for were to prevail in all cases, the parties would only have to sail across the Channel, and then they might insist on being examined on interrogatories. It is true that in many cases the words "it shall be lawful" in an Act of Parliament are obligatory; but upon this statute I am of opinion that a party has a primâ facie right to a commission to examine witnesses abroad only upon shewing that it would be conducive to the due administration of justice; and it seems to me that upon the facts of the present case it would not be conducive to the due administration of justice to grant a commission.

WIGHTMAN and ERLE, JJ. concurred.

CROMPTON, J.—I declined to make the order in this case at chambers, on the ground that it was discretionary in the judge to grant the commission. The cases shewing that it is discretionary are collected in note (h) at p. 1121 of Chit. Sts. by Welsby and Beavan. I concur in the view of the facts taken by the rest of the Court. Rule refused.

LEWIS v. NICHOLSON and ANOTHER.

Agent - Liability of, acting without authority.

A party who enters into a contract expressly as the agent of another, cannot be sued upon the contract, although made without authority, but must be sued for the deceit, in representing that he had such authority.

Quære, whether he can be sued in assumpsit upon an implied undertaking that he had such authority.

This was an action upon the following undertaking, sent in a letter to the plaintiff's attorney from the defendants, who were the attorneys of the assignees of the bankrupt:—

"In consideration of J. H. Lewis, for whom you act, consenting to the sale by Lewis and Son, of the bankrupt's printing materials and other effects, &c. we hereby, on behalf of the assignees, consent that the net proceeds shall be paid over to you or your client, to the extent of the balance now remaining due under the bill of sale.

(Signed) "NICHOLSON and PARKER."

The letter from the plaintiff's attorney, in answer, was:—

"In compliance with your undertaking, I consent, &c."

At the trial before Lord Campbell, C.J. it appeared that the defendants were not authorised to enter into this undertaking by the official assignee, but by the trade assignee only. The defendants' counsel objected, that the defendants could not be sued upon the contract, and that the proper form of action should have been case, for misrepresenting that they had authority to enter into the undertaking; and the learned judge being of that opinion, nonsuited the plaintiff.

A rule nisi having been obtained to set aside the nonsuit and enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 223*l*.

Bramwell and Willes shewed cause, and Shee, Serjt. and Macnamara supported the rule.

Cases cited: Jones v. Downman, 4 Q. B. 219, in error, 7 Q. B. 103; Burrell v. Jones, 3 B. & Ald. 47; Jenkins v. Hutchinson, 18 L. J. 275, Q. B.; Thomas v. Hewes, 2 C. & M. 530, note; Polhill v. Walter, 3 B. & Ad. 114; Harper v. Williams, 4 Q. B. 219; Norton v. Herron, 1 C. & P. 648, Cass v. Rudele, 2 Ver. 280; Ex parte Evans, 2 Dea. & Ch. 470; Ex parte Young, 2 Deac. 240; Bothomley v. Usborne, 2 Peake, 99; Mancke v. Clarke, 10 Bing. 102; Jones v. Walsley, 4 Esp. 220, 2 Smith's L. C. 223 b.; Storey on Agency, 261, n, 3rd ed.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged. Looking at the face of the contract, it seems to me that it did not intend to make the parties themselves liable, and that it does not do so. The contract is to be gathered from the two letters which passed between the plaintiff's attorney and the defendants acting for the assignees. It is quite clear that the plaintiff's attorney was acting only as agent, and that it was to the plaintiff, and not to his attorney, that the undertaking was given. The defendants were acting for the assignees, and they intended and expressed themselves sufficiently to shew that they were acting not as principals, but as agents, undertaking thereby that they had authority to act for the assignees. Instead of entering into a personal undertaking, they say, "We hereby consent on behalf of the assignees," that is, we give the consent of the assignees, not our personal consent; and it was the assignees who hereby authorised us to give our consent." Then the answer to the letter of the defendants meant the undertaking given by the defendants, and merely relates to the letter itself, and the construction of that I have stated. If that be so, I am quite clear that you cannot construe the contract by the subsequent declarations, written or verbal, of the parties. With regard to the authorities, this seems to come much nearer to Jones v. Downman than any of the others, and the Court of Error in that case said that the words "I undertake (on behalf of E. & Co.)" were to be taken as a declaration of agency. In Burrell v. Jones, there were not the words "on behalf," &c. In the present case there could properly be no undertaking on the part of the defendants but there might well be on the part of the assignees. Assuming then that, on the face of this contract, they are acting as agents, are they liable to be sued upon this contract, there being no authority to them for entering into such an undertaking so as to bind the official assignee? It has been reported that Bayley, B. laid down the general rule that where an agent makes a contract in the name of his principal, and it turns out that the principal is not liable for the want of authority in the agent to make such a contract, the agent is personally liable on the contract. I must dissent from that doctrine. I think it must be confined to cases where the party professing to give the undertaking could undertake. In Jenkins v. Hutchinson, it was held that a party who executes an instrument in the name of, and expressly as agent for another, cannot be treated as a party to the instrument, so as to be sued upon it, unless he be shewn to be the real principal. I go further, and say, that when a party clearly and expressly contracts in the name of, and as agent for another, he cannot be sued upon the contract. If he has been guilty of fraud, he may be sued in an action for the deceit, or perhaps he may be sued upon the implied undertaking that he had authority. He may be liable in damages for the loss sustained, but to say that he would be personally liable, when he is expressly contracting as agent, would be in my opinion for the Court to make the contract.

WIGHTMAN, ERLE, and CROMPTON, J.J. delivered similar judgments. Rule discharged.

BISHOP v. HATCH.

Judgment Interest—1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 17.

The plaintiff having issued execution for debt and costs at the time the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 came into operation, before the amount thereof was satisfied but after that Act came into operation, issued a fresh writ of execution for the interest upon the judgment debt only, and subsequently received under the first execution the debt and costs.

Held, that the defendant was not entitled to enter up satisfaction on the judgment until the interest was paid under the second writ of execution.

A rule nisi having been obtained to enter up satisfaction on the judgment roll, it appeared that the plaintiff obtained judgment for 575*l*. 12s. debt and costs, against the defendant, a beneficed clergyman, and issued a sequestrari facias thereon in Hilary Term, 1833. At that time the defendant's living was under sequestration, at the suits of other parties. In October 1838, when the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 came into operation, the plaintiff's debt and costs were unpaid, and in fact, there were no funds in hand to satisfy the plaintiff's judgment till February 1851; and the plaintiff did not receive the amount due to him until September 1851. In February 1851, the plaintiff issued a new writ of sequestrari facias for interest upon the judgment, from October 1838, up to the 11th of February 1851.

Phipson shewed cause.—The defendant is not entitled to enter up satisfaction on the roll, as the interest on this judgment debt has not been paid. The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 17, is express that every judgment debt shall carry interest from the time of the commencement of this Act, that is, from Oct. 1, 1838, in cases of judgments then entered up, and not carrying interest, until the same shall be satisfied. And the section then proceeds to shew how such interest is to be obtained:—"And such interest may be levied under a writ of execution on such judgment." The plaintiff here has pursued the remedy given by the statute for the interest. (Watkins v. Tarpley, 5 D. & L. 226.)

Willes and Mills, in support of the rule.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of opinion that this rule must be discharged. I entertain no doubt that interest may be levied under the execution. The express words of the statute give such a right, and it would be strong to hold that, notwithstanding the statute, the party has no remedy to recover interest.

ERLE, J.—The defendant is not entitled to compel the plaintiff to enter up satisfaction on the judgment without first obtaining the interest due; for, after the judgment, a statute was passed giving a plaintiff who had recovered a judgment, a right to interest; and I see no reason why an execution should not issue for the interest alone.

CROMPTON, J. concurred. Rule discharged.

REG. v. THE SOUTH WALES RAILWAY COMPANY.—The Attorney-General moved for a rule for a mandamus to the above-named company to complete a branch-line running on the south side of Milford haven. The compulsory provision would expire in May, 1853. Rule nisi.

REG. v. MAJOR.—Indictment for perjury in an affidavit. The defendant having been convicted, was now brought up for judgment. Edwin James was heard in mitigation. Byles, Serjt. and Collier, for the Crown.

Sentence—two years' imprisonment with hard labour.

POCOCK v. PICKERING.—This was a rule to set aside an order of the Lord Chief Baron setting aside a warrant of attorney, and subsequent proceedings. Bramwell and Hull, in shewing cause, took a preliminary objection that the affidavits did not disclose the materials upon which the Lord Chief Baron had proceeded. (Needham v. Bristowe, 4 M. & G. 262.) B. C. Robinson, contrà.

Rule discharged with costs.

CHAPPEL v. DAVIS.—Barstow moved for a rule to review the Master's taxation herein. The question was as to the costs of a reference under a local Act of Parliament.

Rule refused.

Re OWEN.—Archbold moved for a rule to quash an order of magistrates brought up by certiorari. The order directed a surveyor of highways to repair the whole of a road partly situated in another parish. Rule nisi.

AMOTT v. HOLDEN.—M. Chambers, Bramwell, and T. Chitty showed cause against a rule to enter the verdict for the defendant, upon a plea of the Statute of Limitations, and also upon a plea of bankruptcy of the defendant. Knowles, Henderson, and Milward, contrà.

Rule discharged so far as related to the plea of the statute. upon the other point cur. adv. vult.

REG. v. THE COUNTY COURT OF SURREY.

Judgment for the Crown.

KING v. THE SHERIFF OF CHESHIRE.

To be turned into a special case.

POCOCK v. PICKERING.—B. C. Robinson moved to rescind an order of Pollock, C B. setting aside a warrant of attorney. A previous rule to that effect had been discharged by reason of technical defects in the affidavits.

Rule nisi, on payment of costs of former application.

Saturday, May 8.

MEYER v. THORNTON.—Jas. Wilde showed cause against a rule for a commission to examine witnesses, vivâ voce, at San Francisco. T. Jones, contrà. Rule absolute.

KEANE v. STEWART.—D. D. Keane showed cause against a rule for referring it to the Master to take an account of the sums to be allowed to the defendant under his pleas of payment and set-off, and to be deducted from the amount of the verdict. Watson and Maynard, contrà.

Rule absolute, with costs.

RICHARDS v. CAMERON'S COALBROOK, &c. COMPANY.—Willes shewed cause against a rule for issuing execution against Baron Salomons as a member of the company, upon a judgment obtained against the company in June 1849. Needham, contrà. The COURT thought that due diligence had not been used by the plaintiff for the purpose of putting in force his remedy against the property of the company. Rule discharged.

HOWES v. BARBER.—Lush shewed cause against a rule to review the Master's taxation. The Master had allowed the plaintiff, a mariner, who was examined as a witness in his own behalf, subsistence money as a witness, and the question was, whether he was right in so doing. Unthank, contrà. Cur. adv. vult.

REG. v. THE MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD, AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY.—Phipson moved to enlarge the rule; Watson consenting, Rule enlarged.

HENDERSON v. DOLPHIN.—Watson consented in this case that the jury should be discharged from giving a verdict on the second issue. Therefore, Rule refused.

REG. v. FRANCIS.—Phipson shewed cause against a rule for a quo warranto information. M. Smith, contrà, was not called upon. Rule absolute.

Rule nisi.

REG v. THE RECORDER OF LIVERPOOL.—Archbold moved for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear an appeal.

Rule refused.

REG. v. ———.—Cook moved for a rule to admit a prisoner to bail. Referred to Erle, J. at chambers.

KNILL v. WARD.—Gray shewed cause against a rule for setting aside an order of a judge directing an inspection of documents pursuant to sec. 6 of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, and for preventing that order from being made a rule of Court. He objected that the application was too late. Field, contrà, contended that it was not, but that, at all events, the order ought not to be made a rule of Court, because the notice given to the party of the inspection required was not sufficiently specific. By the COURT.—The application to set aside the order is too late, but the notice is not sufficiently specific. It merely follows the terms of the order. The order, therefore, must not be made a rule of Court. Rule discharged in part, and absolute in part.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

Reported by DANIEL THOMAS EVANS and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, May 6.

MYERS v. PRIGAL.—This part-heard case was resumed. Byles, Serjt. replied at great length, contending that the shares in question could be considered as property savouring of realty. The Court took time to consider judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

MESSER v. PARKER.—In this case Chadwick Jones, Serjt. was heard in reply supporting the rule. [JERVIS, C.J. objected that, inasmuch as it did not appear in the declaration that the plaintiff had lawful business at the office where the injury he sued for happened to him, and that being so, his case was gone. The plaintiff might, however, have leave to amend and go down again to trial, but that could be only on payment of costs.] Charnock, on same side, said he could convince the Court they ought to grant the rule, and that the action might be maintained in its present form. [JERVIS, C J.—We offer you, with consent of Chambers, Q C. on other side, to enter a nonsuit, so that you may begin again. If you go on, you must take your chance of the rule.] The difficulty is as to costs; our attorney not being present, we do not know what to do. [JERVIS, C.J.—Let the case stand over till to-morrow, in order that you may see your attorney. It is a reasonable request.] Stands over.

COSTINS v. EVANS.—This cause was tried before Wightman, at the Spring Assizes in Gloucester. Verdict for the plaintiff. Watson and Phipson showed cause against a rule obtained on a former day by Keating, Q.C. to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the weight of evidence. They contended, as regards the point of evidence, that it was conflicting and entirely for the jury, and there was no reason to suppose another jury would arrive at a different conclusion, whilst the learned Judge who tried the cause had said he was not dissatisfied with the verdict. As to the ground of misdirection, it is hard to see what the misdirection was. It was said the learned judge had told the jury that defendant was concluded by an account put in evidence, shewing a payment on part of plaintiff by one Onely, and that he should not have done so. It does not, however, amount to misdirection. Keating, Q.C. was heard in support of the rule. [JERVIS, C.J.—I think it would be more satisfactory that there should be another trial of this case; the evidence being doubtful and conflicting. As we decide on the point of verdict against evidence, it will not be necessary to consider the other point. We will, however, speak to Brother Wightman as to the terms on which the rule shall be made absolute, whether as usual on payment of costs or otherwise.]

Rule absolute for new trial, but conditional as to costs.

Friday, May 7.

GRAHAM and OTHERS (Assignees) v. CHAPMAN.—JERVIS, C.J. delivered the written judgment of the Court. The rule for entering the verdict for the plaintiff was made absolute.

NOVELLO v. SUDLOW.—TALFOURD, J. delivered the written judgment of the Court, which was in favour of the plaintiff.

JOHNSON v. BINGHAM.—Tomlinson applied for an attachment against the defendant, who had not paid the costs of a discharged rule. Rule nisi.

John Funis Pocock applied to have his name struck off the Roll of the Court. Rule granted.

ABRAHAM v. DENNIS. Settled on terms.

BALDWIN v. BALEKMANN.—Rule discharged, upon the plaintiff giving security for costs, the plaintiff not to be necessarily one of the sureties. Stay of proceedings in the mean time, and the security to be given before next term.

COLEMAN v. LEE and ANOTHER.—Charnock shewed cause why the judgment should not be entered as in the case of a nonsuit.

Rule discharged, the plaintiff undertaking to try next term.

MESSER v. PARKER.—This was an action brought against the defendant, in order to recover compensation for injuries sustained by the plaintiff in falling through a hole in the defendant's warehouse, where the plaintiff had gone to look at some packing-cases that had been deposited there. Chadwick Jones, Serjt. and Charnock were for the plaintiff, and Montague Chambers, Q.C. for the defendant.—After argument as to the liability of the defendant, M. Chambers, on the part of the defendant, for whom the jury, under the direction of Jervis, C.J. had found a verdict, offered a stet processus, which was accepted.

——— v. EVANS.—The Court stated that the costs in this cause should abide the event.

Saturday, May 8.

FOSTER v. CRABB.—JERVIS, C.J. delivered written judgment in this case. The action would not lie. Of two parties jointly interested in a deed, he who first gets possession of it, is entitled to keep it. This is to avoid unseemly contentions and perpetual dissatisfaction between the parties. Judgment therefore for the defendant.

To be reported.

AUSTEN v. MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD, AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY.—CRESSWELL, J. delivered written judgment herein. The rule for arresting the judgment must be made absolute. The declaration discloses no sufficient cause of action; there consequently must be judgment for the defendant. To be reported.

LAMPLEIGH v. SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Dodson.—No arrangement having been entered into by these parties, the Court is prayed to make absolute the rule. Rule absolute.

UNWIN v. DERBY.—Deighton mentioned rule to compute. Rule absolute.

WILLIAMS v. BUTLER.—Holl asked to make absolute a rule to compute. This was a case, in which the Court had ordered special service, that copies of the rule should be served at Delahay-street, and at 3, Victoria-square. [JERVIS, C.J.—Was there also a letter sent?] That does not appear. [JERVIS, C.J.—Part of the terms on which the rule was granted, was, that a letter should be sent to the defendant. As it is not shown that the order has been complied with, this rule cannot be made absolute.]

Rule discharged.

HEATH v. SAMPSON.—Heath, for the plaintiff, prayed the Court to enlarge the time, for a commission to examine witnesses at New Orleans. [JERVIS, C.J.—Is this so clear a matter of course, that the other side may not have objections?] We gave defendant notice two days ago, that this application would be made to-day. The commission is returnable to-day. [JERVIS, C.J.—Why did not you come here before?] We continually expected the evidence would arrive, and the necessity for this motion would be thereby prevented. [JERVIS, C.J.—You may take a rule returnable next term.] It was then arranged, the case should stand over to the close of the day, in order that the other side might be asked its consent. Before rising of the Court, Heath stated that defendant's solicitor had consented to the enlargement prayed; and the Court thereupon ordered enlargement. Application granted.

EDWARDS v. CHAMPION.—Willes mentioned this case, which was an issue directed from Chancery: it had been entered in the paper, but there had not been time to settle the points for the opinion of the Court.

Enlarged.

WYATT v. STARLING.—Hawkins moved for a distringas to compel an appearance. Granted.

BISHOP v. FURLEY.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule calling on plaintiff to shew cause why defendant should not be at liberty to add a plea. The application had been made before Maule, J. at chambers, who refused to accede to it. It was an action of assumpsit with a count for money had and received. The declaration was delivered in March, and defendant on 17th April had pleaded non assumpsit, payment, and set-off. He now seeks to add a special plea, on the authority of Packwood v. Dunn, 3 Q.B. 822. The affidavit states that this application is not made for delay, the defendant having a good defence on the merits. The affidavit does not disclose the ground on which the Judge at chambers refused the rule. It is asked that the present rule may be returnable next term. [JERVIS, C.J.—You may take a rule.] Rule nisi.

WINTLE v. DAVIS.—Bramwell and Pearson shewed cause against rule obtained by Macnamara. The Court without calling on Macnamara in reply, made the rule absolute.

To be reported.

BOGG v. PEARSE.—Chambers, Q.C. prayed the Court to allow a variance to be made in the terms of the rule granted in this case. It had been drawn up with leave for plaintiff to enter the verdict on three issues only, whereas he desired to enter it on several other of the issues joined.

Granted.

HOPPER v. BUDD.—Couch shewed cause against a rule for judgment as in case of nonsuit obtained by Welsby. The affidavit shews that the plaintiff cannot safely proceed to trial without a letter which is now in the possession of a solicitor named Watson, who states that he cannot find it. The plaintiff asks the Court to discharge this rule on giving a peremptory undertaking to try at the sittings after Term, when secondary evidence must be given of the letter, if in the mean time it should not be discovered. Welsby.—Notice of trial in this cause was given for the first sittings in 1851. The affidavit does not state there is the slightest probability that the letter would ever be found. [JERVIS, C.J.—Let the rule be discharged on giving a peremptory undertaking as proposed.]

Rule discharged.

Re LYDIA PARROTT.—Hayes moved the Court to permit Lydia Parrott, a married woman, to convey certain property under the Fines and Recoveries Act. She was married in 1804, and three months afterwards her husband deserted her to live with another woman. She has since heard that he has been tried for felony, convicted, and transported. There is this peculiarity in the case which the Master thought should be mentioned to the Court, that the woman gives in her affidavit no addition to her name. [JERVIS, C.J.—There is a rule of Court against the application; she ought to have described herself as a married woman.] The statement by her whether she is wife, widow, or single woman, is not her addition, for that would be simply a description of her state and condition. [JERVIS, C.J.—Let an order be made upon a proper affidavit, giving her description as Lydia, wife of, &c. or Lydia, gentlewoman. The rule will then be drawn up by the officer on the production of a proper affidavit.]

Rule conditional.

JACOBS v. JOEL.—Hawkins shewed cause against rule for judgment as in case of nonsuit, obtained on a former day by Digby Seymour. The rule was discharged.

To be reported.

FOSTER v. CRABB.—Young asked permission to amend a plea in this cause on payment of costs, denying that the trustee had ever received the deed. [JERVIS, C.J.—You had better mention it to counsel on the other side.]

Stands over.

FENN v. ROBERTS.—Macnamara shewed cause against rule obtained by Lush. Rule discharged with costs.

DODD v. LUMLEY.—Hayes moved for a distringas, the affidavit being sufficient. Rule granted.

Re WILLIAMS, One, &c.—M. Lloyd moved to strike an attorney off the rolls, at his own request. Rule granted.

BURKETT v. HART.—Couch moved for a distringas.

Rule granted.

ANONYMOUS.—Willes asked the Court to enlarge a rule in a case where Phipson was on the other side, but was not prepared to argue the case. Rule enlarged.

NEWBOLD and ANOTHER v. THE EAST LANCASHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Award—Setting it aside.

Agreement that arbitrator should award a money compensation for the damage, or instead thereof actual repairs of the damage done.

Atherton, Q.C. and J. Henderson, had obtained a rule to set aside the award made herein, on the ground that the arbitrator had misled (accidentally) the parties.

Bramwell and Gray, contrà.

The facts and circumstances of the case sufficiently appear in the Judgment of the Court.

Cur. adv. vult.

Saturday, May 1.—POLLOCK, C.B. delivered Judgment. This was a motion as to setting aside an award. The affidavits were of some length, but when the answer comes to be considered with reference to the objections taken, we are of opinion that the rule must be discharged, and of course with costs.

The motion was founded upon this suggestion, no doubt to some extent supported by the affidavits that were used by Mr. Atherton when he moved the rule. The ground of the application was this, that there being a question between Newbold and the Railway Company in respect of some damages, it was referred to an arbitrator to decide all matters in difference between them, and Mr. Fisher was the arbitrator who was so selected. It was said that it was a question for him to decide, whether he would award that the Railway Company should do the work, and make the reparations that were necessary to restore things to the condition in which they were before the damage was done, or whether he was to award a sum of money in gross instead of them. It was contended on the part of Mr. Atherton that he had misled the parties, not perhaps otherwise than accidentally, or not wantonly or fraudulently, but it was suggested that he had led them to expect that he would award the damage to be repaired, and that he would not award the amount of damage in money; that in consequence of that, they abstained from giving a great deal of evidence that they otherwise would have given, and which, had it been given, would have materially affected the result, and that they left in the expectation that he would merely award such and such repairs to be done, and that that would be the mode in which he would put an end to their differences. When Mr. Bramwell came to shew cause against the rule, he produced the affidavit of one of the parties, Mr. Newbold, the partner, I think, of the attorney, and of the arbitrator himself; and from that it appears that originally—it being suggested that the award should be in the shape of a money compensation, or by actual repairs—that that was objected to on the part of the defendant, and actually struck out of the original draft. The passage in the affidavit of James Park, who is the partner of Mr. Newbold, the plaintiff, is this: he says, that the draft agreement of reference was prepared to give to the plaintiff compensation for putting and continuing the plaintiff's mill, buildings, and premises in good and substantial repair, and the attorneys for the company struck the clause out of the draft agreement, and wrote in the margin thereof the following words—"The company are not to do any more work; the matter is to involve a money question only; it is understood that the company are to do nothing to the premises." That is put with their signature. Subsequently, it appears that Mr. Martin Fisher, the arbitrator, suggested that no evidence should be given upon the actual subject, either of the repairs or of the expenses; that he was able to judge for himself, and power should be given to him by the plaintiffs and defendant to order the repairs to be done as he might think proper on personal inspection, and the suggestion was absolutely refused and declined by the said John Grundy in the first instance, but was acceded to ultimately on the part of their clients, with this addition, that as he (Grundy) contended the repairs done were sufficient, the power was to be given to the arbitrator to order further repairs to be done, or that he was to give the money payment. And upon going over the whole of the affidavits, especially the affidavit of the arbitrator, it appears to be perfectly clear that it was left to the arbitrator to award either the one or the other,—that nobody was or ought to have been at least, deceived by any such arrangement; that the result of the whole matter is, that the company may be extremely dissatisfied with the award, but that is properly a question of merits, upon which ground we cannot set it aside. It appears to us, therefore, that the objections taken by Mr. Atherton, when he moved for the rule and apparently substantiated by his affidavits, are completely removed and answered by the affidavit on the other side. We are therefore of opinion that the rule must be discharged with costs. Rule discharged.

STEVENSON v. DICKENSON.

Bill of sale—Possession—Seizure under fi. fa.—Growing crops.

POLLOCK, C.B.—This was a rule moved for by my brother Wilkins in a cause tried before Alderson, B. The point left by the learned judge to the jury was this, that if they believed the transaction to be true, then he thought the plaintiff was entitled to recover a quantity of hay that had been seized which had grown upon the premises. Now, the circumstances were these: an action had been brought against the father, and he, expecting that there would be damages recovered against him, and that there would be judgment, no doubt purposely transferred the property to his son; with the assent of the landlord, the son took possession, manured the farm, laboured it, and at length reaped or mowed a crop of hay, and that was the hay that was seized, and it was contended that it might be seized because the farm continued to be the property of the father,—that is not so; in point of fact the transfer was made; then, the growing crop in the meantime, while the son was in possession, and while the son was giving his labour to the land and manuring it, and doing that which would end in there being a crop of hay,—all the fruits of the land to that time belonged to him. Alderson, B. left to the jury to inquire whether they believed the transaction really was so; they found that it was, and the learned judge said, if that was so, then the hay was the property of the son and not of the father. We think that direction was perfectly right, and that in this case there ought to be no rule granted.

Rule refused.

LAYTH v. AULT and ANOTHER.

To a declaration in debt for goods sold and delivered A. one of the defendants pleaded that, at the time of the debt accruing he and one B. carried on business as partners, and that the goods for which the action was brought were bought by them as partners, and that he A. was about to retire from the partnership, of all which plaintiff had notice and that it was agreed that 12l. should be paid the plaintiff, and that she should relinquish and abandon her claim against the defendant A. for the residue, and that defendant B. should become solely and separately liable to pay the plaintiff the said residue

Held, [illegible] defence—distinguished from Lodge v. Dicas, per Pollock, C. B. and Parke, B. overruling that case, and David v. Ellice, per Martin, B.

This was an action against Henry Ault and Samuel Wood, tried in the Manchester Court of Record; (a) it was an action in debt for goods sold and delivered, and on an account stated. The defendant Ault had pleaded inter alia, "That the said account stated in the said second count in the declaration mentioned, was stated of and concerning the said debts in the said first count of the declaration mentioned, and not otherwise, and not for or concerning any other debt or sum of money; and that the said debt in the said first count of the declaration mentioned, is and are the same with the said debt in this second count mentioned, which said debt was incurred by the defendants to the plaintiff for goods sold and delivered, and not otherwise; and the said defendant, Henry Ault, further saith, that, at the time the said last-mentioned debt was incurred by the defendants to the plaintiff, the said defendants, Henry Ault and Samuel Wood, carried on business as partners together; and the said goods in the first count mentioned were purchased from the plaintiff by the defendants as such partners as aforesaid, to wit, for the purposes of their said business, and not otherwise; and the said debt was incurred by the defendants as such partners as aforesaid, and not otherwise. That after the said debt was so incurred as aforesaid, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, &c. the said defendant, Henry Ault, was about to retire from the said partnership, and the said partnership business was thereafter intended to be carried on by the said defendant, Samuel Wood, alone, of all which the plaintiff then, to wit, &c. had notice, and thereupon by a certain agreement then made by and between the plaintiff and the defendants, it was agreed that the plaintiff should be then and there be paid the sum of 12l. in part payment of her said debt, for goods sold and delivered to the said partnership, and in satisfaction and discharge of the sum of 12l. part thereof, and that the plaintiff should relinquish and abandon her claim against the defendant, Henry Ault, for the residue of the said debt, and that the said defendant, Samuel Wood, should become solely and separately liable to pay her, the plaintiff, the said residue of her said debt, and that the plaintiff should and would accept and take him, the said defendant, Samuel Wood, alone, as the debtor of her, the plaintiff, for the said residue of the said debt, instead of the said defendants jointly, and should have no further claim against the said defendant, Henry Ault, in respect of the said residue of the said debt; and, accordingly, thereupon, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, &c. in pursuance of the said agreement, and in consideration of the premises, the said plaintiff was paid, to wit, by the defendants, and did accept and receive, to wit, from them the said sum of 12l. in part payment of the said debt and in full satisfaction and discharge of the said sum of 12l. part thereof, and the said defendant, Samuel Wood, promised and undertook to and with the plaintiff to pay her on request the said residue of the said debt, and to become solely and separately liable therefor, and the plaintiff did accept, and take him, the said defendant, Samuel Wood, alone as the debtor of her the plaintiff, for the said residue of the said debt, and did wholly relinquish and abandon her said claim against the said defendant, Henry Ault, for the said residue, which said debt is the same debt as that in the said declaration mentioned." Verification.

To this plea the plaintiff joined issue, and on this issue a verdict was found for the defendant.

Cowling (with him Wheel[illegible]) moved for [illegible]. There is no consideration for the exoneration of the defendant Ault from this debt, and it does even appear that the partnership between him and Wood has, in fact, been dissolved. The past payment amounts to nothing, and there must be a further security given. (Thompson v. Perceval, 5 B. & Adol. 925; Hart v. Alexander, 2 M. & W. 484; Bedford v. Deakin, 2 B. and Ald. 210; David v. Ellice, 5 B. & C. 196; Lodge v. Dicas, 3 B. & Ald. 611.) These cases fully support this principle. [PARKE, B.—The rule is, that there shall not be a further security given, but a different security. It is perfectly clear that the Court will not measure the consideration when that substituted is of a different nature from that originally existing; that is so laid down by Lord Denman in Thompson v. Perceval.] Hart v. Alexander is the only case in which a plea of this kind has been pleaded. There is no case yet in which the discharge of one of two persons has been held sufficient consideration for a new agreement, and the Court will not recognise such a contingent advantage; he referred also to the judgment of Lord Cottenham, in the case of Winter v. Innes, 4 Myl. & Cr. 108, 109.

POLLOCK, C.B.—We are all of opinion that in this case there ought to be no rule. At first it would appear that the distinction between this case and Lodge v. Dicas is very trifling, but in the judgment of Holroyd, J. a point is referred to which may serve to distinguish them: he says, "It was proved at the trial that there was an agreement that Rondeau (the late partner of the defendant Dicas) should receive the partnership debts and discharge this demand;" and, he continues, "unless it could have been shewn that the plaintiffs were parties to the agreement between Dicas and Rondeau, there is no consideration whatever for the promise proved to have been made." The present pleas are founded substantially on this: the defendant Ault says, "I was going out of the partnership, and the other defendant was to remain, and you, the plaintiff, knew this and agreed to receive a certain sum, and to release me from further responsibility, looking solely to the continuing partner for payment of the residue." Where parties agree to an arrangement the Court will not inquire as to the amount of the consideration, it is entirely in the mind of the parties agreeing, and the Court will not measure the quantity; if it be possible that an advantage may accrue, the Court will support it. I think this case may be distinguished from Lodge v. Dicas, although I do not think I should place much stress on so subtle a distinction.

PARKE, B.—I am of the same opinion. It is clear that the Court will not inquire into the amount of the consideration when its nature is changed. It is the folly of the parties making the bargain, with which we cannot afterwards interfere. There is a strong case in support of this (Andrews v. Boughey, 1 Dyer, 75 a, pl. 23); there to a declaration for delivering 373 lbs. of bad wax, upon an assumpsit for 400lbs. of good wax, stating half the price to have been paid in hand the rest to be paid upon a day agreed on, a plea of 20 lbs. of wax given and accepted in satisfaction was held good; the law leaves the parties to arrange their own bargains. Well, then, can it be doubted but that the advantage of having one debtor may be greater than two? It is clear that several cases might be put in which it would be expedient to take the security of one and to have the right to sue one and so avoid the chance of a plea in abatement. An old rich man might be in partnership with a young one who was poor, and it would clearly be advantageous to release the latter and leave solely the former to look to for payment, and so probably avoid the necessity of applying to the Court of Chancery. The case of Lodge v. Dicas was put on different grounds, and the simple point of whether one debtor might not be better than two does not appear to have been considered.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion. It is demonstrable that the separate security of A. may be better than the joint security of A. and B. and that is sufficient to decide this case.

MARTIN, B.—I quite agree that there should be no rule, but I think that Lodge v. Dicas, and David v. Ellice, are overruled by this judgment; and I think it is much better so to decide than to search for subtle distinctions.

Rule refused.

CARR v. THE LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Horses carried by railway—Liability of company—Gross negligence—Special contract.

The plaintiff sent a horse to the railway company, for the purpose of being carried along their line before the train left, by which the horse was to be carried, a special contract was signed between the parties, whereby the plaintiff agreed "to take all risk of conveyance whatsoever, or howsoever caused." During the journey the horse was killed, and the jury found through the gross negligence of the company's servants:

Held, notwithstanding that the company were entirely exempt from all liability, under the terms of the special contract previously entered into by the plaintiff and defendants. Platt, B. dissentiente.

This was an action brought to recover the value of a horse sent by the plaintiff, to be conveyed by the defendants along their line of railway; the horse was killed whilst on its journey, in consequence of an accident which occurred during the time the horse was upon the railway. Previously to the company's receiving the horse to be carried, a special contract was entered into between the parties, as is usual with the company in all cases where persons send such animals to be conveyed by them upon their railway. The special terms of contract were, that the person sending the horse, and not the company, "should take all risks of conveyance whatsoever, or howsoever caused." The action was tried at York, when the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff; and also that the accident by which the horse was killed occurred through the negligence of the company's servants. A rule nisi had been obtained to arrest the judgment, on the ground that there was no sufficient cause of action, and that the company were exempt by reason of notice, and the special terms of the contract entered into.

Atherton, Q.C. and Cowling, for plaintiff, shewed cause, and contended that the defendants were not exempt by reason of any notice, or the terms of their special contract, in this case, which had been entered into; and that it was not competent for the company to relieve themselves from the necessity of taking ordinary care, and avoiding gross negligence. The jury found expressly that the horse was killed by reason of the gross negligence of the company's servants, the company are bound, under any circumstances, to take due and proper and reasonable care in discharge of their duties as carriers, and such gross neglect as found in this case does not bring it within the terms "risk of conveyance" mentioned in the contract. It is true the liability may be avoided by a special agreement founded on a good consideration, but nothing will dispense with the necessity of ordinary care, that is a liability imposed by law. There has been no distinction yet taken between animals and goods. (Wyld v. Pickford, 8 M. & W. 443; Beck v. Evans, 16 East, 241; Riley v. Horn, 5 Bing.; Story on Bailments, 365; 1 Stark.; Ellis v. Turner, 8 T. R. 531; Garnett v. Willan, 5 B. and Ald. 53; Sleat v. Fagg, Ib. 343; Furnival v. Coombes, 5 M. and G. 776; Chippendale's case, 21 L. J. 22, Q.B.; and the Carriers' Act.)

Wilkins, Serjt. and Tomlinson, contrà, in support of the rule, were stopped in argument.

PARKE, B.—The rule in this case ought to be made absolute to arrest the judgment. It is competent to the parties to make what special agreement they please, and the only question is as to the effect of that special contract now before us. It was not unusual before railways became so general as they now are, in certain cases for carriers and other persons conveying goods for reward to limit their responsibility, so that they were previously protected by notice, except in cases of gross negligence. Whether these defendants are liable as mere common carriers, is a point we cannot discuss upon this inquiry, or if any common carrier is always bound to carry that commodity safely, independent of accident, which he has made a public profession to carry; because, here is a special contract as to the conveying this horse along the defendants' line of railway, and the only question is upon the construction of that special contract. Formerly goods, and such like, were only carried by carriers, but at present almost everything is conveyed by railway, now a new species of commodity quite has therefore to be carried. The carriage of a horse is a very dangerous thing, for many reasons; and it is very reasonable under such circumstances, I think, that carriers should protect themselves from the great risk they would otherwise necessarily have to encounter, by means of a special contract; the question for us now is, whether they have done so here. The jury said they were guilty of gross negligence upon the occasion when the plaintiff's horse was killed; yet, I am of opinion that all the company were bound to do here, under the terms of this special contract, was to find their own carriage in the ordinary way provided by them for the regular conveyance of horses upon the railway, and the owner then is "to take all risk of conveyance whatsoever;" therefore, the risk is that of the owner, not of the company; the contract is expressly. [Here the learned Judge read the contract.] Therefore, the contract is, that the owner shall abide by all the damage done; this is the reasonable and proper construction of it. There was a case in the Court of C. P. in which judgment has been, I believe, delivered to-day in accordance with the principle of this decision, though the facts and circumstances of that case differed from the present. One of the risks here, is a risk against which there was a provision in the special contract; the loss sustained was, therefore, provided against, and we are not to fritter away express contracts, made by parties under such circumstances; the judgment, therefore, ought to be arrested.

(a) See 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117, s. 13.

EXCHEQUER.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion: the railway company undertake to carry the plaintiff's horse on certain terms, and under particular conditions; now, what are those terms? They are, that the plaintiff shall be at "all risks whatsoever;" probably, that would be held to be limited to risk of conveyance, and scarcely apply, in case the horse should have been stolen; but the manner in which this accident happened and the loss incurred is clearly within the terms used in the special contract,—"risk of conveyance howsoever caused." On the plain construction of the agreement entered into between these parties, the loss is not one otherwise than is provided for in that agreement, and the company are not liable.

PLATT, B.—This is an action brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendants the value of a horse sent by the plaintiff to be carried by the defendants upon their railway; and the declaration states [The learned Judge stated the pleadings]. The defendants are found to have been guilty of gross negligence; does the contract then entered into between the parties exempt them from all liability when gross negligence is charged against them, and expressly foun dto have existed by the jury? [The learned Baron read the contract.] My brother Parke has put it, that the kind of commodity is different now to be carried to what it formerly was, and it is fit to limit the risk and specify particularly the terms of conveyance, particularly so for the carriage of horses. It is however very common now to convey horses by railway by means of trucks; the animal may be bruised or otherwise injured, perhaps, during the journey to its destination, notwithstanding all due and ordinary and proper care has been taken, against which it would undoubtedly be correct that some special provision may be made by express contract; and this may be right and necessary, and might be distinguishable; but except all the old cases are gotten rid of, I do not see how the carrier is to be exempt from his own misconduct and gross negligence. I do not mean to say I am right; I ought, certainly, to doubt my own opinion, after what has been said by my learned brothers upon the subject; but I cannot say that I think the language of this contract exempts the company from liability. It says, "all risks of conveyance whatsoever;" that means risk of conveyance, as it seems to me, casual or incidental in the conveyance, but not that which happens through their own gross negligence or misconduct, apart from or not incidental to the conveyance of the horse in actual carriage. If ordinary care had been used by the company's servants upon the occasion in question there would have been no loss; most probably no damage; and for that negligence I think they ought to be responsible. I am bound therefore to express my opinion, although it differs in this case from the rest of the members of the Court.

MARTIN, B.—I agree with my brothers Parke and Alderson. The plaintiff is estopped from enforcing this claim against the defendants by his own contract which he entered into with them: the horse was to be carried according to the terms of that contract, that the plaintiff should be at all risks of conveyance howsoever caused; those are the terms of the contract. It was quite competent for them at common law so to contract, and that agreement would be binding upon both parties; but if there be any doubt upon it, the Carriers' Act sets that at rest, because it gives the power to persons desirous of doing so specially to contract. We are then to look at what the terms of this contract are; they may so contract as to render each other not liable in respect of gross negligence. Was this, then, a proper legal contract? If so, as I think it was, it is impossible for language to be more clear and plain than this is; it is that the plaintiff shall be at all risks of conveyance whatsoever or howsoever caused. If the company wished to have protected themselves from gross negligence, it seems to me they could have been scarcely better prepared. We are then to see if this contract be legal; and if so, to give it its true meaning and effect. They who enter into it must judge for themselves what their terms shall be, and we to determine its legal effect. And in all this there is no such great hardship as may be by some imagined; for when a person contemplates sending horses or the like, in this way, with the risk of conveyance upon himself, it is very easy to insure. Underwriters would insure upon this in the same way as underwriters usually do upon ordinary policies of insurance. The construction which I have put upon this contract is, I think, the true one, and therefore that the defendants are not liable in this action. Judgment to be arrested.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, May 6.

FIELD v. PARTRIDGE.—Wordsworth shewed cause against a rule obtained to rescind an order of Platt, B. which directed the judgment and subsequent proceedings here to be set aside, on the ground that no notice of taxation was given: it is contended by the other side that the taxation only, and not the judgment, should be set aside, and that the order was to set aside too much. PARKE, B.—Taylor v. Murray, 3 M. & W. 142, is an authority upon which I have very frequently acted and is correct. Willes, contrà, not heard. Rule absolute.

GIBBS and OTHERS v. FREMONT.—The Attorney-General shewed cause against a rule obtained to rescind in part an order of Alderson, B. which directed an inspection of (amongst other things) a protest and certain letters to be given to the defendant by the plaintiffs. The action was brought upon four bills of exchange, dated in 1847, and were drawn upon the secretary of state of the United States, and on a public account; the plaintiffs received them in June, 1850, and these letters it was believed would materially assist the defendant's case. [PARKE, B.—Under this Act of Parliament (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6), you cannot have a fishing order to assist you, you must state first of all what your case is, and then what you require to establish it.] The defendant was not liable upon those bills in the way it was sought to make him: the plaintiffs obtained the bills with knowledge of all the circumstances and long after they were overdue, these letters would shew how this was. Willes, contrà.—The defendant has failed in making out right to such an order as this, or to shew the relevancy of these letters to the case set up; under this Act of Parliament it is necessary to shew to the Court or judge the actual relevancy of these letters to be produced to the defence set up; so would it be on discovery upon a bill of equity being filed, the subject and principles were well discussed in Wigram on Discovery. PARKE, B.—The parties can only compel a discovery where a case is made out in Equity, and we can [illegible] more here under this Act; you can only have the assistance in th[illegible] respect of a Court of Equity to prove your own case, and not to enable you to pick holes in that of your adversary the object is not to discover, but to give relief where it becomes necessary, the object being pointed out. ALDERSON, B.—You must make in your affidavits such a case as would entitle you to relief by bill in Equity. PARKE, B.—Yes, you must make out by proper affidavits and shew upon them what a bill in Equity and an answer would make [illegible] to entitle a party to a discov[illegible]y. POLLOCK, C.B.—[illegible]ust own this at present seems to [illegible] to be a [illegible] narrow construction of this Act of Parliament, and I incline to think it is enough here by affidavit to suggest that there is some specific document necessary to be seen by the opposite party for the assistance of his case to entitle him to see it in the hands of his opponent in the cause; these affidavits, however, at present seem to be, we all think, insufficient; therefore the affidavits had better be amended and the matter again referred to my brother Alderson, so that, as the matter is a very important one, it may come more fully before the Court, argued, and the opinion of the several judges taken upon it.

Rule absolute, affidavits to be amended accordingly.

DOE dem. ROGERS v. MOSTYN.—Welsby shewed cause against a rule obtained to set aside the trial, verdict, and subsequent proceedings, and he had obtained a cross rule to set aside an order previously made of the Lord Chief Baron. Vaughan Williams, contra. The COURT in consequence of what had taken place at the trial, made the Rule absolute, the cross-rule to drop.

FRANCIS and WIFE v. DANNAN.—Watson shewed cause against a rule obtained to set aside an interlocutory judgment signed, on the ground that the plea pleaded was not in accordance with the abstract, or an issuable plea. It was an action of covenant on a mortgage deed, and the plea (among others) was that after the mortgage, &c. the property was reconveyed, and that nothing was ever due under the mortgage. Bell and Needham, contrà, not heard. The COURT said it was doubtful whether the plea was not good: the judgment signed, because it was not issuable, certainly ought not to stand. Rule absolute.

EAGLAND v. BOYCE.—White shewed cause against a rule obtained, to set the verdict in this case obtained, before the Under-Sheriff for misdirection. The action was on a bill, plea as to part of the amount payment before action, and as to the other part, the residue, and the costs payment of the same, with the costs up to the time of payment after the action. Two actions had been brought on the bill, one had been settled by the debt, and the costs of that action being paid, but the costs of the other action (which was this action) had not been paid, and this suit was continued for those other costs. Thame v. Boce, 12 Q.B. 108, and Beaumont v. Greathead, 2 C.B. 494, were relied upon by the defendant. Lush, contra. There was no evidence given by the defendant at all, his plea was, therefore, not proved, and the Under Sheriff was wrong in leaving it to the jury whether it was proved or not, or for them to say if the plaintiff had been paid. He had a right to continue the action for the costs of this the second suit if he pleased. Both the cases cited were very distinguishable from the present. Rule absolute.

BRANDUS v. LUMLEY.—James, Q.C. moved for a writ of distringas against the defendant, the proprietor of the Opera, in the Haymarket, to compel appearance, the debt claimed being 8,000*l*. Rule granted.

Ex parte JOHN HAYLOCK.

Warrant of commitment—Habeas corpus—Discharge.

On a return to a habeas corpus a warrant of commitment was set out, that the prisoner had been charged on the oath of T. P. "with having, about one o'clock, on the morning of yesterday, written on the pavement, in a lane called Chapel-lane, in the said parish of Saint Mary, the following offensive words, reflecting on the character of Mr. Robert Johnson Watt, Station Master of the Ely Railway Station, (that is to say,) "Donkey Watt, the Railway Jackass." The warrant then went on to say, "And it having been stated to me on the oath of the said Thomas Palmer, that the continued writing for some time past of these offensive words was calculated to provoke a breach of the peace, and the said Thomas Palmer having prayed that the said John Haylock might be required to find sufficient sureties to keep the peace, he, the said justice, ordered and adjudged him to enter into his recognisance in the sum of 30l. and two sufficient sureties in the sum of 15l. each, to keep the peace for the space of three calendar months, and that insomuch as the said John Haylock had refused to enter into such recognisance, he directed him to be imprisoned in the House of Correction for three calendar months, unless he, in the meantime, entered into such recognisance," &c.

Held bad; and the prisoner was discharged.

On a former day Prentice obtained a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the House of Correction at Ely, in the Isle of Ely, commanding him to bring up one John Haylock, a prisoner, in his custody. The keeper of the said House of Correction, in obedience to such writ, now produced the said John Haylock, and returned that he held him in custody under the following warrant:—

"Isle of Ely } To the Constable of the Parish of to wit. } the Holy Trinity in Ely, in the said Isle, and to the Keeper of the House of Correction at Ely, in the said Isle.

"Whereas John Haylock, of the parish of Saint Mary, in Ely, in the said isle, farmer, hath this day been brought before me, the Reverend John Henry Sparke, clerk, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said isle, charged on oath of Thomas Palmer, a porter, in the employ of the Eastern Counties Railway Company, residing in the said parish of the Holy Trinity in Ely, with having, about one o'clock on the morning of yesterday, written on the pavements, in a lane called Chapel-lane, in the said parish of Saint Mary, the following offensive words, reflecting on the character of Mr. Robert Johnson Watt, Station Master of the Ely Railway Station, (that is to say,) 'Donkey Watt, the Railway Jackass;' and it having been stated to me, on the oath of the said Thomas Palmer, that the continued writing for some time past of these offensive words, was calculated to provoke a breach of the peace, and the said Thomas Palmer having prayed that the said John Haylock might be required to find sufficient sureties to keep the peace towards her Majesty and all her liege subjects; I, therefore, the said justice, have ordered and adjudged, and do order and adjudge, that the said John Haylock shall enter into his recognisance in the sum of thirty pounds, with two sufficient sureties, in the sum of fifteen pounds each, to keep the peace towards her Majesty and all her liege people, for the space of three calendar months now next ensuing; and insomuch as the said John Haylock hath refused to enter into such recognisance, and find such sureties as aforesaid, I do hereby require and command you, the said constable, forthwith to convey the said John Haylock to the said House of Correction, and to deliver him to the said keeper thereof there, together with this warrant; and I do require and command you, the said keeper, to receive the said John Haylock into your custody, in the said House of Correction, and him there safely to keep for the space of three calendar months, unless he, in the meantime, enter into such recognisance, with such sureties as aforesaid, to keep the peace in the manner and for the term aforesaid: herein fail not.

"Given under my hand and seal, the thirtieth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two."

The return having been read,

Prentice moved that the prisoner might be discharged.

Wells for the committing justices contended that the warrant was good. [COLERIDGE, J.—The defendant is committed in respect of a continued writing with which he is not identified.] That allegation may be rejected as surplusage, and then the warrant will stand that he is committed with respect to the writing of the words mentioned in the warrant, which amount to a libel; these words he is clearly charged with having written. [COLERIDGE, J.—There is no adjudication that he did write the words, it is only that he is charged with having written them. If this had been a committal for inquiry it might have done, but here the committal is upon a final adjudication.] If it amounts to a libel the justices had jurisdiction to make him enter into recognisances. [COLERIDGE, J.—Yes for inquiry; but here is a man sentenced to three months imprisonment.] He referred to 2 Hawk, c. 16, s. 2; Butt v. Conant, 1 B. & B. 348; and Reg. v. Bartlett, 1 Dow. & L. 95.

COLERIDGE, J.—My opinion is certainly against this commitment. It is quite clear that the justices did not intend to commit so much for the mere act, as for the continued writing—that in part was the subject matter of the grievance, but if that is struck out then there is only a charge and no adjudication, but, nevertheless, there is a commitment. The prisoner must be discharged. Prisoner discharged.

REG. v. THE RECORDER OF LEEDS.

Order of affiliation—Sufficiency of notice of recognisance.

A. B. was adjudged to be the putative father of twin bastard children, and two separate orders were drawn up and served. Having given notice of appeal he only entered into two recognisances as by law required, and by his attorneys sent the mother notice thereof, which notice stated that he had "entered into a recognisance before," &c. "to try an appeal," &c. "against an order of affiliation made on the 27th day of December last, whereby he was adjudged to be the putative father of two bastard children." Two appeals were duly entered, one against each order, but upon their coming on for trial, it was objected that, there was not sufficient notice of recognisance, inasmuch as, first, there was no such order, and second, that there was no such recognisance as that mentioned in the notice, and upon this objection the Recorder dismissed the appeals.

Upon a rule for a mandamus to the Recorder to enter continuances and hear the appeals, Held, that reasonable notice had been given, and that the Sessions ought to have heard the appeals.

On a former day Hardy obtained a rule calling upon the Recorder of Leeds, and Jane Tasker to shew cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue commanding the said Recorder to enter continuances and hear two appeals against two orders of affiliation, whereby Mark Barker was adjudged to be the father of two bastard children. The rule was moved upon the following statement of facts. Jane Tasker having been delivered of twin bastard children, applied for a summons against the said Mark Barker as the putative father. Upon the hearing of the case the justices adjudged him to be the putative father, and at that time made a verbal order for payment by him of one shilling per week for each child, subsequently two formal orders, one in respect of each child were duly drawn up and served. Immediately upon the adjudication, the putative father gave verbal notice of appeal, and in due time entered into two recognisances pursuant to the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 1. Subsequently he gave the woman notice in these words:—

"Borough of Leeds, in the County of York, to wit. } As attorneys for and on behalf of Mark Barker, of Leeds, in the county of York, wool sorter, we do hereby give you notice, that the said Mark Barker has entered into a recognisance before Charles Gascoigne Maclea, esquire, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace, acting in and for the said borough of Leeds, in the said county of York, to try an appeal at the next General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, to be holden at Leeds, in and for the borough of Leeds, against an order of affiliation made on the 27th day of December last, whereby the said Mark Barker was adjudged to be the putative father of two bastard children, of which you, Jane Tasker, had then lately been delivered.

"Dated the 5th day of January, 1852.

"Yours, &c.

"Ferns and Rooke,

"Attorneys for the said Mark Barker.

"To Jane Tasker, and to John Hope Shaw, esq. and Darnton Lupton, esq."

Sec. 3, of the 8 Vict. c. 10, after imposing some additional conditions to the recognisance, directs that "the party entering into any such recognisance shall forthwith give or send a notice in writing of his having so entered into such recognisance to the woman in whose favour the said order shall have been made." When the first of the two appeals came on for trial, the appellant was required to prove his notice of recognisance, and upon his proving the giving of the foregoing notice, it was objected, first, that there was no such order as that described in the notice; secondly, that he had entered into no such recognisance as that mentioned. The recorder, thinking the objections well founded, held the notice to be bad, and dismissed the appeal. The second appeal, on being called on, shared the same fate.

Pickering now shewed cause, and contended, that as there was in fact no such order as that described in the notice, there being two orders, one for each child, and not one for both children; and as there was no recognisance to try any such appeal, there being distinct recognisances for each of the two appeals, the appellant had given no proper notice. That the cases of R. v. The Justices of Lincolnshire, 3 B. & C. 548; and R. v. The Inhabitants of Kimbolton, 6 A. & E. 603, shew how strictly parties are to be held to their notice. That the cases of R. v. Holborow, 3 New Sess. Cas. 723, which merely decided that it is not necessary to set out in the notice the condition of the recognisance; and R. v. The Justices of Oxfordshire, 1 Q. B. 177, relied upon by the other side, was where there were three separate convictions against three persons for unlawful fishing, and they gave a joint notice of appeal, but signed by each, and it was there held that the notice was good in respect of each appellant, but that such case had no application to the present case, in which the statutable requisites had not been complied with. [COLERIDGE, J.—The question is, whether Reg. v. Oxfordshire does not establish a principle of construction. It seems to decide that a notice may be good, though inaccurate as to the facts; for there it would appear from the notice that there was only one conviction.] In that case each gave a notice, though in one document.

Hardy, in support of the rule, contended that the simple question was, whether or not there was sufficient upon the face of the notice to convey the required information to the woman; that it was obvious the notice applied to both appeals, as it speaks of both children, and it would be idle to appeal against [illegible] rder without also appealing against the oth[illegible] In Reg. v. Oxfordshire, Lord Denman says, "The question must be, whether there can be any doubt as to the order to which the notice refers; here there could be none. And in Reg. v. The Justices of Denbighshire, 9 Dowl. 509, cited in Reg. v. Oxfordshire, where the notice of appeal against an order of removal misdescribed the Christian name of one of the removing justices, and the Sessions refused to hear the appeal, Mr. Justice Williams made a rule absolute to enter continuances and hear the appeal, on the ground that the description was sufficient to give reasonable notice. That notices of trial in civil actions have always been liberally construed; that all that was required was to shew that the appellant meant to go to trial. (R. v. Holborow, 3 New Sess. Cas. 723.)

COLERIDGE, J.—The best opinion I can form of this case is, that the rule ought to be made absolute; and I think this should be so, looking at the plain intention of the Act of Parliament, and the principle laid down in Reg. v. Oxfordshire. The statute was framed for the purpose of avoiding technicalities. It requires the putative father to enter into a recognisance, and to give notice of his having done so to the woman. It then goes on to say, "and in default of his giving or sending such notice or notices as aforesaid, the appeal shall not be heard." The circumstance that the justices at the hearing pronounced but one order in respect of the two children is very natural; they adjudicated upon the entire case in one sentence, that the man is the father of the two children; but afterwards their judgment is reduced to two separate orders. At the time of the hearing, the father gives a notice of appeal, and it is not disputed that he has entered into proper recognisances, and the only question is, whether or not he has given a proper notice. The notice itself says that he "has entered into a recognisance," and Mr. Pickering argues, that supposing he had been convicted of three separate offences, how would this notice have been good? But that is not the case here. In the present case, he says he appeals against an order, whereby he was adjudged to be the putative father of two bastard children. Now, what could be understood from this, but that he intended to appeal against the two orders? There can be no doubt, therefore, that he gave sufficient information. But is the appellant tied up by any strict rule of law? Reg. v. Oxfordshire lays down a rule as to a reasonable notice. In that case there was one notice by three appellants against three separate convictions, one against each; and it spoke of a conviction 'against us," and it was contended that there was no such conviction. But the Court said, that that was not the point, but it was whether or not reasonable notice had been given. I should say also that the statute in the present case, which contains a schedule of forms, gives no form for such a notice as this, which, therefore, leaves the matter still more open. The rule must, therefore, be absolute.

Rule absolute.

WILDE v. SHERIDAN.

County Court—Prohibition.

Where a plaintiff sues by leave of a County Court judge for the district "in which the cause of action arose" by virtue of sec. 60 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, the whole cause of action must have arisen in such district.

A. who resided at Norwich, drew a bill of exchange upon B. who resided in London, at which place he accepted it, and transmitted it back to A. at Norwich. B. having indorsed it and paid it, on its being dishonoured sued A. (by leave of the judge) in the County Court of Norwich:

Held, that the judge of such County Court had no jurisdiction.

This was a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue to the judge of the Norwich County Court prohibiting him from further proceeding in this cause.

This was an action brought in the above County Court by the plaintiff as the drawer and indorser of a bill of exchange against the defendant as acceptor. The bill was drawn at Norwich by the plaintiff, who resided there, upon the defendant, who resided in London, payable three months after date for 25*l.* value received. The defendant accepted it "payable at Robarts and Co.'s London." Having so accepted it the defendant transmitted it to the plaintiff at Norwich, who, in the course of business, payed it away, and on its being dishonoured paid the amount to the holder. In order to bring the present action the plaintiff applied to the judge of the Norwich County Court for leave to sue in such court pursuant to sec. 60 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, which enacts that the summons may issue in any district . . . "in which the cause of action arose." At the trial in the County Court it was objected, on the part of the defendant, that the judge had no jurisdiction, the cause of action having arisen in London and not at Norwich. This objection was, however, overruled, and a verdict given for the plaintiff, with a stay of execution. A rule nisi having been obtained by Joyce,

Phipson now shewed cause, and contended that the judge of County Court had jurisdiction—that this being a bill not specially made "payable at Robarts and Co. London, and not elsewhere," was payable to plaintiff wherever he might be, and being at Norwich was payable to him there—that the cause of action was the nonpayment of the bill at its maturity, and the contract itself is the delivery of the instrument to a party who has a right to sue upon it, which here was at Norwich. (Buckley v. Hann, 19 L. J. 151, Ex.; Roff v. Miller, 19 L. J. 278, C. P.; Huth v. Long, 19 L. J. 325, Q. B.)

Joyce, contrà, argued that the contract was the acceptance, which being in London, the cause of action arose there; that to enable the plaintiff to sue in Norwich it must be shewn that the entire cause of action arose there, which was not so in the present case. Cur. adv. vult.

COLERIDGE, J. now delivered judgment.—This was an action by the drawer of a bill of exchange, drawn at Norwich, accepted in London, payable at Robarts and Co.'s, and sent so accepted to the plaintiff at Norwich, in which jurisdiction the plaintiff sued by leave of the judge, under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. The question is, whether the whole cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of that County Court, and I am of opinion that it did not, assuming the cause of action to be made upon the contract and breach of it. It was urged against the rule that this being a general acceptance it bound the defendant to pay anywhere, and the breach therefore was at Norwich by the nonpayment; and further, that the acceptance was not perfect until the actual delivery to the defendant at Norwich, so that the contract also must be considered as having been made there. The case of Buckley v. Hann, 19 L. J. 151, was cited in support of this latter position, in which the indorsement of a bill of exchange sent to London was held to have been made in Middlesex, so it was admitted that an acceptance in Piccadilly in one jurisdiction and drawn at Billingsgate in another jurisdiction, was held complete in the former jurisdiction. (Roff v. Miller, 19 L. J. 278.) This case was decided soon after the other, though they do not govern each other, and both appear to have been well decided. The acceptor of a bill has no property in it; either before the acceptance he receives the drawer's paper and writes his name upon it and makes his promise, and he may, before communication with the drawer, revoke it (Cox v. Troy, 5 B. & Ald. 474), but his promise, unless he revokes it, is complete, and takes effect from the time it was made. I am aware of Baron Bayley's judgment in that case, but I think it is to be confined to the case then before the Court. In Smith v. M'Clure, 5 East, 476, where the declaration by the drawer alleged a delivery to the defendant, and an acceptance by him, demurred to it because it did not go on to allege the delivery back, Lord Ellenborough said the acceptance must be taken to be perfect, and after acceptance if the acceptor improperly detained it, the drawer might sue on it; imperfect acceptance gives a right of action, but Lord Ellenborough's language imports that the acceptance might be perfect without a delivery. In the present case the acceptance has been delivered, and the question is, where the contract which that acceptor enters into is to be considered as made. Storey, in his Conflict of Laws, directs attention to acceptance as contracts in the place where made, or where to be performed. In America it had been held that an acceptance was payable anywhere. A contract to pay generally is governed by the law of the country where it is made. All debts between the original parties are payable everywhere unless there is a special provision. No doubt where a bill is sent from one country to the acceptor in another, who there accepts it, it would be held the contract was made in the country of the drawee. The contract in this case was made in London, and therefore the whole cause of action did not arise in Norwich; therefore the judge of the Norwich County Court had no jurisdiction, and the prohibition must issue.

Rule absolute.

April 23, and May 7, 8, and 10.

LUMLEY v. WAGNER.

Breach of contract—Injunction—Agency.

B. was an intimate friend of A. W. and J. W. his daughter, and also of L. the lessee and manager of an English theatre, and B. had, in 1851, been engaged on behalf of J. W. in negotiating with the proprietor of a foreign theatre for her professional services there. In 1851 B. brought to J. W. the printed form of a contract with L. for J. W.'s performance at his theatre, which form contained a clause restricting her from performing at any other theatre or place during the term of the engagement. A. W. objected to this clause, and drew up a contract, omitting that part, and he and J. W. signed it at Berlin. B. took this contract to L. at Paris, when L. objected to the omission of this clause, and B. then added a clause restricting J. W.'s performance without L.'s permission, and signed it "for J. W. and authorised by her." L. then signed a duplicate of the contract, with the additional clause, and gave it to B. who conveyed it to J. W. In subsequent correspondence J. W. and A. W. referred to the contract, but upon meeting B., A. W. stated his objections to the addition, upon which B. said that when J. W. arrived in London L. would comply with any wish of hers on the subject. By the contract L. engaged to pay 300l. in advance on the 15th of March. The performance of the contract by both parties was delayed by mutual consent. On the 9th of March, A. W. wrote to L. that if he then sent the bill of exchange for 300l. it was to be addressed to the place he then wrote from, but if from the 2nd of April, to Hamburgh. On the 18th of March L. wrote to A. W. that he had paid 300l. to B. for J. W. On the 12th of March J. W. wrote to B. that she should be at S. up to the commencement of Passion Week, and at Hamburgh during the whole of that week (commencing the 5th of April). J. W. entered into a contract with G. the manager of another English theatre, on the 5th of April, and on the 6th she entered a notarial protest, that in consequence of L. not having paid the 300l. her contract with him was at an end. On the 15th of April L. tendered the 300l. to A. W. and J. W. at Hamburgh, but it was refused. G. having announced J. W.'s appearance at his theatre, the Court, at the instance of L. granted an injunction against G. and J. W. restraining her performance there.

This case came on to be heard on the 23rd of April, on a motion for an injunction to restrain the defendants, Johanna Wagner and Albert Wagner, from violating or committing any breach of the last article in the agreement in the bill mentioned, of the 9th of November, 1851, and that the defendant Johanna Wagner might be restrained from singing and performing, or singing, at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden, or at any other theatre or place, without the sanction or permission in writing of the plaintiff, Benjamin Lumley, during the existence of the said agreement with the plaintiff, and that the defendant Albert Wagner might be restrained from permitting or sanctioning the defendant Johanna Wagner singing and performing, or singing, as aforesaid; and that the defendant Frederick Gye might be restrained from accepting the professional services of the defendant Johanna Wagner, as a singer and performer, or singer, at the said Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden, or at any other theatre or place, and from permitting her to sing and perform, or to sing, at the said Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden, during the existence of the said agreement with the plaintiff, without the permission or sanction of the plaintiff. From the evidence adduced on the application for the injunction, the following appeared to be the circumstances. In November, 1851, Dr. Joseph Bacher, who was an intimate friend of the defendants Albert and Johanna Wagner, as well as of the plaintiff, as the agent of the defendants Wagner, came to Berlin, and there an agreement in writing, in the French language, bearing date the 9th of November, 1851, was signed, the translation of which agreement, as given in the bill, was as follows:—

"The undersigned Mr. Benjamin Lumley, possessor of her Majesty's Theatre in London, and the Italian Opera at Paris, of the one part, and Mademoiselle Johanna Wagner, cantatrice, of the court of his Majesty the King of Prussia, with the consent of her father, Mr. A. Wagner, residing at Berlin, of the other part, have concerted and concluded the following contract:—1. Mademoiselle Johanna Wagner binds herself to sing three months at the theatre of Mr. Lumley, her Majesty's, at London, to date from the 1st day of April, 1852 (the time necessary for the journey comprised therein), and to give the parts following—1, Romeo ('Montecchi'); 2, Fides ('Prophète'); 3. Valentine ('Huguenots'); 4. Anna ('Don Juan'); 5. Alice ('Robert le Diable'); 6. an opera chosen by common accord. 2. The first three parts must necessarily be—1st, Romeo; 2nd, Fides; 3rd, Valentine. These parts once sung, and then only she will appear, if Mr. Lumley desires it, in the three other operas mentioned aforesaid, but beyond these six parts she shall not sing any other. 3. These six parts belong exclusively to Mademoiselle Wagner, and any other cantatrice shall not presume to sing them during the three months of her engagement. If Mr. Lumley happens to be prevented by any cause soever from giving these operas, he is nevertheless held to pay Mademoiselle J. Wagner the salary stipulated lower down for the number of her parts, as if she had sung them. 4. In the case where Mademoiselle Wagner shall be prevented by reason of illness from singing in the course of a month as often as it has been stipulated, Mr. Lumley is bound to pay the salary only for the parts sung. 5. Mademoiselle Johanna Wagner binds herself to sing twice a week during the run of the three months. However, if she herself be hindered from singing twice in any week whatever, she will have the right to give at a later period the omitted representation. 6. If Mademoiselle Wagner, fulfilling the wishes of the direction, consent to sing more than twice a week, in the three months, this last will give to Mademoiselle Wagner 50*l.* sterling for each representation extra. 7. Mr. Lumley engages to pay Mademoiselle Wagner a salary of 400*l.* sterling per month, and payment will be made in such manner, that she will receive 100*l.* sterling each week. 8. Mr. Lumley will pay, by letters of exchange, Mademoiselle Wagner, at Berlin, the 15th of March, 1852, the sum of 300*l.* sterling, a sum which will be deducted from her engagement by his retaining 100*l.* each month. 9. In all cases, except that where a verified illness would place upon her a hindrance, if Mademoiselle Wagner shall not arrive in London in eight days after that whence dates her engagement, Mr. Lumley will have the right to regard the non-appearance as a rupture of the contract, and will be able to demand an indemnification. 10. In the case where Mr. Lumley shall cede his enterprise to another, to have the right to transfer this contract to his successor, and in that case Mademoiselle Wagner has the same obligations and the same rights towards the last as towards Mr. Lumley. Berlin, the 9th of November, 1851.

"JOHANNA WAGNER.
"ALBERT WAGNER."

In the same month of November Bacher met the plaintiff at Paris, when the plaintiff objected to the agreement as not containing a usual and necessary clause, preventing the defendant Johanna Wagner from exercising her professional abilities in England without the plaintiff's consent; whereupon Bacher, as the agent of the defendants Wagner, added and signed an article in writing, in the French language, to the agreement, the translation of which was as follows:—

"Madlle. Wagner engages herself not to use her talents at any other theatre, nor in any concert or reunion, public or private, without the written authorization of Mr. Lumley.

"Dr. JOSEPH BACHER, for Madlle. JOHANNA WAGNER, and authorised by her."

A duplicate of the agreement, with the supplementary clause, was then signed by the plaintiff, and delivered to Bacher, as the said defendant's agent. Bacher forwarded the contract, which had been signed by Lumley, to Johanna Wagner, and afterwards received a letter, signed by her, and dated the 27th of November, 1851, of which the following is a translation:—

"Berlin, Nov. 27, 1851.

"MY DEAR FRIEND,—You must excuse my not having yet answered the contract (contracts?) which you forwarded to me, but I am not to blame; for, owing to a few days' absence from my beloved Berlin, it was on my return that I found that parcel, for which receive my best thanks. All is in the best order. In the meanwhile I have been astounding the good folks of Leipsic and Magdebourg in my performance of Romeo. I know not how many fainted when they were informed that for one night only Romeo would appear and sing, and then vanish, and leave them, comfortless, in the lurch. Oh how terrible! To-morrow I sing Alice, in Roberto. The lessee is much embarrassed, inasmuch as Madame Caster has given out an indisposition, with hoarseness, which will prevent her appearing for a month, or probably longer, and thus not sing before the new year, so that I (poor creature) am compelled to sing for two. Lucretia will be represented for the first time on Thursday, and repeated on the Monday following. That is all I know of at present. Meyerbeer is coming to me respecting some alterations in the part of Alice. I will not detain this letter any longer, and, therefore, conclude it with warmest regards and thanks, best friend. Our grand maestro is (God be praised) pretty well again, at least he goes out a good deal. Is there any chance of your coming to Berlin before you return to Vienna? If you could manage it, it would be a source of great comfort to your much obliged,

"JOHANNA WAGNER.

"Pray make my compliments to both the directors, Messrs. Lumley and Roqueplan."

The following is a translation of a letter from the defendant Johanna Wagner to the plaintiff, and dated the 6th of February, 1852:—

"Mr. Benjamin Lumley, director of the Italian Opera, Paris.—Sir,—As a true Christian I acknowledge all my sins, and it is not one of the least not to have replied to your amiable letter. I was daily on the point of doing it, but a thousand different things prevented me, and I became more guilty day by day. I have not the intention to excuse myself, but I expect in you a judge full of indulgence and charity. At present I express to you great thanks for your amiable intentions on my account, and I hope that all our wishes will be accomplished, at the same time yours as mine. Besides that, I have at this moment got a little thing to ask you, and I have the confidence in your indulgence that you will reply to me soon, and that you will not take your revenge in keeping silent. More than eight weeks ago I wrote to Mr. Bacher; he has written to me, and, during his presence in Berlin, assured me in person, that all would be arranged according to my desire; nevertheless, I made the contract with you, Sir, and that is why I ask you once more if you consent that I put off the beginning of my contract for London for fifteen days, so that it will begin the 16th of April, instead of the 1st? It would expire, then, the 15th of the month of July, instead of the 1st of that month; considering that I am still too occupied the next two months by the labours at Berlin, and by the preparations for my Italian débuts at London, besides that I shall have absolute need of some days of repose for my health before my departure for London. On the other hand, I am of opinion that it will be very agreeable to you to have fifteen days more for the preparation of the opera of the 'Prophète,' quite new at your house. For me, I hold absolutely to début there as Fides; the second part will be afterwards Romeo. It is agreed, is it not? Will you have the goodness to answer me definitively to these demands? and you will be very agreeable to do it as soon as possible. M. De Bulson, intendant of the Royal Opera here, presses me to give him again some more representations, with reference to a revived opera, for which occasion I must arrange my time to a minute. Mr. Bacher has told me certainly 'yes;' nevertheless, I find myself obliged to ask once more yourself.

"Will you receive my respects, and my very distinguished consideration?

"JOHANNA WAGNER,

"Cantatrice of the Court of His Majesty the King of Prussia.

"Berlin, Feb. 6.

"I should arrive then at London about the 15th or 16th of the month of April."

In February, 1852, Bacher received from A. Wagner a letter, dated the 21st of that month, and thus translated:—

"DEAR FRIEND,—You would wait long for a letter rom Johanna. I myself do not know whether you, wandering Jew, are now in Vienna; however, I write at all events to inform you that we have sent the necessary letter to Mr. Lumley, and requested him, pro forma, to defer once more the fulfilment of the contract for a fortnight longer, which has been already settled between us. He (Mr. Lumley) answered very politely, and agreed to it; however, he would have wished her to be present for a longer time at the rehearsals of the 'Prophète,' but it is impossible, as everywhere this time, as usual, Johanne has much work to do before her journey, and it is merely a short time ago that she began studying her Italian parts, and she requires a fortnight's rest before undertaking in London another work which will require all her energy. I should otherwise bring her, checkmate, to London, but that would not do. We shall try to be there at the appointed moment, and from Hamburgh, where she will remain at her sister's during Passion-week, she will probably leave on Easter Monday. Johanna remains for her début in the 'Prophète,' being sure of a quiet, extreme, and sure success. They prefer 'Romeo,' because they say she alone makes Romeo. If she succeeds, the people will go to the 'Prophète' for her sake alone; but they would not go for the whole of Lumley's 'Prophète,' since it is much better at Gye's: there is something for both, but 'Tab' is preferable to 'Fid.' That, however, in which everybody agrees, is, that we have made a very bad bargain as regards money matters; that clause pressed by you on us which prohibits us from singing at concerts, it is a real loss, especially as we are to have neither apartments nor carriage free, which have been granted to others. England is only to be valued for the sake of her money.(a) I am curious to hear how your speculation is terminating. You appear to be the very man for it. Farewell! let us hear from you. Receive our best compliments, and if you wish to hear from us, Johanna will tell you. A thousand compliments from yours truly, "A. WAGNER."

The plaintiff afterwards, at the request of A. Wagner and his daughter, through the agency of Bacher, extended the time stipulated by the first article of the agreement, from the 1st to the 15th of April. In March, 1852, the plaintiff received from A. Wagner a letter, dated the 9th March, of which the following is a translation:—

"SIR,—From day to day it has been my daughter's intention to write to you, but a young girl and a singer, so much occupied as she really is, very seldom finds the necessary time to write a letter. Nevertheless, time presses, and for that reason I find myself forced to address you for her, by writing to you that we perfectly well understand your intentions; but what is to be done? The Court and the direction of our theatre press to profit still as much as possible of the short stay of my daughter in such a way, that some time will be absolutely necessary for her, both for repose after such arduous labour, and also to enable her to learn by heart the Italian words for (des) her début in London, which her continued duties have prevented her doing. Will you be good enough to have the preparatory rehearsals of the 'Prophète,' and leave us to profit by your consent, and put off for fifteen days the commencement of the engagement, so that it should begin the 16th of April, and continue until the middle of July? If you send the bill of exchange, be good enough to address it, either at this time to Berlin, or from (des) the 2nd of April, to Hamburgh, to Engel and Co., Ferdinand-street, where we shall remain some time with our daughter and sister, recently married.—Accept, &c.,

(Signed) "ALBERT WAGNER."

On the 11th(b) of March, the plaintiff sent a letter to A. Wagner, at Berlin, in reply to his said letter of the 9th, and informing him to the effect, that he (the plaintiff) had paid the sum of 300*l.* to the said J. Bacher, for the defendant Johanna Wagner, and that he had no doubt that before his said letter reached him, the same would have been duly paid over. To this letter the plaintiff received no reply, but on the 10th of April he received at Paris the protest in the German language, dated the 6th of April, 1852, of which the following is a translation:—

"Before me, J. C. H. Stockfleth, notary of the free Hanse town of Hamburgh, and before the two citizens, namely, Adolph Rese and Edward Possellt, of this town, witnesses, there appeared Miss Johanna Wagner, Royal Prussian Court, opera singer, assisted by her father, Mr. Albert Wagner, teacher of singing, who are both present at Hamburgh, and residing in the suburb of St. George, Guilittstrasse, No. 17, and produced a contract in the French language, which has, according to their affirmation, been signed by them at Berlin, on the 9th November, 1851, the same having likewise been signed by Mr. B. Lumley, manager of the Royal Theatre, in London, as well as of the Italian Opera, at Paris, on the 15th of November, 1851. The eighth paragraph sheweth, Monsieur Lumley will pay by lettres de change, to Madlle. Wagner, at Berlin, the 15th of March, 1852, the sum of 300*l.* sterling, a sum which will be deducted from her salary, in retaining 100*l.* each month. The aforesaid parties, as plaintiffs, then deposed as follows:—They had expected in vain, up to the present moment, the remittance of 300*l.* promised in the before-mentioned paragraph to Miss Wagner by Mr. Lumley. They therefore could not but consider the whole contract as void, inasmuch as even the first stipulation had not been fulfilled by Mr. Lumley, though he had bound himself to do so. They certainly in thinking so felt to be in the right, since they had been informed by another party that Mr. Lumley might be considered as generally very deficient in the fulfilment of his money obligations, and more than that in other matters; and such being the case, the contract too must be void, and they, for their own parts, could not recognise its validity for any longer period, whilst, at the same time, they should reserve for themselves every legal step bearing upon the matter; and for that purpose requested the notary to furnish them with a legal act, not only to register this solemn declaration on their parts, but to be himself able to appear for them and protect them by law. Done at Miss Wagner's (and her father's) residence, this 6th of April, 1852. This declaration has been read in the presence of the parties just mentioned, and agreed to by them; and they further placed the original document in my hands (in the event of copies of it having to be served), signed by the witnesses as well as by myself, and sealed with my own seal of office. The original has been signed as follows:—

"JOHANNA WAGNER, Opera Singer, Royal Prussian Court.

"ALBERT WAGNER, paternal guardian."

This protest was accompanied by a letter in the French language, thus translated:—

"Hamburgh, April 6th, 1852.

"SIR,—Not having received on the 15th of March, or even up to the 1st of April, the sum of 300*l.* stipulated in the clause 8 of our contract, I consider that contract annulled on your side, and therefore think myself justified in sending you the inclosed formal protest, and feel also at liberty now to dispose elsewhere both of my talents and of my time.

"I am very sorry for it, but am, nevertheless, compelled to do so, on account of my reputation as an artiste, and also of my interest.

"Yours, "JOHANNA WAGNER."

Upon receipt of the protest and letter, the plaintiff at once proceeded to Hamburgh, and had several interviews with J. Wagner and A. Wagner to induce them to fulfil their agreement, and through a notary public tendered to them 300*l.* in two Bank of England notes; but they refused to receive them. The plaintiff, in his affidavit, stated that the defendant F. Gye was the lessee or manager and director of the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden: that he well knew of the agreement of the 9th of November, 1851, having been entered into, and he was, at the time the same was so entered into, at Berlin, and endeavoured to prevent and frustrate the same: that the plaintiff had been informed and believed that F. Gye had frequent communications with the defendants J. Wagner and A. Wagner, and represented to them that her Majesty's Theatre was closed, and that he (the plaintiff) would not reopen the same, and that he was known as a person who never fulfilled his pecuniary or other engagements, and that defendant J. Wagner would never be paid for her services the sum stipulated by the said agreement, and that the said agreement was void in consequence of J. Wagner's not having received the said sum of 300*l.* and that such agreement, by the laws of England, could not be enforced: that the plaintiff had been informed and believed that Gye offered to pay J. Wagner and A. Wagner 2,000*l.* for two months' services of J. Wagner, if they would break the agreement with the plaintiff, and that Gye also offered to indemnify the defendants J. Wagner and A. Wagner against all damages which might arise to them by reason of the non-fulfilment of their agreement with the plaintiff; that Gye, in consequence of such false representations, succeeded in inducing the defendant J. Wagner to enter into an engagement in writing, dated the 5th of April, 1852, that J. Wagner should for a larger sum than that stipulated by the agreement of the 9th of November, 1851, sing at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden, for Gye. The defendants J. Wagner and A. Wagner arrived in London on the 19th of April, from Hamburgh, for the purpose of carrying into effect their engagement with Gye, and the first appearance of Mademoiselle Wagner was announced in the newspapers to take place at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden, on the 21th of April. In his affidavit, the plaintiff stated that the pecuniary loss occasioned to him was at present unascertainable, but would, he believed, amount to more than 30,000*l.* Other affidavits were also filed as to the loss which would be occasioned to the plaintiff by Mademoiselle Wagner's not performing her contract with him.

Bacon and Hislop Clarke appeared in support of the motion for the injunction.

Malins and Martindale appeared for the defendants, who, however, had no opportunity of meeting the plaintiff's case by filing affidavits in opposition.

The cases of Kemble v. Kean, 6 Sim. 333; Dietrichsen v. Cabburn, 2 Ph. 52; and Hills v. Croll, 2 Ph. 60, were referred to.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without hearing Bacon

(a) In the translation on the part of the defendants of this passage, it is thus rendered: "England rewards, indeed, only with money."

(b) This date, as it afterwards appeared, should have been the 18th; but in the affidavit first filed it was stated to be the 11th.

in reply) said, that the urgency of the application compelled the Court to act upon ex parte statements. But although this was a difficulty of frequent occurrence, it was one of which the defendants could not complain, if they declined, as they were entitled to do, to give an undertaking which would relieve this Court from the difficulty. As to the existence of the contract, there was no doubt. The contract signed by Mr. Lumley, and the only one, was that which contained the supplemental article, and which alone the Wagners ever possessed. They had, moreover, communicated subsequently with Mr. Lumley, on the footing of this being a contract binding on them all. It was expressly referred to as such by their letter of the 21st of February. It commented on it, but made no protest against it. Then what was the doctrine of the Court? If an individual contracted to perform an act for a valuable consideration, and, as part of the same contract, stipulated to forbear to do whatever was inconsistent with it, the Court would restrain that party from acting in derogation of the latter part of the agreement, although the Court might not be able to enforce specific performance of the former part. This view of the case was followed by Lord Cottenham, in Dietrichsen v. Cabburn, 2 Ph. 52, after several previous cases, which were supposed to throw some doubt on the practice; but he had merely acted on a precedent established by Lord Eldon in Morris v. Colman, 18 Ves. 437. The idea of the injunction being only incidental to the specific performance of the entire contract, seemed to have caused some doubts, which proved to be without foundation. As to Mr. Lumley's performance of his part of the contract, how did the case stand? He had left in the hands of the agent, Dr. Bacher, a fund sufficient to pay the 300*l.* and Mr. Albert Wagner had named Hamburgh and the 2nd of April as the place and time at which the money might be paid, thereby dispensing with the 15th of March as being a time which was to be deemed of the essence of the contract. His Honour did not think the payment at the particular period was a condition precedent; but undoubtedly, if Mr. Lumley had not acted as he had done, the Court could not have assisted him. He must therefore grant the injunction, the defendants having liberty, if so advised, to give notice the next day to dissolve it.

Bacon said that the motion was not pressed against M. Albert Wagner.

Friday, May 7.—A motion to dissolve the injunction was now brought on, further affidavits on both sides having been filed. By the affidavits of the Wagners, it was altogether denied that Dr. Bacher acted in any way as their agent; but it was stated that they had treated with Bacher as the plaintiff's agent.

The opinion of Dr. Bach on the Prussian Law was put in evidence on behalf of the defendants, and was in the following terms:—

"In applying the law of Prussia to the agreement of 9th November, 1851, as it originally stood, with regard to the payment of 300*l.* stipulated therein, to be made in Berlin, on the 15th March, 1852, Mdlle. Wagner would have had the right, on the day subsequent to the non-fulfilment of this condition by Mr. Lumley, to determine forthwith the said agreement; but, as the law expresses, at her own risk. If she then could prove satisfactorily to the Court the fact of such non-fulfilment on the 15th March, 1852, not only the determination of said agreement would have been confirmed by the Court, but she would have been entitled to such damages as she might have been able to shew to have actually sustained in consequence of such non-fulfilment. On the other hand, had she been unable to prove the non-fulfilment, then, and in such case, Mr. Lumley would have been entitled to full damages in consequence of such determination.—General Common Law of Prussia, part I. titulus 1, secs. 408, 409, 410; part I. titulus 13, sec. 27.

"The same principle of law laid down as to the first agreement will apply to the altered clause by the letter dated Berlin, 9th March, as regards the date of April 2nd. Mr. Lumley having accepted this condition by his letter of the 18th of March, so as to give it a bilateral character, provided that the obligation to the payment was stipulated to be on the 2nd of April.

"A notarial protest against any act of commission or omission, and a declaration consequent thereon of the protesting party, is received as evidence of all such facts in all the courts of Prussia and Germany: such an instrument is considered an official notice by the law of nations. And I am strongly inclined to the opinion that a Prussian Court of justice would have given relief to Mdlle. Wagner, and effect to her protest, made subsequent to the 2nd of April, in consequence of Mr. Lumley's second non-fulfilment of the agreement by his letter; especially if she could likewise satisfy the court that Dr. Bacher was Mr. Lumley's agent, and not hers, when he signed at Paris, and in her absence, a clause in favour of his principal, but onerous to herself, and prejudicial to her interests, and for which he had no documentary power of attorney or other authority given by herself.

"The Court, under such circumstances, would require strict proof of the bona fides of the parties, and of the absence of any collusion between the plaintiff and his agent, even were the agent afterwards authorised by the defendant to act also for her. The law is very jealous in such a case.—General Common Law of Prussia, part I. titulus 13, s. 27. Borneman, book III. s. 214; book IV., b. 236, 237.

"Mdlle. Wagner, being a Prussian subject, has attained the age of majority on the completion of her 24th year. I am further of opinion, that if there is evidence to show that Dr. Bacher was Mr. Lumley's attorney or agent on the 9th of November, 1851, at the time when Mdlle. Wagner executed the first contract at Berlin, he could not sign on her behalf a clause of renunciation to a right of profit, without a special act of attorney; or, at least, an instrument qualifying him as her general mandatory, and without which the clause of renunciation was ab initio of no validity whatever, and not binding upon Mdlle. Wagner, unless by a subsequent express consent. Even were Mr. Lumley not Dr. Bacher's principal, he would still have been required by law to obtain from Dr. Bacher the exhibition of a power of attorney or other mandatory instrument from Mdlle. Wagner, in order to enable him to hold Mdlle. Wagner responsible for any infringement of the said renunciatory clause. — General Common Law of Prussia, part I. titulus 13, secs. 22, 103, 104, 228, 91, 92, 96. (Signed)

"ADOLPHUS BACH.

Bethell, Malins, and Martindale appeared in support of the motion to dissolve the injunction.

Bacon and Hislop Clarke appeared for the plaintiff.

Bethell, in reply.

The following authorities, in addition to those before cited, were referred to: Flack v. Holm, 1 J. & W. 405; Story's Conflict of Laws, 375, s. 280; Don v. Lippman, 5 Cl. & Fin. 1,12, & 13.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The jurisdiction of the Court sought to be administered on this occasion was founded on a clause in the agreement between Madlle. Wagner and her father on the one hand, and Mr. Lumley on the other hand. [His Honour here stated the clause.] It was said first that this clause formed no part of the agreement, and that Dr. Bacher introduced it without her authority. It was also said that it had been unfairly obtained—that it had been obtained by a course of practice on the part of the plaintiff, or of his agent, Dr. Bacher, which would not entitle the former to the assistance of the Court, even if it did in fact form a part of the agreement. It was also said that the plaintiff had failed in the performance on his part of a certain other clause, and, moreover, that the bill proceeded on misstatements of material matters of fact, and that, under these circumstances, the general jurisdiction of the Court, to which he had referred, could not be set in action. The first question the Court had to consider was, whether this particular clause formed a part of the agreement between the parties. The facts appeared to be these. [His Honour repeated the facts.] If the matter had stopped here, he should be of opinion that the clause had been introduced without authority, and that, therefore, it could not be considered binding on the Wagners. But agency might be created by antecedent authority, or by subsequent adoption, and here it was important to ascertain whether there had been any subsequent adoption by the Wagners. His Honour observed that, in his opinion, the case might be disposed of without the Court deciding on conflicting matters of fact between the parties. [His Honour then reviewed the subsequent proceedings between the parties.] The first question in the case—namely, whether that clause was part of the contract—must, in his opinion, be decided, without any doubt, in the affirmative, and that, if the clause had been originally introduced by Dr. Bacher, without authority, it had afterwards been sanctioned by the Wagners, and was binding on them. The next question was as to the unfairness imputed to Mr. Lumley and to Dr. Bacher with respect to this agreement. On this point, it must be borne in mind that there was no imputation as to the unfairness of the contract, except with respect to the clause of which he had just been speaking, for it was not suggested that any advantage had been taken of this young lady as to the remuneration which she was to receive. The whole of the comments of the defendant's counsel on the unfairness turned upon that clause having been introduced by Mr. Lumley's agent, to enable Mr. Lumley, it was said, to take advantage of her. In reference to the clause itself, he might observe that it seemed to be admitted on all hands that some clause of this kind was "a clause of course" in all contracts of this nature, for it only restrained this young lady from entering into professional engagements which would be inconsistent with her engagement with Mr Lumley. It appeared that Mr. Lumley introduced a clause in the contract which was a subject of discussion between Dr. Bacher and the Wagners, before the contract at Berlin was signed; and it appeared that the objections raised by the latter were objections to the improper generality of the clause; (that is, that it went too far) and that it was most unusual to restrain a singer of eminence from singing at private concerts without the consent of the person with whom she had made an engagement. It would appear that the Wagners did not object to the clause in toto. [His Honour then stated the facts relating to this clause.] With their eyes open, it would appear that they were content to leave the use of that clause in Mr. Lumley's hands. For these reasons, therefore, he did not think that the clause was unfairly introduced into the contract. The next point was that in consequence of the non-performance of the 8th clause, Mr. Lumley had lost his right to sue on the agreement either in law or equity. The stipulation was, that Mr. Lumley should pay to the Wagners the sum of 300*l.* by a particular time. Really, as he understood the rule of law, this stipulation was what was called an independent and not a conditional clause of the agreement—that was that the non-payment of the money at the time and place mentioned in the agreement did not of itself destroy the agreement. He admitted, however, that any breach of it might affect the question of damages, but the simple non-performance of it would not be a bar to an action, for it might be excused. If he thought that this were a condition precedent, the performance of which had not been dispensed with, Mr. Lumley would have a legal title, and then the Court would have nothing to do with the conduct of the parties as to their fair dealing, but the only right the Court would recognise would be the legal right to bring an action on the contract. The well-known doctrine as to time being of the essence of the contract was peculiar to this Court in cases of specific performance; but it had nothing to do with the question before the Court. Although, however, he did not consider it as a dependent condition, it was, he must say, of essential importance to be considered, because if there had been shewn on the part of Mr. Lumley want of willingness or good faith to comply with the stipulation, he thought that gentleman would have come in vain into that Court to ask it to exercise that very stringent power which it possessed by way of injunction. It would be incumbent, therefore, on Mr. Lumley, not having paid the money, as it was allowed he had not done, at the time stipulated, to shew under what circumstances the non-payment took place, and that they were such as to excuse his non-performance of this part of the contract. It was requisite, therefore, carefully to examine what took place with reference to the payment of the 300*l.* [His Honour then repeated the facts relating to the non-payment.] He thought, therefore, that, under these circumstances, the defendants were not justified on the 5th of April in entering into a new contract with Mr. Gye nor in entering into a notarial protest, on the 6th, putting an end to that which already existed with Mr. Lumley. If that were the case, he did not think that anything which took place afterwards was of very great importance, because, in fact, the whole contract, and the circumstances attending its fulfilment or non-fulfilment, were then at an end. The money was tendered on the 15th of April, and an earlier tender was excused by the circumstances which took place after the contract was broken. Dr. Bacher had sworn that he had the 300*l.* with him at Hamburgh, and his Honour saw no reason to doubt but that he had that sum with him as a means of performing the contract on the part of Mr. Lumley. The non-payment of the money during the time extending between the 15th of March and the 15th of April was sufficiently excused by the letter of the 9th of March, and also by the communication which had taken place with Bacher. He found that the protest was in general terms for the non-payment of the money on the 15th of March, and he could not really doubt that there was a right of action upon the contract. It had been represented that there were mis-statements in the bill, but he did not think that any of them were material, or that the mis-statement as to the date of the letter of the 18th of March was sufficient to make the bill fall as a ground for sustaining the injunction. If that were so—if the agreement were such as had been stated—if there had been a breach of the agreement—if Mr. Lumley had not lost his rights under that agreement—he really thought that there was a case for following the opinion of Lord Cottenham in the case of Dietrichsen v. Cabburn, where his Lordship stated that he did not see why cases of actual partnership should be more favoured in the exercise of the jurisdiction by injunction than others, and the opinion of Lord Eldon in the case of Morris v Colman. He had no doubt as to the facts and the law of the case, and he thought that it was a case for the interference of the Court by way of injunction. He stated this was his opinion when the motion was first made, and he was bound to act upon his own opinion. He should regret if the view which he took were erroneous, and if injury were sustained by the parties; but he knew that if such were the case, his decision could be corrected elsewhere. As to the point which had been urged that this was a foreign contract, that really was a question which was not material here. If it were a valid contract, and Madlle. Wagner was bound not to act in contravention of its stipulations, any references to the law of the place where it was entered into, or the mode of proceeding there, was unnecessary to be considered, and the Court would not leave the party to a remedy by an action for damages, but interfere by injunction. In this case there was a contract, and the Court was bound to prevent any violation of it, so far as it had the power of doing so. For these reasons he should continue the injunction, and if the defendants wished it, the plaintiff must undertake to bring an action.

Bacon asked for costs.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the costs of the motion must be costs in the cause.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Reported by JAMES PATERSON, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

ANSTRUTHER v. EAST OF FIFE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway—Landowner—Injunction—Compelling to make railway—Paying back deposits.

A railway company, soliciting their Bill in Parliament, wrote to A. a landed proprietor, but not a shareholder, that in return for his support they would refer all his claims to a certain arbiter. A. agreed, and with his support the Bill passed, but no step was ever taken to make the railway. At last the shareholders resolved to go to Parliament to dissolve their company and have the deposits returned. A. then prayed an injunction to restrain the directors from either going to Parliament or paying back the deposits, until their agreement with him should be performed and the statute complied with:

Held, the circumstances did not amount to a special contract sufficient to sustain such injunction.

Semble, a mere landowner, as such, cannot compel a railway company to make their railway, where no step has ever been taken towards its execution.

This was an appeal from the Court of Session in Scotland. The appellant had filed his bill for an injunction under the following circumstances:—In the year 1845, certain individuals formed themselves into a company, for the purpose of making a railway from Markinch to Anstruther Easter, with a branch to the Kirkland Works, to be called "The East of Fife Railway." As the projected line passed through plaintiff's lands, he entered into communication with the promoters, and on their removing some of his objections to the route, he intimated that he would give them his support. While they were soon after soliciting their Bill in Parliament he entered int terms with them contained in following letter from their solicitor:—

"24 June, 1846.

"Sir,—In reference to the conversation which the deputation of the East of Fife Railway Company have had with you, on the subject of your claims against that company, both as heir in possession of the estate of Anstruther, by the formation of that railway, and for your support of and exertions in regard to the measure, I have to offer you, on behalf of the company, that all such claims shall be referred to Thomas Rennie Scott, of Castlemains, near Douglas, as sole arbiter, and that in terms of the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act. The deputation suggest Mr. Scott, as they understand he was proposed by the Caledonian Company as sole arbiter in reference to your Lanarkshire property, and is now acting as arbiter in reference to their claims. "I am," &c.

The bill then alleges that plaintiff approved of the arbiter proposed, and that on the faith of the agreement contained in this letter, he not only withdrew all opposition, but gave his best support to the Bill, which duly passed on 16th July, 1846. The preamble of the Act is to this effect:—"Whereas the making of a railway, &c. would be a great public advantage, by facilitating communication between, &c.; and whereas the persons hereinafter named are willing at their own expense to carry such undertaking into execution, but the same cannot be effected without the authority of Parliament," &c. By the Act, the period within which lands were to be purchased is limited to three years, and the period for the completion of the works to seven years from the passing of the Act. But no step had ever been taken towards the formation of the railway or the purchase of the lands, and only 5*l.* per share of the capital had been paid up. The shareholders at a meeting in March, 1849, resolved, that the directors should forthwith proceed to pay back the money to the shareholders, and to apply to Parliament to dissolve and wind up the company (there being no Winding-up Act for Scotland). The injunction thereupon prayed for by plaintiff was "to restrain the said defendants (directors) from taking any steps or proceedings having for their object the dissolution of the said company, and from returning or paying back to the shareholders the money advanced and paid by them into the said company in the shape of deposits or calls on the shares of the capital stock of the said company, held by the shareholders thereof, and from violating the contract or agreement entered into between the plaintiff and the said company, so long as the said agreement remains unimplemented by the defendants, and from acting in any other way prejudicial to the interests of the plaintiff under the said contract or agreement, or contrary to the provisions of the Statute incorporating the said company." The defendant demurred, on the ground that the plaintiff was not a shareholder, and that the agreement was not to make the railway, but merely to refer to the arbiter any disputes if they should arise. The Court of Session dismissed the bill with costs, and the plaintiff appealed to the House of Lords.

Rolt, Q.C. and Powell, for appellant.—A landed proprietor on a line of railway, for making which an Act has been obtained, is entitled to a mandamus to compel the company to go on and make the railway. (R. v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 10 Ad. & El. 531.) A landowner can be in no worse position than a shareholder; for the principle is, that it is for the public advantage as well as their private interest that the railway should be made. Here there is also a special contract. Appellant withdrew his opposition, and forbore to give his support to other schemes on the faith that this railway would be made, and the Court will enforce specific performance. (Edwards v. Grand Junction Company, 1 My. & Cr. 650; Stanley v. Chester and Birkenhead Company, 9 Sim. 264.) In these circumstances, all that is required in order to ground an application for an injunction is to shew, as we have done, that defendants intend so to deal with the funds of the company as to render it impossible to carry out the scheme. The prayer of the injunction is not to restrain defendants from going to Parliament to ask powers to dissolve the company, which we admit we cannot prevent (Heathcote v. North Staffordshire Company, 20 L. J. 82, Ch); but if the injunction is too large, we are willing that it should be cut down, so as not to include this. [LORD CHANCELLOR.—Have you since brought your action, to have your rights established?] We have, and have lost it; but we may still appeal. [LORD CHANCELLOR.—Can you shew me a single case in which Equity has interfered to compel a railway company to make a railway where no step has ever been taken to execute the works?] Perhaps not.

Bethel, Q. C. for the respondents, was not heard.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—My lords, in this case your lordships are asked to decide the most important questions of law which could arise, if they could be maintained upon this interlocutor. What is prayed for is a general injunction at the very period when, in a suit for specific performance, the right has been denied by the Court below—the absolute right upon which this very injunction must be founded, and upon which this injunction must issue, upon the assumption that the right will be established and that not now being before your lordships' House, you are asked to set up that injunction which has been dissolved in effect by the Courts in Scotland. Now, my lords, the case is of this nature, there being a common railway Act of Parliament, having nothing peculiar about it, the appellant, who is a large landed proprietor, appears to have interfered, or to have mixed himself up with the company, in his character of a landed proprietor. Before the passing of the Act, there was an agreement, as it is called, depending upon two letters, the binding nature of which, and the terms of which, would require great consideration before they could be executed as an agreement, but the effect of which letters is, that all the appellant claims in respect of his property, which may be taken or may not be taken, and his claims for services rendered to the company towards obtaining the Act of Parliament, are to be referred to arbitration. There is not the slightest proof that any attempt has been made to carry that alleged agreement into effect; and then, as the company has in point of fact failed, for there has not been a single act done towards the execution of any of the works, the company having failed to carry its purpose into execution, the appellant applies for an injunction, which he prays in these terms [His lordship then read the prayer, as above quoted]. He means in the first instance to bring an action at law to have his rights declared, but he desires in the first instance this injunction. Now, my lords, suppose such an injunction to be obtained, it would be one of the most important matters that could possibly come before your lordships. It has never been established that a mere landowner, as such, can come and ask that a company, not having taken a single step towards the execution of an intended project—and I speak now of a railway—shall be compelled to execute that railway. However, upon that I give no opinion, because, if that is to be decided, it is a point of so much importance, that it must be decided by a different course of proceeding from that which is before your lordships' House. Now, my lords, as regards the agreement, it is impossible that there can be any injunction. It is an agreement that there shall be a reference to arbitration, and, before you can take any step to enforce an injunction as regards that agreement, it must have been shown that the reference to arbitration has failed, that the arbitrator had been desired to act, but no step has been taken. The case is perfectly naked in that respect. There is no foundation for saying that any step has been taken towards the execution of the contract, and what is it that is asked of your lordships? First of all it is perfectly clear, that the terms in which the injunction is prayed for, would include that Act of Parliament. It is admitted, that a person, standing in the situation in which the appellant stands (because he is not a shareholder) is not a person with whom a contract has been specifically made, he is a person who may be damaged, or who may be benefited by the act to be done, but he is not a person, upon the point upon which I am now addressing your lordships, who has any contract entered into with him; and what is asked of your lordships is this, that you will prevent the company from going to Parliament, which gave the power, and asking Parliament to put an end to this proprietary, as the project may turn out to be mischievous, instead of beneficial. Now, my lords, if a party has any right to oppose such an Act, he is at perfect liberty to go before the House and be heard upon the ground of his interest, if he have any; but is it possible that an injunction can be granted in that respect? Then it is said, you may qualify the injunction, that is to say, you may cut off three-fourths of that which is asked, and grant something simply for the purpose of this appeal. But I am sure that your lordships, will not allow parties to withdraw a part of that which they ask, and which is the material part of it, and then to fall back upon something which is comparatively unimportant, simply for the purpose of maintaining an appeal before your lordships' House. My lords, I think it is perfectly clear, that upon the first point laid, your lordships would never be advised to decide that point upon a pleading like that before your lordships. Upon the point of a decree against the Act of Parliament, I think that is out of the question. Then comes what has been much insisted on at the Bar, namely, the prayer, that the company may be restrained from paying back to the shareholders the money they have paid them. What possible right, my lords, can this landowner have to interfere with the money of the shareholders, as between themselves? If the money is wrongfully paid back to them, they will, if they are liable, still be liable to every action which exists now in the appellant. But he has no right to these specific funds. They could be paid without his interference in either one way or the other, and I think, my lords, that a more mischievous thing could not be imagined than that any mere landholder should be able to come to your lordships' House, seeking to interfere with the manner in which the money of the shareholders must be appropriated (for it amounts to that) if the money is to be paid back. If this large prayer were granted, it would be sufficient to interfere with the actual arrangements of the company, with regard to their own money. My lords, no such injunction ever was granted, and I believe never will be granted. The action at law has failed, and the appellant I hope, will not be advised to bring it to your lordships' House. If he should do such a thing, it will be considered then in a shape to enable your lordships to give a clear opinion upon the point of law, but as the matter stands I think it is quite impossible to maintain this appeal, and, therefore, I propose to your lordships, that it be dismissed with costs.

Interlocutor affirmed with costs.

Re WALKER'S Trust.

Will—Construction.

A. gave a life interest in all his property to his wife, and after her death he directed that all his property in the funds or elsewhere of every description should be sold and equally divided between his children, B. C. D. E. and F.; and he further directed that his executors should, upon dividing the whole of his said property equally as above directed, immediately lay out the whole of the moneys that would belong to D. E. and F. his above three daughters, as their shares of his said property in the Three per Cent. Consolidated Annuities; and that neither of them, his before-mentioned daughters, should have the power of receiving more than the dividends due upon their respective shares. But in case of the marriage of all or either of his aforesaid daughters, the child or children of either of them his said daughters that should outlive their mother or mothers, should have his, her, or their mothers' shares at their own disposal, both principal and interest; and in case of the death of one or more of his aforesaid children that might die unmarried, his, her, or their shares and share should be equally divided among the survivors of his aforesaid children or their children, and he gave and bequeathed unto his executrix and executor all the rest and residue of his estate and effects both real and personal: one of the daughters, who outlived the testator and the tenant for life, died without having been married; on the petition by her executor for her share of the testator's property, which had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, it was Held (affirming the decision of the Court below), that her surviving brothers and sisters, and not her representatives, were entitled.

This was an appeal petition from an order of his Honour the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce.

William Walker, by his will, dated the 27th of December, 1799, after giving a life interest in all his property to his wife, directed that at the death of his wife all his aforesaid property in the funds or elsewhere, of every description, should be sold and equally divided between his children,—William Walker, Josiah Henry Walker, Ann Kemp, Elizabeth Sarah Walker, and Sarah Mary Walker; and that his executors should, upon dividing the whole of his said property equally as above directed, immediately lay out the whole of the moneys that would belong to his above three daughters, as their shares of the said property, in the Three per Cent. Consolidated Annuities, and that neither of them, his aforesaid daughters, should have the power of receiving more than the dividends due upon their respective shares; but in case of the marriage of all or either of his aforesaid daughters, the child or children of either of them his said daughters that should outlive their mother or mothers should have his, her, or their mothers' shares at their own disposal, both principal and interest; and in case of the death of one or more of his aforesaid children that might die unmarried, his, her, or their shares and share should be equally divided among the survivors of his aforesaid children or their children, and he appointed and constituted his aforesaid wife and his son, William Walker, executrix and executor of that his will, and he gave and bequeathed unto his executrix and executor all the rest and residue of his said estate and effects, both real and personal.

William Walker, the testator, died 1802; his widow in 1838.

Elizabeth Sarah Walker, one of the daughters of the testator, died in May, 1849, without having been married, and by her will appointed Joseph Piper (the petitioner) her executor. William Walker paid into court 234*l*. 11*s*.; the produce of the share of the said testator's property bequeathed to his daughter, Elizabeth Sarah Walker. The petitioner, as the sole executor of E. S. Walker, in the events which had happened, claimed to be absolutely entitled to the trust fund. On the hearing of the petition before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, his Honour dismissed it, but without costs. From this order the petitioner appealed.

Shebbeare, for the petitioner, argued first, that by virtue of the direction for a division of the property upon the decease of the testator's wife, each of his children took an absolute interest in their respective shares, and that, consequently, the said Sarah Elizabeth Walker became in the first instance absolutely entitled to a fifth share. Secondly, that the effect of the immediately succeeding clause was merely to affect the shares of the three daughters, with trusts in favour of their children, in case of their leaving any, but not to reduce the previous gifts to mere life estates, the restriction as to their receiving only the dividends not defeating the vesting of their shares; and, consequently, in the event (which had happened), of there being no child of Sarah Elizabeth Walker, the absolute gift to her remained, and that her share, therefore, was vested in the petitioner as her executor. (Ring v. Hardwick, 2 Beav. 352; Meyer v. Townsend, 3 Beav. 443; Lassence v. Tierney, 1 Mac. & Gord. 551.) Thirdly, that the third clause, which referred to all the children (as well sons as daughters) of the testator, was quite independent of the second, which related only to daughters; and that in order to make the third clause consistent with the first, which directed a division upon the death of the wife, this third clause must refer to a dying unmarried in the widow's lifetime: as otherwise the shares of the sons would be tied up during the whole of their lives, which could not be presumed to have been the intention of the testator; and it was to be observed that this clause did not, like the preceding, contain any direction for an investment or settlement. (Browne v. Lord Kenyon, 3 Madd. 410; Cripps v. Wolcott, 4 Madd. 11; Da Costa v. Keir, 3 Russ. 360; Home v. Pillans, 2 Myl. & Keen, 15; Edwards v. Edwards, 16 Jur. 259.) Lastly, that the residuary clause did not affect the question, as that would apply to a lapse by the death of either of the children, in the lifetime of the testator.

Follett, Steere, and Roxburgh, appeared for the several parties, and supported the order of the court below.

Shebbeare in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There can be no dispute as to the rules which govern this case. The rule of law is plain, the only difficulty is, as to the method of applying it to the present will. If there be an absolute gift in the commencement of a will, and subsequent modifications which do not exhaust the whole interest, or which do not take effect on the failure of such modifications, the absolute gift remains. It is also a general rule that if you dispose of a fund that is already ascertained after a tenancy for life, the period of division would be referable to the death of the tenant for life, if there is no period at which the division or distribution should take place. The main question, however, in the present case is, what was the intention of the testator. The testator gives the principal to his wife for life, and after her death to his sons and daughters. If that clause had stood alone, without doubt each of the daughters would have taken an absolute gift. The testator then directs that when the period for division shall have arrived, the shares of his daughters shall be invested in the Three per Cents. and the interest paid to them for life. The death of the tenant for life is not the period of distribution, because it is not until the death of the mother that the daughters are to come into the possession of the dividends. "But in case of the marriage of all or either of his aforesaid daughters," then the testator directed "that the child or children of either of them his said daughters that should outlive their mother or mothers, should have his, her, or their mother's share at their own disposal, both principal and interest;" so that after the death of a daughter leaving a child or children, there is a regular gift over in its or their favour. The interest of the daughters is restricted to their receipt of the dividends, and that at once shews that the death of the tenant for life was not the period for division, but that it must of necessity apply to the death of the daughter. Then "in case of the death of one or more of his aforesaid children, dying unmarried, his, her, or their shares or share he directed should be equally divided among the survivors of his aforesaid children, or their children." Now, by this clause, should either of his children die unmarried, there is a gift over to his surviving children and their children, and although that clause refers to the sons as well as the daughters, yet such subsequent modification will not have the effect of cutting down the previous gift, and it is no reason to say that it does not apply to the daughters, merely because it cannot apply to the sons. If that clause had stood alone, it would have admitted of two constructions, referable to the death of the testator, or the tenant for life; but the latter clause is explained and governed by the preceding clause. Now that clause creates a gift in favour of the children of the daughters, and it is clear therefore that it does not, and cannot, refer to the death of the mother, but to the death of the daughters themselves. There are no words to shew that the daughters were only tenants for life, but no doubt that is the effect of the will, and in a case like the present, where the Court can put a natural construction on one clause and has doubt as to the other, it must take the clear construction as its rule for the government of that which is not clear. I am, therefore, of opinion that the share of such of the daughters as should die unmarried is not to be taken as referring only to such as should so die in the lifetime of the tenant for life, but is a restriction taking effect at the deaths of the daughters themselves, and consequently that the share of Elizabeth Sarah Walker survived to such of her brothers and sisters as were living at her death. The order of the Court below must therefore be affirmed.

The petition of appeal was dismissed, but, following the order of the Court below, without costs.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

May 1, 3, 4.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES.)

SPARROW v. THE OXFORD, WORCESTER, AND WOLVERHAMPTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway company—Notice to take part of manufactory—92nd section of Lands Clauses' Consolidation Act.

A railway company gave notice to manufacturers to take a small piece of land, which was inclosed within the wall surrounding their manufactory, but which at the time the Act passed, and when the notices were given, was not covered with buildings, though it was soon after:

Held, that as the vacant space was necessary for the operations of the manufactory, it constituted a part thereof, within the meaning of the 92nd section of the Lands Clauses' Consolidation Act, incorporated in the special Act:

Held also, that according to that section, the provisions of which must be construed as optional, and not imperative, as far as the owners of land are concerned, the railway company were compellable if they insisted on taking a part, to take the whole of the manufactory.

Held also, reversing the decision of the Court below, that certain sections of the special Act, by which certain benefits were reserved for the owners of the manufactory, and another adjoining owner of property, were not inconsistent with the 92nd clause, so as to prevent its incorporation, on the ground that if the company took the whole of the manufactory, such reservation would be useless: first, because non constat that the owners of the manufactory would not be willing to sell a part only thereof; and secondly, because the reservation was not for their exclusive benefit.

Held also, that another section of the special Act, which no building was to be erected on part of the land required by the company, without the consent of the company in writing, was not inconsistent with the notion of the incorporation of the 92nd section.

The mere fact that in another section of the special Act, the company were required to purchase certain properties, was held not to be inconsistent with the intention that the 92nd clause should be incorporated in the special Act.

A railway company having given notice to take the surface of land which constituted part of a manufactory, and which they were restrained from taking by an interim injunction:

Held, that they could not on the hearing set up the case that they could avoid taking part of the manufactory, by making a tunnel underneath it.

Semble, by tunnelling under part of a manufactory, a company in effect would take part of the manufactory.

Where the construction of an Act of Parliament under which property is to be compulsorily taken, is doubtful, it should be construed most favourably to those who seek to defend the property from innovation.

In this case the bill was filed by Messrs. Sparrow, the owners of, or parties interested in, certain pieces of land at Wolverhampton, on which was situated a large tin-plate manufactory. The object of it was to restrain the defendants, the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway Company, from entering upon, or taking possession of, the pieces of land which had been required by them by their notices of the 25th of June, 1851, or mentioned in the schedule to the defeazance of a bond given by them, and from committing waste thereon, and from proceeding to take any measures to acquire the same by compulsory purchase, or at least that they might be so restrained, unless they, at the same time, proceeded to purchase the whole of the aforesaid manufactory, and made compensation to the plaintiffs for all consequential damages.

The Lords Justices, overruling the decision of his Honour the Vice-Chancellor Turner (reported 18 Law T. Rep. 453), granted an injunction until the hearing; and by an agreement between the parties, the cause now came on to be heard before their lordships, upon affidavits made by both parties, which were to be treated as evidence in the cause.

The principal questions were, whether the pieces of land, numbered 161 in the plan, which the company had given notice to take, were not part of the plaintiffs' manufactory, and if so, whether the defendants were not compellable, under the 92nd section of the Lands Clauses' Consolidation Act, at the option of the plaintiffs, to take the whole of the manufactory. The defendants contended that that section was not incorporated in the special Act, as being inconsistent with its provisions.

Another question raised for the first time at the hearing before their lordships, but not much relied on, was, that at all events the company might make a tunnel under that part of the land which they had given notice to take, and as they would not thereby, as they contended, take any part of the manufactory, they could not, even supposing the 92nd section of the Lands Clauses' Consolidation Act to be incorporated in the special Act, be compelled to take the whole of the manufactory.

Another question, to which the attention of the Vice-Chancellor in refusing the injunction appears to have been mainly directed,—namely, that the notice to take the land was not delivered in time—was in effect given up by the plaintiffs.

The material facts of the case, and the arguments of the counsel on both sides, are sufficiently stated in their lordships' judgments.

Sir W. Page Wood, Malins, Shapter, and Gray, for the plaintiffs.—They cited Brocklebank v. The Whitehaven Junction Railway Company, 15 Sim. 632; Barker v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company, 2 De Gex & S. 55; 5 Rail Cas. 401.

Bethell, Rolt, Willes, and J. W. Bovill, for the defendants, cited Taylor v. Clemson, 3 Railw. Cas. 65, 725; Doe dem. Armistead v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company, 20 L. J. N.S. 219, Q.B.; Reg. v. The London and South-Western Railway Company, 12 Q. B. Rep. 775.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—I do not think we need call for a reply. We have had ample time since this was before us for considering the subject, and we have turned it over in our minds upon more occasions than one, and more particularly as we have had plenty of time, because the question was not new to us, it having been substantially discussed upon the motion for the injunction. The bill was filed on the 10th of September last, the object of which was to obtain an injunction restraining the defendants, the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway Company, from entering upon or taking possession of certain pieces of land required by them in the notices they gave on the 25th of June, 1851, mentioned in the schedule and the defeazance of the bond, which they afterwards gave; and from proceeding to take measures to acquire the said pieces of land by compulsory purchase. The plaintiffs are owners or parties interested in a large tin-plate manufactory at Wolverhampton, a model of which is now before us, and it appears that one of these gentlemen purchased the manufactory from some person of the name of Henderson, about three or four years ago, shortly before the time when this present Act of Parliament, which has been so long under discussion (the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway (Deviation) Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 133), passed, which obtained the Royal assent on the 11th of August, 1848; and soon after they purchased it, having been left, as I collect, rather in a dilapidated state, they improved it, and added some buildings, which buildings were situate upon the line of the projected railway. The company having been previously incorporated, the Act of Parliament, as I have already stated, passed on the 11th of August, 1848; and they took no steps with reference to the land that they required, for this portion of their intended line at least, until the 25th of June, 1851, nearly three years after the Royal assent was given to their bill, nearly, therefore, at the expiration of the time during which they had a power by compulsory process of taking land on giving such notice within the time limited for that purpose by the Act. They did give a notice to the present plaintiffs that the railway would pass through their land, and that 19¼ perches would be required by the company; that it was their intention to take the same and contract for it; and they thereby offered to contract for the purchase of the plaintiffs' interest, and for compensation for damages, &c. It was such a notice, in short, as is required by the Act to be given by the company when they want compulsorily to take land belonging to another person through whose land the railway is to pass. The plaintiffs, upon the receipt of that notice from the company, delivered a counter-notice, claiming that if the company took the piece of land which they proposed to take—a small portion of that which I will at present call their manufactory—then they would require the company to take the whole of the manufactory; and that counter-notice which they gave is authorised, as they contend, by the 92nd section of the general Act, which has been so often under consideration, and which provides shortly, "that no party shall at any time be required to sell or convey to the promoters of the undertaking (that is, of the railway), a part only of any house or other building or manufactory, if such party be willing and able to sell and convey the whole thereof." The company disputed their obligation to take the whole, and contended that they were entitled to take a part only, which was included in their notice, namely, about nineteen perches, being the little portion that runs to the southern end of what for the present I will call their manufactory, skirting along the Stour Valley Railway. In this state of things, on the 10th of September last, the plaintiffs filed their bill for an injunction to restrain the defendants (the company) from proceeding to take a part, without taking the whole. That was substantially the object of the injunction. An application was made, shortly after the bill was filed, to his Honour the Vice-Chancellor Turner, to obtain an interim injunction; but his Honour did not grant that injunction, thinking, amongst other things, for his refusal, that the 92nd section of the general Act did not form part of the company's Act, that it was not by implication incorporated with it: and there were other grounds also upon which he refused to grant the injunction. The ... to us by way of appeal from his Honour the Vice-Chancellor Turner, and the case was argued at considerable length in the month of February last. We thought at the time, all we had then to decide was this, whether a sufficient case was made out to make it expedient, that in the mean time, and until the cause could be heard, the defendants should be restrained from doing what they were proposing to do, and that matters should be left in statu quo till the cause was heard; and therefore we granted an interim injunction; and at the same time, by arrangement with the parties gave them a facility to have the cause heard speedily, both parties agreeing that, instead of examining witnesses, each party should make what affidavits he thought fit, and those affidavits should be treated as evidence in the cause, and that the cause should be set down to be heard before us, and should be heard therefore speedily, and not in the ordinary course. It has now been so heard; and the question is, upon this hearing, whether or not the plaintiffs have entitled themselves to the relief which they ask. Now, there were two main questions for consideration; one a question of fact, and the other a question of law. The question of fact was this; whether that which the defendants proposed to take did, within the meaning of the Act, constitute a part of the manufactory? and, secondly, the question of law was,—supposing it to constitute part of the manufactory, were they enabled to take it without taking the whole? Now, on the question of fact, that again divides itself into two questions; one of which is, perhaps, rather a question of law and of fact, arising out of the consideration of that which is mere fact. What they proposed to take was a certain piece of land inclosed within the wall that surrounded the manufactory, but which, at the time the Act passed, was not covered with buildings, though it was within the wall of that which is called the manufactory. Soon after the passing of the Act (the plaintiffs having made their purchase just before the Act passed), considerable additional buildings were put upon that piece of land, which was vacant at the time the Act passed, or the greater portion of it was vacant; the whole, probably, was vacant when the Act passed; additional buildings were put upon it, and there can be no possible doubt but that these additional buildings constitute part of the manufactory in the strictest sense; but then it was contended, that what was to be looked at was, not the state of matters when the company proceeded to take the land, but the state of the property at the time when they gave the notice; and it was said, at that time those buildings did not exist; at that time it vacant ground, within the wall, it is true, of the manufactory, but not having any manufacturing process carried on upon it, and therefore not constituting, within the meaning of the Act, part of the manufactory. Now we do not feel it necessary to decide the question, as a matter of law, what is to be regarded as the state of the property at the time the Act passed, or at the time when the land was taken by the company. We do not consider it at all necessary in the case to look at or to discuss that question; because we are both most clearly of opinion, without the least difficulty or hesitation, that this was, to all intents and purposes, part of the manufactory at the time the Act received the royal assent; and we think so, as a jury coming to the conclusion what did or did not, at that time, constitute a part of the manufactory. Well, on all these questions there may be nice lines sometimes, on which it may be difficult to say on which side of the line particular piece of land or a particular building lies; whether it be outside, so as not to be part of the manufactory, or inside, so as to be part of the manufactory? But we do not feel ourselves driven to any refined discussion about this case, because, looking at this model, which is taken to be an accurate representation, it appears (I speak this only for myself) that there is singularly little of vacant space within the wall. I can easily believe what one or two of the witnesses said, that they were always pressed for room in order to have a place where they might deposit their rubbish and the scoria that came from the furnaces. The manufactory could not go on without that, any more than it could go on without the furnace itself. It seems to me, and I am sure to my learned brother, to be perfectly clear that in this case, everything included within the wall constitutes part of the manufactory; and, indeed, when I say within that wall, describing a very large portion of the manufactory, the outer wall of the building is the wall. Sometimes there is a little vacant space between the buildings and the wall, which is meant for the purpose of inclosing and surrounding that which evidently, and popularly, and rationally constitutes part of the manufactory. Therefore, it seems to me to be perfectly immaterial to consider whether the buildings were on that vacant space, after the Act received the royal assent, or whether we are to consider the state of the property after the buildings were erected, or before; because, whether considered in the one light or the other, they clearly constituted part of the manufactory, within the only rational meaning that could be attributed to that word. Then, constituting part of the manufactory, the company giving notice that they would take a piece of land that constituted part of the manufactory, are they, or are they not, bound to take the whole of the manufactory? Now that depends upon a question of law, whether or not the 92nd section, which I have already read, was or was not, expressly or impliedly, incorporated into the special Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 133). Now, Mr. Willes referred to the language of the Lands Clauses Act itself to show (as if that was the text) whether it was incorporated or not. It may be one mode of ascertaining it; but it is not the best mode. The best mode is to look at the special Act, and see what the 2nd clause of the special Act says; and that Act says,—" Be it enacted, that the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act shall, so far as the same are applicable, and are not inconsistent with the provisions hereinafter contained, be incorporated with and form part of this Act." Now it is not disputed that the provisions of the 92nd section are applicable in the sense in which the words are thus used; but what was intended was, that the 92nd section was inconsistent with the provisions thereinafter contained; and it is upon that point that we have had—the greatest difficulty, I will not say, but I will say—the greatest pressure upon our minds; because it appears to have been the opinion of a judge of the highest eminence, and for whom we both, in common with all the profession, feel the most profound respect,—it appears to have been his opinion, that it was not incorporated within the Act; therefore we have felt very diffident (I speak for myself, and, I may say, my learned brother, is diffident) of the opinion we have formed; and the reason is, because it certainly appears to us pretty clearly to be decided in the contrary way from that which Vice-Chancellor Turner decided. We thought it pretty clear from the beginning, that there was nothing in any of the subsequent provisions inconsistent with the notion of the 92nd section being incorporated in that Act: and I proceed, therefore, shortly to see what are the grounds on which it was contended, here and before the Vice-Chancellor, that the 92nd section was not incorporated, because it is inconsistent with the Act. Now, I think the argument has always proceeded upon a fallacy. It was assumed that the 92nd section was imperative, as my learned brother just now said; it was assumed that the enactment was, that they must take it; whereas it only is, that they must take it if the other party requires it to be taken; but it would have been the height of injustice to enact that in all cases they must take it in invitum. The owners of the manufactory might say in many cases, "It is quite immaterial whether you take the whole or not,—it is immaterial to us whether you take merely this part or the whole;" and then they are not bound to take the rest. It seems to me, the whole argument on the part of the defendants has proceeded on this fallacy; for when one looks at the different arguments which have been deduced from the 12th, 13th, and 14th sections, and considering that the 92nd section was not, that, under all circumstances, the land must be taken, but only that it must be taken if the owner of the manufactory requires it to be taken, all the difficulty appears to me to vanish. The 13th section, which was mainly relied on, has enactments to this effect. It appears that a gentleman of the name of Crane was the owner of other adjoining land to this manufactory, and by arrangement between the plaintiffs (the owners of this property) and Mr. Crane, for their common convenience, it was arranged that there should be a side line, as it is called—a little private railway, that was to run on, for the accommodation of both the plaintiffs' works and Mr. Crane's,—that was to run on for a considerable way down to the west, so as to join, not this railway, but the Stour Valley Railway, evidently with a view to the accommodation of those parties who were interested in that side line or private railway. The 13th section enacted, "that such part of the railway, by that Act authorised to be made, as should pass through any of the several plots, pieces, or parcels of land, in the parish of Wolverhampton, &c. numbered 159, 160, 161, and 162, on the plan, and so much of the piece of land numbered 158, as was thereinafter defined (that is, those pieces of land for which this side line or private railway was to be formed), should be arched or covered over, &c.; and such arching or covering should commence at the centre of the south-eastern pier of the sixth arch of the Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Stour Valley Railway viaduct now erecting, &c.; and such arching or covering shall be continued in such manner and of such strength as shall make it sufficient to bear and carry over and upon the same a branch railway, or branch railways, to be worked by horse-power; and in case the owner or owners for the time being, and other parties interested in the said plots, pieces, or parcels of land, and the said company, should differ as to the manner of constructing, or as to the strength of such arching or covering, the same should be settled by arbitration, in manner prescribed by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, with respect to the settlement of disputes by arbitration." Now the argument was, that that provision is inconsistent with the notion that the company should take the whole of this manufactory. If so, it was said, for what purpose make an enactment about making a railway, which will in truth be their own railway?—they might deal with it as they thought fit. But there are two answers to that: first, the answer I have already hinted at, namely, that non constat the railway company would be called upon to take the manufactory—it might be that the plaintiffs might choose to retain their manufactory, and then this secures to them the benefit; and secondly, there is another argument, which completely satisfies this clause; which is this, that this side line or private railway, was not for the exclusive benefit of those parties;—certainly one other proprietor, Mr. Crane, was interested. I do not know that I rightly collected whether any other persons were or not—it is quite immaterial. There is no doubt, the party mainly interested was Mr. Crane: therefore the provision in the 13th section was absolutely necessary to secure Mr. Crane, if there is nobody else interested in the private railway—it was absolutely necessary to secure the interest of the plaintiffs, if they should not call upon the defendants, under the 92nd section, to take the whole of the manufactory. Therefore it seems to me that there is nothing whatever inconsistent with the 13th section in supposing that the 92nd section was to have its full operation. With regard to the 14th section, it is thereby enacted, "that the owner or owners for the time being of the said several plots, pieces, or parcels of land, lastly hereinbefore mentioned, and all other persons interested therein, shall have and enjoy the same powers, rights, privileges, easements, and authorities over, above, and upon the upper surface of the said arching or covering, including the power of making, maintaining, and working the said branch railway or railways, to be worked by horse-power as aforesaid, over and upon the said arching or covering, as the said owner or owners, or other persons, now have and enjoy, in, upon, and over the said several plots, &c. Provided always, that the said owner or owners, or other persons, shall not be at liberty to erect upon the said arching or covering any building or buildings without the consent in writing of the said company," &c. Now it is argued that what the 14th section shews is this, that it is impossible that the 92nd section can be considered as incorporated; for this reason: when this railway was made, there was a provision in the 14th section that no buildings should be erected upon the new side line or private railway (which included part of that which therefore is now to be taken from the plaintiffs) without the consent, in writing, of the company. They would be running over this railway; therefore the company were interested in seeing that nothing should be done to damage them. For what purpose, it is said, stipulate for that, if the company itself is to become the proprietor of the manufactory, as an adjunct to which, the private railway is to be erected? But the same answer applies. The company may become the proprietors, and then this would become superfluous. Of course they could not give a consent in writing to themselves. They may do what they think fit with their own property. It may be, that they may not become the proprietors; then such stipulation is necessary. Then again Mr. Willes has particularly directed our attention to the 12th section, which he says is inconsistent with the notion that the 92nd section was part of this Act. The 12th section provides that certain properties, as they are called, numbered respectively 90, 91, 130, and 140 (being, I will assume for the present, all of them manufactories,—they are all either houses or manufactories, or something that would come within the same class as that which is referred to in sec. 92)—the 12th section enacts, that the company shall, and they are hereby required, to purchase all these properties, being all included within the line of deviation, but not, apparently, according to the Parliamentary plan that was handed up to us, not the properties that would be taken, unless there should be a deviation from the intended line of railway. Then, it is said, for what purpose do you enact that these particular manufactories should be taken, when the 92nd section would have effected all the purposes? That is a complete fallacy. The 92nd section only gives authority to the owner of a manufactory to insist upon the whole being taken, if any part is taken; because this enactment, as to the properties numbered 90, 91, 130, 131, and 140, positively stipulates that they shall take the whole of it. It is obvious, on looking at the plan, that a large portion of this must have been taken in some way, to stop the mouths of the opposing parties, who were the owners of properties, because they cannot use them all for the purpose of the railway,—they are all along out of the line that was contemplated, though within the line of deviation; and therefore I conclude it was to buy off opposition, that this enactment was introduced. It is sufficient for the purposes of the present object to say, that it is a perfectly different enactment from the 92nd section. The 92nd section does not say that you shall take every manufactory that is within your line of deviation; but it says, if you take a part of the manufactory, you shall, if the owner wishes it, take the whole of the manufactory. What is enacted by the 12th section is different; namely, with regard to five several manufactories within the line of deviation, but not probably in the line that will be touched by the railway, you shall take and pay for those, whether you use them or not. It appears that this also wholly fails as a reason for inducing us to suppose that the 92nd section is inconsistent with the provisions of this Act. Another argument was pressed upon us, but I thought at the time it was unfounded,—that those clauses were introduced in consequence of some application that was made to the Houses of the Legislature,—to the House of Commons, I think, where the Bill was then pending. In the first place, the fact I think wholly fails, as far as the plaintiffs were concerned. It is true, they petitioned the House of Commons,—so it was stated and not controverted,—against the Bill passing, because they thought it would damage their works; and I must say that there appears to me that there was everything like bona fides on the part of the plaintiffs, because they were laying out large sums of money in extending and improving their manufactory. They thought it would materially* damage them, and they petitioned against the passing of the Bill. They did not appear, it is said, by counsel. Mr. Crane did; and very likely they were in communication with him; and Mr. Crane got this enactment, I dare say, put in with regard to the private railway. That was a benefit to them; they were glad of that: but it is quite clear they did not think it went far enough, that the Act secured them in the way they wanted to be secured, for they petitioned the House of Lords that, notwithstanding the introduction of that clause, the Bill might never pass into a law. It is said that they had estopped themselves from this argument about the 92nd section, by representing that the effect of it would be, that they could not insist upon the 92nd section. I think that was very lamely made out; for if ... , did, we cannot of course be bound by their view of the law, and it is very strong in their favour on the question of fact—that they never meant to consent; but what they meant to do was, to insist upon the whole being taken, if any part of it was taken. It seems to me, as far as it has any bearing, it is in favour of the plaintiffs rather than against them; it shews that they had their attention alive to the subject—that they had the 92nd section in their contemplation, and they meant to insist upon it if they could. Now that being the state of the case, the conclusion at which we have arrived is, that in point of fact the property that the railway company has given notice to take, was, at the time they gave the notice, part of the manufactory, and that the 92nd section entitles the owners of the remaining part of that manufactory to insist upon the whole being taken. The only remaining question is that which has been raised now for the first time. It came upon us entirely by surprise, that although they have given a notice, in the ordinary way, that they mean to take the land, and that they are now entitled, if they cannot take the land, to burrow under it, as it were,—to make a tunnel, which, they say, they are able and willing to do, without taking or touching any part of the surface. It is a sufficient answer to that argument, to say, that it has been raised since the matter was before us, and since we granted the interim injunction. The notice is a notice which entitles them to take the land. If they are not restrained from proceeding under that notice, they may take the land in spite of what they are now saying. We should have found the means of compelling them to abide by an undertaking if there were any. A great number of arguments were urged upon us in this way. It was said, Suppose the manufactory was at the top of a hill, and you were burrowing under it at the distance of 1,000 feet, are you then taking part of the manufactory? I do not feel myself called upon to answer that question; but if I were, I rather believe that you are, on the principle of the maxim,—"Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad inferos," Do you mean to say that if you were an inch below the surface you would not take a part of the manufactory? It might all fall down if you undermined any portion of it; and I am rather inclined to think that, however deep below, it would be within that enactment. If that has been a casus omissus, I think it ought to be construed in a way most favourable to those who have been seeking to defend their property from innovation. I do not think that arises, because here is a notice to take the land; and upon that notice they are proceeding to take it in the ordinary way. That is virtually what was contemplated when the notice was given; and it is perfectly obvious, from the language of the bond they gave, that that is what they are to do; for they have given a bond, under the 83rd section, to enter, and in that bond they have stated thus: that 150*l.* has been assessed as the value for the purchase in fee-simple of the messuage, tenements, hereditaments, and the several lands mentioned, numbered 161; and that 350*l.* has been assessed as the value for severance. It is perfectly obvious that what is meant is, that they are to take that land, and pay 150*l.* for the value of the building, and 350*l.* for the inconvenience occasioned by the severance. That is the way they put it themselves; and I cannot but come to the conclusion that this is a mere after-thought. I do not think they would have the liberty of doing it, unless they had given a proper notice for the purpose; but it is quite obvious, either they are entitled under this notice, to take the land, or to do nothing. I think, therefore, the plaintiffs are entitled to the relief they ask. The injunction, therefore, will be made perpetual, in the terms in which it was made before, except with this suggestion, that there should be something, I think, of this sort,—the plaintiffs being ready and willing, and undertaking to make a good title to the same, to convey the same. I suppose there will be no difficulty about that. Of course, if you have not a good title to the manufactory, you will not be able and willing to convey it.

Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—I have but a very few words to say, after what Lord Cranworth has said; being very clearly of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree, perhaps the few words I am about to say are superfluous. I continue to entertain an opinion differing from the judgment, which I hold in the highest respect and estimation, upon the question of the effect of the 12th, 13th, and 14th sections. I am of opinion, for the mere reason that it is competent to the plaintiffs, if they should think fit, to sell part and not the whole, that those three sections do not prevent the application or incorporation of the 92nd section in the special Act. I am, however, clearly of opinion, upon the undisputed facts of the case, that whether the state of the property at the time when the notice of June last was given, or at the time of the passing of the special Act, is regarded for the purpose, that the land which the company require is part of the plaintiff's manufactory within the meaning of the 92nd section, incorporated, as I have said that I think it is, in the special Act. Observations were made upon the petition to the House of Commons, and upon the petition to the House of Lords—I mean upon the allegations in those two petitions. These allegations may or may not have been accurate. Fraud or unfair intention as to either of these petitions is entirely out of the case. It is not pretended that either of them amounted to it. They might by possibility, however, have been so worded as to amount to representations of fact, or of intention, from which, if they had induced a particular line of conduct on the part of those to whom they were made, it might not have been allowable to the plaintiffs to depart. I am of opinion, however, that the case is not brought so high, and that there is no evidence that by reason of the representations contained in either petition, the company was induced to adopt any line of conduct to its prejudice which otherwise would not have been adopted. Then with regard to the design now said to be practicable, and intended, of carrying the railway under the surface of the land in question, in such a manner as not to disturb or interfere with it; one sufficient answer to that has been stated independently of others that might be given; which is this, that the notice of June was a notice to purchase merely and absolutely the fee-simple of the land specified in it. That notice (whether amounting to a contract or a declaration of intention, forbidden by law to be receded from, is of no importance) had the effect of a contract, and moreover the effect of giving the plaintiffs the right to say that their land should not be taken—that their land should not be used,—I mean the land mentioned in the contract,—unless, if they desired to sell the whole of the manufactory, the defendants should purchase it. From that position the defendants, however desirous to recede, are, in my opinion, not entitled to recede. Substantially, therefore, I agree entirely with the decree, that it must be with the plaintiffs; and I believe that my learned brother also agrees with me that these defendants ought to pay the costs of the suit, including the costs of the original motion for the injunction. The particular form and language of the decree may require a little consideration, because it is not necessary that the particular language of the original injunction should be now exactly adhered to. It may be right, but it is not necessary no children, his or her share shall be equally divided between the other two, and for their heirs for ever," do not divest the share of a child who survived the tenant for life, but died without leaving issue, his share is in that case an absolute vested interest not subject to be divested.

The rule of this Court is, that the contingency, or the event which the testator speaks of as a con-die without leaving issue, then to B. in which case it cannot be referred to any period of distribution, but must be a general contingency to go over.

This was a special case for the opinion of the Court, under the provisions of the late Act. It appeared that William Edwards, of Llangaloch, Glamorganshire, made his will bearing date the 10th of November, 1810, and thereby amongst other things gave, devised, and bequeathed all his freehold and leasehold messuages, tenements, lands, and heredi-paid unto the testator's wife Mary, the rents, issue and profits of the said freehold and leasehold estate during her life, so long as she should remain his widow; but if she should marry, then she was to have an annuity. Then came this clause, "I give, devise, and bequeath to my eldest son John all that my leasehold messuage or public-house, called Penllergau Arms, and the malthouse and all other buildings and premises belonging to, or situate in, the village of Lllangefelach. And also all that my freehold property called Tyr-pennychwl; and also that messuage or public-house called Welcome Inn, and all buildings and land belonging to it, situate near Mynyddbach, in the parish of Llangefelach, for him and his heirs for ever, to possess immediately after his mother's death, or after his mother's marriage." The testator then made similar devises and bequests of freehold and leasehold property, which he particularly described, to his daughter Mary and his son William; and proceeded: "If my said dear wife shall remain my widow, they, my said trustees, or the survivor of them, shall assign and transfer to each of my children their shares immediately after her death and as soon as they arrive to twenty-one years of age; and they my three children shall pay to their mother as above mentioned. Further, my will and meaning is, that if one of my said three children shall die and leave no children born in wedlock, his or her share shall be equally divided between the other two, and for their heirs for ever; and if two of my children shall die and leave no children born in wedlock, their shares shall go to the surviving one and his or her heirs for ever." The testator appointed Henry Griffiths, John Powell, and his said wife Mary, his executors.

The testator died on the 15th July, 1841, leaving his wife and three children surviving, and on the 27th of April, 1842, his will was proved by Henry Griffiths and Mary Edwards. On the 3rd October 1845, Mary Edwards died without having married again. John Edwards attained twenty-one on the 7th of June, 1848, and in October following he married the defendant Rebecca Edwards. On the 26th of April, 1850, he made his will, and thereby amongst other things he gave and devised all and every his freehold and leasehold estate whatsoever and wheresoever, whether in possession or reversion, remainder or expectancy (over which he had a disposing power) unto his wife Rebecca for life, and from and after her decease for the benefit of his children as therein mentioned; but in the event (as happened) of there being no child of the testator by his said wife living at the time of his decease, or in case his said wife should marry again, he gave and devised all the said freehold and leasehold estates unto and between his sister Mary Edwards and his brother William Edwards absolutely in equal shares, as tenants in common, upon condition of paying his wife an annuity as in his said will mentioned; and he appointed Henry Griffiths his executor. John Edwards died on the 5th of May, 1850, leaving his wife him surviving, but never had any child. His will was duly proved on the 7th of June, 1850. The debts and funeral and testamentary expenses of William Edwards have all been paid. Mary Edwards and William Edwards the son have attained twenty one. The legal estate in the freeholds and leaseholds devised and bequeathed as aforesaid by William Edwards is now vested in Henry Griffiths, who is willing to convey and assign as directed by the Court. Questions, however, arose with reference to the claims and interest of the defendant Rebecca Edwards, on the one hand, and the plaintiffs Mary Edwards and William Edwards the son, on the other, Rebecca Edwards contending that her hus-bequeathed to him as aforesaid; or if that were not so, that she was entitled at least to dower on the freeholds; and the said Mary Edwards and William Edwards the son contending that Rebecca Edwards has no interest whatever in the freeholds and leaseholds so devised and bequeathed to her husband, either in respect of dower or otherwise, and that the same ought to be conveyed to them, their heirs, execu-stances aforesaid, by virtue of the will of William Edwards, take a fee in the freeholds and an absolute interest in the leaseholds devised and bequeathed to him, so as to be capable himself of devising and bequeathing them; 2nd, If he did not take such fee and absolute interest, whether his widow is or is not entitled to dower out of the freeholds so devised by the said will of the said William Edwards; and 3rd, Whether, in the events which have happened, the plaintiffs are or are not entitled to an absolute conveyance and assignment to them, their heirs, question is as to the executory devise over, whether by the will of the testator an absolute fee was given to John Edwards, or whether there was an executory devise over to the children. If the latter, then a question of law arises. The authorities all come to this, that there is one construction where the gift over is made to take effect on death simpliciter, which must happen at all events, and another construction where it is made to depend not only upon that, but upon another contingent event which might or might not happen. In the first case, the death of the testator is the event upon which the gift over depends, if there be no antecedent tenancy for life, and where there is a tenancy for life, then the tenant's life is the event referred to. Then as to the second class of cases—where there is an absolute gift, and an event which may or may not happen, a contrary principle to that in the former case is established, and the gift is to be looked at without reference to the preceding tenancy for life (Allen v. Farthing Jarm. Wills, 688; 2 Madd. 310); and you must refer to the death of the testator or tenant for life only where it is an event certain, as death. Where there is a collateral event, the words must be taken in their natural sense. Then as to the question of dower raised by John's wife. Though the estate is an equitable estate, she being married subsequently to the Dower Act, would be entitled to dower if John took a fee, there being no difference between the right to dower and curtesy. Thursday, Feb. 5.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The question in this case arises on the construction of a clause in the will of a testator, of the name of William Edwards. The testator gave all his real estate to trustees, in trust for his widow for her life or during her widowhood, subject, as to part, to a certain annuity, and his will then proceeds thus: "If my dear wife shall remain my widow, then my said trustees, or the survivor of them, shall assign and transfer to each of my children their shares immediately after her death, and as soon as they arrive to twenty one years of age, and they my three children shall pay to their mother as above-mentioned. Further, my will and meaning is,"—this is the clause that raises the question,—"that if one of my said three children shall die and leave no children born in wedlock, his or her share shall be equally divided between the other two, and for their heirs for ever; and if two of my children shall die and leave no children born in wedlock, their shares shall go to the surviving one and his or her heirs for ever." The testator at his decease, left his widow and three children, a son and two daughters, surviving him. The children all attained the age of twenty-one, and survived the wife, after which the son died without issue: and the question is, under these words, whether on attaining his age of twenty-one years, he took an absolute interest in the lands devised, or whether, on his afterwards dying without leaving a child, his share went to his sisters. The principles which apply to cases of this description are well established, nor do I think that they are of difficult application to the facts of the am of opinion, however, ... case, and upon the words here occurring, the construction to be put upon these words must be the same in the case of real estate as if the subject-matter were the bequest of a legacy. There are four classes of cases, in which questions of this description have arisen, and it will be necessary for me shortly to refer to each of them, in order to make my decision in the present case shall die then to B. the second as that of a gift to A. and if he shall die without leaving a child then to B. The third and fourth classes of cases are where gifts of this description to A. and B. are preceded by a life estate, or some other interest of partial duration, and may be described thus: a gift to one for life, and after his decease to A. and if A. shall die then to B.; and fourthly, a gift to one for life and after his decease to A. and if A. shall die without leaving a child, then to B. It is obvious that in the first class, as the gift to A. takes effect, if at all, ... on the death of the testator, the words contingent by reference to ... particular period; and as no period of time is mentioned in the will, it is necessarily presumed that the period of time to which the testator refers, is the period of possession or payment, that is his own death, when the legacy to A. will take effect; and the subsequent limitation is introduced to prevent a lapse of the legacy in case A. did not survive the testator. In such cases, therefore, the rule may be considered to be settled, that the bequest must be read somewhat to this effect; that is to say, a bequest to A. but if A. shall die before the bequest becomes vested in him, then to B; and the consequence is if A. survives the testator he takes an absolute vested interest in the legacy, and not a life interest to A. with remainder to B. This is clearly settled by a great variety of authorities, which are referred to in the elaborate judgment of Lord Brougham, in Home v. Pillans. It can scarcely be necessary, to observe, with respect to the observations which I make upon these cases, that the rule of law which does not enable a legatee to compel payment of his legacy for a year does not affect the question which I am now stating; although, for the convenience of administration the executor is not compelled to assent to the legacy before he has ascertained what the assets are, and convenience has fixed that period at twelve months, and the legatee is entitled to it immediately upon the death of the testator. In the second of the supposed cases there is a manifest distinction. There the event spoken of on which the legacy is to go over is not a certain, but a contingent, event. It is not in the case of the death of A. but in case of his death without issue or without leaving a child, and here it would be importing a meaning and adding words to the will if it were to be construed to import, as a condition to entitle B. to take upon the death of A. without issue, it was to happen at some particular period. In these cases it has always been held, if at any time, whether before or after the death of the testator, A. died without leaving a child, the gift over takes effect and the legacy vests in B. This is best established by the case, which was particularly referred to by Mr. Gifford, of Allen v. Farthing, which is mentioned in Maddock, but which, in fact, is only reported in the second volume of Mr. Jarman's book on Wills. All those cases are, of course, liable to be varied by the force of particular expressions which the testator may have made use of in his will importing a different intention, and there are many cases of this description, but they do not affect the rule; on the contrary they must be held tacitly to admit the application of it, inasmuch as they are treated as exceptions to any existing rule. In the third class of cases where a life estate is given, the same rule which applies to the first class of cases in my opinion applies equally, but the application of it fixes a different period of time. In the first case the rule is if A. die before the period of possession or payment, that is, before the death of the testator, the legacy goes to B. In the class of cases I am now considering the rule is, I think, the same, namely, that if A. die before the period of possession or payment, that is, before the death of the tenant for life of the legacy, the legacy goes to B. There is the case of Harvey v. M'Loughlin, reported in 1 Price, and which is cited with great approbation by the Vice-Chancellor, Sir James Wigram, in Salisbury v. Petty, 3 Hare, 92; and it may further be observed, that the propriety of giving effect to the testator's will making a contingent event by referring that event to the period when the legacy is vested in possession rather than to the death of the testator, where those periods are not identical (which they often or usually are) was the ground on which the House of Lords reversed the decision of Lord Cowper in Bindon v. The Earl of Suffolk, 1 P. Wms. 96, although the principle of that decision was to be recognised, and has always since been maintained. The case of Bindon v. The Earl of Suffolk will be familiar to the bar. It was a case in which the testator gave an interest in a debt which was to be got in, and gave no legacy, in fact, until the legacy was got in and the House of Lords approving the principle of Lord Cowper's decision, yet held that the death before the debt was got in made the gift over take effect. The case before me comes within the last class of cases, where a life estate is given to one of the subjects of the gift, and on the determination of that estate the subject of it is given to A. with a direction that if he shall die leaving no child, his share shall go to the survivor. In this class of cases it is obvious that the event of death without leaving a child may be applied either to the period of distribution, or to any period of time either before or after that period, whenever it may occur: nor, if it were res integra, would it be easy, in the absence of any indication of intention to be collected from the rest of the will, to determine which of those constructions ought to prevail. I consider it however settled, both by principle and authority, that in the absence of any words indicating a contrary intention, the rule is that these words indicating death without leaving a child, in which case the gift over is to take effect, must be considered to refer to that event occurring before the period of distribution. The principle which regulates such cases is to be found in an often-expressed desire of the Court to avoid a case so inconvenient as one which must suspend the absolute vesting of the subject of the gift during the whole life of the legatee or devisee—a principle which seems materially to have influenced Lord Brougham in his decision in Home v. Pillans. Decided authorities, however, concur with the principle in this case; and the very point in question has arisen that was determined in the cases of Da Costa v. Keir, 3 Russ. 360; and Galland v. Leonard, 1 Swanst. 161; and Giblett v. Child, 3 Myl. & K. 71. In both these cases a previous life estate had been given, after which the legacy was given to one, with a gift over, in case that person should die leaving a child, to that child, and if none, to a third person. In both cases the Court determined that the legatee having survived, the tenant for life was entitled to the fund absolutely. Neither does the case of Home v. Pillans, 2 Myl. & K. 15, present to my mind the difficulties which appear to have suggested themselves to Mr. Jarman in his comment upon that case. That was a case where a legacy was given to two persons, "when, and if they attain their ages of twenty-one years," and in case of the death of either of them leaving a child, then the share of the legatee so dying was to go to that child. There was no gift, therefore, unless the legatee attained twenty-one, and this period was not identical with that of the death of the testator; consequently, if the dying without leaving a child could upon principle and authority—as I believe it to be—be fairly and properly considered to have reference to the period of distribution, as where that period is not the death of the testator, that it is in accordance with the principle that Lord Brougham decided, that the dying without leaving a child had reference to that event occurring upon that period of distribution in like manner as if that period had been appointed to take effect after a life estate, or after any other partial interest. In this case Lord Brougham observes, "It may be stated as a general proposition, that where the bequest over is in case of the legatee's death and no other reference can be made, the period taken is the life of the testator; but where another can be found that will be preferred, in order to avoid the supposition of the testator having contemplated and provided against the lapse. A preceding gift for life, or any other interest less than the gift of the property, will furnish this reference." For all these reasons I am of opinion that the son who survived his mother as tenant for life took an absolute vested interest in the share of the testator's property, not liable to be defeated upon his afterwards dying without leaving a child surviving him.

Shebbeare.—Then it will be a simple declaration.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Yes.

Giffard.—Of course the costs will be according to the agreement out of that share?

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—If I am right in the view which I take of the principle of these cases, the effect is as it appears to me, that the rule of the Court is, that the contingency, or the event which the testator speaks of as a contingency, is always referable to the period of payment or distribution, except in the single case where there is a simple gift to A. and if he shall die without leaving issue, then to B. in which case it cannot be referred to any period of distribution, but must be a general contingency to go over.

LONG v. STORIE.

Usury—Mortgagors and mortgagees—Transfer of mortgages—Statute 12 Anne, c. 16.

An estate was mortgaged for 7,500*l. and the equity of redemption was mortgaged for* 5,000*l. to another party; a third party agreed to lend* 12,500*l. at five per cent. or if interest regularly paid, at four per cent. and take a transfer of both the former mortgages. The third party had his money ready at the time, but the first mortgage could not be transferred on account of some difficulty with the mortgagor, but* 5,000*l. were paid to the mortgagee of the equity of redemption, and that security was at once transferred. The mortgagor signed an agreement that interest on the* 7,500*l. mortgage when transferred should run as from the date of the agreement, and that the deed of transfer should bear date the same day as the agreement. The* 7,500*l. were paid, and the deed of transfer of the first mortgage was executed six weeks after the date of the agreement:*

Held, that although the transferee of the 7,500*l. mortgage took interest at four per cent. for the six weeks before the actual execution of the deed, yet as he might lawfully take interest at five per cent. for the actual execution of the deed which would exceed in amount the interest received, the transaction was not usurious within the meaning of the statute* 12 Anne, c. 16, and that the contract was that interest should be paid at four per cent. not under the deed, but on the agreement, calculated at the rate mentioned in the deed. The word "reserved" used in the statute interpreted.

This was a suit of a very complicated character, but the case in its main feature may be stated in a moderate compass. By indentures dated the 14th or 15th of May, 1843, the Rev. Job George Storie appointed and conveyed the advowson of the living of St. Giles, Camberwell, to the trustees of the Norwich Union Assurance Society, for securing the due payment of 7,500*l.* with interest after the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum. By an indenture dated 29th of the same month of May, Mr. Storie mortgaged the equity of redemption, to Mr. Cockell for securing the due payment of 5,000*l.* with interest after the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum. After this, Captain Long and Mr. Storie entered into a treaty, by which, Captain Long was to advance 12,500*l.* at per cent. interest, and the terms were contained in an agreement dated 26th December, 1843 (exhibit A), which was signed by the solicitors of both parties. By this it was arranged and agreed, that the mortgages of the advowson should be transferred to Captain Long; that Mr. Storie should assign life policies for sums not less than 12,000*l.*, and should execute a warrant of attorney, to confess judgment, and that execution should issue if the interest should get into arrears. It was also stipulated, that if the interest should be paid within one month of its falling due, only 4 per cent. should be paid instead of 5 per cent.; it was also agreed, that there should be a power of sale, if the interest money should fall into arrear for two months; but if the sum was paid regularly, the principal should not be called in, for ten years. On the 25th of March, 1844 (exhibit C), the solicitor of Captain Long wrote a letter of that day to the solicitor of Mr. Storie, stating that the writer held in his hands Captain Long's cheque for 12,500*l.* and that the money was ready to be paid on the execution of the deeds of transfer of the mortgages. On the 29th of the same month of March, a memorandum of that date (exhibit E) was made and was signed by Mr. Storie, which, after reciting that Captain Long had that day paid to Mr. Cockell, the mortgagee of the equity of redemption of the advowson, 5,000*l.* on behalf of Mr Storie, proceeded in the following words: "And whereas a deed of transfer from the Norwich Union Assurance Office, to the said John Long of a mortgage debt of 7,500*l.* has been prepared, but has not yet been executed, and the said John Long, being prepared with the said sum of 7,500*l.* (which is a first charge upon the advowson of Saint Giles, Camberwell), I hereby undertake that the said deed of transfer from the Norwich Union Assurance Office shall bear date as of this day, and that interest on the said sum of 7,500*l.* according to the rate mentioned in the said deed, shall be calculated and payable to the said John Long, from this day. I also undertake to execute a warrant of attorney to enter up judgment against me for the said sum of 5,000*l.* when required to do so." Contemporaneously with this memorandum a deed of transfer of Mr. Cockell's mortgage was executed to Captain Long, with a covenant to pay, 5*l.* per cent. interest, and a proviso that if interest were regularly paid 1*l.* per cent. would be accepted, and on the execution of this the 5,000*l.* were paid. A deed was also prepared, also bearing date 29th of March, 1844, professing to be a transfer of the first mortgage from the Norwich Union Assurance Company to Captain Long, in consideration of the 7,500*l.* The proviso for redemption was on payment, with interest at 5 per cent. from the day of the date thereof and a proviso that the rate of interest should be 4 per cent. if the same were regularly paid within thirty days of its falling due. This deed was not actually executed until the 4th of May, after its date, although the interest was reserved as from the 29th of March preceding.

One of the many questions made in the suit was whether this transaction was not tainted with usury, it being proved that the 7,500*l.* were paid to the Norwich Union Assurance Company on the 4th of May, and interest on the same at 10 per cent. down to that day, amounting to 363*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, while as before mentioned, the interest on the transfer was reserved for the five weeks between these two dates.

Bethell, Follett, and Bazalgette, for the plaintiffs.

Rolt, Trip, Shebbeare, Schomberg, and J. H. Palmer, for the several defendants.

Several cases were cited, and the same, together with the chief points in the argument on the question of usury, are noticed in the judgment.

Wednesday, Feb. 18.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR detailed the facts of the case, and then proceeded: It has been argued that the 7,500*l.* not having been paid until five weeks after the date of the deed, and the interest being reserved from the date of the deed, that that is not a valid transaction within the statute of 12 Anne, c. 16. That statute in the first section enacts, "that no person after the 29th of Sept. 1714, upon any contract which shall be made after that day, shall take, directly or indirectly, for the loan of any moneys, wares, merchandise, or commodities whatsoever, above the value of 5*l.* for the forbearance of 100*l.* for a year, and so after that rate for a greater or less sum, or a longer or shorter time. That all bonds, contracts, and assurances whatsoever, made after the time aforesaid for the payment of any principal, or money to be lent or covenanted to be performed upon, or for any usury whereupon or whereby there shall be reserved or taken above the rate of 5*l.* for every 100*l.* as aforesaid, shall be utterly void, and that 'all persons who shall upon any such contract, take, by way or means of any corrupt bargain, loan, &c., or by any deceitful way or means, or by covin engine, or deceitful conveyance,' a larger amount of interest than five per cent. shall forfeit treble value." Now it is to be observed that Capt. Long did not in the result take more than 5 per cent. interest. He actually received on the 29th of September, 1844, under the terms of the deed, interest at the rate of 4 per cent. for 183 days from the 29th day of March; and the greatest amount which by the statute of Ann he was entitled to take was interest at 5 per cent. for 147 days from the 4th day of May. This is greater than the sum he actually received, and therefore there was no taking of usurious interest within the statute of Ann; whatever interest may have been reserved, there was not a larger amount actually taken than the statute permits. Then, was there a larger, i. e. an usurious interest reserved? The words of the statute are, that "all bonds, &c. whereupon or whereby there shall be reserved or taken above the rate of 5*l.* for every 100*l.* as aforesaid," i. e. for a year, are to be void. It is clear, that on the face of the deed itself, there is no reservation of usurious interest—no reservation above 5*l.* for every 100*l.* for a year, because the clause of redemption stipulates for the legal amount of interest, viz. 5 per cent. per annum. But then it was said that the deed does not represent the real, at least the entire, contract between the parties; because no money was paid till May, and that the real contract was to be found in the agreement contained in the memorandum of the 29th March, 1844 (exhibit E). Now this stipulates that the interest to be paid shall be calculated according to the rate mentioned in the deed. This, therefore, is the same contract as the contract in the deed, except as to the period from which the interest is to run; and therefore, on the face of the contract, there is no usury,—not, I say, on the face of the contract. Now, what is the meaning of the word "reserved" in this statute? The cases have perfectly settled this point. In Floyer v. Edwards, Lofft, 594 and 599, Lord Mansfield says, "An actual borrowing of money, with a penalty on forbearance, is no usury, if the party borrowing can discharge himself by payment within the time. And the case in Croke which says this (Roberts v. Trenayne, Cro. Jac. 507), is much stronger than the present case, by the difference of the penal sum, which is greater. In the case in Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown, b. 1, c. 29, s. 36, it is expressly said, that "where it is in the election of the party borrowing to discharge himself, and so avoid paying the increased interest, this is not usury." And so in Burton's case (5 Rep. 69a (139), "It being in the election of the grantor to have paid and frustrated the rent, this is not usury." Another important case (not cited in the argument), is Tate v. Wellings, 3 T. R. 531.

There the obligor of a bond had applied to the obligee for the loan of a sum of money which the obligee agreed to let him have, but said he should expect the same interest as that which he was then receiving in the Short Annuities, viz. eight and a-half per cent., which being assented to, it was agreed that the money should be raised by a sale of Short Annuities, to the amount of 912*l.* 12s. 6d. and a bond was drawn up, dated Sept. 1, 1784, by which the obligor was to replace the amount in the same stock, on the 1st Sept. 1785, but if it were not replaced by that time, he was then to repay that sum (912*l.* 12s. 6d.) on the 1st of January, 1786, or to pay in the meantime such interest as the stock would have produced; and it was held that, because he had in the first year the option to replace the stock, and so release himself, that saved the ulterior contract, by which after the first year he was bound to replace the principal and interest beyond five per cent. "I have had some doubt in the course of the argument," says the Lord Chief Justice (at p. 537), "whether, as the defendant had no power to replace the stock after the expiration of the year, it did not become a loan of money from that time, with a reservation of usurious interest, and that the pretence of transferring the stock was merely a colour for the usurious transaction. But my doubt is now removed, for this colour is expressly negatived by the finding of the jury. If, then, this transaction was legal during the first year, is there any thing superadded to make it usurious? I think not." And Buller, J. says, "in order to support the defence set up, it must be shewn that the contract was usurious at the time it was entered into, for if it were legal at that time, no subsequent event can make it usurious." I therefore am of opinion, that neither in the deed nor in the memorandum in this case is there a usurious reservation of interest within the statute. I do not say that such a construction might not be put on the deed and agreement if there were any evasion, if this was a mere contrivance, if there had been an agreement that the money should not be paid at the day of the date of the deed, or if there had been any thing to indicate an intention to secure or to take more than the legal rate of 5 per cent. per annum. There is, however, nothing in support of such a case; on the contrary, the whole evidence is against it. In Bangley's case, 1 Rose, 171, the warrant of attorney was given for securing repayment of 600*l.* and interest from the 25th March. It was said by Lord Eldon, that if the 600*l.* were not paid at the 25th March, but were, in fact, advanced in parcels at different times, the last of which was on the 1st of June, it was impossible to say that the transaction was not usurious." But in the present case, the evidence clearly shews that the intention was to advance the money immediately; and that the only reason why the money was not advanced on the execution of the deed was because the borrower was unable to carry out his part of the agreement; and this brings the case within the subsequent expressions of Lord Eldon, which explains what was meant by the part just quoted. "It has been said that Bangley had the 600*l.* ready, that the bankrupt might have had it, and the case has been assimilated to that of a banker; and if that was in fact the agreement, and the transaction was boná fide, that the money being paid as it were to the bankrupt, and repaid by him to the lender, or left in his hands to be drawn out as he, the bankrupt, wanted it, I do not think the money not being paid at a subsequent day, though a breach of the contract, would affect it with usury." And here the money was left in Captain Long's hands, if in his hands at all, for the express purpose of being paid to the Norwich Union Company at the fitting time. Independently, however, of the grounds upon which it may be held, that the deed itself is not usurious, the effect of the agreement and the dealings of the parties might be, that the contract might be void although the deed itself was not usurious. Now, if we look at the position of the parties, we find Captain Long to have got a transfer of the second mortgage from Cockell for 5,000*l.*, but the first mortgage for 7,500*l.* was still outstanding in the Norwich Union Company. The effect would be, that interest on the first mortgage was running on, and erecting itself into a charge on the land as against those claiming on the second mortgage. A stipulation, therefore, that the deed of transfer of the first mortgage should bear date on the day of the date of the transfer of the second mortgage, would not necessarily be a usurious stipulation: it might have this construction, that Storie undertook to pay this interest so as to prevent it being a charge on the land. And it is evident that something of this sort was intended; for otherwise why is mention made of the second mortgage at all? What is the meaning of the recital of there having been that security entered into, and of the transfer of it? and then the agreement that the deed of transfer of the first mortgage for 7,500*l.* shall bear date as of that day (viz. 29th March), and that interest thereon shall be payable from that date (not under the deed, but) calculated according to the rate mentioned in the deed?

Winding-up Acts—Payment into court.

A party who admitted that he had had a sum of money in his hands belonging to an association, but who also said he had parted with it, will not be directed to pay the same into court. The 66th section of the Winding-up Act not applicable to such a case.

Daniel moved to discharge the Master's order, directing a gentleman named Archibald to pay to the official manager the sum of 4,940*l.* being the amount admitted by him to have been in his possession previously to the company having proved abortive. The usual winding-up order had been obtained, and the matter was referred in the usual way to the Master. The Master, upon the application of the official manager, personally examined Mr. Archibald, who admitted that he had, in 1846, in his possession the sum of 4,940*l.* part of which he had handed over to his co-trustee. Upon this admission the Master directed Mr. Archibald to pay the amount to the official manager, under the 66th section of the 11 & 12 Vict.(a) which provided that where any funds, books, &c. were in the hands of trustees, agents, bankers, &c. to which the company were primá facie entitled, it should be lawful for the Master to order the same to be transferred to the official manager.

Roxburgh, for the official manager, submitted that the intention of the Legislature was to give the Masters jurisdiction without the circuitous proceeding of filing a bill.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that he must say, that in his opinion, the meaning of the Act was, that where there should be a distinct admission that the party held a fund to which primá facie the company or association was entitled, then it should be lawful for the Master to order the same to be transferred; but it never was intended where the party, as here, admitted that he had had the fund, but had parted with it, that in such case the Master should have power to order him to pay it over to the official manager, without the sanction of the Court. He thought, therefore, the Master was wrong, and the appeal would be allowed. Some discussion then took place as to the costs, and his Honour eventually directed Mr. Archibald to have all the costs (not including his costs as witness) out of the estate. Order accordingly.

Poor—Settlement by payment of rates, and renting a tenement—Joint tenants—Evidence.

In support of an order of removal it was proved that T. A. and W. A. father and son, were joint tenants of a farm, of the requisite value, in the appellant parish, that W. A. resided in the farm-house; but that the rent was paid by the hands of T. A.; that during the year of occupation three rates were made, which were demanded of T. A. and paid by him, but that in the rate-book the property was rated to the first two rates in the name of "Mr. A." and to the last in that of T. A.:

Held, that there was evidence for the sessions of a settlement gained by W. A. by payment of rates under 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 2.

Upon appeal against an order of removal the sessions confirmed the order, subject to a case. The grounds of removal were, that the pauper's husband, William Atkinson, in 1844, rented a house and farm in the appellant parish, and was rated and paid the rates in respect thereof. No question was raised as to the sufficiency of the property in point of value to confer a settlement; but it appeared that the house and farm were rented by William Atkinson and his father Thomas Atkinson, as joint tenants; that the farming stock belonged to the son, who lived in the farm-house and occupied the farm; but that the rent was paid by the hands of the father; of and by whom also the rates were demanded and paid. These rates were made during the year of occupation; and in the rate-book the property was rated to the first two rates in the name of "Mr. Atkinson;" in the last in that of Thomas Atkinson. The question was, whether there was any evidence to warrant the sessions in holding the settlement established.

Rose and Lefroy, in support of the order of Sessions, contended, first, that there was evidence of a settlement by payment of rates. As William was in occupation, the "Mr. Atkinson," in the rate book, must be understood of him; and the payment by one of two joint tenants is a payment by both. 2. That there was evidence of a settlement by renting a tenement. To establish that, a rating for a whole year must be shewn; and it is shewn, because the rating of one joint tenant is the rating of both. The payment of the rent by the father also inures to the benefit of the son. (They referred to the following statutes and cases: 3 Wm. & M. c. 11, s. 6; 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 2; R. v. St. Mary Kalendar, 9 Ad. & Ell. 626; R. v. St. Lawrence Appleby, 6 Q. B. Rep. 812; R. v. Heckmondwicke, 2 Doug. 561; R. v. Bridgwater, 3 T. R. 550; R. v. Hulme, 1 Q. B. Rep. 538; R. v. Painswick, Burr. S. C. 465; R. v. Walsall, Cald. 35; R. v. St. Marylebone, 15 Q. B. Rep. 399.

Bliss and Price, contrà.—First, there was no evidence of any rating of William; the Sessions have not found the fact. The evidence shews that Thomas and not William was rated; and Thomas must be taken to have paid in discharge of his own liability, and not as agent of William. The mere joint tenancy creates no agency between them for this purpose. Secondly, this is not such a tenement as will satisfy the statutes. It must be wholly rented by the party who claims the settlement, and R. v. St. Lawrence Appleby is wrongly decided. R. v. Berkswell, 6 Ad. & Ell. 282, was not cited in that case. (R. v. Weobly, 2 East, 68; R. v. Whittlebury, 6 T. R. 464; R. v. Field, 5 T. R. 587; Moss v. The Overseers of Lichfield, 1 Piggott & R. El. Cas. 118; R. v. Caversuall, 10 Ad. & Ell. 270.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—The only question put to us is, whether there was any evidence to support the finding of the Sessions; and I am of opinion that there was. There was a joint tenancy by the father and son of land of sufficient value; but the circumstance of the joint tenancy is, I think, wholly immaterial. First, as to the assessment, was there not some evidence that William was assessed? He alone was in occupation, and I think we may fairly presume that that was known, and that "Mr. Atkinson" in the rate-book, meant William. Secondly, as to the payment, it was made by Thomas; but then he might either maintain an action for the money so paid, or in equity he would be entitled to take credit for that payment. In effect it was a payment by both, and therefore payment by cash.

WIGHTMAN, J.—We have not to determine on the weight of the evidence, and it is perfectly clear that there is some evidence that William was assessed. As to the payment, I feel more doubt; but though it is a payment by one whose name is not in the rate, I do not think we can treat it as a mere voluntary inoperative payment, as Mr. Bliss contends.

CROMPTON, J.—I think that there was plenty of evidence as to the assessment; and I cannot see much doubt as to the payment. It seems to me that the reasonable conclusion is, that both the rent and the rates were paid by the father on his own and his son's behalf; and it is properly put by Mr. Rose, that the statute does not require payment by the lands of the party assessed, but payment by him or his agent on his behalf.

Order of sessions confirmed.

REG. v. THE CLERK OF THE COUNTY COURT OF SURREY.

County Court—Judgment for debt and costs—Payment of debt by plaintiff to defendant out of court—Execution for costs.

A plaintiff who has obtained judgment for debt and costs, in the County Court, and has received from the defendant, out of court, either the whole or part of the debt, is entitled to a warrant of execution for the residue of the debt and the costs, or for the costs alone as the case may be, although in form the judgment is to pay the money into court.

A rule had been obtained, calling upon the clerk of the County Court of Surrey to shew cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue, commanding him to issue, under the seal of the Court, a warrant of execution to the high bailiff, to levy the sum of 5*l.* 7s. 2d. upon the goods of one John Meyer, pursuant to sec. 94 of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. It appeared by the affidavit that the overseers of Christchurch had recovered judgment against Meyer in the County Court for 34*l.* 10s. 10d. debt, and 5*l.* 7s. 2d. costs. The judgment was in the usual form requiring the defendant to pay the amount into court; but, instead of so doing, the defendant paid to the plaintiff himself out of court, and the plaintiff received the sum of 34*l.* 10s. 10d. The costs however were not paid; and the plaintiffs applied, first to the clerk and then to the judge of the court, for a writ of execution to levy the costs only; but they thought that under the County Courts Acts and the rules framed thereunder they had, under the circumstances, no power to issue execution for the costs.

(a) Sec. 66, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45: "And be it enacted, that after the appointment of the official manager of the company, the Master shall from time to time, by order to be made upon the application of the official manager, or of any contributory, order and require any contributory, trustee, receiver, banker, or agent, to pay, deliver, or transfer forthwith, or within such time as the Master shall direct, into the hands of the official manager, any sum or balance, books, papers, estate, or effects which shall happen to be in his hands for the time being, and to which the company is primá facie entitled, or which, in the case of a contributory, shall appear to the debit of his account as contributory with the company, as entered in the books of the company, anything in the present practice of Courts of equity to the contrary notwithstanding: provided nevertheless, that it shall be lawful for the person upon whom any such order shall be made to apply to the Master to discharge or vary any such order, or to enlarge the time thereby fixed for such payment.

Monday, April 26.—Bramwell and C. Clark shewed cause. The difficulty in this case arises from the payment having taken place out of court, which is not contemplated by the statute. The Legislature clearly intended these courts to be self-supporting, and the different steps in the proceedings are to be conducted through the intervention of the Court, and upon payment of certain fees. Consequently there is no provision for issuing execution for a part under circumstances such as exist in this case. There may be a partial execution where the debt is made payable by instalments (sec. 95); and there is also a remedy upon any unsatisfied judgment, by what is termed a judgment summons under sec. 98 of the first Act; but there is no authority given by the Act to issue the warrant of execution for less than the whole amount ordered to be paid (sec. 94). If the warrant was issued for less, there would appear upon the proceedings in court no satisfaction of the judgment; because the payment out of court would never be recorded in any way. (They referred also to ss. 109, 110; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101; s. 7; Webber v. Hutchins, 8 M. & W. 319; and to the rules (cxix. to cxxiv.) and forms of proceedings sanctioned by the judges.)

Brewer, contrà.—One of the forms is applicable to the case of a residue remaining unpaid; and unless there can be partial execution in a case like this, the plaintiff has no remedy.

Cur. adv. vult.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.(a)—Upon this rule a question has been raised—a most important question—whether a plaintiff who has recovered a judgment in a County Court for debt and cost, and has received the debt out of the court, is entitled to a writ of execution for the costs. For the defendant it was contended, that according to the statute and the form of judgment, and the rules and practice of the County Court, the whole of the sum recovered ought to be paid into court, or to the officer of the Court, and if the plaintiff received any part himself, he lost the right to an execution for the residue. But we find nothing in the statute or the rules to support this view. Provisions are made in both for execution where the residue after part satisfaction (see section 95 of the Act, and rules 120, 121, and 122),—and no provision is found prohibiting part satisfaction to a plaintiff without the intervention of the Court. The order to the defendant, in the form of the judgment, to pay the money into court, is directory, and for the benefit of the defendant, if he chooses to adopt that mode of payment. The defendant further alleges that the Legislature intended to secure a sufficiency of fees for the support of the County Courts, and that the bringing of all moneys recovered into court is important for this purpose. This part of the argument seemed to indicate that the County Courts were instituted merely as machines for grinding costs and raising revenue for the Chancellor of the Exchequer. But we think that there was not any intention to create useless costs. Plaintiffs generally in our courts are entitled to prosecute or settle their suits as they choose, and we see no reason for considering the County Courts to stand in a different situation in this respect from the other tribunals of the country. It is obvious that the plaintiff's power of settling with the defendant without an execution may be the means of saving expense; by so settling for a part he does not, in our judgment, incur any incapacity in respect of obtaining execution for the remainder. As the judge when applied to had declined to order a writ, we think the rule ought not to be drawn up within a week of issuing the execution, as prayed, otherwise the rule will be absolute. I wish it to be understood that it is our clear opinion that if the whole of the debt has been paid there may be execution for the costs, and if a part has been paid there may be execution for the residue and for the costs.

Rule absolute, unless execution is sued.

WILSON v. EDEN.

Devise — Construction — Republication — Stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 26—When leaseholds pass under general devise of real estate.

A testator by his will, made in 1815, after giving certain legacies, bequeathed " all the rest, residue, and remainder of his personal estate, goods, and chattels whatsoever and wheresoever, subject to the payment of his debts and legacies, to D. absolutely, to and for his own use and benefit." The testator further devised, " all and singular his manors, rectories, advowsons, messuages, lands, tenements, tithes, and hereditaments, situate, lying, arising, or being at or near Windlestone, in the county of Durham, and all other his real estate in the said county, and all his estate and interest therein, to trustees to the use of D. for life, and after his decease to the use of the first and other sons of D. in tail male." D. died in the life-time of the testator, who in 1841 made a codicil, whereby he appointed another executor, and ratified and confirmed, and republished his will. The testator, at the time of his death, was possessed of both freehold and leasehold estates in the county of Durham:

Held, that the will having been republished by the codicil, came under the provisions of the statute 1 Vict. c. 26, and that by virtue of the 26*th section, the leaseholds passed to the trustees under the general devise of the real estate, no contrary intention appearing on the face of the will.*

In considering whether such contrary intention does appear, the Court will not have regard to technical rules of construction; but will endeavour to ascertain from the language of the instrument, in connection with such surrounding circumstances as may be proved in explanation of it, whether the testator did or did not intend that the leaseholds should pass.

By order of the Master of the Rolls the following case was stated for the opinion of this Court:—

Sir Robert Johnson Eden, late of Windlestone, in the county of Durham, bart. duly made and published his will, dated the 14th of April, A.D. 1815; and after directing the payment of all his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and after giving certain annuities (with the payment of which he charged his real estates) and after giving certain legacies, he thereby gave and bequeathed as follows:—" I give and bequeath all the rest, residue, and remainder of my personal estate, goods, and chattels whatsoever and wheresoever, after and subject to the payment of my just debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses, and the said legacies and bequests (except the said annuities) herein by me given as aforesaid, and all my estate and interest therein, unto my brother, Morton John Davison, esq. late Morton John Eden, absolutely, to and for his own use and benefit." And the said testator gave and devised as follows:—" I give and devise all and singular my manors or lordships, rectories, advowsons, messuages, lands, tenements, tithes, and hereditaments, situate, lying, arising, and being at or near Windlestone, West Auckland, St. Helen's, Auckland, and Bishop's Auckland, in the county of Durham, or in the city of Durham, and Brignal, in the county of York; and a parcel of land purchased by me of the late Mrs. Mary Lambton, at Romanby, near North Allerton, in the North Riding of the county of York; and all other my real estates in the said counties of Durham and York, and elsewhere, in Great Britain, and all my estate and interest therein, unto Robert Eden Duncombe Shafto, of Whitworth, in the county of Durham, esq.; William Nesfield, of Brancepeth, in the county of Durham, clerk; and Thomas Hopper, of the city of Durham, esq. and their heirs, subject to the said annuities, &c. so given and devised as aforesaid; to hold the same unto the said R. E. D. S., W. N., and T. H., and their heirs, subject as aforesaid, to and for the several uses upon the trusts and to and for the intents and purposes and under and subject to the powers, provisoes, declarations, and limitations hereinafter limited, declared, or expressed of and concerning the same; that is to say, to the use of my said brother, the said Morton John Davison and his assigns, for and during the term of his natural life, without impeachment of or for any manner of waste; and from and immediately after the determination of that estate by forfeiture or otherwise in his lifetime, then to the use of R. E. D. S., W. N., and T. H. and their heirs during the life of the said M. J. D. upon trusts to support and preserve the contingent uses and estates hereinafter limited from being defeated or destroyed, and for that purpose to make entries and bring actions as occasion shall require; but, nevertheless, to permit and suffer the said M. J. D. and his assigns during his life to receive and take the rents, issues, and profits of the said hereditaments and premises to and for his or their own use and benefit; and from and immediately after his decease, to the use of the first son of the said M. J. D. lawfully begotten, and of the heirs male of the body of such first son lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, to the use of the second, third, fourth, and all and every other the son and sons of the said M. J. D. lawfully to be begotten, severally, successively, and in remainder one after another as they shall be in seniority of age and priority of birth, and of the several and respective heirs male of the body and bodies of all and every such son and sons lawfully issuing, the elder of such sons and the heirs male of his body being always to be preferred, and take before the younger of such sons, and the heirs male of his and their body or bodies; and in the default of such issue to the use of Sir Wm. Eden, bart. his heirs and assigns for ever." And the said testator thereby constituted and appointed the said M. J. D. executor of his said will.

The testator afterwards signed and published a testamentary paper, bearing date the 9th of March, 1835, purporting to be a codicil to his said will, and containing certain additions to, and alterations of, the annuities bequeathed by his said will, but not in any other manner affecting such will.

Morton John Davison, the brother of the testator, and the sole executor named in the will, died on the 28th of June, 1841, in the life-time of the testator, and without ever having had any issue; and after his death the testator duly signed and published another codicil to his said will, in the words and figures following:—" This is a codicil to the last will and testament of me Sir R.J.E. of," &c. which will is dated the 24th day of April, 1815. " Whereas by my said will I appointed as the executor thereof my only brother M. J. D. who died on the 28th day of June last, now I do by this codicil appoint my nephew J. M. the sole executor of my said will; and I hereby ratify, confirm, and republish my said will. As witness my hand," &c. The said J. M. afterwards took the name of Eden.

The testator died on the 3rd of September, 1844, without having revoked or altered his said will, except so far as the same was altered by the said codicils thereto, and without having revoked or altered the said codicils or either of them. And the said will and codicils have since been duly proved by the said John Eden, the executor thereof. The testator was, at the time of his death, possessed of several leasehold estates in the townships of Merrington and Middlestone, both in the parish of Merrington, in the county of Durham, held under various leases from the Dean and Chapter of Durham for terms of twenty-one years respectively, a part of which leasehold estates was acquired by the testator's father in the year 1772, and the remaining portion thereof had been acquired by his father or himself at various times since. (The dates of the different purchases were inserted.) And the Dean and Chapter of Durham have hitherto renewed the leases under which the said estates were held at the end of every seven years (according to their usual custom with respect to property held under leases from them), but the leases contain no covenant on their part to do so.

In the year 1833, the Dean and Chapter of Durham demised the coal mines under the said leasehold estates and other adjoining land, with power to erect cottages and make a railway; and several cottages have accordingly been erected and a railway made through part of the said leasehold estates. The testator was not, at the time of his death, possessed of or entitled to any leasehold estates for years, except in the townships of Merrington and Middlestone.

The township of Middlestone was heretofore in the parish of St. Andrew Auckland, but was, on the 26th of April, 1845, annexed to the said parish of Merrington.

The parish of Merrington is intersected by a high ridge of hills, ranging east and west, upon the summit of which the church and village of Merrington are situated; and the greater portion of the said leasehold estates (to the extent of 539 acres 38 perches, or thereabouts) lie to the south of the said ridge, and extend to and for about 2,050 yards, abut on the northern boundary of the freehold manor and estate of the testator in the township of Windlestone, heretofore in the parish of St. Andrew Auckland, but now forming part of the new parish of Coundon, which was made a parish in the year 1842, and adjoin the said freehold estate of Windlestone, but are in part separated therefrom by a turnpike-road, and in part by the ordinary hedges of the country, through which are necessary communications for those tenants who hold both freehold and leasehold in the same farm; and in some instances the leaseholds were let and occupied with the said freeholds at undivided yearly rents. The said leasehold estates are not intermixed with or surrounded by the freehold lands of the said testator at Windlestone, but, with the exception of one plot containing about 18 acres, they lie together, and a part of them are about a quarter of a mile from the mansion of Windlestone; but the turnpike-road between Bishop's Auckland and Rushyford lies between them and the said mansion. The remainder of the said leasehold estates, containing about 17a. 1r. 12p. lie on the northern side of the aforesaid ridge, and about two miles from the testator's freehold mansion and estate at Windlestone.

The testator was at the respective dates of making his will and death seised of or entitled to not only the said freehold manor and estate of Windlestone

(a) Lord Campbell, C.J. Wightman, Erle, and Crompton, JJ.

(which comprises the whole township of Windlestone, and contains 1,182a. 2r. 29p.), but also two freehold closes of land immediately adjoining the said Windlestone estate, and situate in the township of Coundon, and containing together about sixteen acres, and the freehold tithes thereof; and also some detached portions of freehold lands, in the said township of Merrington, and containing together about 106 acres; and the freehold tithes of parts of the said leasehold estates in Merrington and of Middlestone; an estate in the township of West Auckland, chiefly freehold and copyhold, with the freehold tithes thereof; and two leases for lives containing together 1,062 acres, or thereabouts; and freehold land in the township of St. Helen's Auckland, containing 381 acres, or thereabouts; two freehold fields containing together about nineteen acres, in the township of Bondgate, in Auckland; and the freehold message in the city of Durham; but which said freehold fields and messuages were afterward sold by the testator in his lifetime. The said freehold mansion and estate of Windlestone have been in the possession, and the residence, of the family of the said testator for upwards of 100 years; and there are several cottages (some of which are ornamental) and other buildings standing upon that part of the said leasehold estates, which is nearest the said mansion; and which buildings consisting of three cottages, called Well Houses, were in the lifetime of the testator occupied by persons employed about the said mansion and estate at Windlestone; and the testator during his lifetime expended upwards of 40,000*l*. in rebuilding or restoring the said mansion and premises.

On the 20th of Feb. 1845, E. W. one of the sisters and next of kin of the testator, filed her bill in the Court of Chancery against J. E. the executor of the testator, and Sir W. E. and others, praying (amongst other things) that it might be declared, that the testator died intestate as to his leasehold estates, and that an account might be taken of the rents and profits, &c.

The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the leasehold estates, of which the testator, Sir Robert Johnson Eden, died possessed, passed under the devise in his will, of all and singular his manors or lordships, rectories, advowsons, messuages, lands, tenements, tithes, and hereditaments, situate, lying, and arising, or being at or near Windlestone, West Auckland, St. Helen's Auckland, and Bishop's Auckland, in the county of Durham, or in the city of Durham, and Brignall, in the county of York; and all other his real estates in the said counties of York and Durham, and elsewhere in great Britain, and all his estates and interest therein.

The whole will was to form part of the case, and in addition to the parts set out, the following are also material:—"Provided always, and I do hereby declare my will and mind to be, that it shall and may be lawful for the said M. J. D. when and as he shall, by virtue of the limitations aforesaid, be in the actual possession of, or entitled to, the rents, issues, and profits of the said hereditaments and premises, by any deed or deeds, &c. to grant, limit, or appoint to, or to the use of, any woman or women whom he may marry, either before or after any such marriage, for the life of any such woman, for her jointure, and in bar, or without being in bar, of her dower, any annual sum or yearly rent-charge, not exceeding the annual sum of 1,000*l*. &c. to be issuing out of and chargeable upon all or any part or parts of the said hereditaments and premises hereinbefore devised, with the usual powers and remedies of distress, entry, &c.; and also to limit and appoint the hereditaments which shall be so charged as aforesaid, to any person or persons for any term or terms of years, upon such trusts, for the better securing the payment of any such yearly rent-charge as to the said M. J. D. shall seem meet, &c. Provided always, and I do hereby declare my will and mind to be, that it shall and may be lawful to and for the said M. J. D. during his lifetime, and after his decease for the person or persons who shall for the time being, under or by virtue of the limitations aforesaid, be in the actual possession of or well entitled to the hereditaments and premises aforesaid, or the rents, issues, and profits thereof, from time to time to demise and lease all or any part or parts of the said hereditaments and premises, with the appurtenances, to any person or persons, for any term or number of years not exceeding twenty-one years in possession, and not in reversion or by any way of future interest, so as there be reserved and made payable on every such lease, during the continuance thereof, the best and most improved yearly rent or rents," &c.

Sir F. Kelly, Sol.-Gen., for the plaintiff, submitted to the Court three points: 1. That before the Wills' Act, 1 Vict. c. 26, the leasehold property of the testator would not have passed under the general devise of realty contained in this will. 2. That that general devise of the realty was not within s. 26 of the Wills' Act. 3. That even if that section applied at all, the leaseholds did not in this instance pass, because a contrary intention appeared upon the face of the will. The Court of Exchequer had come to a different judgment upon all the three points (see Wilson v. Eden, 5 Exch. Rep. 752); but the Master of the Rolls had, notwithstanding that decision, sent this case for the opinion of another court of law, the judgment of the Master of the Rolls himself having been the other way (see the case reported 11 Beav. 237; 17 L. J. Ch. 459). The following authorities were now cited: Rose v. Bartlett, Cro. Car. 292; Thompson v. Lady Lawley, 2 Bos. & P. 303; Addis v. Clement, 2 P. Wms. 456; Lowther v. Cavendish, 1 Eden, 99; Lane v. Earl Stanhope, 6 T. R. 345; Davis v. Gibbs, 3 P. Wms. 26; Pistol v. Riccardson, 2 P. Malins, contrà, was not called upon.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Having attentively considered the language of this will, and the judgments of Lord Langdale and the Court of Exchequer, as well as the argument now addressed to us, I entertain no doubt upon the proper construction of this will. I concur entirely in the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, and in the reasoning upon which it is founded. I give no opinion as to the decision which would have been pronounced in this case before the Wills' Act; it is unnecessary to do so, because I entertain no doubt that this devise does come within the 26th section of that Act, which enacts "that a devise of the land of the testator, or of the land of the testator in any place, or in the occupation of any person mentioned in his will, or otherwise described in a general manner, and any other general devise which would describe a customary copyhold or leasehold estate, if the testator had no freehold estate which could be described by it, shall be construed to include the customary copyhold and leasehold estates of the testator, or his customary copyhold and leasehold estates, or any of them to which such description shall extend, as the case may be, as well as freehold estates, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will." Now here we have a devise of the lands of the testator in a place most distinctly set out. The words are: "I give and devise all and singular my manors or lordships, &c. lands, tenements, tithes, and hereditaments, situate, &c. and a parcel of land purchased by me of, &c. at, &c." It is admitted by the Solicitor-General that if the devise stopped there, sec. 26 would apply; but he contends that the devise is taken out of the operation of that section by the following words: "and all other my real estates in the said counties and elsewhere in Great Britain;" but I do not feel the force of that argument, and if the section would apply to the devise without those words, I cannot understand why it is less applicable to a devise with them; and the republication of the will by a codicil executed subsequently to the Wills' Act, brings it under the operation of that statute. Unless, therefore, a contrary intention appears by the will, the Legislature has provided that under this devise the leasehold estate shall pass. That brings us to the question, whether any contrary intention does appear by the will; and in considering that question, we are not to look at any mere technicalities, but taking into account the facts which existed, and which are applicable to the explanation of the will, we must see, if we can, what really was the intention of the testator, as it appears by his will. The question is quite different from that which arose before the Wills' Act, because at that time the cases depended upon certain technical rules of construction; and in order to pass leaseholds by a general devise of realty, that intention must have been clearly manifested by the will. In those cases technical rules often prevented the Courts from giving effect to the real intention of the testator, and judges were compelled to say quod voluit non dixit. Here, without reference to technical rules, we are to see what the testator really did intend; and I think it clear that he intended the church leaseholds to pass with his freehold estates by the devise of the realty. The whole had previously been treated as one estate, and it was so to be treated thereafter; nor do I see any incompatibility in the direction that it should be so treated thereafter. The church property had always been considered as belonging to the family; and though it is true, as the Solicitor-General has observed, that under the devise the first tenant in tail of the freehold estates would take an absolute estate in the leaseholds, I do not think the observation one of much weight, because the first tenant in tail would only have to execute a deed of recovery, and then he would have an absolute estate in the freeholds as well as the leaseholds. It seems to me that there is, at least, nothing in the will to shew a contrary intention, and if so, the effect of s. 26 is, that the leaseholds pass under the general devise of the realty.

ERLE, J.—I also have considered the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, and am satisfied therewith. It seems to me that the words of this devise are within the operation of sec. 26. As chattels real, the church leases are capable of passing under that devise, and they must pass unless an intention that they should not pass is made to appear; and I cannot find that intention. In dealing with that question, I may look at the circumstances in connection with which the will must be read. I may have regard to the nature of the property, and the circumstances which existed with respect to it at the time when the will was made; and I find that these leaseholds were church leaseholds, perpetually renewable on payment of a fine,—a peculiar kind of property, often considered almost as permanent as a fee. Then I must consider the contiguity of the church lands to the freeholds,—the unity of occupation, if I may so speak, part of the church lands being leased with part of the freeholds, and part used for ornamental purposes; and the result is, that the church lands and freeholds appear to me to have been contemplated as one estate. On the other hand, this is a strict settlement of the real estate; but is technically very inaccurate in expression when applied to personalty; and it is assumed from the framing of the will, that the testator was perfectly aware that leaseholds are personalty. Therefore, it is argued, he must have intended the leaseholds to pass as personalty, and not under the devise of realty. But if the testator's supposed legal knowledge is to be at all imported into the construction of the will, I apprehend that two propositions ought to be established—not only that he had the knowledge that leaseholds are personalty, but also that he was aware that these lands were leasehold. He might well have supposed that these lands in Merrington were held by the same title as the adjoining lands; and I cannot, therefore, accept the supposed legal knowledge as countervailing the effect of the other circumstances of this case.

CROMPTON, J.—Since the statute the burthen is shifted, and now it is thrown upon those who assert that the leaseholds did not pass to make out that the testator's intention was that they should not pass. No such intention appears in this case; and, indeed, very likely both properties would have been spoiled by dividing them. Judgment for the defendant.

Tuesday, May 4.

THE GUARDIANS OF THE CHELMSFORD UNION v. THE LOCAL BOARD OF HEALTH OF CHELMSFORD.

Public Health Act—Local board—Powers of rating—Exemptions conferred by previous local Acts for paving and lighting.

Under a local Act commissioners were empowered to pave and light the town of C. and authorised to impose rates upon a certain limited district only, the statute expressly exempting from rateability all lands beyond the specified limits, and certain descriptions of lands within them. Pursuant to the provisions of the Public Health Act, a local board was appointed for C. and under the regulations contained in the provisional order, the local board had authority to light and pave a much larger district than that which was previously lighted and paved by the commissioners: and all the unrepealed powers of the commissioners were transferred to them: but several of the clauses of the local Act, and amongst others the rating clause, were repealed from the time of the confirmation of the provisional order. Under sec. 88 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, the local board imposed a rate for the purposes of paving and lighting only upon the whole of the extended district:

Held, that they had authority so to do, inasmuch as by the provisional order they had the same power of paving and lighting the extended district, which the commissioners formerly had over the smaller district; and sec. 88 only kept alive those exemptions, which the local Act had conferred upon certain kinds or descriptions of property, but did not limit the power of rating to the ancient local limits.

This was an action of replevin, brought for the seizure of certain goods of the plaintiffs on a distress for a rate made by defendants under "The Public Health Act 1848," and by consent and pursuant to an order of Wightman, J. the parties agreed upon the following case:—

The defendants are the local Board of Health established for the parish of Chelmsford, in the county of Essex, under the Public Health Act 1848, and they made the rate under which the distress was levied under and by virtue of the provisions in that Act contained. The rate bears date the 29th day of August, 1851, and is entitled as follows:—

An assessment for a general district rate made by the Chelmsford Local Board of Health for defraying such expenses as are by law chargeable upon that rate, &c. &c.

The only question raised was, whether the plaintiffs were liable to be rated for the Union Workhouse and premises for which they were so assessed as aforesaid.

In the year 1789 an Act of Parliament was passed (29 Geo. 3, c. 44), intituled "An Act for Paving the

(a) In the course of the argument, Lord Campbell took occasion to mention that the late Mr. Tyrrell was the author of the Wills' Act, and that Mr. Brodie is the author of the Fines and Recoveries' Act.

Footways of the several Streets, public Passages, and Places within the Town of Chelmsford and Hamlet of Moulsham, in the Parish of Chelmsford, in the County of Essex, and for cleansing, lighting, and watching the said Town and Hamlet, and for removing and preventing Nuisances, Annoyances, and Encroachments therein."

Section 24 of this Act is that under which the commissioners are empowered to raise money by rates for the purposes of that Act.

Section 28. "Provided also that no person shall be subject to the payment of any rate or assessment, by virtue of this Act, for or in respect of any lands, hop gardens, or garden grounds, other than such gardens as are adjoining to, and let or occupied with any messuage or tenement within the said town or hamlet, subject or liable to be rated by this Act, or of any tithes, or any moduses, or other payments in lieu of tithes; and that no person shall be subject to the payment of any rate or assessment by virtue of this Act, for or in respect of any houses, buildings, gardens, tenements, or other hereditaments or estates within the said parish of Chelmsford, situate in, or near, or next adjoining to the street or highway called Duke-street, leading from Chelmsford aforesaid to Braintree, in the said county, that now are or hereafter shall be erected, or built beyond, or at a greater distance from the parish church of Chelmsford aforesaid, than the messuage or tenement now in the occupation of Elizabeth Blencowe, widow, and next adjoining to a house, called or known by the name of the Red Cow, nor for or in respect of any houses, buildings, gardens, tenements, or other hereditaments or estates, within the said parish of Chelmsford, situate beyond the end of a certain street called New-street, in the parish of Chelmsford aforesaid, nor for or in respect of any houses, buildings, gardens, tenements, or any other hereditaments or estates within the said hamlet of Moulsham, situate beyond or at a greater distance from the bridge dividing the said town and hamlet, than the messuage or inn, called or known by the name or sign of the Anchor," &c.

In the year 1823, the commissioners under the said Local Act, obtained a further Act (3 Geo. 4, c. 39) the provisions of which are not material. These Acts continued in force, and were carried into execution by the commissioners appointed under them, until the establishment of the Local Board of Health. Since the passing of the first and second mentioned Acts new streets have been formed, and new houses built within the parish, and some of such streets and houses have been formed and built within the hamlet of Moulsham, beyond the limits mentioned in the 28th section of that Act, but no property beyond these limits was ever rated under the Local Acts. In the autumn of the year 1849, the inhabitants of the parish of Chelmsford duly petitioned, under the provisions of the said Public Health Act, 1848, to have that Act applied to the parish of Chelmsford, and on the 22nd May, 1850, a provisional order for the application of the Public Health Act to the said parish of Chelmsford was duly made and issued by the General Board of Health.

By the provisional order (made part of the case) the entire parish of Chelmsford is constituted a district for the purposes of the Public Health Act.

By the Public Health Supplemental Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 32), the provisional order was confirmed and made absolute. In the month of Sept 1850, a Local Board of Health was duly elected for the said district of Chelmsford, and having previously made a general district rate for general purposes, on the 29th day of August, 1851, they made under the provisions of the 87th and 88th sections of the said Public Health Act, a second general district rate (being the rate hereinbefore mentioned) for the purpose of defraying the expense of paving and lighting portions of the said district requiring the same, such expense being legally chargeable upon that rate, and being expenses for which a rate might have been theretofore made under the local Act.

In this rate, all houses and other property in the said parish and district, as well within as beyond the limits defined in the 28th section of the Local Act, have been included.

In the year 1835, under the provisions of the Poor Law Act, the union called the Chelmsford Union was formed, and the union workhouse is situate in the parish of Chelmsford, but beyond the limits mentioned in the 28th section of the Local Act, the said union house and premises were never rated or assessed by the commissioners under the Local Act, but are assessed by the defendants in the rate in question.

The rate having been made upon the plaintiffs, as before mentioned, the plaintiffs declined to pay it, on the ground that they were not liable to be rated for or in respect of the said union house and premises, and, therefore, proceedings to enforce the payment thereof were duly taken before Justices of the Peace for the county of Essex, who determined and adjudged that the plaintiffs were so liable, and granted a distress warrant, under which the defendants levied for the amount of the said rate and costs, and no objection is intended to be raised to the regularity of any of these proceedings.

The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the plaintiffs were liable to be rated or assessed in the said rate of the 29th August, 1851, for or in respect of the said union house and premises.

The provisional order, after reciting the passing of the two Acts above mentioned, and that it appeared to the said general board to be expedient that the said Public Health Act, except as hereinafter mentioned, should be applied to the said parish, &c., and that provision should be made with respect to the said local Acts of Parliament, and the repeal, alteration, extension, and future execution thereof; but the same cannot be done without the authority of Parliament.

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the power vested in the said board by the said Public Health Act, we, the said General Board of Health, do by this provisional order under our hands and seal of office, order and direct (inter alia) as follows, that is to say:—

That from and after the passing of any Act of Parliament confirming this present order, the Public Health Act, 1848, and every part thereof, except section 50, shall apply to and be in force within and throughout the entire area, places, and parts of places comprised within the boundaries of the said parish of Chelmsford, in the county of Essex, and that such parish shall be and constitute a district for the purposes of the said Public Health Act accordingly. That from and after the day appointed for the first election of the local board of health for the said district, the said local Acts shall be repealed, except the sections 10, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 23, 16, of the said firstly recited Act, and sec. 6 of the secondly above recited Act, and except as to so much of the said Acts as relates to any rate, &c. made, &c., or to any act, matter, or thing done, or any offence committed, &c. previously to the passing of any Act of Parliament confirming this order.

That from and after the day appointed for the first election of the said local board, all the powers, &c. of the commissioners under the said local Act, and of their officers, &c. except watchmen, shall wholly cease, and such of the said powers, authorities, and duties, as are granted or imposed by so much of the said local Acts as shall not be repealed according to the provisions of this order, shall, so far as the same are or shall not be repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the said Public Health Act, or this order, or any bye-law to be made under the said Public Health Act, be transferred to, and be had and exercised by, the said Local Board of Health, and by such of the committees, officers, and servants of the said local board as shall be appointed by such board in that behalf, &c. in the same manner, as nearly as may be, as if such powers, &c. had been granted, &c. by the said Public Health Act; and from and after that day the said local board shall be the commissioners for executing such parts of the said local Acts as shall not be repealed according to the provisions of this order; and all lands, buildings, works, rates, &c. and all other property and state whatsoever belonging to the said commissioners shall be transferred to the said local board as fully, &c. and shall be held as nearly as can be by the said local board, upon the same trusts, and to and for the same uses, intents, and purposes, as the same were or would be held by such commis-

Baddeley for the plaintiffs.—The power of the defendants to impose this rate depends upon s. 88, of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, which provides that the special and general district rates shall be levied upon all such kinds of property as are assessable to any rate for the relief of the poor; with this, amongst other provisoes,—"That if within any district or part of district, any kind of property shall, before the passing of this Act, hav been exempted from rating by any local Act, in respect of all or any of the purposes for which general or special district rates may be made under this Act, the same kind of property shall, in respect of the same purposes and to the same extent within the parts to which t exemption applies, but not further or otherwise, be exempt from assessment to any general or special district-rates under this Act." The consequence is, that the old exemptions are kept alive, and the local board have no greater power of taxation than the old commissioners had. The exemption being clearly expressed can only be taken away by words clearly having that effect, and there is nothing in the general statute or the provisional order which has that effect. The powers and the property of the commissioners are by the latter transferred to the local board, but "upon the same trusts and to and for the same uses, intents, and purposes" as before. (He referred to R. v. The Manchester and Salford Waterworks Company, 1 B. & C. 630; Vin. Ab. Statute, "Construction.")

Channell, Serjt. contrà.—This rate is made for the same purposes for which a rate might have been made under the local Act, but it extends over a larger district. The defendants rely upon the provisional order as giving them power to apply the local Act with the alterations and extensions therein provided for; and they have now complete powers of paving and lighting—of paving by s. 68 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63; and of lighting by one of the unrepealed clauses of the local Act (s. 13). But it is said that s. 88 keeps alive the exemptions given by s. 28 of the local Act, and that is the principal question. It does keep alive certain exemptions, namely, those which relate to certain kinds or descriptions of property, as, for example, the hop gardens mentioned in s. 28; but it does not confine the power of rating to the old local limits.

Baddeley, in reply.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—It seems to me that the provisional order, which has the effect of an Act of Parliament, puts an end to all difficulty. If the local board could not make a rate upon the whole district, but were confined to an assessment upon the property within the ancient limits, great injustice would be done, because many of those who derive the benefit would escape the burthen; but the effect of the provisional order is to make the benefit and the burthen coterminous; for whatever powers the commissioners had within the ancient limits, the local board now have over the whole parish of Chelmsford. It is perfectly clear that they may pave and light the whole of that district, and equally clear that they may lay a rate for those purposes upon the whole district. But then we come to the exemptions; and it is said that s. 88 keeps alive the exemption of all property beyond the ancient limits; but, in my opinion, that is not so. I think that the 88th sec. of the general Act is very carefully and skilfully drawn; for when we look to s. 28, of the local Act, we see that two exemptions are there provided for—one relating to certain kinds or descriptions of property; the other, relating to local limits; and probably it may be so in other local Acts. Then s. 88 does not include the exemption founded on locality, which would be unjust; but it preserves the exemption of certain species of property, which were within the old, and are within the new district. "The same kind of property shall, in respect of the same purposes, and to the same extent, within the parts to which the exemption applies, but not further or otherwise, be exempt." Therefore if, by s. 28 of the local Act, poorhouses had been exempt, this union workhouse would still have retained its exemption under s. 88 of the general Act, as the farms and the hop gardens retain their exemption. But as no such exemption exists, I think that it is liable to be rated to the general and special district rates, though locally situate beyond the ancient limits.

ERLE, J.—I am of the same opinion. Section 88 throughout uses the same language:—"Such kinds of property" are to be rated as are assessable to rates for the relief of the poor; and any kind of property exempt by local Acts, is to retain its exemption. Under this local Act, there is an exemption of certain kinds of property; and the power of rating is also confined to certain local limits. It is hardly correct to say that property beyond those limits was exempt, because the power of rating did not extend beyond them.

CROMPTON, J.—I also think that it would be straining the words to apply "any kind of property" to a whole district not liable to be rated under the local Act. The words "within the parts to which the exemption applies" raised some little doubt in my mind at first; but it is clear that their operation is restrictive and not enlarging.

Judgment for defendants.

FARROW and ANOTHER, Assignees of a Bankrupt, v. MAYES.

Bankrupt—Judge's order by consent—12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 137.

After issue joined in a hostile action against the bankrupt at the suit of the defendant, the bankrupt took out a summons for stay of proceedings on payment of debt and costs, and upon the parties attending at chambers before the judge, an order was made for stay of proceedings on payment within a given time. Default was made in payment, and judgment signed and execution levied, and the debt and costs paid to discharge the execution. The judge's order was not, nor was any copy thereof filed within twenty-one days after the order, pursuant to the Bankrupt Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 137.

Held, that the judge's order was an order by consent, and that the judgment and execution thereon were void under the 12 and 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 137, as against the assignees of the bankrupt, who were entitled to recover the money paid by the bankrupt upon the execution, as money had and received to their use.

This was an action by the plaintiffs, as assignees of one Stewart, a bankrupt, to recover the sum of 96*l.* odd, from the defendant, under the following circumstances.

The defendant, in October, 1849, sued Stewart before the bankruptcy, for 75*l.*; on the 26th of November, 1849, the bankrupt took out a summons at chambers for stay of proceedings, which was duly attended, and a judge's order was drawn up in the usual form, "upon hearing the parties, and by consent," &c. for a stay of proceedings upon payment of the debt and taxed costs on the 16th of December, 1849. Default being made in payment, judgment was signed on the 18th of December, a fi. fa. issued on the 19th, a levy made on the 20th, and on the 22nd of December, the sheriff being paid 105*l.* for debt, costs, and expenses, quitted possession. Stewart became bankrupt in February, 1850.

Neither the judge's order, nor a copy thereof, was filed pursuant to the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 137.

The plaintiffs contended that the execution was void under the following section of the Bankrupt Act, and that the money paid over to the defendant became money had and received to their use as assignees.

By the Bankrupt Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 137, every judge's order made by consent given by any such trader defendant in any personal action, and whereby the plaintiff shall be authorised forthwith, after the making of such order, or at any future time, to enter up judgment, or to take out execution; a true copy of such order shall, together with an affidavit of the time of such consent being given, and a description of the residence and occupation of the defendant, be filed with the officer within twenty-one days after the making of such order, &c. in like manner as a warrant of attorney and a cognovit, &c. &c. otherwise such judge's order, and any judgment entered up thereon, and any execution issued or taken out on such judgment, shall be null and void to all intents and purposes; and the provisions of the 3 & 4 Geo. 4, c. 39, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 66, as to filing warrants of attorney and cognovits, and entries and searches relating thereto, &c. shall be applicable to every such judge's order.

Manisty for the assignees.—This was a judge's order, obtained by consent, within the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 137. The summons for stay of proceedings was taken out by the bankrupt, a trader, being the defendant in the action at the suit of the now defendant, and the order is drawn up by consent. The judge could not have made any order of the kind unless the parties had consented to it. Bryan v. Child, 5 Ex. 368, shews that judgment and execution upon a judge's order, not duly filed under the above section, are void against the bankrupt's assignees, although binding upon the bankrupt himself.

O'Malley (Hayes with him).—Cases like the present were not contemplated by the Act; the provision was aimed at cases where parties by giving a judge's order in the first instance, instead of a warrant of attorney or cognovit, sought to evade the penalties against warrants of attorney and cognovits. Here the proceedings are hostile to the last. By the County Courts Amendment Act, it is lawful for defendants to go before the Court and confess judgment, and that is analagous to what was done in this case. Biffin v. Yorke, 5 M. & G. 428, proceeded on the 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 60, the words of which are different to those in the present Act. Sec. 137 is to be read with reference to sec. 133. And the money being paid over before the bankruptcy, the remedy, if any, is not for money had and received. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Friday, May 7.—Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—We are of opinion that the judgment and execution herein are rendered null and void by the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 106, s. 137, because the judge's order on which it was signed was obtained with the consent of the defendant, and was not, nor was any copy thereof filed within twenty-one days after such consent. We think that the judge's order for judgment was obtained with the consent of the defendant, though it was made upon a bonâ fide application by the defendant to stay proceedings upon terms in a hostile action, and although the defendant had at first wished to draw up the order, and only neglected to do so because the plaintiff had an order to enable him to go to trial. No defence arises in the action. The course of legislation upon this subject make it clear that the enactment was intended to render void all such judgments, though signed within twenty-one days after given, and all such executions, though executed before the date of the Act, without notice of an act of bankruptcy. We think it follows that money had and received under the execution, becomes by the bankruptcy the money of the assignees, and so recoverable under it. The inconvenience arising from annulling the judgment and execution by the bankruptcy, makes the filing a judge's order for judgment a matter requiring careful attention. Of course it will be necessary in all such cases that the consent order, or a copy thereof, should be filed, with an affidavit delivered, of the time when such consent was given.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

COUNTY COURT APPEAL.

MORVILLE v. THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Carrier—Liability for negligence—Notice—Special contract.

A common carrier for hire received a horse to be conveyed from A. to B. At the time of the receipt of the horse, he required the owner to sign a ticket, which, after stating the amount paid for the conveyance of the horse and the termini of the journey, contained the following words: "This ticket is issued, subject to the owner's undertaking to bear all the risk of injury by conveyance and other contingencies; and the owner is required to see to the efficiency of the carriage before he allows his horses or live stock to be placed therein. The charge being for the use of the carriages and locomotive power only, the company will not be responsible for any alleged defects in their carriages unless complaint be made at the time of booking, &c. nor for any damage, however caused, to horses, cattle, or live stock of any description travelling upon the railway &c. I have examined the carriages, and am satisfied with their sufficiency and safety." Then followed the signature of the owner.

Held, that this was not a mere notice under sect. 4, but a special contract within the 6th section of the Carriers' Act, and protected the carrier from liability for damage done to the horse through his negligence in the course of its journey.

This was an appeal from the County Court of Yorkshire, holden at Pontefract.

This is an action brought to recover the sum of 27*l.* the amount of damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the negligence and carelessness of the defendants' servants, whereby the plaintiff's horse was injured. On the trial of the cause in the said County Court on Tuesday, the 25th day of November last, before the judge of the Court, without a jury, the following facts appeared in evidence.

The plaintiff is a veterinary surgeon and dealer in horses, residing at Wakefield, and the defendants are common carriers by railway for hire, from (among other places) Hirkstead, in the county of Lincoln, to Wakefield, in the county of York.

On the 11th day of August, 1851, the plaintiff, who had been at the Horncastle horse fair, brought a horse, which he had there purchased, to the Hirkstead station of the Great Northern Railway Company, for the purpose of having it conveyed from thence by railway to Wakefield, and on the arrival of the down train from London, it was safely placed and tied up in a horsebox. The plaintiff then went into the company's office and paid the charge demanded for the carriage of the horse to Wakefield, and upon such payment signed, in a book kept by the clerk at the station, a memorandum or ticket, an exact copy of which is annexed to this case, and is marked with the letter A. The clerk then handed to the plaintiff what he (the plaintiff) understood to be a duplicate of the ticket signed by him in the book, but which does not contain that part in italics relating to the sufficiency of the carriages. The paper (B.) hereunto annexed, is an exact copy of the ticket so given to the plaintiff.

On the arrival of the train at Knottingley, the horse-box, containing the plaintiff's horse within it, was detached from the London train and shunted upon the Wakefield line by the servants of the defendants, in order to be attached to another train proceeding to Wakefield, and in so doing a concussion took place between the horse-box and a truck or carriage on the latter line, which caused the injury which, on the arrival of the horse at Wakefield, it was found to have sustained.

The counsel for the defendants contended that the accident had not arisen either from gross negligence or misfeazance on the part of their servants, and that the ticket signed by the plaintiff was a special contract entered into by him, disclosing the precise terms upon which the defendants undertook to convey the plaintiff's horse, and that it was a bar to the plaintiff's recovering in the action; and he cited amongst other cases in support of his position, Austin v. The Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, 20 L. J. R. (N. S.) 440, Q. B.; and Chippendale v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 21 L. J. R. (N. S.), 22, Q.B. The plaintiff's attorney contended that the ticket above set forth was only a special contract as to the sufficiency and safety of the carriage or horse-box, and that the preceding paragraph did not purport to be, and was not in effect any contract or agreement whatever between the plaintiff and defendants, but was a mere notion in restriction of the common law liability of the defendants as carriers, and as such was void under the 4th section of the statute 1 W. 4, c. 69. The judge took time to consider his judgment, and on the 20th of January last at Pontefract, gave such judgment in favour of the plaintiff, ordering the verdict to be entered for him, and assessing the damages at 21*l.*; but the judge expressly found that the injury done to the horse had not been caused by any misfeazance, wilful misconduct, or gross negligence on the part of the defendants or their servants, but was the result of the want of due care only in shunting the horse-box at Knottingley, as above stated. The question for the opinion of the Court of Q.B. is, whether the defendants upon the construction of the said ticket signed by the plaintiff as above mentioned, and upon the finding of the said County Court judge, are protected from their liability to pay the damage occasioned as above stated.

The following is a copy of the ticket mentioned in the case, and marked A. The ticket marked B, was substantially a duplicate of that marked A, except that it did not contain the last paragraph, "I have examined the carriages," &c.:—

The Great Northern and East Lincolnshire Railway Company.

"Ticket for horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, dogs, and live stock of every description.

Paid.

"This ticket is issued subject to the owner's undertaking to bear all the risk of injury by conveyance and other contingencies; and the owner is required to see to the efficiency of the carriage before he allows his horses or live stock to be placed therein; the charge being for the use of the railway carriages and locomotive power only, the company will not be responsible for any alleged defects in their carriages or trucks, unless complaint be made at the time of booking, or before the same leave the station; nor for any damage, however caused, to horses, cattle, or live stock of any description travelling upon their railway, or in their vehicles.

'I have examined the carriages, and am satisfied with their sufficiency and safety.

"(Signed) JOHN MORVILLE,

"Owner, or on the owner's behalf."

Phipson, for the appellants, contended that the ticket signed by the plaintiff, constituted a special contract, and therefore fell under the 6th, and not under the 4th sec. of the Carriers' Act. By the 4th sec. no mere public notice given by carriers can limit their liability; but the 6th sec. provides that that Act is not to affect any special agreement made between the parties. A mere notice would not require the plaintiff's signature; but the company required that in order to constitute it a special agreement, and the terms of it clearly exempt them from liability for the loss of which the plaintiff complains. This question was before the Court of Ex. on Saturday, and that Court held, that a ticket thus signed constituted a special contract. He also cited Shaw v. The York and North Midland Railway Company, 18 Law J. 181 Q. B. and the cases above mentioned.

Cowling, contrà, contended that this ticket was not a contract between the parties, but a mere notice, and that the plaintiff's signature was required as an acknowledgment that he had received the notice, so as to dispense with proof, which would otherwise be necessary. In the Court of Ex. on Saturday, Platt, B. dissented from the judgment in the case of Carr v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 19 Law T. and it is submitted that that judgment cannot be sustained, if the facts were the same as those in the present case.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am of opinion that the judgment of the judge of the County Court in this case was wrong. It appears to me, that this ticket was not a mere notice, but a contract, and was, therefore, not within the 4th, but was within the 6th sec. of the Carriers' Act. As a mere notice the plaintiff would have been bound by it when it was shown him, without signing it; but the company wished to make it more than a notice, and therefore he was required to sign it. He did sign it, and then it became a contract, and by the very extensive terms introduced into it the company are protected from liability.

ERLE, J. concurred. Judgment reversed.

COUNTY COURT APPEAL.

OLDING v. SMITH.

Truck Act—Payment in current coin of the realm—Evasion of the Act—Pay-office adjoining shop—Intimidation—Evidence to affect the employer.

In an action for wages, by a collier, it was proved that he had received the amount due to him, in the current coin of the realm, at a pay-office, adjoining a shop kept by his employers (a Joint Stock Iron Company) for the sale of goods to their own workmen, and other people; but that he had spent the money in the masters' shop immediately upon the receipt of it. In order to shew that he had dealt at the shop under compulsion, evidence was offered of a conversation, between the plaintiff and the overlooker under whom he worked. The overlooker had no authority to employ or dismiss the men under him, which was the duty of the coal agent, but he stated that he had received a paper from a clerk in the office of the coal agent, whose principal duty was, to ascertain the amount of work done by the men, containing a list of the persons whom he was to remember as not dealing at the shop, that that paper contained the plaintiff's name, and that he produced it at the time of the conversation above mentioned. In that conversation, the overlooker threatened the plaintiff with his employers' displeasure, if he did not deal more largely at the shop:

Held that that statement was not admissible in evidence against the plaintiff's employers:

Quære, if the evidence had been admissible whether it would have rendered subsequent payments of money spent at the shop, invalid as contrary to the Truck Act.

Upon appeal from the decision of the judge of the County Court of Monmouthshire holden at Tredegar, the learned judge stated the following case.

This action is brought to recover the sum of 41l. 16s. 9d. as a balance of wages due to the plaintiff from the Rhymney Iron Company for cutting coal. The defendant is the chairman of the directors of that company. The plaintiff has been a collier in the employ of that company for several years down to the month of November last. The particulars of demand embrace a period extending back from November 1851 to the month of January 1850; during that time it was admitted on both sides that the plaintiff had earned altogether the sum of 64l. 15s. 9d. and that he had received of this amount the sum of 24l. 16s. 6d. either in cash at one of the company's pay offices, or in the ordinary monthly stoppages for doctor and fund, and such like. The remaining sum of 39l. 19s. 3d. was the amount in dispute, the plaintiff contending that the payment to him of this sum of 39l. 19s. 3d. was a payment in goods and not in cash, and therefore void under the Act of the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 37, commonly called the Truck Act. [The 3rd section of that Act was set out in the case.]

The Rhymney Iron Company is a joint-stock company, having iron works at Rhymney, in Monmouth, where they employ about 4,000 colliers, miners, and other workmen. They have an office there at which the general business of the works is transacted, the accounts kept, and wages paid, which is hereinafter referred to under the name of "The company's monthly pay-office," and the cashier at such office is hereinafter referred to as "The company's cashier."

There is a general shop at the works which is kept by Mr. Buchan in partnership with the Rhymney Iron Company, under the firm of Andrew Buchan and Co.: adjoining this shop is an office where a portion of the workmen are paid their advances by Andrew Buchan and Co. under orders from the Rhymney Iron Company in the manner hereinafter mentioned, and which is hereinafter referred to as the pay-office adjoining the shop of Andrew Buchan and Co. The cashier employed there was, during the period comprised in the plaintiff's account, employed by Andrew Buchan and Co., and is hereinafter referred to as "the cashier in the office adjoining the shop." This office is divided from the shop, and though having an internal communication with the shop, has a different outer entrance, so that persons having business there, and also at the shop, must go out into the thoroughfare in passing from one to the other. The colliers employed in each pit or level, work under the immediate superintendence of an overman or gauger, who acts under the directions of the coal agent, and has nothing to do of his own authority with the hiring or discharge of the colliers, nor with the payment of their wages, or even calculating the amount of them. It is the province of the coal clerk to ascertain the amount of each man's earnings, which he does from the weigher's daily account of the quantity of coal cut by the party, and from the overman's monthly account of "dead work" done by him, by which is meant the opening of stalls and headings, and other works necessary to the getting of coal, but not the cutting of the coal itself.

The duty of the overman is to overlook the colliers, and see that the work is properly performed. He reports any instances of misconduct, and discharges the offending parties when authorised by the coal agent, and conveys requests to the coal agent or coal clerk, when any men are desirous of having advances on account of their current earnings out of the usual course. In these instances the overman informs the coal agent, or the coal clerk, about how much "dead work" the party is entitled to be paid for before it is actually measured, and the coal agent determines whether an advance shall be made or not.

The workmen in their employ are settled with monthly, at the company's monthly pay-office, up to the last Saturday in every month, when a pay ticket is delivered to each workmen, crediting him with the amount of his earnings during the month, and debiting him with the balance due from him at the preceding month's settlement (if any) with the cash advanced at both pay-offices during the month, and with the amount of the usual monthly stoppages. A balance is struck at the foot of the pay ticket, which, if against the workman, is carried to the debit of his next month's account, and if in his favour, is paid him in cash. Besides the monthly settlement, the workman is allowed to draw at the end of every week such an amount as the coal clerk thinks fit, having regard to the estimated amount of his earnings during the week, and which he enters in a book kept at the company's monthly pay office, where such draw is also paid in cash. Besides these payments, advances are also made on account of wages at the pay-office, adjoining the shop of Andrew Buchan and Co., in the following manner:—The coal clerk makes up every week a book called the "Advance Book," in which is entered against each man's name, a certain sum calculated by reference to his probable earnings, and which book is carried down to the cashier in the office adjoining the shop of Andrew Buchan and Co., as his authority for the payment of the said advances. The workmen are at liberty to draw the amount of the orders entered in the advance-book in cash, without having any dealings whatever with the shops for goods, and it was shewn that the cashier in the office adjoining the shop of Andrew Buchan and Co. had paid during the five months ending June 1851, an average per month of 287l. 4s. 7d. to workmen in the company's employ, no part of which was spent in the shop. The plaintiff had in this way received numerous small sums, amounting to 1l. 9s., forming part of the above-mentioned claim of 39l. 19s. 3d., and expended the remaining part of that sum in goods at the shop of Andrew Buchan and Co.

When the workman determines on dealing at the shop, the mode of dealing is as follows:—The workman first procures from the shop a small pass-book, at his own cost, and whenever he wishes to draw anything on account of the sum authorised in the advance-book, he either takes or sends the pass-book to the cashier in the office adjoining the shop of Andrew Buchan and Co. who refers to the advance-book and enters in the left-hand margin of the pass-book the amount for which he then finds that the workman is entitled to draw. The bearer of the book, who is generally the wife or one of the family of the workman, then takes the book into the shop and gives it to the shopman, who permits such person to select any goods to an amount not exceeding the amount so entered. After the goods have been selected, the shopman enters in the money column of the pass-book, "cash," being the amount of the goods selected, and the book is then taken by the bearer to the cashier in the office adjoining the shop of Andrew Buchan and Co. who gives him in the current coin of the realm the amount so entered in the money column. He then enters into the shop, and, on payment of the money he has so received from the cashier, he receives the goods and takes them away. It was proved, however, that men sometimes go away with the money thus received from the cashier, without taking the goods they had ordered. All the moneys paid by the cashier in the office adjoining the shop of Andrew Buchan and Co. are repaid to Andrew Buchan and Co. by the Rhymney Iron Company.

It was proved upon the trial that there were other parties than the company's workmen who dealt at the shop of Messrs. Buchan and Co. and that the moneys paid in the shop by parties not getting their cash from the office adjoining the shop were put in a separate and altogether a distinct till from the moneys brought from the last-mentioned office. It was also proved that the cashier at the office adjoining the shop, who is supplied with money by A. Buchan and Co. kept his distinct account books, in one of which he entered the moneys which were not to be spent in the shop, and in the other those that were.

The first of these books furnishes a check upon the cashier as to the money put in his cashbox. It was further proved that the sum kept by this cashier was but small, sometimes not lasting anything like the whole day, and that as soon as it was exhausted he went to the till in the shop and cleared it to replenish his cashbox, and so the same money went round and round, and when there was not enough to be had from the till in the shop, he was supplied with more cash by Andrew Buchan and Co.

It was proved that, of the workmen in the employ of the company during the year 1850 and 1851, 437 men, earning on the average 1,240l. a month, did not deal at the shop of Andrew Buchan and Co. that 409 men dealt partially, expending only 265l. per month, out of 1,321l. their average earnings, and that Andrew Buchan and Co. had altogether in number not exceeding 1,300 customers among the company's workmen.

The learned judge, in giving judgment, divided the time over which the plaintiff's account ran into two periods, viz. from January 1850, to January 1851 (both months inclusive), and from February 1851, to November 1851, in the former of which periods the plaintiff received 22l. 16s. and in the latter 17l. 2s. 5d. at the office adjoining the shop of Andrew Buchan and Co. The whole of these two sums (except the sum of 1l. 9s. above mentioned) was paid away by the plaintiff in the shop immediately after it had been received, for goods which he had just before selected in the manner before mentioned. So far as regarded that part of the plaintiff's claim which was included in the first period from January 1850, to January 1851, amounting to the sum of 22l. 16s. there was no evidence of any influence having been exercised on the part of the plaintiff's employers, or of Andrew Buchan and Co. to induce him to deal at the shop, and the judge being of opinion that that amount was received by the plaintiff in the current coin of the realm, within the letter and spirit of the said Act of the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 37, gave judgment for the defendant with respect to that portion of the plaintiff's demand. But with regard to the remaining sum of 17l. 2s. 5d. he gave judgment for the plaintiff, considering upon the evidence hereinafter mentioned, that subsequently to the month of January, 1851, the plaintiff did deal at the shop of Andrew Buchan and Co. under some degree of constraint. The plaintiff worked under an overman named David Humphreys, and the plaintiff's attorney proposed to give evidence of a conversation alleged to have taken place between David Humphreys and the plaintiff, in the month of January, 1851. It was objected that the conversation, supposing it to have taken place, was not evidence against the company, the statement of David Humphreys not being within the scope of his authority. The judge at first allowed the objection, but it was afterwards proved that at the time of the conversation alluded to, a paper was produced by David Humphreys, containing a list of names of men working in his level, including the plaintiff's, and David Humphreys, on being examined respecting it, stated as follows:—"I had a list from the office of four or five names; James Olding's name was in it; I had it from William Hemis, the coal clerk. He is a clerk under Mr. Bedlington (the coal agent) in the office. I had the paper from William Hemis, to remember the names that did not deal at the shop." Upon this the judge held that whatever was said by David Humphreys when he produced the list to the plaintiff was admissible against the Rhymney Iron Company. The evidence of what really took place at that interview was conflicting, but the finding of the learned judge in reference to this evidence was, that Humphreys intimated to the plaintiff that unless he complied with his employers' wishes by dealing more largely at the shop, he would incur their displeasure, and the risk of being dismissed from their service. Upon the facts thus found by him the judge drew the following conclusion in law:—Believing that the plaintiff was induced by threats communicated to him through the ordinary channel of communication between him and his employers to deal more at the company's shop than he would have done had he been permitted to follow his own inclinations, and considering that the effect of this intimidation is to make the delivery of the goods and not the cash payment the real payment, he was of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to his judgment for 17l. 2s. 5d. The questions submitted for the determination of the Court of Appeal are—1st.: Whether the evidence of the plaintiff and Samuel Rogers as to what was said by David Humphreys to the plaintiff under the circumstances stated in this case, was admissible. If the Court should be of opinion that it was not, then the judgment to be entered for the defendant as to the said sum of 17l. 2s. 5d. 2nd: But if the Court should be of opinion that such evidence was properly admitted, then whether the said sum of 17l. 2s. 5d. by the cashier in the office adjoining the shop of Andrew Buchan and Co., under the circumstances stated in this case, was a legal payment in satisfaction and discharge of the plaintiff's wages to that extent. If the Court should be of opinion that it was, then the judgment to be entered for the defendant as to the said sum of 17l. 2s. 5d.; if otherwise, then the judgment of the County Court to stand.

The Attorney-General, with him T. Challoner Smith, for the appellant. This case is of great importance, because the Rhymney Iron Company employ a very large number of men, and in the course of business which they have adopted, have proceeded upon the best legal advice. The Truck Act, 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 37, does not prohibit masters from keeping shops for the sale of goods to their workmen; and it is highly beneficial to the workmen when they do so. It is a great safeguard against improvidence. That Act prohibits payment otherwise than in the current coin of the realm; but this case finds, that the workmen at the Rhymney Iron Works are always so paid. [Coleridge, J.—The question would rather seem to be, whether the payment was not colourable.] If so, there can be no ground for the distinction made by the judge between the first part and the second part of the plaintiff's demand; because the mode of dealing was the same during the whole period. The first question here is, whether the evidence of intimidation was admissible; and it certainly was not; because Humphreys had no authority to bind the company by any declarations which he might choose to make, wholly beyond the sphere of his duties, especially when those declarations would render the members of the company liable to heavy penalties. (Sec. 9.) It was no part of the duty of Humphreys or the coal clerk to endeavour to compel the men to deal at the shop. Secondly. The mode of dealing was perfectly legal. [COLERIDGE, J.—Suppose the money is paid and received upon the express understanding that it should be spent at the shop?] That is a very different case from the present. Here it is found that the dealing is voluntary; and an illegal threat, if given, would not bind the master. He referred to Chawner v. Cumming, 8 Q. B. 311; Lane v. Pratt, 1 Law T. 623.

Keating, contrà.—Sec. 2 of the statute shews the intention of the Legislature, which was to prohibit every sort of interference by the master with the disposal of the workman's wages. The plaintiff has not appealed against the judgment of the Court below; but if he had, strong reasons might be adduced for saying, that as to the first part of the claim, the judgment was wrong. First, the evidence of intimidation was admissible. So long as the company continue to be shopkeepers, inferences may fairly be drawn from their making it their interest to have customers; and the list of names produced by Humphreys came through the ordinary channel of communication between the workmen and their employers. The coal agent is virtually the master, and the paper comes from his office. Besides, sec. 25 of the statute interprets employers to include all clerks or other persons engaged in the employment or superintendence of the workmen. [He was stopped.]

COLERIDGE, J.—As we have formed a clear opinion on the first point, it is unnecessary to hear any further argument upon the second and more important question. I think that the learned judge did wrong in admitting this evidence; and, first, to dispose of sec. 25 of the statute, it seems to me that that section has no bearing on this question. The meaning of that section is, that whenever you find the word "employer" in that statute, you may read it as meaning "masters, bailiffs, foremen, managers, clerks, and other persons engaged in the hiring, employment, or superintendence of the labour of any such artificers;" for example, when sec. 2 speaks of a contract to be made between any artificer "and his employer," the interpretation clause takes effect; and would render the section applicable though the contract was made not by the real employer, but by some manager or clerk, as Bedlington or Hemis; but the section does not affect the question of agency, as it arises here. Then was Humphreys, the agent of the company, to bind them by his statement to the plaintiff? His duties are distinctly stated in the case. He acts under the coal agent; he has nothing to do with hiring or discharging the men; but he communicates messages to and fro between the workmen and the officers above. I think, therefore, the judge properly rejected the declaration of Humphreys in the first instance; but he appears to have thought that the production of the list of names received from the office of the coal-agent altered the case. But first that list is traced no farther back than to Hemis, the coal clerk, whose duty is to ascertain the amount of the men's earnings, and who also is engaged as a clerk in the office of the coal agent. Could Hemis then bind his superior Bedlington by such a communication? I think it would be very dangerous to hold that he could, and if he could not bind Bedlington, à fortiori, he could not bind the company. If a person employed in a subordinate situation does or says something within the scope of his employment, it may fairly be presumed that he has a general authority which renders such declarations binding upon his employer; but when he goes beyond the sphere of his duties, and still more if he does something illegal, and attended with penal consequences, it would be very unjust and unreasonable to hold his employer bound by his acts. Humphreys may have been the ordinary channel of communication between the men and their employers, but a master who usually communicates with his inferior servants by an upper servant is not on that account bound by any communication which that servant may choose to make to those under him. For these reasons I am of opinion that the evidence was not admissible, and our judgment must be for the defendant.

ERLE, J.—This is an action by a labourer for his wages; to which the answer is, payment in money; and the plaintiff replies, the payment was ostensibly in money, but really in goods, contrary to the Truck Act. The plaintiff says, "You made that illegal arrangement with me;" and he endeavours to shew such an arrangement made with Humphreys or Hemis; and that evidence is not admissible without some evidence of authority in them to make such an arrangement. Their duties are stated, and it seems to me clearly that it does not fall within the sphere of those duties to enter into a contract of that kind, attended by such important consequences; and unless some such "arrangement" can be proved as is described in sec. 25, the plaintiff has no answer to the defence set up. Judgment reversed.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

ROBINSON v. GILL.

County Court—Duty of clerk—Order to pay by instalments.

It is not the duty of the clerk of a County Court to prepare a notice of an order made by the judge upon the defendant to pay by instalments.

An order to pay by instalments is a part of the judgment.

An action was brought in a County Court against A. and B. and in the absence of A. it was adjudged that the plaintiff should recover a certain sum, and an order was made that it should be paid by weekly instalments. The clerk of the Court prepared an incorrect notice, which was served on A. His goods were afterwards seized, the instalment, according to the real order, not being paid. In an action brought by A. against the clerk for breach of duty

Held, that the clerk was not liable, there being no such duty as alleged.

The defendant was clerk of the County Court of Cheshire, and this action was brought against him for alleged neglect of duty as such clerk. On the 24th of Oct. 1851, an action was brought by one Cook, in the County Court of which the defendant was clerk, and 17*l.* recovered against the present plaintiff and another person, who were joint defendants in that action. The judge ordered that the defendants should pay 3*l.* down and the rest by weekly instalments. The defendant prepared a notice of the order, but by mistake stated the instalments to be payable monthly, instead of weekly. The plaintiff not having paid the first instalment according to the order, Cook, the plaintiff in the cause in the County Court, issued a warrant of execution, under which the plaintiff's goods were taken. He thereupon commenced an action against the present defendant for breach of duty, the first count of the declaration being for a misfeasance in making out a .. notice, the second being for a nonfeasance. With respect to the judgment and order, the allegations in the declaration was "that it was adjudged that the plaintiff should recover a certain sum, and thereupon it was ordered that" the money should be paid by instalments. The declaration was demurred to generally.

Cowling, in support of the demurrer, argued that there is no such duty imposed upon the County Court clerk as is alleged in either count. Secs. 92, 94, and 95 of the County Court Act shew that if default is made in payment of instalments, execution is to issue at once without any intermediate step. It is not the duty of the clerk to prepare a notice of the judgment, that being made in the constructive presence of the defendants, and the order to pay by instalments being a part of the judgment. (Ely v. Mould, 5 Exch. 819.) But in this case one of the defendants might have been, and probably was, present in court at the time. In Ely v. Mould the order was for payment forthwith; but the Act makes no difference between an order to pay forthwith, and to pay by instalments: they are equally a part of the judgment. The 111th of the New Rules of Pract. directs that orders for payment of money shall be served; but it does not say in what cases; and it will not apply to this.

Welsby, contrà. The declaration alleges that it was adjudged that the plaintiff should recover a certain sum. This was a complete judgment; and what follows, viz. "and thereupon it was ordered that" the money should be paid by instalments, is an order distinct from the judgment, and is in the nature of a warrant or precept within the 27th section of the Act. The 92nd section shews that this order is not the judgment. A judgment imports a payment forthwith, and during that the defendant is supposed to be present so as to have notice of it. But an order to pay by instalments is inconsistent with a judgment to pay forthwith, and different from it, and comes within the 111th rule, which directs that "orders for payment of money or costs, or both, shall in all cases be served by the bailiff." And if so, it was the clerk's duty to prepare the notice for the bailiff to serve. And even if this rule is only directory, still it is imperative on the officer; and if he undertakes the duty and proceeds in it incorrectly, he is liable. In Ely v. Mould the money was to be paid forthwith, and it is a mere judgment. But here there is an order varying the effect of the judgment in favour of the then defendants.

Cowling in reply.—The order is not distinct from the judgment. They must be assumed to have been made at the same time; and the judgment would not have been complete without an order as to how the money should be paid. Cur. adv. vult.

Saturday, May 1.—JERVIS, C.J. delivered the written judgment of the Court.—The question in this case is raised by a general demurrer. The declaration contains two counts; the first is founded on a misfeasance, and the second on a nonfeasance. We will consider the second first, as that raises a question on both counts which it will be well to consider unencumbered by the other point. After referring to the judgment and order set out, the first count avers, that after the making of the order, "it became and was the duty of the defendant, as such clerk as aforesaid, to prepare, or cause to be prepared and made out, a notice in writing of such order, to the intent and in order that the same might be delivered or transmitted to, or left for the now plaintiff, as such defendant in the said cause, and to take due and proper care that no execution should issue out of the said court founded upon the said judgment and order, without such notice having been first prepared and made out as aforesaid; yet the plaintiff in fact says that the defendant, not regarding his duty in that behalf, did not, as such clerk as aforesaid, prepare or cause to be prepared or made out any such notice in writing, but on the contrary wholly neglected and omitted so to do." It then alleged, that "through the mere negligence and breach of duty of the defendant in that behalf, he, the plaintiff, did not at any time receive any notice of the said order, and was from thence continually until the time of committing the grievances next hereinafter mentioned, wholly ignorant of the making thereof, and by reason thereof made default in payment of divers of the said instalments thereon, and thereby directed to be paid as aforesaid." And then certain consequences followed, of which he complains. The allegation of duty in this case is not a matter of averment and proof, and therefore to make the defendant liable, he must have omitted to perform some legal duty. The statute of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, imposes no such duty in terms. The 27th section, referred to by the plaintiff's counsel in the argument, being confined to the issuing of summonses and warrants; the 92nd, the 94th, and 95th, which empower the judge to order by instalments the payment of a debtor, and define the mode of proceeding for the recovery of the debt, being silent upon this subject. But it is said the new rule, 111, casts this burthen on the County Court clerk, because in all cases all orders, &c. are to be served by the bailiff of the home Court; the clerk is the proper officer to make out the documents to be served by the bailiff, and the duty of preparing the orders, therefore, is cast upon him. In our opinion, this rule has no such operation. It does not enlarge the duties of the County Court clerk beyond the provisions of the Act of Parliament, but was framed merely for the purpose of pointing out by whom service was to be made. The orders which require service within the provisions of the statute, or by the practice of the Court, do not include judgments. The rules of practice drawn up by the judges are not an exposition of the statute; but, assuming that some orders for the payment of money and costs may require service, they say such service shall be made by the high bailiff of the County Court. But it may be, that if the order ought to have been served, that the defendant, without reference to the Act or the new rules, may be liable. It is unnecessary to discuss the defendant's liability in that case, if, in our opinion, it was not necessary to serve this order; and we are of opinion that this point is well decided in Ely v. Moule, 5 Exch. 918. The first count of the declaration referred to in the second count states a judgment and order given for debt and costs, and "thereupon it was ordered that the debt should be paid by instalments." The order for payment is part of the judgment, and it becomes unnecessary to consider what ought to have been done with the judgment. When the judgment was delivered, the order being part of the judgment, must have been known; and no service was necessary. These observations dispose, also, of the principal question upon the first count, which proceeds upon the misfeasance of the alleged duty by the defendant, in making out a copy of the order so inaccurately, that the plaintiff was misled and induced not to pay the instalment in due time. If the defendant was not legally bound to make out such notice, the fact of his having made out an incorrect notice will not give the plaintiff a cause of action; and we have already expressed our opinion upon that point. But this count contains, also, a further allegation, namely, that it was the practice of the County Court for the clerk to make out a copy of the order for payment of the debt by instalments, to be served upon the defendant. If such a practice exists, it may be contended that the proceedings in question were irregular. But we need not give any opinion upon this point; for whether they were regular or irregular, no action will lie in such a case for a mere irregularity of this description. It is observed, that the practice of the Court is mentioned by the Act of Parliament. It may be, that the form of the rule and the schedule of fees may have led, in point of fact, to the practice of serving a notice of judgment in such a case; but, in our opinion, they do not warrant such a practice, and do not establish a legal necessity of pursuing such a course. For these reasons, we are of opinion the defendant has not been guilty of any breach of duty, and therefore is entitled to the judgment of the Court.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by FREDERICK BAILEY, and C. J. B. HERTSLET, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Monday, Jan. 19.

WILLIAMS v. ROBERTS.

Pleading.

Landlord and tenant—Fraudulent removal of goods to avoid a distress—Following them and breaking and entering to distrain such goods without a previous demand.

Declaration in trespass for breaking and entering the close and stable of the plaintiff, damaging and destroying divers locks, and carrying away certain goods of the plaintiff.

Plea, admitting that the goods seized were, at the time of the seizure, the goods of the plaintiff as averred in the declaration, but justifying that seizure on the ground that the goods had been, within thirty days before, fraudulently carried off by the tenant, being his own goods, from the demised premises, to prevent a distress for rent, and locked up on the plaintiff's close, and averring the locks to have been broken in the presence of a constable.

Demurrer thereto.

Held, that the plea stated a good prima facie case within the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 1, and if the plaintiff intended to bring himself within the next section, which comes by way of proviso, that no landlord should take or seize goods as a distress which have been bonâ fide sold for a valuable consideration to persons not privy to the fraud, he should, according to the rules of pleading, have so replied. In the absence of such a replication, the plaintiff must be taken to have been either merely in possession of the goods, or a bailee, or to have been donee without value; and therefore the liability of those goods to distress still continued:

That it was unnecessary to prove any previous request to enter the premises, or demand to have the goods delivered up before breaking such locks as are necessary to obtain the goods, in exercise of the right given by the statute. The presence of the peace-officer is a protection against any excess

That there was no argumentative traverse by the plea, because it admitted the goods to be the plaintiff's at the time of seizure, and avers that they were the tenant's at the time of removal.

This was an action of trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's premises and taking away certain goods. Plea—That one Owen Owens rented certain premises of the defendant, and that the goods in question were fraudulently removed by Owen Owens to the premises where the trespass was alleged to have been committed, in order to avoid such goods being seized under a distress for rent; and that defendant followed them in order to take them as for the rent due in respect of the premises so occupied by the said Owen Owens, of the defendant.

To this there was a special demurrer.

Cowling, in support of the demurrer.—The plea is bad both in form and substance. It states the trespass to be for taking goods of and belonging to the plaintiff; but it does not confess them to be the plaintiff's, nor does it distinctly traverse that fact. Fletcher v. Morillier, 9 A. & E. 457, is identical with the present case upon this point. The plea is bad in substance, because it admits the goods to be those of the plaintiff; and then, if so, they could be only taken under the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 7. It does not state that they were conveyed away as under the statute would enable the landlord to retake or take; as under that statute, two things must concur,—a fraudulent removal, and also that they have not been bonâ fide sold. (1 Saund. 233, b, note b.) It is an argumentative traverse of the goods being the plaintiff's. (Bailey v Bidwell, 13 M. & W. 73; Thornton v. Adams, 5 M. & Sel. · Rich v. Woolley, 7 Bing.; Angel v. Harrison, 17 L. J. 25, Q.B.) It was necessary also that the defendant should have alleged a demand for permission to enter in the first instance. Harper v. Carr, 7 T. R. 270, was referred to.

Willes, contrà.—It was not necessary, under the circumstances, to make or allege any previous demand to enter upon the premises in question to seize the goods. Here it was a mere entry into a stable, not a dwelling-house. (Ratcliffe v. Burdon, 3 Bos. & Pul. 223; Hutchison v. Burch, 4 Taunt. 619; Patrick v. Colerick, 3 M. & W. 483.) It should have been distinctly shewn that the plaintiff was a participator in the fraudulent removal of the tenant's goods: the tenant may have deceived him, and if so, he would have his remedy for it. But it is unnecessary to allege more than the statute requires, and the plea does state everything required by the statute; and it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to bring himself within the proviso in the 2nd section of the Act. (Thibault v. Gibson, 12 M. & W. 88; Williams's Saunders, 262 (a); Washbourne v. Burrows, 1 Exch. 107; Upton v. Bassett, Cro. Eliz. 445.) In Fletcher v. Morillier, there was an averment that the plaintiff was privy to the fraudulent removal of the goods; and that is the distinction between that case and the present. [PARKE, B.—Suppose another person brings goods and places them in my field or house, without my knowledge or consent, does the law allow another to enter and take them away without any notice to me, or to break my door or gate for that purpose?] The statute permits a landlord to enter with a peace-officer, wherever the goods are which have been so fraudulently removed from his tenant's premises to prevent their being taken under a distress for rent.

JUDGMENT.

Monday, April 26.—PARKE, B.—This case was argued before my brothers Alderson, Platt, and Martin, and myself, at the sittings after last Term. The declaration was in trespass, and stated that the defendant broke and entered a certain close of the plaintiff, called the stable, in the county of Carnarvon, and broke open, pulled down, and damaged two doors of the plaintiff, of and belonging to the said close, and then took and carried away the same, and converted them to his own use. The pleas were—first, Not guilty; secondly, That the close, &c. were not the property of the plaintiff; thirdly, That the goods and chattels were not the plaintiff's; and the fourth plea states, that one Owen Owens, for a long time, to wit for the space of half a year, next before and ending on the 1st day of September, A.D. 1850, and from thence until and at the same times, when, &c. held and enjoyed a certain water corn-mill and premises, situate in the parish of Aber, in the county of Carnarvon, under and by virtue of a certain demise thereof, theretofore, to wit, on the 1st day of September, 1849, made by the defendant E. G. Roberts to the said O. Owens, for the term, to wit of one year, from thence next ensuing, and so on from year to year, so long as the said defendant and the said O. Owens should respectively think fit, at and under the yearly rent of 130*l*. payable half-yearly, by even and equal portions; the reversion thereof, to wit in fee, then and still belonging to the defendant, the said E. G. Roberts. And the defendants further say, that on the day and year first aforesaid, a large sum of money, to wit the sum of 65*l*. of the rent aforesaid, for half a year of the said term, ending on the same day and year, became and was due and payable from the said O. Owens to the defendant the said E. G. Roberts; and at the several times when, &c was in arrear and unpaid; and the said O. Owens, after the said rent became and was due and payable, and whilst the same was actually due, in arrear, and unpaid, and within thirty days next before the said several times when, &c. the said O. Owens fraudulently and clandestinely conveyed away and carried off and from the said premises so held and enjoyed by him as such tenant thereof as aforesaid, the said goods and chattels of him in the said declaration mentioned, being the proper goods and chattels of him the said O. Owens, in order to prevent the said defendant from distraining the same for the said rent so before and at the time of the said removal actually due, in arrear, and unpaid as aforesaid; and for that purpose conveyed the said goods and chattels in the [sa]id declaration mentioned to the said close [in] which, &c.; and because the said goods and chattels which had been so fraudulently and clandestinely conveyed away and carried off by the said O. Owens, as aforesaid, still remained and were in the said close, in which, &c. to which the same had been so conveyed as aforesaid, and were there kept locked up so as to prevent them from being seized and taken as a distress for the said arrears of rent, the said E. G. Roberts in his own right, and the said other defendants as the servants of the said E. G. Roberts, and by his command, afterwards, and while the said rent so remained due, in arrear, and unpaid as aforesaid, and within thirty days next after the said goods and chattels were and had so been fraudulently and clandestinely conveyed away and carried off as aforesaid, and whilst they remained so kept locked up as aforesaid, that is, at the time when, &c. entered into the close in which, &c. in the said declaration mentioned, in order to seize and take the said goods and chattels so therein being as aforesaid, as a distress for the said arrears of rent so due and owing as aforesaid; and did thereupon, at the several times when, &c. and within thirty days next after the said goods and chattels had been and were so fraudulently and clandestinely conveyed away and carried off as aforesaid, in the said close in which, &c. take and seize the said goods and chattels so there found, as a distress for the said arrears of rent, the same then remaining due, in arrear, and unpaid; and because, on the occasion aforesaid, the said goods and chattels had been and were put and kept in the said close in which, &c. locked up, so as to prevent them from being taken or seized as a distress for the said arrears of rent, and so that the defendants could not, without breaking open and entering the said close, seize the said goods as aforesaid, the defendant E. G. Roberts in his own right, and the other defendants as bailiffs of the said E. G. Roberts, and by his command, on the occasion and at the time aforesaid of entering and taking the said goods in the said close, were forced and obliged to, and did, in order to seize the said goods as aforesaid, first calling to their assistance the constable of the place where the said close and goods were, according to the form of the said statute, and with his aid and assistance, in the daytime, break open and enter the said close in order to take and seize, and did then, as aforesaid, take and seize the said goods and chattels for the said arrears of rent, according to the said statutes; and in so breaking and entering the said close, did, to a small and necessary extent, commit the supposed trespasses, so far as they relate to the said doors, locks, staples, hinges, bolts, bars, and latches; and the defendants, on the occasions aforesaid, did no unnecessary damage, and no more than was necessary to enable them to seize the said goods as aforesaid, for the purposes aforesaid. There was a replication to the first, second, and third pleas, and a special demurrer to the fourth for insufficiency in law; and, amongst the causes of demurrer, that it is improperly pleaded to the whole declaration, and contains an argumentative traverse of the goods being the plaintiff's. The plea admits that the goods seized were, at the time of the seizure, the goods of the plaintiff, as averred in the declaration, but justifies that seizure, on the ground that the same goods had been within thirty days before fraudulently carried off by the tenant, being his own goods, from the demised premises, to prevent a distress for rent, and locked up on the plaintiff's close; and it avers the locks to have been broken in the presence of a constable. The question on general demurrer is, whether the plea states a good primâ facie case within the enactment of the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 1. I think it does. If goods of the tenant are fraudulently conveyed away, they are by that section made liable to a distress within the period of thirty days, to whatever place removed. By the general terms of the section, liability attaches to the particular goods themselves, not merely so long as they continue the goods of the tenant. And then the next section, which states by way of proviso, that no landlord should take or seize goods as a distress which have been bonâ fide sold, for a valuable consideration, to persons not privy to the fraud, operates as a defeasance of the provisions of the former section, and takes all goods so sold out of its operation. If the plaintiff fell within that category, he ought to have so replied, according to the rules of pleading. And a reason for this enactment being made in the shape of a proviso is, that the plaintiff knows his title to the goods better than the landlord, and the defendant ought not to be called upon to plead a part of his justification, that they were not so sold. In the absence of such a replication, the plaintiff must be taken to have been either merely in possession of the goods, or a bailee, or to have been donee without value; and therefore the liability of those goods to distress still continued. But it was then contended that the plaintiff's close could not be entered, and still more his locks could not be broken, unless he was a party to, or at least cognisant of, the fraudulent removal of the goods; for it would, it was said, be a hardship on him if innocent, and if the goods were locked up without his privity or knowledge in his close, that his locks should be broken, and further, that it could not be a justifiable act to break open his gates without a previous request to open them. And though the statute in express words requires neither one circumstance nor the other, one or both must by implication be deemed necessary, on the plain principles of justice. I do not think that either of these circumstances were necessary conditions to the exercise of the right given by the statute. According to the ordinary construction of the words they are not requisite, nor are they, I think, implied. Though in some cases it might be just to require both circumstances, in the great majority which occur it would not be so; for, generally, goods fraudulently removed are not secreted in a man's close or house without his privity or consent. The Legislature may be presumed to have had this in their contemplation,—"adeo quæ frequenter accidentia adaptantur." The remedy against the fraud of the tenant given by the Act is a stringent one, and meant to be operative; and if it were made a condition to the exercise of this power, that the landlord should prove the privity of the person in possession of the goods, [it m]ight be very difficult to do so, or to ascertain that within the period allowed to distrain them, the remedy would be of little value. Again, if the gate of a field could not be broken open without a previous request to open it, it may easily be conceived that a great impediment would be interposed by the necessity of searching for and finding the occupier, in order to make a request, and as it rarely happens that the occupier of the field would be innocent, the statutory provision is by no means on the whole unjust, and the presence of the peace officer is a protection against any excess. Besides, if the plaintiff were really innocent of all collusion with the fraudulent tenant, or person placing the goods on his close, he would have a remedy against them for the damage sustained by the act of the landlord. I think, therefore, the plea is good on general demurrer. The grounds of special demurrer are also insisted on. The first ground is, that the statement that the goods were those of the tenant, is inconsistent with the allegation in the declaration, that they were the plaintiff's, and so an argumentative traverse; and if the plea admits the goods to be the plaintiff's, then the right to distrain did not exist, because it applies only to cases in which the tenant removes his own goods. But this is a misapprehension. The plea admits the goods to be the plaintiff's at the time of seizure, and avers that they were the tenant's at the time of removal, in which there is no inconsistency whatever. Both may be perfectly true. There is, therefore, no such dilemma as suggested in the special demurrer. From some passages in the judgment of Lord Denman, in Fletcher v. Marillier, 9 Adol. & Ellis, 461 (if the report be correct), it would appear that the difference between the time of removal and of seizure was not adverted to; but the case itself is distinguishable, as the plea admitted the goods, at the time of seizure, to be the property of, and in the possession of the tenant, and no colour of title was given to the plaintiff; and that is pointed out as a cause of special demurrer, and also relied upon in the judgment. Our judgment, therefore, is for the defendant.

Judgment for the defendant.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LORD HENNIKER.

Legacy—Power of appointment—Appointment with a condition—Liability to legacy duty.

A power is given by will of the first Lord H. to the second Lord H. to appoint 2,000l. to his wife if he thinks fit, and he is to appoint it to his wife, in the same instrument by which he appoints, he imposes on her the condition of relinquishing her dower, or free-bench of all the copyhold estates. The question was, whether that was to be considered as a purchase of the dower or thirds, as to be treated as a purchase in fact, or whether it was a condition on the receipt of the legacy, which condition she accepts, and makes no conveyance, but is still the recipient of the legacy:

Held, to be nothing more than an appointment of the legacy, upon a condition. She knows by the instrument by which the legacy is appointed that it is a legacy, and if she takes it, she takes it as a gift of the testator, no matter whether the person who exercises the power of appointment annexes a condition to the gift or not, still it is a gift of the testator, and is taken from the testato[r]. Therefore it becomes liable to legacy duty.

The Solicitor-General (Sir P. Wood) argued the case for the Crown and referred to The Attorney-General v. Jackson, 1 C. & Jer.; Stow v. Devonport, 5 B. & Adol. 359; The Attorney-General v. Pickard, 3 M. & W. 552, and 6 M. & W. 348; 2 Sugden on Powers (7th edit.), 73; and Newport v. Savage, in the Appendix.

Saturday, February 7.—PARKE, B. delivered judgment. This was a special verdict which was argued before us yesterday, and we took time and have considered the case, and are of opinion that judgment ought to be in favour of the Crown. The special verdict states, and the information states also, that John Minet Henniker made his will on the 26th of July, in the year 1821, and after disposing of his property in different ways by the will, gave directions as to the purchase of estates in Suffolk with the proceeds of the estates in Essex and other counties; and the will contains a clause with a power enabling the tenant for life who shall be entitled to the rents and profits of the estates, to direct the estates to be sold and a deed of settlement to be made of the estate; and there should be inserted in that settlement a power that the tenant for life shall be entitled to the rents and profits of the estate, so settled by deed or will, duly executed, to charge all, or any part of such estates with any annual sum or sums of money not exceeding one-third part of the annual value thereof, unto, and for the benefit of, any woman or women whom he or they might respectively happen to intermarry. The special verdict then proceeds to state the death of John Henniker, the first Lord Henniker, and that John Minet Henniker afterwards succeeded to that estate, and became the second Lord Henniker, and that he by his will directed the property in question to be, with the payment of the annual sum of 2,000l. of lawful money of Great Britain, free and clear from and without any other deduction whatsoever, unto and for the benefit of his wife Mary Lady Henniker, during the term of her natural life, the said yearly rent or annual sum of 2,000l. to be in the nature of and in full for the jointure of his the said John Minet Henniker's said wife, and to be in lieu, bar, and satisfaction of and for her dower, or thirds at common law, or by or on account of custom, free bench, or widow's part, which she could, should, or otherwise might have or claim, of, in, or out of the freehold, copyhold, or customary manors, messuages, farms, lands, tenements, &c. of the second Lord Henniker. And then it proceeds, also "in case he, the said John Minet Henniker Major Baron Henniker, was not authorised and empowered by the said will of the said testator, John Henniker Major Baron Henniker, to charge the estates thereby devised and directed to be purchased and settled respectively as aforesaid, with the payment of so large an annual sum as 2,000l. by way of jointure, the deficiency, if any, should be a charge upon, and said John Minet Henniker Major Baron Henniker thereby expressly charged and made liable such part and parts of certain of his real estates and hereditaments in and by his said will devised as should not be sold under the trusts in his said will contained as hereinafter mentioned, with and to the payment of such deficiency." Then it proceeds to state the death of Lord Henniker, and the entry into the receipt of the profits; that Lady Mary Henniker was a stranger in blood, and that the value of the estates, or the rent of a third of the estates, was only 1,116l. 13s. 4d., and then it proceeds to state a calculation, in case there should be a deduction for the value of the dower, or thirds free bench of Lady Henniker. In the course of th[e] argument, the points in dispute between the parties were ultimately reduced to one single point. It is perfectly clear, in the first place, that though no deed was executed,—and indeed it was not denied by Mr. Hoggins, who on behalf of Lord Henniker was desirous it should be taken on the merits,—it is perfectly clear, though no deed was executed, there was an equitable power to charge the estates with an annuity. The case therefore falls within the principle of the decision of this Court in the case of the Attorney-General v. Pickard. In the next place it is perfectly clear that the present Lord Henniker, either as the heir of his father, who was the surviving trustee, or as the tenant for life in possession, was the person who, by the Act of Parliament, was bound to pay any duty either as trustee or as the person in possession. In the next place it is clear that after decision of the Attorney-General v. Pickard, this case may be considered precisely in the same way as if, instead of an annuity charged upon the lands, there had been a bequest of a sum in gross, say 1,000l. to be appointed, if the second Lord Henniker died before, to his wife; then the only question in the case is, whether there had been such an appointment to the wife, or a taking by the wife by virtue of that appointment, so as to make her a recipient of the legacy. There was a little doubt in the course of the argument—a doubt which was removed from the minds of all the Court by the reply of the Solicitor-General. The case, therefore, becomes this:—A power is given by the will of the first Lord Henniker to the second Lord Henniker to appoint the 2,000l. to his wife if he thinks fit, and he is to appoint it to his wife; and by the same instrument by which he appoints he imposes on her the condition of relinquishing the dower or thirds freebench of all the copyhold estates. The question is, whether that can be considered as a purchase of the dower or thirds freebench so as to be treated as a purchase in fact, or whether it is a condition on the receipt of the legacy, which condition she accepts and makes no conveyance, but is still the recipient of the legacy. Now, we are of opinion that thi[s is] nothing more than an appointment of the legacy upon a condition. She knows by the instrument by which the legacy is appointed that it is a legacy, and if she takes it she takes it as a gift of the testator; and no matter whether the person who exercises the power of appointment annexes a condition to the gift or not, still it is the gift of the testator, and is taken from the testator; therefore it becomes liable to legacy duty. There were some points raised in the course of the argument of a nice character, which might have raised some question if this had been a condition annexed to the legacy by the testator himself; then there would have been a question whether the whole of the money so received by the legatee was a legacy, or whether a part of it was not a purchase of some interest that might possibly reduce the duty to be paid upon the legacy, and so the difference in value between the legacy and the estate given up in consideration of it. It may be so; that is a point that may be settled hereafter if it becomes necessary. It is enough to say that that point does not arise here, because this is just a case in which there is no condition annexed by the testator; nor does it make any difference in this case whether the legatee is liable to pay legacy-duty or not. There is nothing in the argument of the case to shew this. If the question was hereafter to arise between Lord and Lady Henniker, or an endeavour to recover back the money he was compelled to pay as legacy-duty, it may be material to consider whether or not the legacy-duty was to be paid by the legatee, or out of the estate; but no question arises about that matter here. The case is precisely the same as the one I have already stated; it comes to that simple case, and on that simple case the Court is of opinion that the person taking the legacy takes it only by the gift of the testator, and, consequently, must pay the legacy-duty.

ALDERSON, B.—The second will creates the liability to the duty.

PARKE, B. The sums are agreed on upon which the duty is to be paid.

Hoggins.—It will be purely nominal, on the principle of your lordship's judgment.

PARKE, B.—On the whole of the interest to the extent of the rent of the Suffolk estates; the legacy-duty is to be payable upon that.

ALDERSON, B.—That is the amount of the annuity for which legacy-duty was payable.

PARKE, B.—Confined to the Suffolk estates.

ALDERSON, B.—At the time of the appointment.

PARKE, A.—Not exceeding one-third of the value at the t[ime] of the appointment; consequently, when the will took effect on the death of the second Lord Henniker, the value of the estate was to be determined, and the duty is to be paid on one-third of the annual receipts of the estate.

DOE dem. KIMBER v. CAFE.

Will—Construction of—Devise to trustees.

A testator by will gave and devised to three trustees, and their heirs and assigns, "all that my freehold house, No. 23, situate on the south side of Portland-street, now in the occupation of Mr. May, and all the appurtenances thereon, upon trust, nevertheless, to receive the rents, issues, and profits thereof, and after deducting all taxes and expenses whatsoever, to pay the same quarterly, as the same should accrue and be received, unto such person and for such purposes as my said daughter, E. McIntyre, shall in writing, signed by her hand, after every quarter-day has elapsed, and so as not to be anticipated or disposed of, direct or appoint, and for want of such appointment into the proper hands of my said daughter, to and for her sole and separate and peculiar use, and not to be liable to the debts, control, or engagements, or intermeddling of her present or any future husband, and from and immediately after the decease of my said daughter, upon trust to pay and apply the said rents, issues, and profits for or towards the maintenance, education, and bringing up of my said daughter's children then living, during their minority, and upon the youngest living of my said daughter's children attaining the age of twenty-one years, I give and devise the said house and premises unto all the children of my said daughter who shall be then living, in equal shares and proportions, share and share alike."

Held, that the estate given to the trustees and their heirs was restricted to the life of E. McIntyre and the minority of all her children, that the estate of the trustees and their heirs was to continue only whilst the objects of the trust required it.

This was an action of ejectment brought to recover an undivided third part of certain premises described in the will of James Cole, which was dated in July 1806, and the question was, what estate passed under the will.

Bramwell, Q.C. and Barstow appeared for the lessor of the plaintiff, and contended that as this was a devise without words of inheritance, it was not a devise of a trust, but of a legal estate.

Manisty, contrà.—This is a devise of a beneficial estate, with no devise over; there is an express devise to the trustees in fee here. (Knight v. Selby, 3 M. & Gr. 92; Moore v. Cleghorne, 10 Beav. 421-3, and Challenger v. Sheppard, 8 T. JUDGMENT.

Friday, May 7.—PARKE, B.—The question in this case turns upon the construction of the will of James Cole, made in the month of July, 1806; and by that will James Cole gave and devised to Ann Cole, James Lumley, and James Lodge, and their heirs and assigns, "all that my freehold house, No. 23, situate on the south side of Portland-street (being the premises in question), now in the occupation of Mr. May, and all the appurtenances thereon, upon trust, nevertheless, to receive the rents, issues, and profits thereof; and after deducting all taxes and expenses whatsoever, to pay the same quarterly, as the same should accrue and be received unto such person, and for such purposes as my said daughter, Elizabeth McIntyre, shall, in writing, signed by her hand, after every quarter-day has elapsed, and so as not to be anticipated or disposed of, direct or appoint; and for want of such appointment into the proper hand of my said daughter, to and for her sole, and separate, and peculiar use, and not to be liable to the debts, control, engagements, or intermeddling of her present or any future husband, and from and immediately after the decease of my said daughter, upon trust, to pay and apply the said rents, issues, and profits, for or towards the maintenance, education, and bringing up of my said daughter's children, then living, during their minority; and upon the youngest living of my said daughter's children attaining the age of 21 years, I give and devise the said house and premises unto all the children of my said daughter who shall be then living, in equal shares and proportions, share and share alike." The lessor of the plaintiff was the devisee of Wm. Cole, the heir-at-law, and residuary devisee of J. Cole. The defendant claimed under the three children of Elizabeth McIntyre, all of whom conveyed their interests in the property in question to the defendant. If they were entitled as tenants in common in fee the plaintiff must fail; if they were only tenants in common for life, one of them being now dead, the lessor of the plaintiff will be entitled to recover an undivided third part. We are of opinion that he is so entitled. It was properly admitted by Mr. Bramwell for the plaintiff, that this being a devise to trustees and their heirs, if the trust had been first to a feme covert, then for the maintenance of her children, then for her children in equal shares and proportions, share and share alike, the children would then have taken a fee on the authority of the cases of Moore v. Cleghorn, 10 Beavan, 423, and Knight v. Selby, 3 M. & G. 93. In such a case, everything the trustees took would have been given for the benefit of the devisee, and there would have been no resulting trust for the heir. But it was contended, and we think rightly in this case, that the estate given to the trustees and their heirs was restricted to the life of Elizabeth M'Intyre and the minority of all her children, on the principle that unless a different intention appears, the trustees, although the estate is devised to them and their heirs, took that quantity of interest only which the purposes of the trust require, and the trusts expressed in the devise of the house in question do not require the estate to continue after the youngest child has attained twenty-one; and the devise over is a direct devise to the children, not in trust for them; and if this direct devise had stood alone, there can be no question the children would have taken life estates only as tenants in common. A direct devise, however, may, by the context, be shewn not to give a legal estate to the devisee named, and the legal estate may, if the purposes of the will require it, continue in the trustees. Doe dem. Tomkyns v. Willan, 2 B. & Ad. 87, cited for the defendant, is a case of that sort. In that case, Bayley, J. relied on the necessity of the estate continuing in the trustees and their heirs to support contingent remainders to the children of one of the devisees, as well as the indefinite power to demise it for the best rent, as shewing the estate of the trustees was to continue. In the present case, there is nothing but a leasing power for a limited term, and at the best rent, contained in the subsequent clause of the will set out in the case to shew that the legal estate was meant to continue always in the trustees. We think this is not enough to call upon us to read the direct devise to the children as if it had been a trust in their favour. It is true that a power to lease affords an argument of weight in favour of the legal estate being intended to be given to the trustees, especially if it had been intended, as in Doe v. Wellbank, 2 B. & Ad. 154; but it is not conclusive, and in this case there is no necessity for the purpose of effecting the testator's object that the trustees should have more than a power to be exercised, while the estate vested in them for the purpose of the trust continues. The authority to lease extends to all the houses devised to them, and in one of the devises an estate in fee is devised to the grandson on attaining twenty-one, and it cannot be supposed it was meant they should lease for twenty-one years in that event. It seems to us that the most reasonable construction is, to hold the estate of the trustees and their heirs is to continue only whilst the objects of the trust require it, and the power to lease is a power only to be exercised during the continuance of this estate so limited to the trustees. The devise, therefore, to the children, is a decided devise to them, as the words import, and unquestionably they do not take more than life estates under that devise. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to our judgment.

KEY v. COTTESWORTH.

Where it is the intent of a merchant resident abroad to preserve his right in property transmitted to England until certain bills drawn by him to cover the purchase-money, are accepted, the bill of lading should be transmitted by him indorsed in blank to an agent, to be delivered over when the bills have been so accepted; and where such a precaution was neglected, it was Held, that the property in the goods at once vested in the consignee.

This was a motion for a new trial. The action was for money had and received, and was tried before Martin, B. at Guildhall, at the sittings after Michaelmas Term. The plaintiff sought to recover the sum of 671*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* the proceeds of two parcels of Indian handkerchiefs sold by the defendants. The plea was, Never indebted. The case was mainly tried upon admissions. The plaintiffs were merchants at Madras, and Messrs. Scott, Bell, and Co. were their correspondents in London. The defendants were merchants in London, acting generally as commission-agents for Messrs. Kilgour and Leith, merchants at Glasgow. On the 5th of February, 1847, Messrs. Kilgour and Leith addressed a letter to the plaintiff as follows:—"Enclosed are patterns of a third order for handkerchiefs, which we will thank you to have put in hand immediately on receipt. This order has been too long delayed, and if you can by any means hurry execution, we will feel particularly obliged. You will draw for cost, and consign goods as before." The patterns were inclosed, together with a detail of the order. The transactions which had taken place before were these. In 1845, Messrs. Kilgour and Leith were desirous of procuring handkerchiefs from the plaintiff at Madras, and in order to provide for payment, they wrote several letters to the defendants to induce them to open a credit for the purpose. The defendants ultimately assented, and on the 17th of September, 1845, addressed the following letter to the plaintiff:—"At the request of Messrs. Kilgour and Leith, of Glasgow, we beg to open a credit in your favour to the extent of fifteen hundred pounds (1,500*l.*), to be applied to the execution of an order they have given you for Madras handkerchiefs, and for cost of which, as produced, you draw on us at the customary date, on forwarding bills of lading to our order, and timely orders for insurance." In consequence of this letter, and the two orders for handkerchiefs transmitted by Kilgour and Leith to the plaintiff, the latter executed the order and forwarded the goods and the bill of lading to the defendants, who received, accepted, and paid the bills drawn on them in accordance with the letter of the 17th of September, to the extent of 1,500*l.* therein mentioned, and this transaction was closed. In consequence of a letter of the 5th of February, 1847, from Messrs. Kilgour and Leith, the plaintiffs executed the order therein contained, and the goods ordered were shipped for England in two vessels, the Providence and the Essex. The goods by the Providence were shipped on the 21st of August, 1847, and they, as well as the goods shipped by the Essex, were stated in the admissions to have been shipped on the said order and on the account of Messrs. Kilgour and Leith; and the bill of lading was dated the 21st of August, and was in the usual form. It stated the goods to have been shipped by the plaintiff, and to be deliverable to the defendants or their assigns, on payment of the freight. Upon the same day the plaintiff addressed the following letter to the defendants:—

"By desire of our mutual friends, Messrs. Kilgour and Leith, of Glasgow, we beg to hand you herewith invoice and bill of lading for nine cases Madras handkerchiefs, shipped on the Providence, Captain S. Hicks, to your address, and against which, we have, as usual, drawn upon you at six months, for the equivalent of the amount of invoice in 369*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.* being at the current exchange of 2*s.* per rupee, and which will no doubt be duly protected. These goods have been placed in a cabin, to prevent the chance of their sustaining injury from the cargo; and as they have not been insured, we trust you will cover the risk on your side."

The bill of lading and invoice mentioned in this letter were inclosed, and the letter and its contents received by the defendants on the 26th of October, in due course. The heading of the invoice was as follows:—"Madras, 26th August, 1847. Invoice of nine cases of Madras handkerchiefs, shipped by the undersigned Messrs. Binney and Co. on board the Providence, Capt. Hicks, consigned to Messrs. Coleswell, Panell, and Pryor, London; on account and risk of Messrs. Kilgour and Leith, of Glasgow." The goods by the Essex were shipped on the 9th of October. A bill of lading in blank, indorsed by the plaintiff, and invoice, substantially in the same form, were inclosed in a letter from the plaintiff to the defendants, dated the 12th of October, which was received by the defendants on the 22nd of November, and the letter is as follows:—

"By desire of our mutual friends Messrs. Kilgour and Leith, of Glasgow, we have the pleasure to hand you herewith invoice and bill of lading for eight cases Ventapollam handkerchiefs, shipped on the Essex, Captain W. N. Howard, to your care, and we have, as usual, drawn upon you at six months for the equivalent of the amount of invoice in 302*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* being at the current exchange of 1*s.* 11½*d.* per rupee, and which will, doubtless, meet due honour. We leave the insurance to be effected on your side."

On the 27th of October, Messrs. Kilgour and Leith stopped payment. The goods by the Providence arrived in London upon the 21st of October; the goods by the Essex about the 3rd of March, 1848. Both parcels were received by the defendants under the bills of lading, and both were sold by them, and the proceeds, amounting to 671*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* sought to be recovered in this action, received by the defendants. Kilgour and Leith were before, at the time, and still are indebted to the defendants upon a balance of account in a larger sum. On the 21st of October, Scott, Bell, and Co. having received the bill drawn against the goods by the Providence, caused it to be presented for acceptance to the defendants, who ultimately refused to accept it. The second bill was also presented for acceptance on the 22nd of November and dishonoured, and both bills were duly protested. On the 4th of March, 1848, Messrs. Olverson and Co. the plaintiff's attorneys, addressed the following letter to the defendants.

"We have been directed on behalf of Messrs. Binney and Co. of Madras, to give you notice that in consequence of the insolvency of Messrs. Kilgour and Leith, of Glasgow, on whose account they shipped the undermentioned goods, they claim to stop the said goods in transitu. We understand that bills of exchange were drawn by Messrs. Binney and Co. upon you, in payment of the invoice cost of these goods, and that you have refused to accept these drafts, but still have a wish to retain the property. Messrs. Binney and Co. are advised, that as you have thus refused to fulfil the terms upon which the goods were consigned to you, and as the goods themselves never have reached the insolvent house, on whose behalf they were shipped, the transitus is not at an end, and the right of stoppage still subsists. The goods therefore are claimed on behalf of Messrs. Binney and Co. who are willing, and we hereby offer on their behalf, to pay you any claim for freight or otherwise which you may legally have upon the goods. We give you this notice preparatory to such steps being taken on behalf of Messrs. Binney and Co. as may be advised to be proper to enforce the delivery of the property, and it is conceived that if there be any question of the right of stoppage in transitu, there can be no doubt that you can have no right to retain the property when you refuse to honour the bills drawn against such property. Messrs. Binney and Co. have remitted the triplicate bills of lading, &c. Messrs. Kilgour and Leith's original letter of orders."

The defendants refused to deliver up the goods, or accept the bills, or to pay the invoiced price. The plaintiffs thereupon commenced this action. It was contended at the trial, on behalf of the plaintiffs, that the sale of the handkerchiefs was a sale on a condition, either precedent or subsequent, that the defendants should accept the bills drawn on them in respect of the handkerchiefs, and that upon their refusal to accept, the condition precedent was never performed, and that the property in the handkerchiefs never passed out of the plaintiffs, and that they were therefore entitled to them or their proceeds; and that if this were not so, at all events, it was subject to the condition subsequent, that the defendants should accept the bills; and if not, the property should revert, which condition was broken; so that thereby the plaintiff became entitled to the goods or their proceeds; and whether the sale was on a condition or not, was a question for the jury, and ought to have been left to the jury. On the other hand it was contended, on behalf of the defendants, that it was not a sale upon a condition at all; that it was an absolute sale by the plaintiff to Messrs. Kilgour and Leith; and that upon the shipment of goods by the plaintiff on account and risk of Messrs. Kilgour and Leith, followed up by the transmission of the bills of lading to the defendant, one bill of lading making them the consignees and the other the indorsees, the property and possession absolutely vested in Kilgour and Leith, and those goods thereby became theirs, and were at their sole risk, and they, and they alone, were entitled to them or their proceeds, and that if the plaintiffs had any right of action against the defendants, which on their part was denied, it was upon a contract to accept the bills to be held from the acceptance of the goods, with notice of the contents of the letters of the 21st of August and the 12th of October; and that whether it was a sale upon a condition or not was a question of law for the judge, and not one of fact for the jury; the entire case, so far as related to the contract of sale, being contained in written documents, and the parties never having had any personal communication with each other. The learned judge was of opinion that there was no question for the jury in this case, and that it was for him to decide what the contract was; and he thought the sale to Messrs. Kilgour and Leith was an absolute, not a conditional one; and that the property vested in them upon the delivery on board the ship, and the transmission of the bills of lading to the defendants; and that the plaintiff could not maintain the present actio[n against] the defendants, who have received the goods and disposed of them under the authority of Kilgour and Leith, and could not bring an action for the proceeds; and by his direction the plaintiff was nonsuited. A rule having been granted for a new trial.

Knowles (with him Willes) now shewed cause.

JUDGMENT.

PARKE, B.—We are of opinion that the ruling of the learned judge was correct. We think that the question, what was the contract between the parties, was, in this case, entirely one of law, for the judge to decide upon; nor was there any evidence of usage to which the letters refer which would be matter to be left to the jury. Looking at the written documents alone, the learned judge was quite right in the view he took at the trial, that the property vested by the transmission of the bills of lading, in the manner described, to the defendants, with the invoices at the same time. If it had been the intent of the vendor to preserve his right in that property until the bill drawn against it was accepted, he ought to have transmitted the bill of lading, indorsed in blank, to an agent, to be delivered over only in case the acceptance took place. Having delivered them without that qualification, the property vests in Kilgour and Leith, or the defendants, as their agents. Our judgment in this case is in conformity with that of the Court of Ex. C[h.] the case of Wilhemshurst v. Bowker, 7 Man. & G. 882; but there is a passage in the judgment of Lord Abinger which was much relied on by the learned counsel for the plaintiff. The circumstances of the two cases are very similar, and Lord Abinger stated, if the facts had been before a jury, he was not prepared to say that they might not have drawn the inference that the remitting of the bankers' draft, the mode of payment agreed on in that case, was a condition precedent to the vesting of the property; in that case, there may have been some particular facts to go to the jury. But in that case it was only the obiter dictum of Lord Abinger. It is sufficient to say, for the reasons before given, w[e] think that in this case there was no question of fact as to the contract to be submitted to the jury. Several other cases were cited on collateral points, to which it is unnecessary to refer. The rule is therefore discharged. Rule discharged.

CROWN CASES RESERVED.

REG. v. BALDRY.

Evidence—Confession—Admissibility—Inducement or threat.

A constable, upon apprehending a prisoner on criminal charge, addressed to him these words, "You need not say anything to criminate yourself. What you do say will be taken down, and used in evidence against you."

Held, that those words did not import any threat or inducement to the prisoner, and that a statement made by him subsequently, was admissible in evidence against him upon his trial. R. v. Drew, 8 C. & P. 140, R. v. Morton, 2 Moo. & Rob. 514; R. v. Furley, 1 Cox C. C. [106] and R. v. Harris, ib. 106, overruled.

The prisoner was tried before Lord Campbell, C.J. at the last Suffolk Assizes, upon an indictment for an attempt to poison. Upon the trial a statement made by the prisoner to the constable, who apprehended him, was offered in evidence; but objected to by the prisoner's counsel, because, before the prisoner made the statement the constable had addressed him in these words:—"You need not say anything to criminate yourself. What you do say will be taken down, and used in evidence against you." The learned judge received the evidence; but reserved the question for the opinion of this Court.

The case now came on for argument before Lord Campbell, C.J. Pollock, C.B., Parke, B. and Erle and Williams, JJ.

H. Mills for the prisoner.—A confession must be perfectly free and voluntary to be admissible in evidence; and it language is used to a prisoner which can convey to his mind any influence of hope or fear, his subsequent statements are scrupulously rejected. The cases have gone to the utmost length upon this point; and several of them are distinct authorities applicable to the present case; especially those of R. v. Drew, 8 Car. & P. 140; and R. v. Morton, 2 Moo. & Rob. 514, decided by Coleridge, J; and those of R. v. Furley, 1 Cox C. C. 76, and R. v. Harris, ib. 106, decided by Maule, J. who expressly held, that to tell a prisoner that whatever he said would be given in evidence against him was sufficient to exclude the statement subsequently made by him. The prisoner might have understood that the prosecutors bound themselves to give in evidence whatever he said; and that supposition is strengthened by the language of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 18, which requires the committing magistrate to tell the person charged that what he says will be taken down and may be used in evidence against him. It is enough that the words used may have influenced his mind either to hope or fear something from confessing; and he may even have interpreted them to mean that the case was so clear against him that if he spoke the truth he must confess his guilt.

The following authorities were referred to.—R. v. Warwickshall, 1 Leach, 263; R. v. Cass, ib. 293, n.; R. v. Thomas, 6 Car. & P. 353; R. v. Sheridan, 2 Lewin; R. v. Enoch, 5 Car. & P. 535; R. v. Garner, 18, L. J. M. C. 1; R. v. Barrett, 4, Car. & P. 570; R. v. Mills, 6 Car. & P. 146; R. v. Thompson, 1 Leach, 291; R. v. Arnold, 8 Car. & P. 621; 4 Bl. Com. 357; 2. Russ. on Crimes, 832; R. v. Warrington, 15 Jur. 318. As to the last case Parke, B. referred to his notes of the trial, and said that the words used were, "It would be better for you to confess," not those mentioned in the Jurist report.

No counsel was instructed on behalf of the Crown.

POLLOCK, C.B. I am of opinion that this conviction was right, and the evidence properly received. The ground upon which the rule of law proceeds is that it would not be safe to receive a statement made under the influence of any hope or fear; not that the law presumes that any such statement would be false, but only that it would be unsafe to rely upon it. But does the rule apply to this case? It has often been held that a caution to speak the truth will not exclude the statement (R. v. Court, 7 Car. & P. 195); yet even in that case the person charged might have understood the caution as meaning that he could not tell the truth without confessing his guilt. The answer is that he ought not so to have understood it, and it would indeed be strange to find a decision that an invitation to tell the truth, when there is no obligation to speak at all, can be considered as influencing the mind either by hope or fear. When however the admonition [is c]oupled with an expression that it will be better for the prisoner to do so, then the statement has been excluded, as in R. v. Garner, 1 Den. C. C. 359. The real question is, whether the language used can be understood as conveying some intimidation, or offering some reward which might induce the person addressed to speak at all; the objection does not consist in the inducement to acknowledge guilt, but the inducement to speak at all; and perhaps the words "it will be better for you to speak the truth," may be objectionable on the ground that they import an inducement to say something. Now excepting the cases decided by my brothers Coleridge and Maule, there is no authority for saying that the words used in the present case are at all sufficient to exclude the stat[ement]; and it certainly appears to me that the effect [o]f them must have been to leave the prisoner in a state of perfect indifference whether he should open his mouth or not. With regard to the cases of R. v. Drew and R. v. Moreton, before my brother Coleridge, and the cases of R. v. Furley and R. v. Harris, before my brother Maule, I must say that I cannot assent either to the decisions or to the reasons given in those cases. We are not to torture expressions, or consider what a man may possibly have misunderstood them to mean; for if so, even the words of the statute which has been referred to (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 18) might be ingeniously twisted to mean something different from that which was intended. I deem it important for the protection of innocence, that every man when he is charged with an offence should be distinctly told the nature of it; and that attention should be paid to anything which at that moment he may choose to say with regard to it, as he may be in a situation to make some statement which may ultimately lead to the proof of his innocence; but it is also important that he should be reminded that he is under no obligation to criminate himself, and that if he does state anything to criminate himself, it will [be] given in evidence against him; and it is quite clear to me that no person addressed as this prisoner was could have misunderstood the meaning of the words, or have be[en in an]y way removed from that steady self-possession which is necessary to render his confession admissible against him.

The other Judges concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

BANKRUPTCY.

HULL DISTRICT COURT.

Wednesday, April 8.

(Before Mr. Commissioner AYRTON.)

Ex parte HARRIS re HARRIS.

Semble, the Court of Bankruptcy has no jurisdiction to annul with consent of creditor, save under secs. 130, 131.

Where the bankrupt may have to be prosecuted for offences under the bankrupt law, the Court will not so annul, even if there be jurisdiction.

This was a petition to annul the adjudication, with the consent of all the creditors, including the assignees.

Shackles, for the bankrupt.—The Court has power to annul the adjudication, as was formerly done, with the consent of all the creditors who had proved or claimed. In this case, in deference to the opinion of the Court, much more has been done, as the consent of 147 creditors has been procured; in fact, every creditor but three has signed, two being corporations, but the corporate seal has not been affixed; and the third, a creditor for 12s. 6d. is abroad, and owes the estate 5*l.* He cited and commented upon 6 Geo. 4, c. 16; 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56; Lord Eldon's order, 1818; Ex parte Duckworth, 16 Ves. 416; Re Chambers, 4 Dea. & Ch. 578; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 102; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, ss. 12, 104, 230, and 231; Carter v. Carter, 8 Nov. 1851; Ex parte Kimbell, 1 Mont. & De G. 138.

Mr. Commissioner AYRTON.—In this case I am asked to order the adjudication to be annulled, such order being consented to by the creditors. Formerly the Lord Chancellor, who issued the Commission of Bankruptcy, possessed, under his general assumed jurisdiction, an almost absolute control over it, so far as regarded superseding it afterwards; and this power, under the designation of annulling the fiat, was afterwards exercised by the Lord Chancellor after the institution of the Court of Review; for though the Court of Review (and afterwards the Vice-Chancellor) were constantly in the habit of ordering the fiats issued by the Lord Chancellor to be annulled, yet these orders were invariably accompanied by the words "if the Lord Chancellor shall think fit," and the fiat was not annulled till the Lord Chancellor's confirmation of the order was procured. It is not, therefore, doubted, that formerly a method existed by which a commission could be superseded, or a fiat annulled, at any time, with consent of all the creditors who had proved or claimed under the bankruptcy. My doubt is, whether the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy possess any such general jurisdiction. When the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act passed, in 1849, all jurisdiction in bankruptcy, save on appeal, was supposed to have been taken away from the Vice-Chancellor, and it was at first supposed that the whole of the Vice-Chancellor's jurisdiction, save the appellate, was transferred from his Honour to the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy, by the 12th clause: for instance, it was thought that a bankrupt, after the lapse of the seven or fourteen days mentioned in section 104, might still prefer a petition to the commissioner under this general jurisdiction, to annul the adjudication, for any defect of the requisites, such as the utter want of any petitioning creditor's debt, and so forth; and thus it was decided by the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in Re Dimmock; but, on appeal (Ex parte Carter, re Dimmock, Law T.), it was decided that if the bankrupt did not avail himself of sec. 104, by applying to the commissioner within the seven or fourteen days, as the case might be, or did not appeal within the time allowed, then, by sec. 233, the Gazette containing the adjudication was declared conclusive evidence of the bankruptcy as against the bankrupt. This decision of the Court of Appeal was made on an adverse application. I mention it here, because it shews that the power of the commissioners, as to annulling, is not so extensive as was supposed, and that we must be very wary lest we inadvertently exceed the limits of our jurisdiction. If the commissioner has not power to make an order adversely, can any consent confer jurisdiction? For it must be remembered that this is not a mere question of practice. If I act without jurisdiction, my order is, of course, a nullity; and many years after such an order has been made, some conveyancer may discover its invalidity, and object to a title to land, on the ground that the order annulling is itself a nullity, and the estate still vested in the assignees under the bankruptcy. The present application is to annul, with the consent of creditors. Formerly the practice was to make this order without requiring the consent of every one of the creditors, it being sufficient if the consent was obtained of so many of the creditors as had actually proved or claimed under the bankruptcy at the time the order was made. In the case now before me, every creditor who has proved or claimed, and all the assignees, do consent to the adjudication being annulled; in fact, I am assured that all the creditors have signed their assent but three; two being corporations, and the third abroad. The question then is, have I jurisdiction to make the order asked? Mr. Shackles, who appears for the petition, states that such orders are habitually made in the London and other Courts of Bankruptcy. If so, I should certainly be most anxious to follow the precedents set by my learned colleagues. Having regard, then, to the warning of the late decision in Ex parte Carter, can I find that I have jurisdiction to make such an order, which undoubtedly would formerly have been made by the Vice-Chancellor in Bankruptcy, and confirmed by the Lord Chancellor? Sec. 12 of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, says, that the Court (that is, the Commissioner), in the exercise of its primary jurisdiction, by virtue of this Act, shall have superintendence and control in all matters of bankruptcy. I confess that I am at a loss to know what meaning to give to the word "primary," not being aware of any secondary jurisdiction; but, passing that by, the words "control in all matters of bankruptcy," would appear to give a very extensive jurisdiction indeed; but, on reading on a little further in section 12, I find myself cautioned by the words, "save and except as may be by this Act otherwise provided." Does, then, the Act "otherwise provide," touching the subject-matter of this petition? That subject-matter is a petition to annul the adjudication, with the consent of the whole of the creditors who have accepted a composition, as I have been informed by Mr. Shackles. It appears, on turning to the Act, secs. 211 and 231, that the Legislature contemplated a complete provision touching arrangements or compositions. One subdivision of the Act relates to arrangements between debtors and their creditors under the superintendence and control of the Court; another subdivision relates to arrangements by deed; and then we arrive at the subdivision which comprises secs. 230 and 231, which clauses contain a special enactment, laying down the method of proceeding in cases similar to the present. Sections 230 and 231 are thus headed—"Of composition after bankruptcy"—"And with respect to compositions after adjudication of bankruptcy, be it enacted;" and then two sections follow, pointing out how the consent of nine-tenths of the creditors is to be obtained, and then the adjudication is to be annulled, and the petition for adjudication dismissed. It appears to me, that the terms of these clauses, coupled with the indication of the intent of the Legislature, afforded, as I think, by the words "and with respect to compositions after bankruptcy" (and this is a composition after bankruptcy), shew that this Court does not possess any power to annul with consent of creditors, save under secs. 230 and 231, and that I have not any jurisdiction to annul, on a composition, save under those clauses. If indeed every single person who was a creditor at the time of filing the petition for adjudication, and every person who could by possibility have a right to prove his debt under the bankruptcy, if all these were to consent to my making an order, at their own risk, I do not say that I might not, in a proper case, venture to order the petition for adjudication to be dismissed; because, though, as I think, I have no jurisdiction so to order (save under secs. 230, 231), yet, if every person who could by possibility object to the order, were to consent to its being made, then I think that I might venture to do so, because, though invalid, yet its invalidity might never be questioned, and the bankrupt would take the order suo periculo. I say I would venture to do so in a proper case. Now, with reference to the particular instance before me, I regret to have to say, that even if I thought that I had jurisdiction now to make the order asked, yet I entertain very serious doubts, to say the least, whether, under the very extraordinary circumstances attending this bankruptcy, of which I have judicial notice, I ought not, in the exercise of my discretion, to refuse to annul this bankruptcy till the bankrupt shall have passed his last examination, and makes his application, under secs. 230, 231. It being familiar law, that where an application was made to the general jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor to annul, the order was entirely in his discretion. Two young men have been declared bankrupts in this court, and have both been examined before me. They both have been connected, in the way of business, with this bankrupt, Harris, and they have both made statements, in open court, which have not hitherto been contradicted, which, if true, would shew that this bankrupt has been engaged in a most scandalous and nefarious system of swindling; and they have both stated, what for the credit of human nature every one would wish to be incredible, but which has not yet been disproved, that this bankrupt advised them both to insure their stock, and then remove such stock, and set fire to their premises, with intent to defraud the assurance office. I will say no more of the statements made by these young men but this, that if only a portion of the charges made by them against the bankrupt is true, he may have to answer at the bar of a criminal court for offences against the bankrupt law; in which case, to annul this bankruptcy, might amount to allowing a species of compromise of criminal offences. Under these circumstances, I think it fit that this bankrupt should pass his last examination, as required by section 230, and then apply, under that section, to annul with consent of nine-tenths of his creditors. I notice that the conclusion of section 231 contains an enactment which it may be highly expedient to insist upon in a case like the present. It is as follows:—"And if any creditor shall agree to accept any gratuity or higher composition for assenting to such offer, he shall forfeit the debt due to him, together with such gratuity or composition; and the bankrupt shall, if thereto required, make oath before the Court, that there has been no such transaction between him and any of the creditors; and that he has not used any undue means or influence with any of them to attain such assent." I have to notice that the petition was not quite prepared to ask for the order to annul till Friday, the 3rd of April, and this, the 8th of April, is the day appointed for the bankrupt's last examination. In conclusion, I will observe, that if there were no appeal from my decision, I might be tempted to make an order which I am told is commonly made in London; but, entertaining grave doubts on the question of jurisdiction, I wish the point to be set at rest by the Lords Justices.

INSOLVENCY COURT.

Reported by DAVID CATO MACRAE, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Monday, Nov. 3.
(Before Mr. Commissioner LAW.)
Re MONTGOMERY HUNTER.

Voluntary assignment of military pay to creditors—Officer in the East-India Company's service.

Quære.—When the Court has no power to enforce a compulsory setting aside of pay or half-pay of a military officer in the East-India Company's service, can it enforce a voluntary undertaking of that description to avoid opposition by creditors?

This insolvent, an ensign in the 18th Bengal Native Infantry, came up for his hearing, when he was opposed by Sargood for a creditor, and supported by Cooke. The insolvent had been in England at home on sick leave. It was essential that he should get back to India by the 27th of nex January, which a remand would effectually prevent, and to avoid this he offered to set aside for the benefit of his creditors a sum of 60*l.* per annum out of his pay, which creditors assented to.

Mr. Commissioner LAW said, he doubted whether the East-India Company would agree to this. H knew it would not be agreed to in her Majesty's service. He thought the Court ought not to do that by a side wind which it could not do directly The learned Commissioner referred to the case of Dax, 1 C. C. Chron. 283, a report of which he had seen in the LAW TIMES. In that case an undertaking, which was made a rule of Court, had been entered into by the insolvent at the hearing, and subsequently a question rose as to whether the Court could enforce that rule made upon the insolvent' undertaking, and the point was argued before the full Court. He (Mr. Commissioner Law) had not made the orde., but he very strongly objected to act upon it, and all agreed that the order ought not to have been made and that the consent ought not to be enforced. He himself felt an objection to do things by a contrivance which the Court could not do directly.

Sargood observed that it would be a mere abstract undertaking, and to give a power of attorney, to receive his pay.

Cooke said it would be a benefit to all parties.

Mr. Commissioner LAW.—As both parties wish that there should be a discharge upon an undertaking, let the insolvent make it. I have my doubts as to what the result may be.

The insolvent then entered into the following undertaking:—

"In the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors.

"In the matter of M. H. a prisoner in the Q. P. an insolvent debtor.

"I, M. H. the above-named insolvent, do hereby consent and undertake to pay to the provisional assignee of this honourable Court, or to any other assignee who may be appointed under this insolvency, the sum of sixty pounds per annum, by quarterly payments of fifteen pounds, on every first day of January, April, July, and October, the first of such payments to be made on the first day of April next, and in case of my promotion, such yearly sum to be increased by ten pounds. And I further undertake, if required, to give to such provisional or other assignee, a power of attorney to receive such sum out of my pay from the Honourable East India Company. And I al[illegible] it to this undertaking being made a rule of this [illegible]ourable Court.

"Dated this 3rd day of November, 1851.

"Witness, L. S. attorney for the plaintiff."

NOTE.—Nothing has been paid into Court under this undertaking. Possibly the insolvent's attorney arranged with the attorney for the opposing creditor.—REPORTER.

O'GRADY v. BUIST.

Statute of Distributions—Personal estate—Advance by administrator—Interest.

All the children of an intestate were advanced: Held, that the fact of all being advanced did not take the case out of the 2nd section of the Statute of Distributions, but the assets must be brought into hotchpot, and distributed equally.

Where advances were made by the administrator to the children, and the advances are to be brought to hotchpot, the Master charged the children with interest on the advances:

Held, on objection, that this finding was wrong.

This was a bill to administer the assets of William Wise, deceased. The plaintiff, Mr. O'Grady, was married to Anne Wise, a daughter of William Wise by his first wife, and the plaintiff, by his marriage settlement, became possessed of a sum of 33,000*l.* The defendants were the minor children of William Wise by a second wife. They were entitled under their mother's marriage settlement to a sum of 4,000*l.* each. William Wise died intestate, leaving large personal estate. The Master directed these several sums to be brought into hotchpot. Advances had been made from time to time to Mrs. O'Grady as well as to the minors by the defendant Buist, who was the administrator of William Wise. The Master directed that interest should be charged upon all their advances, including the sums brought into hotchpot.

To this finding the plaintiff took objections.

Greene, Q.C. (with Leslie and O'Flynn), for the minor defendants. They cited Kircudbright v. Kircudbright, 8 Ves. 1; Gettings v. Steele, 1 Swan. 199.

Thursday, Jan. 29.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case stood over, not from any serious doubt on my mind, but on account of the novelty of the case. The case was this:—In the year 1816 a decree was made in this cause to take an account of the assets of William Wise, and that decree also declared that DeCourcey O'Grady, the husband of Anne O'Grady, deceased, and the minors, William Wise and Charles W. Wise, were entitled each to one-third of the property of William Wise; and the decree also directed certain accounts to be taken of the assets of William Wise. The Master has taken those accounts, and has also found the parties hereto to be in a position to be entitled to the benefit of the Statute of Distributions; and the Master also has found that certain portions were given by way of advances to these several parties, and he has debited the parties with the sums so advanced. So far the Master has acted rightly, but in addition to this he has also taken an account of the interest which accrued due on the sums so advanced, after the expiration of a year from the death of William Wise, and charged the parties with this interest in addition to the sums actually advanced. The plaintiff, De Courcy O'Grady, objects that he should be compelled to bring into hotchpot any part of the sums charged against him and the minors, except as to the 4,000*l.* which has been charged against them. The first point contended for at the hearing of the cause was, that this was not a case within the 7 Wm. 3, c. 6, s. 2, inasmuch as in this case all the children were advanced. To adopt that view would, in my mind, be a great departure from the principle of that statute, which does not exclude the case before the Court. The object of the statute was to provide for all the children equally, if unadvanced, and if advanced to equalise their portions, as was done in the case of Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. W. 436; therefore, on this point, I am of opinion that the Master has properly charged the parties with the sums to be brought into hotchpot. On the second question which has been contended for, as to the interest on the sums advanced, no case has been cited but that of Andrews v. George, 3 Sim. 393. that case was not decided upon the construction of the Statute of Limitations, but on the special words of the will, and the reporter suggests in a note that in cases of advancement the Court might make a charge for interest. The principle upon which this question is to be decided must depend upon this,—what is it has been advanced to the party? An advance of money is of no value except for what it produces, and to charge a party with interest is to charge him twice over. What it is should be brought into hotchpot is stated by Lord

Eldon in Kircudbright v. Kircudbright, 8 Ves. 463, as well as the mode of valuation. I know of no mode of estimating the value but by the interest charged. I have inquired of all the Masters of this Court, all of whom, except Master Cotton, whose report is excepted to, have certified that they have never brought anything into hotchpot but the purchase money. I have also inquired of the officers of the Court of Chancery in England, and they have written to me that they are not aware of any such case having ever occurred; therefore, on this point, I am of opinion that the Master's report must be varied.

Practice—Paying money out of court—Necessity for notice of application.

Where a plaintiff has lodged money in court as security for costs, the Court will not pay it out to the plaintiff unless notice of the motion has been served on the opposite party, although judgment has been allowed to go by default by the defendant.

In this case, Hobart, on behalf of the plaintiff, applied to the Court for an order that the sum of 50*l.* which had been lodged as security for costs, should be paid out to the plaintiff. There was no necessity for serving notice of this motion, as the defendant had allowed judgment to go by default, and execution had issued against him on foot of that judgment.

RICHARDS, B. refused to hear the motion, as notice of this application had not been served on the opposite party.

ANONYMOUS.

Practice—Setting aside appearance by unregistered attorney—Notice of motion.

An appearance entered by an attorney who has not registered lodgings, according to the general order is irregular, and will be set aside.

Semble, where an attorney who has not registered states a particular place as his residence, in entering an appearance, a notice may be served at such place, although the inhabitants state he does not reside there, and refuse to take any papers for him.

In this case counsel on behalf of plaintiff moved for liberty to set aside the appearance which had been entered for the defendant, and to enter a parliamentary appearance. The appearance had been entered by an attorney whose address in Dublin had not been registered for this year as directed. He had given an address in the appearance entered by him, but on application at the house, which was a butcher's, the people there said that he did not live there, and that they knew nothing about him. The plaintiff's attorney had sent a clerk there to serve notice of motion, but the servants of the house refused to take any papers for such person.

RICHARDS, B.—You are clearly entitled to carry your motion; my only difficulty is, that notice has not been served. You may serve the notice of this motion at this place where he states his residence to be, no matter whether they take it in or not, and you can then apply for your order on next chamber day.

Practice—Privilege from arrest—Witness at Petty Sessions—14 & 15 Vict. c. 93.

A witness who attends at Petty Sessions, in obedience to a summons, to give evidence, is privileged from arrest while so attending.

Where a person summoned to attend at a particular hour at Petty Sessions finds, on arriving at that time, that the court-house is closed, and proceeds to the office of the Petty Sessions clerk for the purpose of ascertaining whether the magistrates will sit or not, and is arrested there under a ca. sa. while making such inquiry, the Court will discharge him out of custody.

A judge sitting in this court has, in custody cases, the same power as the Court out of which the writ issues. (14 & 13 Vict. c. 93, s. 13.)

In this case J. S. O'Callaghan applied on behalf of the defendant, that he might be discharged out custody, having been arrested under a writ of ca. sa. at the suit of the plaintiff, while entitled to privilege as a witness attending at Petty Sessions. The defendant stated in his affidavit, that he had been served with a summons to attend at the hour of twelve o'clock at noon, at the Ballinrobe Petty Sessions, to give evidence there; that he attended in obedience to such summons, and that on arriving at the court-house a few minutes before the hour mentioned in the summons, he had found the court-house closed, and no appearance of any sitting. That he accordingly proceeded to the residence of the magistrate's clerk, who resided at a short distance from the court-house, for the purpose of ascertaining what he should do; whether it was necessary for him to wait, or if he might return home; and that while at the office making such inquiries, he was arrested under a ca. sa. at the suit of the plaintiff.

Jordan, on behalf of the plaintiff, opposed the application. The Act 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 13, which gives a privilege to witnesses while attending at Petty Sessions, directs the application for the discharge of the person who has been arrested to be made to the Court out of which the writ of ca. sa. issued; "And it shall be lawful for the Court out of which the writ or process shall have issued to order the discharge of any person who shall be so arrested." There was no mention of a judge in chamber, and his lordship, therefore, had not jurisdiction to entertain this application. The defendant was not entitled to privilege when he went away from the court-house to go to the house of the magistrate's clerk: he lost his privilege during that time.

J. S. O'Callaghan in reply.—A judge sitting in chamber has delegated to him, by the Court for which he sits, full power to transact its business. It has been invariably the practice for a judge in chamber to dispose of custody motions.

GREEN, B.—I think the meaning of the Act is, that the application may be made to a judge in chamber. If a person has been improperly arrested, the intention of the Legislature was, that he should be at liberty to apply immediately, and obtain his discharge forthwith if he is entitled to it. If a man happens to be arrested in the beginning of the long vacation, can it be said that he is to lie in prison until the Court sit in the ensuing Term? I think this man acted very properly and naturally. On finding the court-house closed, he went to the person most likely to be able to inform him whether or not the magistrates would sit—to the very officer of the court, and while waiting in his office he was arrested. I consider he was still entitled to privilege, and I shall therefore grant this application.

HILARY TERM, 1852.

TENNENT v. ROBINSON.

Demurrer—Action by sheriff against purchaser of a chattel interest for not completing his purchase—Pleading.

A declaration in assumpsit alleged by a sheriff for breach of contract in the defendant in not completing the purchase of a chattel interest, sold by the former under a fi. fa. alleged that a writ of fi. fa. having issued at suit of A. B. against C. D. the sheriff seized a chattel interest of C. D. and sold it to the defendant, who was the highest bidder: the conditions of sale being "that the highest bidder should be declared the purchaser, that the purchase money should be paid to one W. O. and that the sheriff should not be accountable either for possession or title," and after alleging that the defendant was the highest bidder, and that there were mutual promises between the plaintiff and defendant, assigned as a breach, that the defendant refused to pay the money and complete the purchase; and in another count it was simply averred that the plaintiff had agreed to sell and the defendant to buy the interest of C. D. assigning the same breach.

Held, on special demurrer, that both counts were good, and disclosed a valid contract, and a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promises.

And, semble, that a sheriff is not bound in such a case to tender a conveyance to the purchaser.

This was an action brought in the name of James Thomson Tennent, esq. late high sheriff of the county Antrim, against John Robinson, for breach of contract in refusing to pay the purchase-money and complete the purchase of a chattel interest sold by him as such sheriff under a writ of fi. fa. The first count set forth the issuing of the writ against one John O'Hara, at the suit of the Earl of Mountcashel, the seizure of O'Hara's interest under the writ, and the setting of it up to auction by the sheriff under the following conditions of sale: "That the highest bidder should be declared the purchaser, and that the purchase-money should be paid to William Orr, esq. on the purchase being declared, and that the sheriff would not be accountable for either possession or title." The declaration then, after alleging that the defendant was the highest bidder, and became the purchaser for the sum of 35*l.* averred mutual promises on the part of the plaintiff and defendant respectively, assigning as a breach, that although the plaintiff was ready to execute a proper assignment upon the purchase-money being paid, the defendant had refused to pay it. The second count omitted the allegation of a writ of fieri facias having issued and the sale under it, and merely averred that the plaintiff had agreed to sell, and the defendant to buy, all the interest of John O'Hara in a certain farm of land for the sum of 35*l.* and that the plaintiff was not to be accountable to the defendant for possession or title; and after alleging that the plaintiff was ready and willing to convey, assigned the same breach as the preceding count.

General demurrer, and also a special demurrer, to these two counts, assigning thirteen causes of demurrer, which sufficiently appear from the arguments of counsel and the judgment of the Court.

McMeehan (Napier, Q.C. with him) in support of the demurrers, contended that there was no consideration alleged for the promise of the defendant to pay the purchase-money for the chattel interest which had been set up; that all sheriffs' sales should be for ready money, and that no debt arose from the defendant to the plaintiff; that the sheriff could not enforce payment of the purchase-money, inasmuch as the legal estate was not vested in him by the seizure; and as no conveyance was executed by the sheriff at the time of sale, he could not now sue on the contract, as the party had the power to revest the estate in himself at any time by the payment of the debt and costs to the sheriff; and that the sheriff ought to have tendered a conveyance. It was also contended that the condition that the purchase money should be paid to a stranger to the writ was illegal, and vitiated the entire transaction; and that the sheriff had nothing to do upon the purchaser being declared, and, therefore, there was no consideration for the defendant's promise, and that the second count was bad; that if it was good in law it amounted to this—that one man could sell another's land and sue him for the purchase-money without conveying any estate, or being able to do so.

Harrisson (Joy, Q.C. with him), contrà, who was directed by the Court to confine himself to the objections to the second count, argued that a sufficient consideration was alleged for the promise in the second count. True it was, it was an agreement to sell another man's land, but the plaintiff did not pretend it was his own; and the defendant, by his own act, agreed to take it whatever it might be, some benefit might, therefore, result to the defendant, or some detriment to the plaintiff. It is now settled law that a man may enter into a contract to sell goods without having any title to them at the time, although originally it was held otherwise. And Courts of Equity frequently have enforced a decree for a specific performance of a contract for the sale of land where the vendor had not at the time of the contract a good title to the land. In an ordinary declaration for the purchase-money payable on the sale of land, it is not averred that it is the plaintiff's land. (Wilk v. Smith, 10 M. & W.)

JUDGMENT.

PIGOT, C.B.—As regards the points which have been most pressed in the argument against this declaration, I entertain no doubt whatever that they are not tenable. It was alleged that this being a sale by a sheriff, and the money not having been paid at the time of the sale, the sheriff could not recover it afterwards, and this was argued upon grounds of public policy. It appears to the Court that so to decide would be directly against public policy. In the present case the sheriff appears upon the pleading to have acted precisely as he ought to have done, but he was frustrated in obtaining the money he was to levy by the misconduct of the defendant. If such an action as the present be not maintainable, the result will be, as has been suggested by my brother Pennefather, that there will be a constant succession of false biddings at sheriffs' sales, and a frustration of the objects of the law. Now what are the circumstances alleged in this pleading? They amount to this, that the sheriff undertakes to convey the interest, and the defendant undertakes to pay the purchase-money. It was contended that the sheriff had nothing left to do upon the purchase being declared, and that therefore there was no consideration for the defendant's promise. But that argument is perfectly fallacious; a contract to convey is always implied on a contract for the sale of lands. Then it was insisted that the sheriff should have tendered a conveyance, but the case of Poole v. Hill, 6 M. & W. is an express authority that it was not his duty, but that of the purchaser to do so. As to the objection that if the debtor had paid the debt and costs to the sheriff, he would have ipso facto regained his farm; it is enough to remark that such a mere possibility cannot interfere with the validity of the contract. In fact, all contracts are liable to be interfered with by the Act of the government, but it surely cannot be contended that, therefore, none could be enforced. Some difficulty appears to me to exist in regard to the way the mutual promises to perform the conditions of the sale are averred. They come after the statement of the contract of the sale by one of the terms of which the defendant was to pay the purchase-money at the time of being declared purchaser. However, irrespective of this, sufficient averments appear on the declaration to entitle the plaintiff to recover. The second count contains a simple statement of A. B. contracting to sell the estate of C. D. This may be a perfectly legal transaction, and we must not assume that it is otherwise. It is precisely the case of an auctioneer's sale, which would fall within the words of this Court, and the contract stated in it could be carried into execution by an auctioneer. So it is in the case of a sheriff. No illegality, therefore, being shewn, none can be presumed. Therefore the demurrers to both counts must be overruled with costs.

PENNEFATHER and LEFROY, BB. concurred.

· v. SCOTT, BROTHERS.

Practice—Setting aside proceedings where service substituted—Evidence on motion.

Where an order had been made to substitute service on a partner in a firm, which had been dissolved, who resides out of the jurisdiction, by serving a former partner residing within the jurisdiction, such an order is incorrect.

Semble, where service has been so substituted, if the party satisfy the Court that he has never received any information of the proceedings in time to enter a defence, and state facts sufficient to discharge from his liability, and constitute a good defence, the Court will set aside all proceedings subsequent to the declaration.

Where a party sets out part of a letter, he cannot read the remainder of it without having it properly identified, and the handwriting and signature verified.

In this case J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C. (with whom Pilkington), applied, on behalf of Thomas Scott, one of the defendants, to set aside the appearance which had been entered, and all subsequent proceedings.

It appeared that Thomas Scott, who had been joined in the action as a defendant, resided out of the jurisdiction, and that an order had been made to substitute service on him by serving his brother, Peter Scott, another alleged partner. The defendant, Thomas Scott, stated in his affidavit that he had been in partnership with his brothers Peter and John for many years; that in 1848 the firm became bankrupt, and was dissolved, and that having obtained his certificate, he went to London, where he had resided ever since as secretary and agent to Baron Goldschmid. That the other brothers, Peter and John, after obtaining their certificates, had, as he believed, entered into an arrangement to carry on the trade of seedsmen, and that John accordingly caused an advertisement to be inserted, in January 1850, in the Belfast papers, informing the public that the same firm, having obtained their certificates, would again receive orders, and soliciting custom in their trade. Thomas then wrote two letters from Brighton, a few days afterwards, to Peter, protesting against this advertisement, refusing to have anything to do with the matter, and stating that he would not consent to have his name used. He further stated that Peter had gone to America, and that those letters were therefore not forthcoming, and that he was in no way interested or concerned in the said business; that he had purchased a house and nursery-grounds at Ballyhagan; that the house and its furniture was his private property, and that he had permitted his sister, a Mrs. Crosby, to reside there, and that the first information of this action was receiving a letter from that lady, informing him that the sheriff's officers had made a seizure under the writ of fi. fa. issued in this cause.

Lowry, contrà.—This is a stale application. This judgment was obtained in 1850. The defendant treated with us for a considerable time, and made offers to settle; the defendant admitted the fact of the advertisement.

Pilkington in reply.—Thomas expressly states that offers to settle and arrange were made without his knowledge or consent. The Court was wrong in substituting service here on Thomas by serving one of the brothers in Belfast, who suppressed where a partnership had been thus dissolved. The Court refuses to substitute service on one of former partners by serving another. (Nugent v. Williams, 7 Law Rep. N.S.) A passage in a letter from Peter shewed the truth of the statement made by Thomas as to his having no interest in the concern.

Lowry objected that counsel was about reading from a letter which was not identified, and of which they had only set forth passages in their affidavit.

GREEN, B.—I cannot allow you to read this letter now; we have not proved or identified it, and have only set out part of it. If it were set out plaintiff might be able to contradict it.

Pilkington.—We swear positively that we only received information of this action after the execution had been sent into Thomas's house.

GREEN, B.—I think I should give this defendant an opportunity of trying this question as to his liability, and I shall, therefore, make the order, but he must plead forthwith.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

INGLIS v. THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Companies Clauses Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16—Action for calls—Cancellation—Issuing new shares—Evidence—Register of shareholders—Unsigned minute—Adjourned meeting.

It is no plea in bar to an action for calls that the company, after bringing their action, have, under the power of their Acts of Parliament, forfeited and cancelled the shares, and issued new shares in lieu thereof, and by that means have supplied the deficient capital, but in the event of new shares being issued, the Court will stay proceedings on defendant's paying the portion of the debt and costs beyond the value of the new shares.

There is no substantial difference, as far as the shareholder's liability for calls is concerned, between the forfeiture and the cancellation of the shares in respect of which the calls are sued for.

Where a company for convenience keep their register of shareholders in several volumes, it is a sufficient compliance with 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, s. 9, that the last volume of the series be authenticated with the common seal of the company; and, semble, the last volume need not contain a recapitulation of the contents of the prior volumes.

A meeting of a committee of directors was adjourned, and a minute of the adjourned meeting only was signed by the chairman of both meetings, but subsequent minutes treated both as one meeting, and a witness proved that he was present at both, and that they were one continuous meeting:

Held, 1st, the unsigned minute was admissible in evidence of what took place the first day, and, 2nd, what then took place could also be proved by the witness who was present (sec. 98 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16).

The statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, in making a signed minute of meeting to be evidence, does not exclude evidence aliunde.

Semble, where a call has been made by a finance committee of the directors, evidence must be given at the trial in an action for calls, that the finance committee was duly appointed.

This was an appeal from the Court of Session in Scotland, involving a bill of exceptions. In 1847 the respondents, incorporated under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 71, brought an action of debt for calls, due on eight shares, amounting to 32*l.* against the appellant, who resided in Edinburgh. The English Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, sec 164, provides, that if any shareholder reside in Scotland, "it shall be lawful for the company to proceed against him in Scotland, and to sue for and recover the amount of such call, or to declare such share forfeited in such manner as is by the 'Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act,' 8 & 9 Vict. c. 17, provided." The defendant pleaded a variety of pleas, which are not material, and this issue was made up and sent to trial—"Whether the defendant (Inglis) is the holder of eight shares of the said Great Northern Railway Company, and as such is indebted and resting owing to the plaintiffs in the sum of 32*l.* being the amount of calls, &c.?" A verdict was given for defendant; but on motion by the plaintiffs for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, the rule was made absolute.

Previously, however, to the second trial, and after the first, the following proceedings took place. The plaintiffs petitioned the Court for leave to amend their declaration, which was granted, and in the new matter they alleged as follows:—That one of their special Acts, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 81, s. 25, enacted, "That in any case in which it shall happen that the market price of shares, which may be forfeited for non-payment of calls, shall be such as to render it impossible for the company to sell the same, so as to realise a sum equal to the arrears of calls due upon the same, it shall be lawful for the company to cancel the same shares, and to issue so many new shares, and of such nominal amount as they may think fit, provided the capital to be represented by such new shares shall not in the whole exceed the capital represented by the unpaid portion of the shares which shall be so cancelled." That the company had, since the trial of the first issue, proceeded to the forfeiture and cancellation of the shares held by the defendant in the mode pointed out by the Companies Clauses (Scotland) Act, s. 29. That the directors, after due notice, had declared the shares forfeited; and a general meeting of shareholders had thereafter resolved, that the forfeiture of the said shares "be and hereby is confirmed, and that they be sold or otherwise disposed of by cancelling, at the discretion of the directors." That, thereafter, by virtue of their special Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 81, s. 25, above set forth, the directors resolved, that the said shares "be and are hereby cancelled." That in these circumstances the issue formerly sent to trial was inapplicable, and that instead of the words "whether the defendant is the holder," these words should be substituted—"whether the defendant was at the date of making the calls after mentioned the holder," &c. To this new matter the defendant pleaded by way of plea plus darrein continuance. That subsequently to the forfeiture and cancellation in the amended declaration mentioned, the plaintiffs had issued in lieu of defendant's shares new preferable shares for 12*l.* 10s. each, two of the latter coming in place of one of the former. That for the 12*l.* 10s. preferable shares so issued by the plaintiffs they had actually received an average price of 11*l.* 12s. 6d. per share. That the plaintiffs had thus gained on each forfeited share as follows:—

Deposit paid thereon	3	15	0
Difference, being unpaid portion	21	5	0
Amount actually raised in lieu thereof, viz.—two 12*l.* 10s. shares, issued at 11*l.* 12s. 6d.	23	5	0
Surplus per share	£2	0	0

That the two calls sued for were only for 2*l.* 5s. and 2*l.* with interest. That the company having thus cancelled defendant's shares and issued stock, the defendant was thereby released, and no cause of action any longer remained, since the shares no longer existed. The plaintiffs demurred to this plea, and the Court held it bad, and allowed the issue to be amended as prayed for by the plaintiffs. Thereafter defendant applied for a discovery of books and writings in the custody of the plaintiffs, to enable him to give evidence at the approaching trial, of what he alleged in his plea, but the Court dismissed the application, "yet without prejudice to any demand the defendant may make for discovery of the documents referred to, at a later stage of the proceedings."

At the trial of the amended issue, a verdict was given for plaintiffs, and defendant tendered a bill of exceptions involving these points:—1. The first exception was, that the register of the company given in evidence was not in terms of the statute. The Companies Clauses (Scotland) Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 17, s. 9, enacts that "the company shall keep a book, to be called the register of shareholders, and in such book shall be fairly and distinctly entered from time to time the names of the several corporations, and the names and addresses of the several persons entitled to shares in the company, distinguishing each share by its number and the amount of the subscriptions paid: and the surnames or corporate names of the said shareholders shall be placed in alphabetical order, and such book shall be authenticated by the common seal of the company affixed thereto, and such authentication shall take place at the first ordinary meeting, or at the next subsequent ordinary meeting of the company." The 29th section enacts,—"That the production of the register of shareholders shall be prima facie evidence of such defendant being a shareholder, and of the number and amount of his shares." It appeared at the trial that the plaintiffs' register was in several volumes, and of these only the last (which was produced) was sealed with the common seal. The only other volume produced was that containing the letter I and defendant's name, and the particulars respecting his shares. 2. The second exception was, that there was no proof of the appointment of the finance committee who made the calls, as the minute of the meeting at which they were appointed was not signed. It appeared that this meeting was held on the 18th of August, that it was adjourned to the next day, August 19, and that only the minute of the latter day was signed by the chairman of both days. A witness at the trial, however, proved being present when the finance committee was appointed, and at all its meetings. The present appeal involved these exceptions, but it was principally directed against the orders of Court, which allowed the first issue to be altered, and against the judgment of the Court on the demurrer, whereby the Court held that it was no defence to an action for calls that the shares had been cancelled, and new shares of equal amount issued and paid for.

Bethell, Q.C. and Anderson, Q.C. for the appellant.—The company had only an alternative, not a cumulative remedy. They could forfeit and sue, or forfeit and sell, but not both. We admit the forfeiture did not interfere with the action. (Great Northern Railway Company v. Kennedy, 4 Exch. 417); but the moment the shares were cancelled and sold, the liability of the original shareholder was at an end, and a new contract was substituted. As to the register, the statute must be strictly construed, because it makes an inroad on the common law of evidence. (Bain v. Whitehaven and Furness Railway Company, 7 Bell's App. C. 108; Birkenhead, &c. Railway Company v. Brownrigg, 4 Exch. 426.) As to the unsigned minute, when a statute directs a certain superior quality of evidence to be taken, an inferior quality is inadmissible. (Id. 4 Exch. 426.)

Phipson, for respondents.—The Court was either right in altering the issue, or the old issue was quite sufficient; for all that was necessary, according to the statute, to be proved was, that the defendant is a holder of shares, which means "is at the time of the action being brought" (Belfast, &c. Railway Company v. Strange, 1 Exch. 739; East Lancashire Railway Company, v. Croxton, 5 Exch. 287.) The remedy is, however, cumulative (Great Northern Railway Company v. Kennedy, 4 Ex. 417); and it is no defence that the shares have been cancelled and new shares issued. As to the unsigned minute, when a meeting is adjourned the original and the adjourned meeting constitute one, and therefore to sign the minute of the latter day is sufficient (Reg. v. Justices of Suffolk, 16 L. J. 36, M.C.); but if not, what took place was sufficiently proved by the witness, who swore that he was present. (Miles v. Bough, 3 Q. B. 845. The statute confers a privilege on the company, and does not say that no other evidence but a signed minute is to be admissible.

Anderson replied.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This was an action brought by the Great Northern Railway Company against a holder of a few shares, for two calls, amounting together to 31*l*. The right to bring the action in Scotland, is given by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, s. 164, which Act is incorporated in 9 & 10 Vict. c. 71, being the Act establishing this railway company; and although some argument was raised upon the particular wording of the clause, yet I think that it gives to the company all the remedies provided by the Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845. The latter Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 17, s. 27, enacts, that in any action or suit to be brought by the company against any shareholder, to recover any money due for any call, it shall be sufficient for the company to aver, that the defendant is the holder of one share or more in the company, and is indebted to the company in the sums claimed; and by sec. 28 it is enacted, that on the trial or hearing of such action or suit, it shall be sufficient to prove, that the defendant, at the time of making such call, was a holder of one share or more in the undertaking, and that such call was in fact made, and such notice thereof given as directed by this or the special Act. Now the new issue adopted the very terms of sec. 28, which by law would equally have applied to the first issue, which was framed under sec. 27; and it would not have been necessary to have altered the first issue if the shares had not been cancelled subsequently to bringing the action. It is quite settled, that the term "is" means "is at the time of calls made." Belfast and County Down Railway Company v. Strange, 1 Ex. 739, and the statute has received a liberal construction. (East Lancashire Railway Company v. Croxton, 5 Ex. 287.) The provisions of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, which apply to this case, enable the company to enforce the payment of calls by action or suit, and give power to the company to forfeit shares for non-payment of calls, whether the company have sued for the amount of such calls or not. And it has been decided, that the right to declare shares forfeited is not an alternative remedy with the right of action, but that the words of the Act are cumulative (Great Northern Railway Company v. Kennedy, 4 Ex. 417); and indeed it is not disputed by the appellant, that, if the shares in question had been merely declared to be forfeited, the right of action would have remained. But it was insisted, that the cancellation, superinduced upon the forfeiture, and the issue of new shares, dissolved the contract, and destroyed the right of action. The power to cancel the shares was given to this company by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 84, which enacted, that where the market price of shares, which might be forfeited for non-payment of calls, should be such as to render it impossible for the company to sell the same, so as to realize a sum equal to the arrears of calls due, it should be lawful for the company to cancel the same shares, and to issue so many new shares, and of such nominal amount as they might think fit, provided that the capital to be represented by such new shares should not in the whole exceed the capital represented by the unpaid portion of the shares. After a declaration of forfeiture, the directors ultimately, in September 1850, cancelled the shares in question, and this was long after the institution of the action. Now, unless some solid distinction can be shown, as regards the interest of the shareholder, between forfeiture and cancellation, it appears to me, my lords, that the same rule must prevail as to both. Much argument was raised upon the right to issue new shares, so as to make up the amount of capital in the company, but it does not appear to me that this is an objection, if it be one, which it is competent to the appellant to make. The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act provides in every way for the real interests of the shareholder even after forfeiture; and in Great Northern Railway Company v. Kennedy (supra), Parke, B. and Alderson, B. were both of opinion, that if the forfeited shares were converted into other shares, the shareholder against whom an action for calls had been brought, would be entitled to the benefit in satisfaction pro tanto; so that, on applying to the Court to stay proceedings on payment of the portion of the debt and costs beyond the value of the new shares, the Court would stay the proceedings accordingly. If, therefore, the forfeiture of shares, and the conversion of them into other shares, where there is no direct power to cancel the original shares and to issue new ones, would give to the original shareholder any benefit to which he might be entitled after payment of the calls and costs, it cannot vary the case, that a direct power is given to the company to cancel shares and issue new ones, for the right of the shareholder to the benefit of the new shares would be precisely the same as in the first case. The power to cancel only arises where, after forfeiture, the arrears of calls cannot be raised by a sale, and therefore the right of action to recover the deficiency remains in the company. This view of the case answers the objection, which was strongly urged at your lordship's bar, that the alteration of the first issue excluded the appellant from shewing that a change of interest had taken place, because that could not go in bar of the action, but the defendant would be entitled to any benefit to be derived from such change, notwithstanding the recovery in the action; and the interlocutors of the Court, I think, have reserved to the appellant the means of enforcing any rights to which he is entitled. At the trial of the second issue, the counsel for the appellant tendered evidence to prove the cancellation of the stock, and the issue of new shares, &c., but that evidence was rejected by the learned Judge who tried the cause, and his rejection of that evidence formed part of the bill of exceptions. This exception, however, was not insisted on in the Court of Session, as the cancellation of the shares, if it had any effect, might receive it in the accounting on that head, of which the plaintiffs admitted the competency, notwithstanding the verdict. The remaining objections are technical ones, raised by the bill of exceptions on the trial of the second issue. The first objection was to the reception in evidence of the register of shareholders. The law enables companies to produce their registers as evidence, but provides that the book should be authenticated by the common seal of the company being affixed thereto. The objection was, that the register was contained in several volumes, and that the last of the series only had the common seal of the company affixed to it. There were several very bulky volumes; they followed each other alphabetically, and consecutively, and manifestly formed parts of the same series; and the last volume contained not only a completion of the register, but (which was not required by the Act of Parliament) at the end of it and before the seal a recapitulation of the contents of the preceding volumes. They were laid upon the table of this House, and every volume was a ponderous one. The contention was, that instead of being inclosed in several bindings for the sake of convenience, they ought to have been bound in one volume, which would have rendered it impossible to make use of them in the course of business. I think, my lords, it would be contrary to the real meaning and spirit of the Act, to put this restricted construction upon it. These volumes did together constitute a book containing a register of the shareholders, to which the common seal of the company was properly affixed. I rather think that if the common seal had been affixed to every volume, the appellant would have considered the register still more objectionable. The next exception to the ruling of the judge was, that the evidence of the appointment of the finance committee, which was necessary, in order to prove the call was not admissible, because a minute of a board of the 18th August, 1846, at which the finance committee was appointed, was not signed. Now, this board was adjourned to the 19th August, and the minute of the adjourned meeting is signed. The secretary to the company swore that it was one continuous meeting and minute, and that the next meeting was on the 1st September, and that the minute of it begins,—"The minutes of the last meeting, held 18th August, read and confirmed," treating the 18th and 19th as one meeting. This is confirmed by the books. At all these meetings Mr. Astell was in the ch[air] minutes of the adjourned meeting of the 19th August, and of 1st September; and on the 27th September, at a meeting, the minute of which was regularly signed by the chairman, all committees were re-appointed. And all these proceedings took place before the first call. The objection was founded upon sec. 101 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, which required entries of minutes to be signed by the chairman of each meeting, and made such entries evidence. But, independently of the evidence furnished by the books of the company, the fact of the due appointment of the finance committee was proved by a witness, and his evidence was admissible evidence, for the Act confers a privilege, but does not exclude other evidence of the fact. It is not necessary to make any further observations on these points, inasmuch as the validity of the minutes, as signed, and the admissibility of the other evidence will be ruled by your Lordships in favour of the respondents, upon the authority of Miles v. Bough, 3 Q. B. 845. The result is, that all the objections urged by the appellant's counsel at your lordship's bar have failed, and therefore I beg to move that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Equity Courts.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by C. H. KEENE, Esq. of Lincoln's-Inn, Barrister-at-Law.

Monday Nov. 24, 1851.
(Before the LORDS JUSTICES.)
Re BODEN'S ESTATE.

Trustee Act, 1850—Sec. 19 considered—Mortgage—"Re-conveyance."

A mortgagee in fee died intestate as to the mortgaged premises, but appointed an executor. His heir-at-law could not be found, or was unknown. The mortgage money was still due, and was not intended to be paid off.

On the petition of the executor of the mortgagee, under the 19th sec. of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, it was Held, that the Court had jurisdiction upon such a petition, to make the order vesting the mortgaged premises in him, subject to the equity of redemption, and that the Legislature did not mean to confine its authority to the case of a simple "re-conveyance."

This was the petition of the executor of William Boden, a deceased mortgagee in fee, under a mortgage-deed, dated in April, 1842. The petition stated, that though the mortgagee had made a will appointing the petitioner his executor, and which the petitioner had duly proved, he made no devise or bequest of his mortgage or trust estates, that the mortgagee had since died, and that neither he nor those claiming under him had ever been in possession of the mortgaged premises, or in the receipt of the rents and profits thereof, that the mortgagee had no child, but had an only brother, Joseph Boden, who was his heir-at-law. Joseph Boden left England about twenty years ago, and had never since been heard of; and that if such brother were still living, the legal estate in the mortgaged premises was vested in him as the heir-at-law of the mortgagee. The petitioner was desirous of making a transfer of the mortgage, but that the same could not be effected without the aid of the Court. The petition therefore prayed for an order, vesting the premises, subject to the equity of redemption, in the petitioner, his heirs, and assigns, as the person entitled to receive the mortgage money.

The 19th section of the 13 and 14 Vict. c. 60, (the Trustee Act, 1850), enacts "that when any person to whom any lands have been conveyed by way of mortgage, shall have died without having entered into the possession, or into the receipt of the rents and profits thereof, and the money due in respect of such mortgage shall have been paid to a person entitled to receive the same, or such last-mentioned person shall consent to an order for the reconveyance of such lands, then, in any of the following cases, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting such lands in such person or persons, in such manner and for such estate as the said Court shall direct; that is to say,—

"When an heir or devisee of such mortgagee shall be out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or cannot be found.

"When an heir or devisee of such mortgagee shall, upon a demand by a person entitled to require a conveyance of such lands, or a duly authorized agent of such last-mentioned person, have stated in writing that he will not convey the same, or shall not convey the same for the space of twenty-eight days next, after a proper deed for conveying such lands shall have been tendered to him by a person entitled as aforesaid, or a duly authorised agent of such last-mentioned person.

"When it shall be uncertain which of several devisees of such mortgagee was the survivor.

When it shall be uncertain as to the survivor of several devisees of such mortgagee, or as to the heir of such mortgagee, whether he be living or dead.

"When such mortgagee shall have died intestate as to such lands, and without an heir, or shall have died, and it shall not be known who is heir or devisee.

"And the order of the said Court of Chancery made in any one of the foregoing cases, shall have the same effect as if the heir or devisee or surviving devisee as the case may be, had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner and for the same estate."

E. Webster appeared in support of the petition, and asked for a vesting order under the 19th section of the Trustee Act, 1850. He said the application was made by way of appeal from the decision of the Vice-Chancellor Turner, who had declined to make the order, on the ground that, as the mortgage-money had not been paid and a reconveyance was not sought, the case did not come under the 19th section of the Act. In so doing the Vice-Chancellor had followed the case of Meyrick, 9 Hare, 116, where it was held that the Court had not jurisdiction to make an order vesting the mortgaged estate in the representative of the mortgagee. In the present case the money had not been and was not intended to be paid. A reconveyance was not sought: it did not fall within the provisions of the statute. [Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—This is certainly not one of the cases enumerated in the section.] In words this case did not fall within that section, yet the words "last mentioned person" might be construed to mean the person who was entitled to the money, and to be sufficient to authorise that person himself to apply to the Court, he being spoken of as the party upon whose consent the order might be made. If the construction put upon the clause by the Vice-Chancellor were the correct one, or that which was to prevail, the present case would be one in which the petitioner was without a remedy. If the money were paid off, the order could be made for vesting the estate in the petitioner as on a reconveyance. What possible difference could it make, that as the money was not to be paid off, but only a transfer to be effected, an order should be made, having the effect of a conveyance of the estate?

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—The word made use of in this section is "reconveyance;" to meet such a case it should have been "conveyance." The question before us is, whether the term "reconveyance" has so strict and inflexible a meaning as to prevent us from acting upon the spirit of the Act. Can we not, acting on the spirit of the statute, hold that a conveyance from the heir of the mortgagee to the executor or administrator of the mortgagee of the mortgaged premises may fall within the meaning of the term "reconveyance?" I think we can. Would not a decision in the negative amount to what is called a hæsio in literâ? I cannot attribute to the Legislature an intention to leave a person in such a situation as the petitioner would be left in by a literal construction of the clause. I think that there ought to be, and is a jurisdiction, not exceeding a proper judicial jurisdiction, of putting a liberal construction upon a statute involving such a question as this.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—I think I can see upon the face of this clause a ground for holding that the Legislature did not mean to confine our jurisdiction to the case of a simple "reconveyance." The section in question provides that in the cases enumerated, the Court may make an order, "vesting the lands in such person or persons in such manner, and for such estate, as the Court shall direct." But this is not all; for it further goes on to enact, "that such order shall have the same effect as if the heir or devisee, or surviving devisee, as the ---- may be, had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner, and for the same estate." Thus providing for the case of a conveyance generally, and not confining it to the simple case of a "reconveyance." I think we may properly direct a reference to be taken to the Master, observing that inquiries meeting all the material contingencies enumerated in the section should be inserted in such reference, so that the title may not hereafter be endangered.

Their LORDSHIPS ultimately directed the reference in the following terms:—"Refer it to the Master to inquire and state to the Court whether William Boden, deceased, in the petition named, was, under any and what deed, mortgagee in fee of the hereditaments in the petition mentioned; and whether he was ever, and when, in possession, or in receipt of the rents and profits of the said mortgaged estate; and whether he died seised in fee of the said estate; and whether he died intestate as to the said estate; and whether he left any, and what person, his heir-at-law; and whether the legal estate in the said mortgaged premises is now vested in any and what person, as the heir-at-law of the said William Boden, or in whom such legal estate is now vested; and whether the heir-at-law, or the person in whom such legal estate is now vested, is out of the jurisdiction of the Court; and whether the heir-at-law, or such person as aforesaid, was ever in possession or in receipt of the rents and profits of the said estate; and whether such heir-at-law, or such person as aforesaid, is living or dead, or whether it is uncertain whether he is living or dead, and whether he can be found.

IN LUNACY.

Re PATTINSON.

Lunacy—Trustee Act, 1850—Jurisdiction of the Lords Justices.

Whether the Lords Justices, acting in lunacy under the royal sign manual, have jurisdiction to make an order, vesting a trust estate, of which a person of unsound mind, who was heir-at-law of a deceased trustee, was seised, the words of the Trustee Act, 1850, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, being "the Lord Chancellor entrusted by virtue of the Queen's sign manual."

J. V. Prior presented a petition for a vesting order under the Trustee Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60. The heir-at-law of a last surviving trustee, in whom an estate was vested, was of unsound mind, not found so by inquisition.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—Without meaning to say that we have no authority to make this order, there is certainly a point well deserving consideration. The statute under which this court is constituted enacts, "Nothing herein contained shall affect any of the powers, duties, or authorities attached to the office of Lord Chancellor, or exercised by the Lord Chancellor as Keeper of the Great Seal, except the powers, authorities, and duties attached are exercised and performed by him acting as a judge in the said Court of Chancery, either by virtue of his ordinary jurisdiction or of any statute, and the ministerial powers and authorities incident thereto respectively, or affect the power, authorities, and duties of the Lord Chancellor, under and by virtue of any appointment under the sign manual of the Crown, as having the custody of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind;" and so on, meaning to say, that we have no authority to make this order; there is certainly a point well deserving consideration. The statute which constitutes this court, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 83, enacts in sec. 13, that "nothing therein contained shall affect any of the powers, duties, or authorities of the Lord Chancellor, under and by virtue of any appointment under the sign manual of the Crown, as having the custody of the persons and estates of lunatics." It is true, we also are now exercising a jurisdiction in lunacy by a warrant under the sign manual, but then the Trustee Act, 1850, like the former Act, 1 Wm. 4, c. 60, only authorizes the Lord Chancellor, empowered by the Queen's sign manual, to do what is here asked. It seems to us that it would be safer to make the application to the Lord Chancellor, who strictly comes within the words of the statute. I repeat, we do not mean to say that we have not the power, but we think the point one well worthy of consideration. Had the statute contained after the words "Lord Chancellor" the words, "or other person or persons authorised as aforesaid," or some such words, the case would have been free from the difficulty we find.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—If that which my learned brother has suggested be the true construction—and I must beg not to be considered as departing from it—we can do no good to the party now applying for relief. Were we to make the order, the property be subsequently offered for sale, and the purchaser refuse to complete, the vendors would fall into the hands of the conveyancers. The Crown appoints its officer or officers, who shall exercise jurisdiction and perform certain functions in lunacy. The warrant which gives to this Court its jurisdiction directs that the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Justices, or the Lord Chancellor alone, or his lordship and either of the Lords Justices, shall adjudicate in matters of this nature. The section of the ---- your attention to this point, but if you like to hazard the difficulties which may hereafter arise when the property comes to be dealt with, we may be disposed to make the order.

J. V. Prior.—After what your lordships have suggested, I should request permission to make the application to the Lord Chancellor.

On a subsequent day the petition was brought before the Lord Chancellor, who made the order, his lordship observing, that, without deciding whether the Lords Justices had or had not the jurisdiction, it was clear that he had, and therefore it was the safer course that he should make the order. The inclination of his opinion was, that the Lords Justices, under their warrant from the Crown, had the same authorities in lunacy as his lordship himself possessed.

CLARK v. TIPPING.

Practice—Bankrupt—Decree—Supplemental bill—Course of proceeding.

In case of the bankruptcy of a sole plaintiff, it is competent to the defendant to move that the assignees may elect within a limited time to file a supplemental bill, or that, in default of their doing so, all further proceedings may be stayed; and the practice of the Court does not require him to file a bill of revivor and proceed with the cause.

In this case the sole plaintiff had become bankrupt, and a question arose, what, under these circumstances, was the course to be pursued.

Selwyn, on the part of the defendant, moved that the assignees of the bankrupt might be ordered to elect within a fortnight to file a supplemental bill, and in default of their doing so, that all further proceedings in the cause might be stayed. It appeared that a decree had been made in the cause. Had there been no decree, the proper application would have been for the dismissal of the bill in case the assignees should not within a limited time file a supplemental bill; but the only application that could be made under the circumstances was, that all further proceedings should be stayed.

Bazalgette, on behalf of the bankrupt, contended that the motion was irregular, and that the practice was not such as that contended for by the defendant. The same course of proceedings is not applicable in both cases before and after decree. In the latter case, the course is for the defendant himself to file a bill of revivor, and so proceed with the cause.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—In this case the defendant is alleged to be desirous of getting rid of the suit altogether, so far is he from wishing to proceed with it, or adopt the course suggested. Is there no authority on the point?

Bazalgette.—None either way as to the precise point now in question.

Beavan, amicus curiæ, referred to the 63rd order of 8th of May, 1845, as to the course of proceeding on the death of a sole plaintiff.

Bazalgette insisted that the course of proceeding in the case to which that order referred, shewed that no such practice as that contended for on the other side existed.

Selwyn, in reply.—The bankruptcy in this case took place some considerable time ago,—upwards of a year. The bankrupt had no interest in the matter, and he alone opposed the motion. The only ground urged for refusing the motion is, that there is no authority to be found on the subject; but that ought not to prevail. The assignees have had sufficient time to make their election as to the course they will adopt; but though they have been served with notice of this motion, they do not appear. And the course now proposed is obviously the most convenient, and if the defendant proceeds, it must be at the risk of costs.

Monday, April 19.—The MASTER of the ROLLS. —Such an order as is now sought has in my own knowledge often been made by consent. I have, however, been referred by Mr. Birknell to a case of Whitmore v. Osborrow, 1 Colly. 91, which will, I think, justify the order. That was a case where a decree had been made, and the assignees were put to their election, and in default of their electing within ten days to prosecute the suit in the name of the bankrupt, all further proceedings in the cause were ordered to be stayed until the further order of the Court. I shall make the order accordingly. I think, however, you should give them six months.

Selwyn had no objection to that order being made, and that the assignees should file their supplemental bill within six months, and in default that all further proceedings should be stayed.

Practice—Bill pro confesso—Service out of jurisdiction—General Orders of May 1845.

The service of an order limiting the time to apply to set aside a decree taken pro confesso on the defendant out of the jurisdiction, is sufficient notice under the 87*th Order.*

In this case a decree had been taken pro confesso against a defendant out of the jurisdiction. An order had been obtained under the 87th Order of May 1845, limiting the time within which the defendant might apply to the Court to set aside the decree. This order had been served on the defendant at the same time as a copy of the decree which was also served; but no formal notice, as provided by the 87th order, was served on the defendant. The time limited by the order having now elapsed, Battin moved, under the 90th order, that the decree might be made absolute. A doubt had been suggested whether the service of the order limiting the time was a sufficient compliance with the terms of the 87th order.

The MASTER of the ROLLS was of opinion that the service of the order was sufficient notice, and made the order asked.

BAINBRIGGE v. CREAM.

Will, construction of—Vesting of shares—Time of vesting.

A testator devised freeholds and leaseholds to his wife for life, or until she should marry again; and on her death or second marriage, he gave the same to trustees, in trust to sell and divide the proceeds among certain nephews and nieces, or "such of them as should be living at the death of his wife." The wife married again:

Held, that the nephews and nieces living at the time of the second marriage took vested interests in the proceeds of the sale.

This was a special case, the question involved arising upon the construction of the will of John Cream, bearing date the 15th October, 1815. The testator thereby gave certain freeholds and leaseholds in Cambridge to his wife Mary Ann Cream for life, or until she should marry again; and in case of her death or second marriage, he gave the same to James Bainbrigge and another party, in trust to sell and divide the proceeds of the sale among certain nephews and nieces whom he named, amounting in all to the number of ten, "or such of them as should be living at the death of the wife;" omitting the words "second marriage." One of the objects of the testator's bounty died in his lifetime, but all the others are still living, and six of them are adult. The wife married again. Under these circumstances James Bainbrigge, who is the surviving trustee of the will, filed a special case for the opinion of the Court as to the rights of the parties.

Cole, for the plaintiff.

W. W. Cooper, for the other parties.

The cases of Sturgis v. Pearson, 4 Madd. 210; Masters v. Scales, 13 Beav. 60; and Wagstaffe v. Crosby, 2 Coll. 746, were cited.

The MASTER of the ROLLS was of opinion that on the second marriage of the wife the parties interested in the property took vested interests in the surplus proceeds thereof, and he directed the costs of all parties to be paid out of the fund.

VICE-CHANCELLOR PARKER'S COURT.

Reported by GEO. S. ALLNUTT, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

Dec. 10 and 15, 1851; and March 29, 1852.

DURRANT v. FRIEND.

Insurance money—Specific legacies—Illegitimate child.

By a will articles were specifically bequeathed, and they, at the same time with the testator, perished at sea.

Held, that the insurance money received in respect of the articles, did not belong to the specific legatees.

A testator gave property to E. F. the interest to be paid to her half-yearly, until her first-born son attained twenty-one, one-half of the principal sum then to be paid to her aforesaid son, the other half to be paid to his mother, &c. At the date of the will E. F. had one illegitimate son, who was maintained by the testator.

Held, that this illegitimate son had no interest in the property.

Daniel Friend, the testator in this cause, by his will, dated the 10th of December, 1847, made a bequest in the following terms:—"I give and bequeath unto my father aforenamed, and my three brothers, George, John, and Stephen Friend, the whole of my wearing apparel, sea clothes, charts, mathematical and musical instruments, to be equally divided, share and share alike. And I give unto my aforenamed adopted daughter, Eliza Friend, my gold watch, gold chain, and pianoforte, with all musical books and pieces belonging thereto." After bequeathing one moiety of the residue of his personal estate, on certain trusts therein mentioned, the testator made the following bequest:—"I give and bequeath the other half unto my adopted daughter, Eliza Friend, the interest and dividends to be paid to her half-yearly, until her first-born son attain the age of twenty-one years; one-half of the said principal sum then to be paid unto her aforesaid son for his own absolute use and benefit; the other half to be paid unto his mother, my adopted daughter aforenamed; but, should his mother die before the said son attain the age of twenty-one years, the aforesaid interest and dividends shall be paid unto the said son for his maintenance and education until he attain the age of twenty-one years, then the whole of the said principal sum to be paid unto him for his sole use and benefit. Should the aforesaid son die before he attain the age of twenty-one years, I bequeath his share or moiety unto his mother for her own absolute use and benefit, and I declare that the same shall not be liable to any debts, control, or engagements of any husband she may hereafter marry, and that her receipt alone shall be a sufficient discharge for the same."

At the time of making his will, the testator was possessed of some wearing apparel, sea clothes, charts, and mathematical and musical instruments and a gold watch and chain, and he afterwards, in February, 1848, insured the same in the Royal Exchange Insurance Company for 200*l*. Subsequently the testator embarked in the ship Canton for China, taking with him all the articles before mentioned. The ship was wrecked on her homeward voyage, and the testator and all persons on board perished. The testator's will was proved by the executors, and they received from the Royal Exchange Insurance Company the 200*l*. for which the articles were insured. The present suit was instituted by the executors against the specific and residuary legatees, and a question was raised as to the right of the testator's father and brothers, George, John, and Stephen Friend, and Eliza Friend, who were the specific legatees of the articles mentioned, to the sum received from the insurance office in respect of those articles. Another question in the suit arose as follows: Eliza Friend had an illegitimate child, who was born in 1844, and had been wholly maintained at the expense of the testator, who advanced money from time to time for that purpose. The question was whether this child took an interest, under the testator's will as the first-born son of Eliza Friend. The cause now came on upon further directions, the Master having, by his report, found the facts before mentioned.

B. L. Chapman appeared for the plaintiffs.

Welford, for the defendants, upon the first question cited Sillick v. Booth, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 117; Rook v. Warth, 1 Ves. sen. 160; Norris v. Harrison, 2 Madd. 468; Parry v. Ashley, 3 Sim. 97; and Rogers v. Grazebrook, 12 Sim. 557.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, as to the second question, said, that it had been suggested that the illegitimate son of Eliza Friend should take, as a person designated, certain benefits given by the will to the first-born son of the legatee. Now, from the language used by the testator, the gift for the first-born son would be strictly applicable to a legitimate son. There were no circumstances in the case to take it out of the general rule, and he must therefore hold that the illegitimate child in this case had no interest in the property. As to the other question, his Honour thought that as the testator and the articles bequeathed perished by the same act, the legatees never had any interest in them. Had the testator perished before them, it might have been different. He would, however, consider the point further.

Monday, March 29.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that the testator in this case, who was a seafaring man, bequeathed chattels to certain persons. He and the chattels perished together. These chattels he had previously insured, and the question was whether the legatees were entitled to the money received from the insurance office. If the testator had died, leaving the goods in existence, the legatees would have had an interest in them, and it would have been quite reasonable that the executors should have held the policy in trust for them. If the chattels had wholly or partially perished in the life-time of the testator, and no money had been received from the office, the testator would have had, at the time of his death, a right of action on the policy, and it was clear that the legatees would not have had any interest in the money to be recovered by means of it. Here, however, the testator and the goods perished together. It was a very difficult thing to say how such a case should be dealt with. He had thought of the case several times, but he was unable to change the opinion he expressed before, which was, that the legatees never had any vested interest under the will to the chattels, and that they were not entitled to the money recovered from the office.

Vendor and purchaser—Conditions of sale—Interest on purchase-money.

A reversionary interest, subject to a life estate, was put up for sale by order of the Court, under conditions, one of which stipulated that if from any cause whatever the purchase-money should not be paid on the day named, the vendor should pay interest at five per cent. The abstract was not delivered until long after the day fixed for the delivery by the conditions.

Held, that the conditions did not apply, but that the purchaser having had the benefit of the wear of the lives, must pay four per cent. on the purchase money.

Moxon, on behalf of the plaintiff, in this cause, moved that Mr. Charles Henry Daw, the purchaser of the estate and premises comprised in lot six, in the particulars of the estates in question in this cause put up for sale by auction on the 22nd of September, 1849, might be ordered to pay the sum of 950*l*. being the amount of his purchase-money for lot six, together with interest thereon, after the rate of five per cent. per annum, from the 25th of December, 1849. The property purchased by Mr. Daw was described in the particulars of sale as "the reversion in fee (subject to a lease for ninety-nine years, determinable on the deaths of William F. Rogers and Daniel Rogers, aged respectively, fifty-seven and fifty-three years, or thereabouts) of and in a farm and lands called Kernick, in Otterham." The conventionary rent payable to the purchaser was 3*l*. 9*s*. 2*d*.

According to the second of the conditions of sale the vendors undertook, at their own expense, to procure and confirm the Master's report of all purchases, and obtain an order for each purchaser to pay the amount of his or her purchase-money into Court on or before the 25th of December, 1849, and on or before that day each purchaser was to pay into the bank the amount of such purchase-money, and then be let into possession of or be entitled to the receipt of the rents, or an apportioned part of the rents of his or her lot; "but if, from any cause whatever, the purchase-moneys should not be so paid in on the 25th of December, 1849, the purchaser was to pay interest thereon at the rate of 5*l*. per cent. per annum from that day to the time of payment." By the third condition the vendor undertook to have an abstract of their title ready for delivery to the purchaser within ten days after the confirmation of the Master's report of the sale. In consequence of the suit having abated, and the title-deeds being in the hands of a solicitor who claimed an equitable lien thereon, the vendors were unable to confirm the Master's report until the 15th of August, 1851, and a complete abstract of title was not delivered until the 30th of September, 1851. It was submitted, on the part of the vendors, that as the purchaser had had the benefit of the wear of the lives since the time of the sale, and had not given the vendors notice that his purchase-money was unproductive, he ought to pay interest according to the conditions of sale. (Trefusis v. Lord Clinton, 2 Sim. 359; Morris v. Wood, before Vice-Chancellor Rolfe, in a note to Mr. Dart's book on Vendors and Purchasers, p. 330.)

Nichols, for the purchaser, contended that inasmuch as the delay was with the vendors, the purchaser ought to pay interest only from the time when a good title was shewn. He cited De Visme v. De Visme, 1 M. & G. 336.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that the condition did not apply, and the case was therefore left to the ordinary rule of the Court. The purchaser having had the benefit of the wear of the lives, he ought to pay interest, but at the rate of 4*l*. per cent. only.

Next friend—Security for costs.

Where the next friend of a married woman, the plaintiff in a suit, went to reside out of the jurisdiction, the Court required security for costs to be given by him or a new next friend to be appointed.

This was a suit by a married woman, by her next friend.

Anderson, on behalf of the plaintiff's husband, who was made a defendant, moved for security for costs by the plaintiff's next friend, or the appointment of another next friend, in consequence of the present next friend having gone to America to reside.

Cole, for the plaintiff, opposed.

The case of Drinan v. Mannix, 3 D. and W. 154, was referred to.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR did not see any difference between a next friend and a plaintiff in such a case. The next friend must give security for costs, or a new next friend must be appointed, and the proceedings must be stayed in the meantime. The security for costs would be according to the course of the court.

Trustee Act, 1850—Uses to bar dower.

Query, whether under the 7th section of the above-mentioned Act, an order can be made to vest the legal estate to uses to bar dower?

This was a petition presented under the Trustee Act, 1850, for the purpose of having the legal estate, which was outstanding in an infant trustee, vested in a purchaser to whom the property had been conveyed to uses to bar dower.

Bigg, for the petition.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he would have no objection to make an order to vest the legal estate in the purchaser in fee, but without further consideration, he would not decide whether or not under the 7th section of the Trustee Act an estate could be vested to uses to bar dower.

Re WILLIAMS.

Trustee Act, 1850—Vesting order.

At the suit of a mortgagee in fee, the devisee of the mortgagor being an infant, an order for the sale of the mortgaged property was made. The Court declined to make an order under the Trustee Act vesting the infant's estate in the purchaser, such order being considered unnecessary.

In this case a mortgage in fee had been executed. The mortgagor died, having by his will devised the real estate, the subject of the mortgage, to an infant in tail. A claim for foreclosure was filed by the mortgagee against the infant, and an order being made for a sale, the property was sold. The present petition was presented under the Trustee Act, 1850, for the purpose of having the infant's estate vested in the purchaser.

Eddis, in support of the petition, referred to the 7th section of the Trustee Act, 1850, and the case of Radcliffe v. Eccles, 1 Keen, 130.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said he considered that as the mortgagee had the legal estate, and all the equitable interests were provided for by the order for sale which had been made, nothing further was required. The order sought by the petition would rather prejudice than improve the purchaser's title. As there was no necessity for the order, and if granted it might raise a doubt on titles where in similar cases no such order had been obtained, he should dismiss the petition.

Will—Construction—Precatory words—Trust.

Where the latter words of a sentence in will go to cut down an absolute gift contained in the first part of the sentence, and are inconsistent with such gift, the Court will, if it can, give effect to the absolute gift:

Where, therefore, a testator said, "all my property of whatever description, whether in possession, reversion, or expectancy, &c. I give unto my dear wife, her executors, administrators, and assigns, upon the fullest trust and confidence reposed in her that she will dispose of the same for the joint benefit of herself and my children."

Held to be an absolute gift to the wife, and no trust thereby created for the children.

This was a case upon a claim, and now came on for argument on further directions and costs, after the usual class inquiries as to the number of children and the state of the accounts of the personal estate of the testator. The will was very short, and in the terms following: "This is the last will and testament of me, Richard Webb, of Langley Marsh, Bucks, miller. All my property, of whatsoever description, whether in possession, reversion, or expectancy, or which I may be possessed of at the time of my death, I give and bequeath the same and every part thereof unto my dear wife, Jane, her executors, administrators, and assigns, to and for her and their own use and benefit, upon the fullest trust and confidence reposed in her that she will dispose of the same for the joint benefit of herself and my children. And I hereby appoint my said wife and my friend Edward Woolls, of Uxbridge, executrix and executor of this my last will and testament, hereby revoking all previous testamentary papers at any time heretofore made by me. Witness my hand and seal this 4th of June, 1836." The principal question raised was whether this was an absolute gift to the wife, or a gift upon trust for herself and the children of the marriage.

On the 26th April the Vice-Chancellor pronounced

JUDGMENT.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that this was one of a class of cases upon which it was extremely difficult to arrive at the proper construction to be put unto the will of a testator—whether the words used by the testator raised a trust for the children or family of that person. The words themselves were short and distinct. I have not, however, been able to find any case which would precisely govern the present one. [The Vice-Chancellor then read the words of the bequest.] Now, stopping at the words "to and for her and their use and benefit," this would be a clear gift to the wife, and goes to declare that the party to be benefited was the wife, her executors, administrators, or assigns. It would be an express gift of the legal interest, if she should be alive when the property should be realised, and the proceeds would go to her; if dead, to her executors, administrators, or to her assigns. The testator evidently would have intended that the whole benefit should belong to his wife and her representatives; but if there are any other words which should import the meaning that any other party should benefit, the bequest would be altogether contradictory. Now, the words which do follow are these:—"Upon the fullest trust and confidence reposed in her that she will dispose of the same for the joint benefit of herself and my children." Now, the question is, whether the last clause "upon the fullest trust," &c. creates a trust for the benefit of the widow and her children, contradicting the express gift to the wife before mentioned. Now, one rule of construction is this, that if there are two clauses or sentences, or branches of a sentence, which would contradict each other, the plain rule is, that you should adopt that construction which would, if possible, make the two clauses agree. Here we have not only two sentences, but two parts of the same sentence contradictory. Now, if I were to put such a construction upon them as would give the benefit to the children and wife, it would make the two clauses or branches inconsistent. Now, I am of opinion that the testator never meant by the last clause of the sentence to create such a trust for the benefit of his children which they should be able to enforce against the wife. All he means by the latter clause is, that he reposes in his wife full confidence that she will, but without imposing upon her the obligation to do so. I have looked through all the cases upon the subject, but have not been able to find any case which, in its circumstances, is in all respects similar to the present. The nearest is that one of Crockett v. Crockett, 1 Hare, and the same case in 5 Hare and 2 Phill. In that case the language of the will was this: he directed "that all and every part of his property should be at the disposal of his most true and lawful wife, Caroline Crockett, for herself and her children, in the event of any unforeseen accident happening to himself." The difference between that case and this is, that there there was not a gift "to the wife, her executors, administrators, and assigns, for her and their use and benefit," as in the present case, but simply a direction that the property should be at the disposal of his wife and children. In that case Vice-Chancellor Wigram held that the children took as joint tenants; but on appeal the Lord Chancellor reversed this part of the decree, by declaring that there was no joint tenancy between the widow and children, but he declined to decide what the respective rights of the parties were, saying, that the widow, though not entitled to the property absolutely, had a personal interest in it; and as between herself and her children, was either a trustee of the fund, with a large discretion as to the application of it, or she had a power in favour of the children, subject to a life interest in herself; and it was thus left, without saying which was the right construction. There was then little instruction to be gathered from that case; but even if it had been decided, it would not have governed the present case. Here the testator sets out by declaring that the gift was to the wife, for the benefit of herself, her executors, administrators, and assigns. Another case, that of Woods v. Woods, 1 Myl. & Cr has a little bearing on the present, but the one of Raikes v. Ward, 1 Hare, is more like the present case: the words there were "I give to my dear wife, Marianne, all my moneys, securities for money, goods, chattels and personal estate whatsoever, to the intent that she may dispose of the same, for the benefit of herself and our children, in such manner as she may deem most advantageous." Now, the difference between that case and this is, that there was no declaration that the gift was for the use and benefit of the wife, &c. but to the intent that she might dispose of the same for the benefit of herself and children." In that case Vice-Chancellor Wigram was of opinion that there was a trust, in which the Court would not disturb the widow in the honest exercise of the discretion which the testator had reposed in her. I think this opinion of the Vice-Chancellor a sound one; but it does not govern the case before me. I must here declare that the wife takes the whole benefit of the gift for her own use and benefit; leaving it to be dealt with by her as she shall think fit for the benefit of those pointed out by the testator. There were two other cases of Cooper v. Thornton, 3 Bro. C. C. before Lord Alvanley; and Robinson v. Tickell, 8 Ves. 142. [The Vice-Chancellor then stated the facts of the first case, and said.] The second case was before Sir W. Grant, who decided it upon the authority of Cooper v. Thornton. In these there was no decision that there was not a trust; but the property was rightly handed over to the parents to deal with as they should think fit. I mention these cases, not because they govern the present, but the principle confirms that which I think proper to do here. In the case of Woods v. Woods, 1 Myl. & Cr. the words were very peculiar. After purporting to give to his wife Elizabeth certain property described as his own estate, he gave other estates to his wife and brother, whom he appointed executrix and executor upon trust, to sell, so that every creditor have his money, and if so sold, all overflush to my wife toward her support, and her family, if any there be," &c. On bill filed by the children, a demurrer was filed by the executor, and the Lord Chancellor overruled this demurrer, and said there was some interest in the children, such an interest as, at all events, entitled them to have an account. Now, in the present case, being of opinion that the testator, although he mentioned "trust and confidence" in his wife, did not intend that the children should have an adverse interest against their mother, and finding no case that completely governs this, I shall decree that the wife is entitled to have the amount of the fund, after payment of the usual costs, paid to her for her own use and benefit.

Decree accordingly.

Voluntary conveyance—Validity against subsequent purchasers. Sale by devisee of the grantor.

A voluntary conveyance is void against a subsequent purchaser for value, under stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4, when the vendor is the same person who executed the voluntary conveyance; but not otherwise; and therefore a purchaser from the devisee of one, who in his lifetime made a voluntary conveyance of the same property, is not within the statute.

Ejectment tried before Martin, B. at the Salisbury Spring Assizes, 1851; and verdict found for the plaintiff. A rule nisi having been obtained to enter it for the defendant,

M. Smith shewed cause against that rule; and Crowder and Barstow were heard in support of it, on the 28th May, 1851, before Lord Campbell, C.J. Patteson, Coleridge, and Erle, JJ.

The whole matter is very elaborately discussed in the judgment of the Court. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—In this case the facts appear to be as follows.—John Newman, being seised in fee, by deed, on the 3rd July, 1833, covenanted to stand seised to himself for life, remainder to Sarah Newman (his daughter-in-law) for life, remainder to George Newman, his grandson (the lessor of the plaintiff), in fee. On the 16th March, 1841, John Newman made his will, and devised the premises to Sarah Newman for life, and remainder to Thomas Morse (the husband of his granddaughter), in fee. John Newman was buried on the 19th March, 1841. On the 5th of June, 1847, Sarah Newman and Thomas Morse sold and conveyed the premises to the defendant, for 300*l*. Sarah Newman died on the 2nd May, 1849. A verdict was found for the plaintiff, and a rule nisi has been obtained to enter the verdict for the defendant. The deed of John Newman is admitted to be voluntary, and the question is whether the defendant is such a purchaser within the 27 Eliz c. 4, as to be entitled to treat that deed as fraudulent and void. The principle on which voluntary conveyances have been held uniformly to be fraudulent and void, as against subsequent purchasers, appears to be that by selling the property for a valuable consideration, the seller so entirely repudiates the former voluntary conveyance, and shows his intention to sell, as that it shall be taken conclusively against him and the person to whom he conveyed, that such intention existed when he made the conveyance, and that it was made in order to defeat the purchaser. Such deeds have been held fraudulent and void as against such purchasers even where they have had notice of them. Doe dem. Otley v. Manning, 9 East, 59. Where the same person executes the voluntary conveyance, and afterwards sells and conveys the property, the application of the principle is obvious and easy; but where the seller is a different person from him who executed the voluntary conveyance, it is quite otherwise, for the acts of one man cannot shew the mind and intention of another. The question, whether the statute of Elizabeth applies to a purchaser from the heir or devisee of one who has made a voluntary conveyance, is discussed in the last edition of "Sugden on Vendors and Purchasers," p. 972, et seq. and the authorities are there collected. The learned author concludes by observing, "still the rule has never been carried to this extent that father's bonâ fide conveyance of the fee, or of any partial interest, although voluntary, can be set aside by a sale by the devisee or heir-at-law of the father. The rule, properly confined to transactions really fraudulent or fraudulently kept on foot, seems to be open to no solid objection, and it is not likely to be carried further." Burrel's case, 6th Rep. 72, is supposed to have decided this point in favour of the purchaser from a person different from him who made the voluntary conveyance. The facts of that case, however, do not warrant any such conclusion. There a grandfather, on the marriage of the father, covenanted to demise the premises in question to the father, and by indenture did afterwards demise them to the father for one thousand years. The father, seven years afterwards, assigned the lease to his son, then an infant, to the intent that it should not be merged by descent of the reversion, and with a colourable intent that the infant should pay debts. The grandfather died; the father entered and took the profits, and nothing was done by the son under the assignment of the lease. Afterwards the father sold the land in fee to a purchaser for a large sum of money, and it was held that the purchaser should avoid the lease for 1,000 years and the assignment. Now, it is obvious that it was quite sufficient to avoid the assignment of the lease by the father, for as soon as that assignment was out of the way, the lease for 1,000 years would be merged in the inheritance, and so there was nothing on which it was necessary that the statute of Elizabeth should operate, but the voluntary assignment which was made by the same person, who afterwards sold and conveyed the fee to a purchaser. Certainly the report states the first resolution in the case to be, that "it is not necessary that he who sells the land should make the former fraudulent estate or incumbrance; but be the estate, &c. fraudulent (ut supra), whosoever sells (makes) it, the purchaser shall avoid such fraudulent estate," &c. This resolution is entitled to great respect; but as it goes beyond what is required by the facts of the case, we do not consider it to be conclusive, or that we can be bound by it. And, further, the second resolution in Burrel's case is quite in accordance with the view we have just taken, for it is there said, "it was resolved, that although the father had nothing in the inheritance of the land at the time of the assignment of his term, but the whole estate of inheritance was then in the grandfather, yet, when the grandfather died, and the father sold the land, his vendee shall avoid the said term by the said Act (the said assignment on the evidence being taken to be fraudulent), for if he had bargained and sold the said term only, the bargainee should avoid the said fraudulent assignment, and by consequence the vendee of the whole fee-simple shall avoid it." Now, if the term only had been sold, it would plainly have been sold by the same person, who made the fraudulent assignment. In the cases of Richards v. Lewis, and Doe v. Richards (reported in 15 Jurist, 52, and 20 Law J. 177, C. P.), the Court of C. P. commented upon Burrel's case. The first action was detinue for title-deeds; the second for the land itself. The facts were as follows: Mrs. Joseph having a lease for years, in May 1839, by a voluntary conveyance in contemplation of marriage with Mr. Saunders, but without his knowledge, conveyed to trustees for herself for life, with remainder to her son, Rhys Morgan, by a former marriage, and if he should die without leaving issue, to Llewellyn Jenkins absolutely. She afterwards married Mr. Saunders, and in 1837, she and her husband conveyed to Howard, as trustee for themselves and the survivor for life, with remainder to Rhys Morgan absolutely. Rhys Morgan died without issue in 1841, having disposed of the remainder which he considered he had absolutely under the deed of 1837, to the lessor of the plaintiff, who, before the action, took an assignment from Howard, the trustee, of the legal interest. In December 1840, Mrs. Saunders, having survived her husband, by deed of assignment, mortgaged that term to the defendant, concealing from him the previous settlements. In 1842 she died, having bequeathed the term to Llewellyn Jenkins, who, in 1843, conveyed the equity of redemption and all his interest in the term to the defendant. The plaintiff had a verdict in each case. In the action of ejectment the Court held that the deed of 1829 was good, and that Mrs. Saunders, at the time of her marriage, had only a life estate; that her husband could not be considered as a purchaser within the statute of Elizabeth, and that on Mrs. Saunders's death the conveyance by her and her husband in 1837, and her mortgage in 1840, were at an end, and the defendant, by the conveyance from Llewellyn Jenkins, had established his title; therefore a nonsuit was directed. This decision does not touch the resolution in Burrel's case. In the action of detinue a new trial was directed, on the ground of surprise as to the question of sufficient search having been made for the deed of 1829. In that case it was urged by the counsel for the defendant that as the deed of 1829 was not proved, the defendant was entitled, for that the deed of 1837 was voluntary only, and was done away with by the subsequent mortgage in 1840, and for this Burrel's case was relied on. The Court considered that by the deed of 1837, the husband had divested all the wife's interest, and the case therefore did not turn on Burrel's case; but in the course of the argument, Williams, J. said: "Suppose a devise by the person making the voluntary conveyance, could his devisee or heir revoke it by a sale? Where there is no actual fraud, must not the revoking conveyance be made by the same person who made the voluntary conveyance?" The Lord Chief Justice Jervis also, in giving judgment, said, "Burrel's case is misunderstood. It does not appear that the Courts at that time held mere voluntariness a badge of fraud; they do not say that every voluntary deed is fraudulent. Lord Coke says, 'I acquainted Popham, C.J. with this resolution, and he allowed well of it, and said it was well done to construe the said Act in suppression of fraud, and (as he told me) it was adjudged before him and his companions, Justices of the King's Bench, that where a man in a secret manner made an estate to the use of his wife for her jointure by fraud and covin to defeat a purchaser to whom he intended to sell the land, that in such case, if the fraud be proved in evidence, or confessed in pleading, the purchaser should avoid such estate.' It is clear from this, that cases of actual fraud were alone in their consideration. It is plain that the deed was proved to be fraudulent, in fact, there, and not that the subsequent execution of a deed for a valuable consideration was deemed to stamp a prior voluntary deed with fraud. There was fraud in fact there, and not merely fraud in law." Williams, J. also, in giving judgment, said, "As to the mortgage, Burrel's case, if good law, shews that where there is actual fraud in a conveyance, a subsequent purchase from one not guilty of the fraud is protected, but that case has no application when the fraud is only constructive. I agree with the opinion of Vice-Chancellor Wigram. The consequence of holding otherwise would be, that if a father wished to disinherit an undeserving heir at law, made in his lifetime a conveyance by way of gift to his younger children, the heir upon his death might nevertheless nullify this deed by a sale, and pocket the purchase-money." The opinion alluded to of Vice-Chancellor Wigram, is to be found in Parker v. Carter, 1 Hare, 400; but it does not appear by the report on what ground the learned Vice-Chancellor so decided. There a sale had been made by a surviving wife of her own lands after a voluntary deed and fine by husband and wife, and it was contended that the statute of Elizabeth applied, and Burrel's case was relied on. Two answers were made—first, that the deed and fine were not voluntary, for that the joint deed by husband and wife was a good consideration for the act of each. Secondly, that the sale was not by the same party. The Vice-Chancellor said that the objection was answered, but did not say on which ground. No other case is reported so far as we have been able to find, in which this point has been determined, one way or the other, except that of Jones v. Whittaker (to be found in Longford v. Townsends, Irish Ex. Rep. 14). There William Smith, by a voluntary deed in 1820, conveyed after his death to Barton Smith in fee. Then by another voluntary deed in 1828, he conveyed, after his death, to Richard Smith in fee. Then by a third deed in 1830, he conveyed to the defendant, professedly, for 500*l.* expressed to be paid in money, and 300*l.* in bonds. Richard Smith became bankrupt in 1837, and in 1839 his assignees sold to the plaintiff for valuable consideration. William Smith died in 1840, and the defendant having got into possession, the plaintiff brought his ejectment. The jury found that no money was paid or bonds given by the defendant, and the deed to him in 1830 was really fraudulent, and made colourably to defeat the deed to Richard Smith in 1828. But the defendant contended, that though he had no title himself, the lessor of the plaintiff had none, for he claimed under a voluntary conveyance to Richard Smith, in 1828, which could not defeat the voluntary conveyance to Barton Smith, in 1820. The case was tried before Baron Richards, and the plaintiff had a verdict, and on motion to set it aside, and enter a verdict for the defendant, the Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover (a strong authority to rely on in this case), saying, that it was held in Burrel's case, and ever since, that a purchaser for value should avoid a prior voluntary conveyance, although made by a different person from the seller to him. The Chief Baron Brady is reported to have stated that the defendant was grantee of a prior deed executed for a voluntary consideration, which is a mistake of fact; though it is not material to the legal point. Baron Richards puts it thus: "The defendant relies on an instrument founded on fraud, not only as under the statute, but as being actually fraudulent. I certainly was of opinion that this instrument was obtained in the year 1830, from a weak old man, and by gross contrivances, for a very unworthy purpose; and so far as the application to set aside this verdict goes, I think it ought to be refused; this observation shews only the weakness of the defendant's own title, but it does not touch the question as to the infirmity of the plaintiff's title, on which the defendant had a right to insist. If there had been no prior deed of 1820 to Barton Smith, and the deed to Richard Smith, though voluntary, had been first in order of time, no doubt it would have prevailed against the defendant's deed of 1830, because that deed was fraudulent in fact; and it would also have prevailed against any even bonâ fide sale and conveyance made in 1839, when Richard Smith's assignees sold for value, because it had been constantly held that if the person to whom a voluntary conveyance is made, sells and conveys for value, that which was in its creation a voluntary conveyance and voidable by a purchaser, becomes good and unavoidable by matter ex post facto, and will be considered as made upon valuable consideration. According to the case of Prodgers v. Langham, 1 Siderfin, 133. This, however, is not by the operation of the statute of Elizabeth, but rather by excluding that operation." The case of Jones v. Whittaker, is doubtless an authority for the defendant in this case, but with the most sincere respect for the learned judges by whom it was decided, we cannot consider it as good law. It would go the length of holding that if there be ten voluntary conveyances by the same man to ten different individuals, whichever of them could first contrive to sell the property, should prevail against the others. When a man who has made a voluntary conveyance, afterwards sells to a bonâ fide purchaser, it may well be considered that as the statute avoids the voluntary conveyance, the seller always had the estate in him, and has at the time of the sale that which he can convey to the purchaser. But it does not follow that he has any estate in him which he can convey to any one but a purchaser for value. He clearly has not any such estate. Therefore in the case of Jones v. Whittaker, William Smith had not any estate in 1828, which he could convey to Richard Smith (Richard not being a purchaser for value), for he had already conveyed away the estate to Barton Smith. So in the present case, John Newman, when he made his will in 1811, had no estate which he could devise to Thomas Morse, for he had already conveyed it to the lessor of the plaintiff; and if Thomas Morse took nothing under the will, how is it possible that by selling to the defendant he could convey anything to him. We presume that it is not supposed that a second grantee without consideration, or a devisee (the testator having before his will conveyed away his interest without consideration), has a power of appointment in favour of a purchaser for value, although no legal interest in the property has ever vested in him. When we consider the consequences which would follow from the doctrine contended for as regards a purchaser from an heir, we may well pause before we assent to it. We may put such a case as the following. A, tenant for life of large estates under his marriage settlement, with remainder to his first son in tail, has also unsettled estates in fee. He has several sons and daughters. He makes a voluntary conveyance of his unsettled estates to himself for life, remainder to his younger children. A. dies; his eldest son succeeds to the large settled estates under the marriage settlement of his father. It is plain that he takes nothing in the others, either as heir or otherwise; but he makes a sale of those others to a bonâ fide purchaser. According to the doctrine contended for, the purchaser shall avoid the father's voluntary deed, and take away from the younger children the estates in which their father had the fee, and had conveyed it to them. The eldest son shall put the purchase-money into his pocket, and his brothers and sisters shall be beggars. This is a monstrous consequence, and yet there is no escaping from it if the doctrine contended for be law. There is, indeed, this difference between the case of a purchaser from an heir and that of a purchaser from a devisee, that in the former case the ancestor has done no act whereby he has shewn any intention to repudiate his voluntary conveyance, whereas in the latter, the testator has done such an act by the devise in his will. But that act of devising does not shew any intention in his mind to sell the property, nor that his devisee shall sell it. It does not shew that he at any time contemplated a sale, and therefore it cannot, by reference to the time of the voluntary conveyance being made, raise the inference that he intended to defraud purchasers. In truth neither heir nor devisee in such a case has any estate in him, and therefore cannot possibly pass any to a purchaser. The case of Warburton v. Loveland, 2 Dow. & C. 140, in the House of Lords, was much relied on in the decision of Jones v. Whittaker. That case, however, turned on the Registry Acts, and on the construction to be put on the express enactments contained in them. It was held, that want of registry made all deeds affected by it void as against purchasers, not only from the persons making those deeds, but from those who were entitled to the estates, supposing those deeds not to have been made. Upon reading the opinion of the judges, delivered by Tindal, C.J. in that case it will be found to turn entirely upon the particular Acts of Parliament under consideration, and not to be any authority for the doctrine now contended for under the statute of Elizabeth. Upon the whole, we are all clearly of opinion that a purchaser from the devisee of one who has made a voluntary conveyance in his lifetime is not within the statute, and that this rule to enter a verdict for the defendant must be discharged. We have taken time to consider in this case for several Terms, and have delayed our judgment out of respect for the decision of the Irish Court of Ex. in Jones v. Whittaker. We feel extremely reluctant to differ from our learned brethren in the Irish Courts, and I take this opportunity of observing (there having been some comments made on my objecting to an authority being cited from the Irish Courts on a mere point of practice, where we differ entirely from their procedure), that upon such points as this I look on the decisions of the Irish Courts with as much respect, as any decision of any Court in Westminster Hall. Rule discharged.

April 27 and May 3.

Sir T. R. GAGE v. THE NEWMARKET RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway—Covenant—Construction—Legality.

Deed by railway company with a landowner, after reciting that the company were about to construct a branch line, and that a Bill was pending in Parliament, and that the landowner had given notice of opposing it, covenanted, that in the event of the Bill passing, the company would, before they should enter upon any part of the landowner's lands, pay him 4,500l. for any portion not exceeding, &c. they should require, and in addition would pay him 7,100l. for damage by severance of the lands. The landowner did not oppose the Bill, and the Act passed:

Held, that the company were not bound to pay the landowner either of the above sums before taking any portion of his land.

Held, also, that it would have been illegal in the company to have covenanted to pay those sums before taking the land, as being a misapplication of the funds of the company.

Covenant.—The declaration, after reciting the passing of the Acts relating to the Newmarket Railway Company, stated that by articles of agreement reciting that it was proposed by the company to construct a branch line of railway, &c. and that the plaintiff had given notice of his intention to oppose the Bill brought into Parliament to enable the company to construct the said branch, the said company covenanted with the plaintiff, that in case the said Bill then before Parliament should pass, the said company would, before entering on the lands of the said plaintiff, pay him 4,500l. purchase-money for any portion of his lands not exceeding forty-three acres which the said company might require; and further, that the said company would pay to the said plaintiff, before they should enter into any part of his lands, 7,100l. for damage arising to his estate by severance thereof, and would settle all demands of the said plaintiff's tenants in consequence.

Averments.—That the Bill did pass, and that plaintiff was ready and willing to receive the said sums of 4,500l. and 7,100l. and that a reasonable time had elapsed for payment thereof.

Breach.—Nonpayment.

One of the pleas which the defendants pleaded was demurred to by the plaintiff; but that becomes immaterial, as the whole whole argument turned upon the validity of the declaration.

Addison, for the plaintiff.

Bramwell, for the defendants.—The point was, whether, upon this covenant, the taking of the land by the defendants was a condition precedent to the payment of the sums of 4,500l. and 7,100l.

JUDGMENT.

Monday, May 3.—Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—We are of opinion that the defendants are entitled to our judgment. Taking the deed as set out on oyer, we think that there is no breach well assigned upon it. The covenant, there, without saying anything, as the declaration does about reasonable time, is merely in these words: "That in the event of the Bill hereinbefore mentioned being passed in the present session of Parliament, the said company shall, before they shall enter upon any part of the lands of the said Sir Thomas Rokewoode Gage, in the said county of Suffolk, pay the said Sir Thomas Rokewoode Gage, his heirs and assigns, the sum of 4,900l. purchase-money, for any portion of his lands not exceeding forty-three acres, which the said company may, under the powers of their Act, require and take for the purposes of their undertaking; that in addition to the purchase-money as aforesaid, the said company shall pay to the said Sir Thomas Rokewoode Gage, his heirs and assigns, before they shall enter upon any part of his said lands, the sum of 7,100l. as a landlord's compensation for the damage arising to his estate by the severance thereof, in the respect of lands not exceeding forty-three acres to be taken by them." The question we have to determine is, whether the company never having entered upon any part of the plaintiff's lands, he is now entitled to sue for those two sums, or either of them. The 4,900l. is declared to be purchase-money for the land to be required and taken, and the only time of payment mentioned is before the company enter upon the lands; therefore, if no land is required or taken, and the company never enter into any part of the land, there seems great difficulty in saying there has been a breach of covenant in not paying the money; and the 7,100l. is declared to be a compensation for severance of the land taken from the rest of the plaintiff's land, and the same kind of payment is defined; but there has been no severance to be compensated, and the time for payment has not arrived. This deed does not bargain for a sum of money to be paid absolutely by the company to the plaintiff as a consideration for his withdrawing his opposition to the Bill, but provides a peculiar mode of estimating the value of the land to be taken, and the compensation to be paid for severance damage, instead of the modes pointed out by the general Act upon this subject. We, therefore, do not think that the company can be considered as having absolutely covenanted to pay 12,000l. to the plaintiff in a reasonable time after the passing of the Act. If this deed could bear such a construction, we should have thought it so far, ultra vires, and void. Here the railway company are the covenantors, and if the present action lies, the capital paid up by the shareholders must be answerable for damages to be recovered. We consider that this would be a misapplication of the funds of the company which the directors could not lawfully make. All the cases that are relied on by the plaintiff's counsel are, clearly distinguishable from the present, except that of Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company, decided by Vice-Chancellor Turner. Notwithstanding our high respect for that learned judge, we cannot concur in the reasons for his decision; and although it has not been expressly overturned, its authority was greatly shaken, when it came before the Lords Justices. We do not think it necessary to give any opinion on the case of Bland v. Crowley, in which the learned judges of the Court of Ex. were divided, as the deed there discussed varies materially from the present; nor would it be proper to give any opinion on Stewart v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, as we learn from Lord Cranworth that when it came before the Lords Justices upon appeal, it was sent by that Court to be decided in a court of law. We are happy to think that the question being on the record, it may be brought before a Court of Error. In the meantime there must be judgment for the defendants.

Judgment for the defendants.

Monday, May 10.

COUNTY COURT APPEAL.

COOPER v. STEPHENS.

Attorney and client—Negligence of attorney—Insufficient inquiry as to mortgagor having been insolvent.

An attorney was instructed by his client to sue for a debt, but after having written letters demanding payment, and threatening proceedings, advised him to accept from the debtor a mortgage security, which he did. There was some evidence that the attorney had a suspicion that the debtor had been insolvent; but he made no inquiries upon that subject, except from the debtor himself. It afterwards turned out that the debtor had previously petitioned the Insolvent Court, and obtained an order for protection, and that the whole of the debts in his schedule remained unpaid.

Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury of negligence, rendering the attorney liable to an action by the client.

This was an action tried before the judge of the County Court of Kent, and a jury of the said county at Rochester, and the action was brought on a plaint, to which the following particulars of demand were annexed:—

"The plaintiff claims of the defendant the sum of 50l. for damages sustained by him, for that the defendant as the attorney of the plaintiff did not use due and proper care, diligence, and skill, in prosecuting and conducting a certain action of debt at the suit of the said plaintiff, against one William John Wells, for the recovery of the sum of 51l. 2s. 6d. claimed by the said plaintiff, to be due and owing to him from the said William John Wells, for goods sold and delivered by the said plaintiff to him, but instead thereof that he the said defendant took, and induced the said plaintiff to accept a certain mortgage security of the reversionary interest of the said William John Wells in certain lands, tenements, and premises situated in the county of Kent; and further, that the defendant as such attorney for the said plaintiff, did not use due and proper care in ascertaining the title of the said William John Wells to the said lands, tenements, and premises, nor take due and proper care that the same should be a sufficient security for the payment of the said sum of money and interest; and further, the said plaintiff, confiding in the conduct of the defendant as such, his attorney as aforesaid, forbore to sue for, and recover his said debt, against the said William John Wells, upon having a mortgage granted by him upon the said lands, tenements, and premises, as and for a sufficient security in that behalf; and the said defendant then caused to be prepared and executed a certain indenture relating to the supposed estate and interest of the said William John Wells, in the said lands, tenements, and premises, as, and for such sufficient security for the payment of the said 51l. 2s. 6d. and interest as aforesaid. Nevertheless, the said supposed title and estate, and interest of the said William John Wells, in and to the said lands, tenements, and premises, and the said indenture and security, by reason of the negligent and improper conduct of the said defendant in the premises, were not, nor are, nor will be, any sufficient security for the payment to the plaintiff of the said sum of 51l. 2s. 6d. and interest, but that, on the contrary thereof, the said defendant so carelessly and negligently conducted himself in that behalf, that, by reason thereof, the said plaintiff was forced to pay and did pay a further large sum of money in respect thereof, to the damage of the said plaintiff of 50l. and upwards."

At the hearing of the said cause, the following facts were tendered and received in evidence:—That in October 1849. Cooper, the plaintiff, who was a boot and shoe maker, instructed Stephenson, the defendant, as his attorney, to recover the sum of 51l. 2s. 6d. due to him from William John Wells, a shipwright, working in her Majesty's dock-yard, at Chatham, and who was also a boot and shoemaker. That upon these instructions being given, two letters (demanding payment, and threatening proceedings) were written, and sent by the defendant's orders to William John Wells. (The letters were set out in the case.) The plaintiff having been sworn as a witness, stated, that on the evening of the said 16th of October, he went to the defendant's office by appointment, and there met the said William John Wells and the defendant. That the said William John Wells then offered the plaintiff, as a security for the payment of the said debt of 51l. 2s. 6d. with interest thereon, a mortgage of a certain reversionary interest in certain houses and land, to which he, William John Wells, said he was entitled. That the defendant, as the attorney to the plaintiff, advised the plaintiff to accept the said mortgage as a good security for the said debt, and to forbear from prosecuting an action for the recovery thereof. That the plaintiff, in consequence of the advice so given him by the defendant, did forbear from prosecuting an action, and that, on the 30th of the same month of Oct. an indenture of mortgage was executed, which indenture is made between the said William John Wells of the one part, and the plaintiff, of the other part. (The indenture was set out in the case, and contained the usual covenant to pay the debt.) The plaintiff further stated that about two months after the execution of the mortgage, he discovered for the first time that the said William John Wells had petitioned the Court for the relief of insolvent debtors in the year 1843, and obtained an order for his protection, which order was in force at the time of the execution of the mortgage; that the debts due from the insolvent to his creditors amounted to 65l. 16s. 5d.; that there were no assets; and that the whole of the debts remained due, and unpaid at the time of the execution of the said mortgage, and that the insolvent's reversionary interest in the said freehold houses and land was not disclosed to the assignees; that on the discovery of the insolvency, the plaintiff, by the advice of the defendant, who was still acting as his attorney, bought up 60l. 15s. of these debts for the sum of 5l. 10s. leaving 5l. 1s. 5d. due to other creditors, with whom he could not compound, and obtained an assignment of the said debts, amounting to 60l. 15s. with the usual power of attorney to recover and receive them.

William Sainock being sworn as a witness in the said cause, stated that he was clerk to the defendant in October 1849, but has since left his service. That between the 16th and 30th of October, 1849, whilst he was in the defendant's service as clerk, the defendant told him several times that he, the defendant, must write to his agent to make the necessary searches, to see whether any judgments had been entered against the said William John Wells, or whether he had ever been a bankrupt, or taken the benefit of any of the Insolvent Acts; that it was his general duty as the defendant's clerk, to copy into the letter-book the letters which were sent from the defendant's office, and that he had no recollection of ever having seen any letters containing any directions to make such searches; that he was directed by the defendant to go to Chatham Dockyard, where William John Wells worked as a ship carpenter, to inquire if he, Wells, had ever been insolvent; that he took the mortgage deed to the dockyard, and asked William John Wells himself if he had ever been insolvent, and he answered no, and then the deed was executed.

Elizabeth Wells being sworn to give evidence in the said cause, stated that she was the wife of William John Wells, and that in October 1849 the said

William John Wells had household goods, as she believed, of the value of 80*l.* or 100*l.*; that he afterwards left Chatham, and, as she believes, is gone out of the country.

Upon these facts being proved, the counsel for the defendant submitted that the plaintiff ought to receive judgment of nonsuit. The plaintiff's counsel insisted that the case should go to the jury. The learned judge gave judgment of nonsuit against the plaintiff.

The question for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench is, whether the learned judge was right in law in nonsuiting the plaintiff, and withdrawing the case from the consideration of the jury.

Petersdorff (F. J. Smith with him) for the appellant.—The judge was wrong in withdrawing the case from the jury. If there was any evidence of negligence the question was one of fact for them to determine; and there was evidence. It was the positive duty of the defendant to make due inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining whether Wells had petitioned the Insolvent Court, as is stated in Coventry's Conveyancer's Evidence; and if he neglected the performance of that duty, the question of actual damage is immaterial. (Marzetti v. Williams, 1 B. & Ad. 415.)

G. C. Addison, contrà.—There was no duty cast upon the defendant to search the Insolvent Court; and a reference to the different Insolvent Acts will shew that any such search would be very expensive, and probably fruitless. Under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, s. 1, insolvent traders, whose debts are small, may petition the district Courts of Bankruptcy in the country for protection, and of such cases no returns are required to be made, except to the Lord Chancellor's secretary, under the amending Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 13). Besides, the plaintiff could not be prejudiced by the omission to search at the Bankrupt or Insolvent Court, because no order in bankruptcy would affect the mortgage unless registered pursuant to 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 19, and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, s. 4. At all events, in order to make out such a case of negligence as would render the defendant liable to an action, the plaintiff ought to have given some evidence that it was the practice to search at the Insolvent Court (Purvis v. Landell, 12 Cl. & F. 98); and no such duty is pointed out in Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers. Besides, the mortgage cannot be treated as altogether worthless. The covenant to pay the debt is a security to pay it, as was said by Maule, J. in Price v. Moulton, 20 L. J. 101, C.P.

COLERIDGE, J.—It is not necessary for us to lay down any general rule in this case, and the judgment of the Court will therefore ground upon the peculiar facts here stated. The question is, whether there was any evidence to go to the jury of negligence; and there was evidence, I will not say proof, of these facts. That the attorney having been instructed to recover this money, applied for payment and threatened proceedings; but that an offer being made of a mortgage, he advised his client to accept it as a good security. Now, if he knew or suspected, or even guessed that Wells, the debtor, had previously taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act, I think it was a necessary and proper step for him to make inquiry; and there is some evidence that he had a suspicion of that kind, and that he himself thought that it was his duty to make some inquiry, and to give his agents instruction to make the necessary searches; but according to the recollection of the clerk no such inquiry was made, nor were any such instructions ever given: a certain inquiry he did make, namely, of the debtor himself, but of course such an inquiry was futile. The defendant, therefore, thought it his duty to make inquiry; he made an insufficient inquiry, and then the very thing appears actually to have taken place, about which he had felt that some inquiry was necessary. Mr. Addison says, that under Lord Brougham's Act the inquiry might have been instituted without success, but it does not appear that this insolvency was under that statute. At all events any matter of that sort might have been adduced by way of excuse, and in answer to the plaintiff's case; but the course taken by the judge precluded that; because he held that upon the plaintiff's case there was no evidence for the jury.

ERLE, J.—We do not lay down any general rule; we only say, that in some cases, where the attorney has reason to suspect that the party offering the security has been through the Insolvent Court, he ought to institute some reasonable inquiry; and here the defendant has by his own language and conduct settled the question whether he had such suspicion.

BASTO v. GANT Administrator, &c.

Lord Mayor's Court—Foreign Attachment—Special bail—Suit against administrator.

The rule which requires a defendant in the Court of the Lord Mayor of London to put in special bail in order to dissolve a foreign attachment [illegible]ed by that Court against his goods, applies to a case in which the defendant is sued as executor or administrator, and if the suit is removed by certiorari, a procedendo will issue, unless special bail be put in in the Superior Court.

Locke moved for a rule to shew cause why an order of Coleridge, J. should not be rescinded, and why common bail put in by the defendant should not be deemed sufficient. The plaintiff had commenced an action of debt against the defendant in the Lord Mayor's Court, and in that action, according to the custom of the city of London, a foreign attachment had issued against the goods of the defendant in the hands of the Royal British Bank. The cause and attachment having been removed into this court by certiorari, an order was made by Coleridge, J. directing a procedendo to issue, unless the defendant should put in good bail within four days. Subsequently application was made to Erle, J. at chambers, to rescind that order, on the ground that the usual rule as to putting in special bail did not apply to the case of defendant sued only as executor or administrator. The learned judge, however, refused the application; and the present motion came by way of appeal from that decision. It is admitted that the ordinary rule was to require special bail (Day v. Paupierre, 18 L. J. 270, Q B.); but the rule does not apply to the case of a defendant sued as administrator. In Mr. Ashley's Book on the "Doctrine and Practice of attachment in the Mayor's Court, London," it is expressly stated that the custom does not authorise the arrest of an executor or administrator, and that the attachment, which is equal to an arrest, may be dissolved by putting in common bail. [ERLE, J.—That is the only book of practice in which such statement is to be found, and I believe it i[illegible]trary to the actual practice of the Lord Mayor's Court. Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—It is wholly irreconcileable with the supposition that the [illegible] of foreign attachment practically applies at all to the case of a defendant executor, because it would render the process perfectly illusory.] The practice always was to discharge an executor upon common bail, even though the cause was removed from an inferior to a superior Court. (Bac. Abr. Exors. and Administrators, p. 5; Lumley v. Quarry, Salk. 101; Reg. Gen. Q.B. Hil. T. 1686.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that my brother Erle was quite right, and that there should be no rule. There is no question that the general rule was, that executors could not be held to special bail even on removal of a cause from an inferior Court; but the question is, whether there is not an exception to that rule where the custom of foreign attachment prevails; and if it is admitted that attachment will lie at all against an executor, there must be such an exception, because the attachment would be wholly illusory if it could be dissolved on common bail. The authorities cited from Bacon's Abridgment do not advance the argument, because they state the general rule only; but Mr. Locke relies on the passage in Mr. Ashley's book, although he himself, an experienced practitioner of the Court, will not vouch for its accuracy.

COLERIDGE, J. concurred.

ERLE, J.—Without undertaking to answer for the practice of the Lord Mayor's Court, though I fully believe that it is the same in this respect, it is quite clear that by the practice of this Court a suit commenced in the Lord Mayor's Court cannot effectually be removed here without putting in and perfecting special bail. No doubt is thrown upon that rule in any case or book of practice that I can find.

CROMPTON, J.—To take the case out of the practice of this Court, it ought at all events to be clearly made out that the practice is different in the Mayor's Court, and I think that is not made out. The passage in Ashley is not sanctioned by any other authority.

Rule refused.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

TRINITY TERM.

Saturday, May 22

(Lord Campbell, C J. Coleridge, Erle, and Crompton, JJ. took their seats on the bench this morning, and will generally constitute the Court during the Term)

MARSHALL v. THELLUSSON and OTHERS.—Ogle shewed cause against a rule to enter the verdict for the defendant upon the fourth count. The question was, whether there was any evidence to support the special contract stated in that count. Channell, Serjt. and C. Wood, contrà.

Rule absolute.

SAME v. SAME.—Channell, Serjt. and Wood, shewed cause against a rule for judgment, non obstante veredicto, upon a plea of set-off to the common counts.—Ogle, contra

Cur. adv. vult

REG. v. THE LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Addison moved on behalf of a landowner for a rule nisi for a mandamus to compel the above-named company to make a railway between three and four miles long, forming part of the Oldham branch. The compulsory powers would expire 9th July, 1852 Rule nisi.

REG v. SILL.—Wilkins, Serjt moved for a certiorari to remove an indictment from the Middlesex Sessions.

Rule nisi.

MALLALIEU v. THE ANGLO CALIFORNIAN MINING COMPANY.—Paterson appeared in support of rule for new trial. No cause being shewn.

Rule absolute on affidavit of service.

CORBETT v. HUDSON.—The plaintiff, in person, moved for a rule for a new trial upon several grounds, one being that the Lord Chief Justice had refused to allow him to conduct his case as advocate, and also be examined as a witness. The COURT refused the rule upon the other grounds; but as to that, Cur. adv. vult.

BLACKALL v. BREMMER.—Lush and Honeyman shewed cause against a rule for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. Francis contrà.

Rule discharged.

Monday, May 24.

REG. v. ARNOLD.—This was a motion for a certiorari to bring up two orders of one of the magistrates of the county of Middlesex, whereby the costs of the maintenance of a pauper lunatic Irishman, having no legal settlement in England, were made payable on the county. Pashley moved, and Bodkin shewed cause in the first instance.

Cur. adv. vult.

Ex parte POLLARD.—Huddleston moved for a certiorari to bring up an order of two justices, appointing Mr. Pollard as overseer, for the purpose of quashing it. The objection was, that Mr. P. was a practising surgeon. (18 Geo. 2, c. 15, s. 2) Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF MIDDLESEX.—Huddleston shewed cause against a rule nisi for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear an appeal. Pashley and Bodkin supported the rule. Rule discharged.

KEYSE v. POWELL.—Rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of surprise, and upon affidavits. The case was tried at Monmouth, before Platt, B. and a verdict found for the defendant. It was an action of trespass, q. c. f. to which the defendant pleaded a demise of coal, with leave to work the mine. Watson and Sir T Phillips showed cause, and Whateley and Gray supported the rule.

Rule absolute, on payment of costs.

Tuesday, May 25.

PALK v. SKINNER.—Crowder and Collier shewed cause against a rule to enter a verdict for the defendant.

Kinglake, Serjt. and M. Smith, contra. Rule discharged.

(Will be reported next week)

CORBETT v. HUDSON.—Lord CAMPBELL, C J.—The Court think that there ought to be a rule to shew cause upon this question whether the plaintiff has a right to address the jury bef[illegible] being sworn, he intending to be a witness [illegible] his own case. Rule nisi.

ALLEN v. LAKE.—This was an action for breach of a warranty upon the sale of "Skirving swedes." Hoggins moved for a rule to enter the verdict for the defendant upon the second count, and for a new trial upon the first count, on the ground that there was no evidence to prove the contract as laid in the declaration. Rule refused.

BARNES v. MARSHALL.—Bovill moved for a rule to shew cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue to the judge of the County Court of Wilts, held at Swindon, and why the plaintiff should not pay the costs of the application The question was whether, under sec. 60 of 9 & 10 Vict. [illegible] whole of the cause of action must arise within the jurisdiction of the County Court. Buckley v. Hann, 5 Exch Rep. 43; 19 L. J 151, Ex.; and Wilde v. Sheridan, 19 L. T 126, before Coleridge, J in the Bail Court, were mentioned. Rule nisi.

REG. v. TIDD PRATT, Esq.—Willes moved for a rule for a mandamus commanding the Registrar of Friendly Societies to certify an amended rule of the Kent Mutual Fire Insurance Society. The question turned upon sec. 12, of 9 & 10 Vict c 27; and the question was, whether societies formed before the passing of that Act, the original rules of which had been registered with the clerk of the peace of the county, within which the society's place of business was situate, could now establish a place of business beyond the local limits of that county. The amended rule, which was proposed to be certified, provided that the society should have a place of business in London. Stat. 10 G. 4, c. 56, s. 10, was referred to.

Rule nisi.

MERCH v. DAW.—Slade and Kingdon shewed cause against a rule for a new trial. Crowder and Fitzherbert, contrà.

Rule discharged by consent, on the damages being reduced to 180l.

BUSINESS OF THE COURT.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. mentioned that he considered it desirable, now that there was the opportunity, that motions for rules nisi should be made in the full Court, when the matter would have to be brought before the full Court upon shewing cause.

Wednesday, May 26.

NINER v. DIXIE.—Macauley moved for a new trial, on the ground of excessive damages, and also on affidavits.

Rule nisi.

VAUGHAN v. STEVENS.—Tried before Erle, J. Case, for negligence, whereby damage was occasioned to the defendant's house Crowder and Fitzherbert shewed cause against; and Kinglake, Serjt. and Collier, supported a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection.

Rule discharged.

REG v. AVERY.—To be reported. Rule discharged.

LOWE v. THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Miller, Serjt. and Hayes shewed cause against a rule nisi to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial.

Part heard.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

WHITAKER v. WISBEY.

Trover—Assignment of goods by prisoner after commission day of Assizes, but before conviction —Estoppel by record.

A prisoner incarcerated on a charge of felony, made an assignment of his goods after the commission day of the Assizes, but before conviction: Held, that, notwithstanding the entire period over which Assizes extend in one place is, by contemplation of law, and for some purposes, one legal day, the particular day on which a conviction took place may, when necessary, be shewn, and that therefore the assignment was valid.

The record of a prisoner's conviction, shewing that he was convicted on a certain day, does not operate as an estoppel, so as to shut out evidence of the actual day on which the conviction took place.

This was an action of trover, brought against the defendant, an auctioneer and agent, for the Crown, for the disposal of felon's goods.

Pleas.—1. Not guilty; 2. Not possessed.

The cause was tried before Cresswell, J. at the Summer Assizes for Huntingdon. It appeared in evidence that George and Thomas Whitaker, the father and brother of the plaintiff, Richard Whitaker, were tried for arson before Erle, J. at Cambridge Spring Assizes 1851, and convicted and sentenced. The commission day of Cambridge Assizes was Wednesday, the 19th of March; the trial of the prisoners commenced on Saturday, the 22nd of March, and terminated on Monday the 24th. By a deed, dated the 17th but not executed till the 20th of March, the prisoner, Thomas Whitaker, assigned his goods to the plaintiff. The corporation of Cambridge claimed the goods for the Crown, as the property of a felon, and employed the defendant to sell them, whereupon the plaintiff brought his action of trover to recover the value of the goods. For the defendant the record of the conviction of Thomas Whitaker was put in evidence, and it was contended that, as in contemplation of law the Assizes are of one day, the record, the caption of which bore date of the commission day, must be taken as conclusive evidence that the conviction took place on the 19th of March, and before the assignment. The jury found for the plaintiff, damages 210*l.*; they also found specially that the deed of assignment was bonâ fide, and for a valuable consideration. Leave was reserved for the defendant to move to enter a verdict on the plea of not possessed, if this Court should be of opinion that the conviction must be taken as dating on the commission day of the Assizes.

A rule nisi in those terms having been obtained on a former day by Prendergast, Q.C.

Worlledge and Burcham now shewed cause.—At the time when the prisoner, Thomas Whitaker, executed this assignment he was competent to perform such an act, because he was not convicted. [WILLIAMS, J.—The point here is, whether by force of law the conviction dates from the first day of the Assizes.] Yes. By law, so far as felon's goods are concerned, the title of the Crown relates back only to the day of actual conviction. It was certainly the opinion of Hale, C.J. that even after indictment a prisoner can make a good deed. He says: -"The goods of a person convicted of felony are forfeited to the king; but the relation of the forfeiture refers not to the time of the offence committed, but only to the conviction; and therefore an alienation made by the felon bonâ fide and without fraud, between the offence and the conviction, is good, and binds, but if fraudulent, then it is avoidable by the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5." (1 Hale, 1 C. 361, 365-7.) This point was well considered in Perkins v. Bradley, 1 Hare, 219. In that case it was held by Vice-Chancellor Wigram, that a felon might dispose of his property for a valuable consideration, between the day when the offence was committed and conviction. Take as an illustration a case where the Assizes extend over a long space of time, as in Yorkshire. The commission opens on Saturday; on Monday, a man bonâ fide sells his goods to an innocent purchaser for valuable consideration; on Tuesday he steals his neighbour's property, is taken at once before the grand jury, who find a true bill against him. Can it in such a case be said that a mere fiction of law is to prevail, and that, therefore, he could not make a good sale of goods on Monday? [MAULE, J. Those fictions must not be stretched to the extreme limit they will go. It seems absurd to say that an act actually done on the 25th, shall be referred back to the 3rd of March.] There are no cases to be found where a conveyance was made after commission day and before conviction. The cases of Shaw v. Brand, Starkie, 319, and one in Skinner, 357, are, however, instances of conveyances made very recently before the commission day. Then, as to the question of estoppel, there are numerous authorities to the effect that, where matter of estoppel can be pleaded, it must be relied on. (Macgrath v. Hardy, 4 Bing. N.C. 782.) It is admitted that we cannot traverse the record. It is merely by fiction of law that the whole period of commission of oyer and terminer is to be taken as one day. But this Court will take judicial notice that Assizes may and do continue more than one day. The record of conviction is drawn up by the officer of the Court as of the first day of the Assizes, and for some purposes, but not necessarily for all, the Assizes are treated as of one day. The record may be conclusive as to the fact of conviction, but is not necessarily so as to the date of it. We have no power over the record so as to enable us to enter continuances. If the adjournments from day to day had been entered as they might to have been by the officer of the Court, we should have been in a better position, but we are not to be prejudiced by his default. The duties on the Court as to making proper entries are laid down in Hale, P. C. 24. It is also said in 3 Co. Inst. c. 104, p. 229, on falsifying attainders, "That if the triers find the offender guilty generally, yet the feoffee or lessee, if the offence be alleged in the indictment, before it was done to their prejudice, may falsify in the time but not for the offence." What principle of justice is there which prohibits the alienee of goods from shewing the true day when they were assigned, as well as the true day of conviction? [WILLIAMS, J.—Is that anything more than an authority to this—that the record is an estoppel with respect to those matters which are material and traversable.] According to the argument of the other side, if adjournments are entered the deed is good; if not, it is bad; so that it must depend upon the manner in which the clerk of the Court performs his duty in making up the record, whether this assignment is good or bad. There is authority for this, that parties interested may shew the true time. (4 Co. c. 7; Huys v. Wright, Yelv. 35; Johnson v. Smith, 2 Burr. 962.) This last is a case strongly in point. If it was there allowed to shew the true day for the furtherance of justice, why should we not here, for the same purpose, be allowed to shew the actual day of conviction? (Morris v. Pugh, 3 Burr. 1241.) [MAULE, J. Fictions of law must be consistent with justice.] If the Court were to refuse this a manifest injustice would follow. (Burnitt v. Isaac, 10 Price, 124; Thomas v. Des Anges, 2 B. & Ad.; Sadler v. Leigh, 4 Camp. 195.) It was said by the Court in Doe v. Hersey, 3 Wils. 274, "By fiction of law the whole term, the whole time of the Assizes, and the whole session of Parliament may be, and sometimes are, considered as one day, yet the matter of fact shall overturn the fiction in order to do justice between the parties." In Lyttleton v. Cross, 3 B. & Cr 317, it is laid down by Abbott, C.J. "That where it is for the interest of the party pleading to shew that a proceeding did not take place at the precise time when by fiction of law it is supposed to have happened, it is competent for him to do so." (Butler and Baker's case, 3 Rep. 25.) [WILLIAMS, J.—Is this a question of fiction or relation at all; is not the question whether the record is so drawn as to be an estoppel?] We have shewn that an alienee of lands may shew the true day. [MAULE, J.—The contention is, that the Court will take judicial notice that the legal day of the Assizes contain [illegible]eral ordinary days of twenty-four hours.] Yes, and that we may shew on which of those days the assignment, and on which the conviction took place.

Prendergast and O'Malley, in support of the rule.—The point raised in this case has been decided years ago. There was no evidence before the Court below, nor is there anything now, to shew when the prisoner was convicted, except the record of conviction. [MAULE, J.—You say you cannot in such a case prove the time by other evidence than the record. That may be so, but was any other evidence tendered? If not, there is no matter of law, but it is a simple question of fact.] We admit that the plaintiff offered to prove that it was subsequent to the execution of the deed that the prisoner was arraigned for felony. For our case, we put in evidence the formal conviction of the prisoner by producing the record. If the plaintiff could shew by other than the record when the conviction actually took place, then we should have no case; but that cannot be done. There was no other evidence before the jury of the conviction, for the plaintiff could not give parol evidence. The rule is clear, that where a person is convicted in a Court of Record, the only evidence of his conviction is the record itself. The cases cited on the other side will be found, on close examination, not to apply. The record states that the conviction took place on a certain day, and evidence cannot be admitted in contradiction, shewing it took place on another day. (1 Phillips, Ev. 425; Thomas v. Ansley, 6 Esp. 10; Pope v. Foster, 4 T. R. 490.) That this rule is carried out to a great extent will appear from reference to 2 Hawkins, 179. In the next place the record shews that the prisoner was tried and convicted on the 19th of March, and that entry forms part of the record. Now it has been held that if a record shews that a trial took place on a certain day it must be taken it was finished on that day. The rule as to one continuous day extends to all Sessions, and even to Parliament itself. (Walker v. Holmes, 4 T. R. 660; The Attorney-General v. Panter, 6 Bro. Par. C. 486; St. Clement Danes v. St. Ann's, Holborn, 2 Salk. 6; 2 Brook's Abr. 40.) Where a record states a thing as having been done on a particular day, and any other matter relating to it is shewn to have taken place after that day, the doctrine of relation applies, and the Court will take it as having been done on the day specified in the record. This is stated in 2 Brook's Abr. 197 (Relation, 13; vide Charter, 25); and this doctrine has been universally acted upon. There is a note in Saunders to the same effect. In Ludford v. Gretton, Plowd. 491, it is said "that all matters of record in respect of their highness are presumed in themselves to carry absolute truth. And, therefore, none can say that the king's charter was made or delivered at another time than when it bears date, no more than a man may say that a recognizance or statute merchant or staple was acknowledged, or any writ purchased at any other time than when it bears date. For to aver that it was ante-dated, or that it was delivered or acknowledged after the date, tends to the discredit of the Great Seal or of the officer of record." In Portchester v. Petrie, 3 Doug. 261, it was held by Lord Mansfield, that where it was admitted on the record that two judgments were given on the same day, priority of judgment could not be averred. Every Act of Parliament in which no time is specified for its commencement, is held to take effect from the first day of that session of Parliament wherein it is made. In the next place, matter in pais, though it may have occurred before, will, by relation, be taken to be done on the day. (Jacobs v. Miniconi, 7 T. R. 31; Greenway v. Fisher, 7 B. & Cr. 436.) [WILLIAMS, J.—Then you say, that if a shopkeeper in York is convicted on the last day of the Assizes, all the goods he has sold during a fortnight since commission day, and all the money he has received for them, is forfeited to the Crown?] Yes; it is almost an universal practice to make such assignments as these before the commission day. All the cited cases are within the rule laid down by Lord Mansfield, C.J. in Portchester v. Petrie (suprâ). But the case strictly in point here is that from Hale (suprâ). In law, a record is supposed to be a minute of what takes place from time to time in the court; it is not such a trifling thing as the other side would have the Court believe. If the plaintiff were permitted to give parol evidence of the day when the prisoner was convicted, it would be admitting parol evidence of the indictment itself. The Court should therefore say that the inconvenience which would follow is so great that it cannot be permitted. The old rule goes so far as this, that a mischief shall be preferred to an inconvenience. The general principle that facts shall prevail against fictions of law, is limited to some few cases, and does not affect verdicts and records of Superior Courts generally. (Jacobs v. Miniconi, suprâ.) Where matters in pais and matters of record are concerned, and the matters in pais dates before that of record, the matter of record shall nevertheless take precedence of the matter [illegible] pais. (Taylor v. Harris, 3 Bos. & Pul. 549.) When the Court have before them what the law says is the proper evidence of conviction—that is to say, the record, they are precluded from admitting any other evidence. (Lant v. Arnaboldi, 1 Cr. & Jerv. 97; Rex v. Thurstone, 1 Lev. 91; Rex v. Carlisle, 2 B. & Ad. 362.) This last case very strongly illustrates the force of a record as evidence. (Rex v. Shaw, Russ. & Ryl. 526.) In the cases cited on the other side, there is not a single instance where evidence was admitted to contradict a record. We are contending for a positive and necessary rule of evidence which must be held up, or great inconvenience will be occasioned.

MAULE, J.—This case has been argued by the learned counsel on both sides in a very elaborate and learned manner; every authority bearing upon it has been cited; but I do not myself now entertain, nor have I throughout the arguments entertained, any doubt upon the question. This was an action of trover, to which the defendant pleaded, Not possessed. The plaintiff was the assignee under a deed of the goods of a prisoner. It appears that the commission day of Cambridge Spring Assizes was the 19th of March, that the deed of assignment was executed on the 20th, and that the prisoner who so executed the deed was on the 24th tried and convicted of felony. The defendant said by his plea that the goods were not the goods of the prisoner, because he could not convey them by assignment on the day when the deed transferring the property in them was executed. At the trial at Nisi Prius the jury found, that the deed of assignment was executed bonâ fide, and for a valuable consideration. The record was produced, which shewed the conviction as having taken place on the 19th of March, two days previous to the execution of the deed; and it was insisted that this was conclusive against the plaintiff. No doubt the plaintiff had a good title, unless it was taken away by the record of conviction prior to the assignment. [His lordship read the record]. The caption of the record of conviction states that the Assizes were held on the 19th, but there is no allegation that the trial and conviction took place on that day, so that there is mention of the day when the Assizes were held, but none of the day of conviction. If no further evidence was admissible, it must be taken that the conviction was on the 19th, for, so far as the record goes, the Assizes begin and finish on that day. If the Assizes began and finished on the 19th then, the conviction, as shewn by the record refers only to that day; but, where the Assizes extend over several days, as here, the question is whether you can shew that the conviction did not take place on the 19th, but on the 24th. I apprehend that, consistently with true principles of law and every decided case, you can. As far as the record is concerned, the Assizes may be regarded as of one day; but that day is a legal day, which may, and often does consist of more than one natural day of twenty-four hours. The legal day may last from the 19th over the 24th, and there is no necessity for entering the adjournments. The Court will itself take judicial notice that the Assizes are continued from day to day. Therefore, when the record alleges that the Assizes were held on the 19th, proof that the trial in point of fact took place on the 24th is no contradiction of the record. The evidence does not shew that the trial did not take place on the 19th in the sense in which that term is used in the record. It is no more inconsistent to shew that the conviction took place on the 24th than it would be if the record should shew on what particular hour of the day a conviction took place. If it material to shew at what particular hour of the 19th the conviction took place, and it certainly might be done, in like manner you may shew on what natural day, being part of the legal day, the conviction occurred. Fictions of law are for the furtherance of justice. The principle that evidence is not admissible to contradict a record is one calculated for the advancement of justice; but the ground upon which I feel bound to decide this case seems fully recognised in Doe v. Hersey, where it is said, "By fiction of law, the whole term, the whole time of the Assizes, and the whole session of Parliament may be, and sometimes are, considered as one day; yet the matter of fact shall overturn the fiction in order to do justice between the parties." Seizure is said to relate to the time when the writ is put into the hands of the sheriff. Some cases have been relied upon as to the beginning of term; but though for some purposes it is held that all term is one day, still that cannot be held for all purposes, because there are within it various return days and the like, and the Court knows judicially that it consists of several natural days. In bankruptcy, several acts are said to relate back to some previous day. An Act of Parliament (unless the contrary is specified) takes effect from the first day of the session. But those cases do not seem to me applicable to the present. Suppose, as has been suggested in argument, that in places where Assizes last a fortnight or three weeks, a person on bail, say a shopkeeper, is convicted, or that he commits a felony during the Assizes, then, according to the argument used on behalf of the defendant, all goods sold by him between the commission day and the day of the trial would be forfeited. Considering that fictions of law are not to prevail against facts, we must hold the plaintiff entitled to recover, for the jury found that the conveyance was bonâ fide, and for a valuable consideration. It is not necessary, for the reasons given, that we should go with minuteness into the cases cited; we think this rule should be discharged.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am quite of the same opinion. Counsel have brought before the Court every case bearing upon the subject, and the result of this thorough research into the authorities, as contended by the defendant, would be, that the Court is constrained, by an arbitrary rule of law, to say that the conviction, which in point of fact took place on the 24th, was on the 19th of March. I do not think this is so. The conveyance is perfectly good if made before the actual conviction of the person executing it.' It is said we are constrained by a positive rule of law to say that the conviction took place on the day named in the record. If we did so, it would work injustice in many cases other than this; such, for instance, as where bonâ fide purchasers buy goods, after commission day, of a man convicted of felony before the close of the Assizes. The consequences would be so absurd, as to make the soundness of the rule doubtful. I agree with my learned brother in thinking that the Assizes are to be considered as of one legal day containing natural days; and as the Court would be bound to take notice of an hour or fraction of the legal day, so it may take notice that the conviction here took place on one particular natural day within the legal day of the Assizes. Rule discharged.

HOLMES v. THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Pleading—Patent.

Where letters patent are granted to different parties for substantially, though not in every particular, the same invention, and the letters patent latest in date contain a proviso that they shall not give any privilege to use or imitate any invention already patented, and that all other persons entitled may continue to use inventions previously patented: a person using the first patented invention cannot, in addition to the pleas of not guilty, and that the invention was not new, plead specially to an action brought for an infringement of the second patented invention, a plea setting out the above proviso, and alleging that the defendant had used the previously patented invention, such a plea amounting to a plea of not guilty.

Webster moved for leave to add a plea to those already pleaded. On the 10th December, 1840, letters patent were granted to a person, under whom the defendants claim, for an invention for making turn-tables for railway engines, &c. On the 28th of January, 1841, letters patent were granted to the plaintiff for a similar invention. The first invention consisting of a combination of A. and B. the second of A. and C., B. and C. being mechanical equivalents; but there being such a difference in detail that the second patent might be sustained. The second letters patent contained a proviso to the effect that they should not be taken to give a privilege to use or imitate any invention already patented, and that all other persons to whom letters patent had been granted, might continue to use the inventions patented. The patentee of the second invention had brought an action against the defendants for an infringement. Two pleas,—not guilty, and that the invention was not new—had been pleaded, and it was now sought to add a plea setting out the proviso, and alleging that the defendant had used the first patented invention.

The COURT refused the rule, on the ground that such a plea would mean that the defendants had used the first invention, and not the second, and therefore amounted to a plea of not guilty.

WADSWORTH v. WEAVER.

Where a party-wall is built partly on the plaintiff's and partly on the defendant's land, and the expenses have been paid by the plaintiff and none by the defendant, the plaintiff cannot maintain an action of trespass against the defendant for letting jambs into the part of the wall within his boundary.

The 16th section of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 84, only vests the wall in the builder of it for the purpose of enabling him to recover his expenses by proceeding under the Act.

This was an action of trespass brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, for letting jambs into a wall which had been built by the plaintiff, as was found by the jury on either side of the boundary line between his own land and the defendant's. It was, in fact, used by the defendant as a wall of his house. The defendant had paid nothing towards the expenses of building it. A verdict had been found for the defendant on the plea of not possessed.

Pearson, now moved, pursuant to leave, for a rule to set aside the verdict and enter it for the plaintiff, on the ground that the 16th section of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 84, vests a party-wall in the builder of it until a proportion of the expenses shall have been paid to him by the adjoining proprietor.

MAULE, J. The vesting clause says the builder of the wall shall have a right to recover his expenses if he proceeds under the Party-wall Act, and gives due notices according to its directions.

JERVIS, C.J.—Yes; for other purposes you are a trespasser. either you are entitled to the wall under the Act, and must proceed under the Act, or you are not entitled to it at all, and can bring no action. Rule refused.

WYNCH v. WILLIAMS.—Byles, Serjt moved, pursuant to leave, for a rule to shew cause why the verdict which had been entered for the plaintiff should not be set aside and a verdict entered for the defendant The action was for money lent, money paid, and on an account stated. The plaintiff had lent money to a Mrs Jones, after receiving a letter from the defendant, containing words to the effect, that if the plaintiff would lend Mrs. J money, defendant dete d to pay all th ey she should get fr hi The question was, whether the letter was a pr pay absolutely, or conditionally upon Mrs Jones not paying, if the lat r, it would be a guarantee, and the declaration should have been in special assumpsit. Rule nisi.

DOE dem. HIGGINS and ANOTHER.—Kempley moved for to shew cause why judgment should not be signed the defendants Rule nisi.

HOLMES v. SPARKES. Action against the sheriff, under 28 Eliz c. 4, for treble damages, to which the sheriff is made liable for taking oney above his poundage. The declaration, which w n debt, also contained a count for money had and re ved, and on an account stated l. 1s were paid into C rt, and there was a plea accordingly to the second count The defendant demurred to the first count, and th on of the Court being against him, judgment was signed for the sum claimed in the declaration, which was 24l odd. Phipson had obtained a rule nisi, that it should be referred to the Master, to ascertain the amount really recovered, on the ground that the sum mentioned in the declaration was a nominal sum, and that the sum to which the plaintiff was entitled under th judgment, was less than 20l, so as to give the plaintiff costs n the lower scale. Willes now shewed cause; and Phipson appeared in support of the rule After a desultory argument, the matter was arranged at the suggestion of the Court.

ALLEN v. MOORE.—Hawkins moved to set aside a nonsuit on payment of the costs of the day. Granted.

ANONYMOUS.—Powell moved for a distringas to compel an appearance. The affidavit was in all respects sufficient, and the Court granted the rule. Rule granted.

DALBY v. EAST INDIA COMPANY ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—Channell, Serjt. mentioned this case, asking the Court when it would be convenient that the arguments should be resumed. It was arranged that the case should be taken on Wednesday, if that day would suit Bramwell, Q.C. Stands for Wednesday.

Tuesday, May 25.

JOHNSON v. LANSLEY.—This cause was tried before Jervis, C.J. at the sittings at Guildhall last Term: verdict for the plaintiff. Phinn now moved, pursuant to leave reserved, for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the verdict should not be entered for the defendant on the third issue. The action was on a bill of exchange by indorsee against indorser. The bill was drawn by defendant upon one William Hunt, accepted by Hunt, and then indorsed by defendant to the plaintiff The defendant by his third plea set out facts which shewed that the bill was given before the passing of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, in consideration of a gambling debt. [JERVIS, C.J.—The plea was proved, with this exception, that it was not shown that the betting transactions took place before the passing of the Gaming Act.] The question for the Court involves that of variance, as well as whether the plea is good. It resolves itself, in fact, to this; whether this was a transaction within the spirit of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. The contract between the parties was illegal, and could not be enforced between them. It is submitted, that the partnership subsisting between Johnson and Hunt was illegal; that the money received was received illegally, and does not afford ground of action; and any security given to insure payment of such money is void. [CRESSWELL, J.—There was no wagering between them: the plaintiff and Hunt jointly traded together, and struck a balance. It is clearly money had and received MAULE, J.—You say that where parties having been engaged in gambling transactions, strike a balance, and a negotiable security is given for that balance, it cannot be enforced?] Yes, we must go so far as that. The only case before the Court since the passing of the Act is Galty v. Field, 9 Q B. 431. We wish to reject the allegation in the plea "before the passing of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109," and to say, "after the passing of that Act." [JERVIS, C.J.—You may take a rule; the other side to be able to meet it by entering judgment non obstante veredicto. Let the rule be framed accordingly to enter verdict for defendant on third plea, the plaintiff, on shewing cause, to be entitled to contend that the verdict, if it were so entered, would be bad. Rule nisi.

WILLIAMS v. BUTLER.—Reed prayed the Court to enlarge a rule nisi to compute, granted on last day of Easter Term [JERVIS, C.J.—How can you enlarge a rule due last Term? You must move for a new rule. Have you any materials for new rule?] This was an action on a bill of exchange for 200l. I moved on last day of Easter Term for rule to compute, but the Master made a mistake in drawing up the rule, and service being effected according to the terms of the rule as unproperly drawn up, it has proved insufficient, I therefore now move for a new rule on terms, as regards service on the defendant, as the Court may impose [JERVIS, C.J.—Have fresh affidavit?] No [JERVIS, C.J.—Then it will not do] I ill mention the case again. Motio withdrawn.

DOE dem. FIELD v MASON.—Wroth moved for a rule alling on plaintiff to shew cause why judgment against al ejector should not be set aside, and the costs taxed in this cause as between party and party Judgment was signed against casual ejector on the 19th of July, 1851, and the only notice we received that it was signed aga t the casual ejector, and not the real defendant, was late the 5th of this month. We want this rule, in der to avoid liability to an action for mesne profits, with which we are threatened. [JERVIS, C.J.—You may have a rule to shew cause why the judgment should not be set aside, unless the plaintiff consents to tax costs as between party and party, the defendant undertaking to pay those costs.] Rule accordingly.

BISHOP v. FARLEY.—Honyman shewed cause against a rule obtained by Channell, to add a plea of set-off to the declaration in this action. The case has been before Maule, J at chambers, who refused to allow the plea to be added. This application was clearly made for delay. Channell, Serjt —This rule was not sought for purposes of delay. The truth is, that the special pleader mistook what our defence is. We wish to add the plea bonâ fide, and we will accept any terms the Court will impose. The sum of money in dispute is large. We are willing to go to trial during present sittings, and will consent for plaintiff to reply in any way he thinks proper. [JERVIS, C.J.—Let the rule be absolute on payment of costs by the defendant, with costs of amendment, and of this application; the present notice of trial to stand.] Rule absolute.

DALBY v EAST INDIA ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—Channell, Serjt. asked the Court to order this case for Thursday, as Bramwell, Q.C. would be engaged to-morrow Ordered for Thursday.

DOE dem. SMITH v. ROE.—Plaintiff in person applied to set aside an order for stay of proceedings in this cause until costs of former trials should be paid. [JERVIS, C.J.—You cannot set aside that order; you ought to have paid the costs of former trials. If you have any remedy at all, it is not in this court.] Rule refused.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by FREDERICK BAILEY, and C. J. B. HERTSLET, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

FLORY v. DENNY.

Mortgage of chattels—Deed—A chattel may be mortgaged without a deed.

This was an action of trover for a moveable windmill, tried at Bury at the last Suffolk Assizes, before Serjt. Adams. The defendant had pleaded—1, not guilty; 2, not possessed. A verdict was returned for the plaintiff for 153*l*. 5s. with liberty to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit. It appeared that one Whitmore having constructed the mill in question for one Baker, an agreement was executed between them, which recited that a note of hand had been given by Baker for payment of 350*l*. payable by half-yearly instalments of 25*l*. and interest on the amount of principal due, and it was agreed that in case default should be made in payment of any one or more of the said instalments, that the said John Whitmore should be at liberty to enter upon the mill, and upon the premises where the said mill was standing, and remove the same and the machinery and appurtenances. In October 1851 Baker owed the defendant 600*l*. for which he gave a bond and warrant of attorney, upon which judgment was entered up on the 8th of December, 1851, and on the 9th a fi. fa. was issued, endorsed to levy 608*l*.; the sheriff's officer entered accordingly and seized the mill and all it contained. On the 10th of December, Whitmore claimed the mill and put a man in possession, but on the 31st of December he withdrew his claim, and the sheriff then executed a bargain and sale of all the property to the defendant, who took possession. On the 20th of January, 1852, the defendant received a notice from the plaintiff in the following terms:—"To Mr. Thomas Denny, of Ipswich, Suffolk. Sir,—Take notice that by bill of sale, dated the 20th of December, 1851, G. B. Baker, of, &c. assigned and conveyed to me all that post windmill in the occupation of the said G. B. Baker, situate, &c. together with, all and singular, the going gear, millstones, &c. for just and lawful consideration, and to secure the repayment of 150*l*. and interest, with authority to me to enter, and take, and carry away and dispose of the said property, but with power and permission to the said G. B. Baker in the meantime to use and occupy the same goods, chattels, and effects, and which bill of sale I am ready to show to you upon any reasonable application, &c. Dated this 20th of January, 1852. Signed, Thomas Smith Flory, &c. and witnessed ——." The defendant refusing to deliver up possession, was, on the 3rd of February, served with the following notice:—

"To Mr. Thomas Denny, &c. By virtue of the security I hold from G. B. Baker, I hereby demand possession of the windmill, &c. situate, &c. late in the occupation of the said G. B. Baker, and by him assigned to me, and which I am informed are now in your possession under a bill of sale thereof, unless you are prepared to pay me within three days from the date hereof the principal sum of 150*l*. and let thereon from the 5th day of August last past; and in default, &c. I hereby give you notice that I shall immediately thereafter adopt legal proceedings against you. Dated 3rd of February, 1852. Yours, &c.

This action was accordingly brought. The plaintiff's claim was founded on the following documents. A promissory note, dated 5th of August, 1851, for 150*l*. and interest, accompanied with a memorandum of agreement in these terms:—

"Memorandum of agreement made this 5th day of August 1851, between the undersigned Thomas Smith Flory, of, &c. and George Baker, of, &c.—Whereas the said G. Baker hath this day borrowed and received of the said T. S. Flory, the sum of 150*l*. for which he has taken of the said G. Baker a promissory note hereunto annexed, and as additional security for that amount he the said George Baker does by these presents agree to assign all his right and interest in a certain windmill standing at Playford, upon land belonging to the Marquis of Bristol, in the occupation of Mr. Manfred Biddell, and by their permission and leave stands there during their pleasure as a chattel upon the said land, and he the said George Baker does hereby promise to execute a regular assignment of the said mill, with its going gears and appurtenants to the said Thomas S. Flory, which shall bear date this 5th day of August, 1851, and shall to all intents and purposes be effective, and a valid security in conjunction with the note of hand before mentioned, for the sum therein mentioned. And this agreement shall be effective as to the true intents of the said parties, until a more regular assignment be executed."

"Witness our hands at Playford, on the day and year above mentioned."

(Signed) "GEO. B. BAKER."
"THOMAS SMITH FLORY."

Witness, "WILLIAM BIDDELL."

And there was further a deed of assignment between the parties, executed in pursuance of the above agreement, and dated 20th of December, 1851 (i. e. after the seizure), whereby Baker bargained, sold, and assigned to the said T. S. Flory, his executors, administrators, and assigns, all that post windmill, &c. and all his right to the interest and property therein, with a proviso that the assignment should be void on payment on demand by Baker to the plaintiff of the 150*l*. with interest in the meantime at 5*l*. per cent.; the assignment then contained a declaration, that after default in payment of the principal or interest, it should be lawful for the said T. S. Flory, his executors, &c. peaceably and quietly to enter into the said mill, and keep possession thereof, and to sell the same, and to receive the moneys, and give valid discharges for the same, and thereout to retain all costs, charges, and expenses, and in the next place to retain thereout the said sum of 150*l*. and the interest remaining unpaid and subject thereto, to account for the surplus to the said G. B. Baker. And it was thereby further declared that, until default in payment of the principal and interest, it should be lawful for the said G. B. Baker to hold, make use of, and possess, the said goods, chattels, &c. thereby assigned, without any manner of hindrance or disturbance by him, the said T. S. Flory, his executors, &c.; and there was, further, a covenant by the plaintiff, that until default in payment of principal or interest, he would not bring, commence, or institute, any action, suit, or process, against the said G. B. Baker, his executors, &c. for recovery of the said debt, or any part thereof, duly executed and attested, receipt for consideration, endorsed, signed, and attested, together with schedule.

O'Malley now moved, in pursuance of leave reserved, and contended that plaintiff never had such a possession, or right of possession, as would entitle him to maintain trover. This was in fact a mere memorandum of pledge, unaccompanied by delivery. It is at most an agreement to assign, and not an assignment. It was clear that the parties never intended that there should be an absolute conveyance. If this instrument be operative otherwise than by way of contract, is it an absolute assignment on a mortgage? If it be a mortgage, with power of entry on default of payment of the note, payable on demand, then there is no demand formed until after the defendant was in possession. If this be a grant, it is not valid without a deed or delivery; and if a mortgage, it was not available till default was made. If it is an assignment, then it is bad for want of the proper stamp. He cited Reeves v. Capper, 5 Bing. 136, N.C.; Bradley v. Copley, 1 C. B. 685; Sharr v. Pilch, 4 Ex. 478; Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad. 340; Hobbs v. Bernard, Smith's L. JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C.B.—We are of opinion that in this case there should be no rule. The ground of the application was stated to be an interest claimed in a chattel which it was contended could not be created without a deed. There certainly was no deed in this case. We are of opinion that there was a mortgage, and that there may well be a mortgage of a chattel without a deed. This was made clear by the case of Reeves v. Capper, 5 Bing. 136, N.C. in which the captain of a ship pledged his chronometer, in the possession of the makers, to the defendants, the owners of the ship, in consideration of their advancing him 50*l*. and of allowing him the use of the instrument during the voyage upon which he was about to depart; after the voyage he placed it at the makers, and there pledged it to the plaintiffs, for whom the makers, being ignorant of the pledge to the defendants, agreed to hold it; the money advanced not having been repaid, it was held that the property in the instrument was in the defendants. The Court took time to consider, and Tindal, C.J. delivered the judgment of the Court. The foundation of the decision in that case appears to have been sec. 365, in Lyttleton. There it was laid down that of chattels, "A man cannot plead in any action that an estate was made in fee, or in fee tayl, or for term of life; condition, if he does not vouch a record of this, or shew a writing under seal proving the same condition (home ne poit pleder en ascun action que estate fuit fait en fee ou en fee taile, ou pur terme de vie sur condition s'il ne voucha un record de ces, ou monstra un escript soull seale provant mesme la condition); for it is common learning that a man by plea shall not defeat any estate of freehold by force of any such condition, unless he sheweth the proof of the condition in writing, &c. unless it be in some special cases. But of chattels real as of a lease for years, or the grants of wards made by guardians of chivalrie and such like, a man may plead that such leases or grants were made upon condition, without shewing any writing of the condition. So in the same manner a man may plead gifts and grants of chattels personals, and of contracts, personals," &c. In respect of which the Commentary of Coke is long as to all the other parts, but on the last part of it, as to chattels real, the only commentary of Coke is, "This is apparent." We may take it, therefore, to be considered clear and beyond doubt. That was acted upon in the case I have cited, and therefore there will be no rule.

Rule refused.

EXCHEQUER.

Saturday, May 22.

WHITTAKER v. WISBEY.

The Court will not listen to objections merely technical, calculated to involve the parties in unnecessary expense.

In this case Lush shewed cause against a rule calling on the defendant to shew cause why the venue should not be changed from Cambridge to Middlesex, and as a preliminary objection he contended that an application of this nature could not be maintained until after issue joined, and it was not stated upon the affidavits upon which this rule had been obtained, that issue had been joined. It could not, in fact, be disputed that issue had been joined.

O'Malley in support.

POLLOCK, C.B.—In these days of legal reform, it may be taken generally, that the Court will set its face against objections calculated to involve the parties in useless and unnecessary expense.

HOLMES v. SIXSMITH.

Evidence—Agreement—Stamp—Fraud.

An agreement was entered into between the plaintiff and another person, containing terms of a horse-race; the defendant was stakeholder of the money bet; one of the horses to run had his legs and face, theretofore white, coloured chesnut, and was otherwise disguised, and had a new name given to it, that the plaintiff should not recognise it to be a horse theretofore well known; the plaintiff lost his bet on the horse-race, and in an action by him against the stakeholder to recover back his money on the ground of the fraud practised:

Held, that he was entitled to do so, and that the agreement was admissible in evidence, as partly shewing the fraud, without being stamped.

This was an action of assumpsit tried before Creswell, J. at Liverpool, and was brought to recover 100*l*. as for money had and received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff. It appeared that a bet had been made between the plaintiff and another person upon a horse-race, the terms of which were specially set out in a written agreement, and the present defendant was the stakeholder; the race was run, and the plaintiff lost his bet, but it seemed that a fraud had been practised upon him, inasmuch as the horse against which he bet was a horse very well known, yet its white legs and white face had been painted or discoloured, and the horse otherwise so disguised, and fresh and differently named, as entirely to mislead and deceive the plaintiff with respect to it; and he contended, therefore, in consequence of that fraud, he was entitled to recover back his money from the stakeholder. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for the sum claimed. A rule nisi had been obtained to set aside that verdict and enter a nonsuit, on the ground that the agreement as to the terms of the race was inadmissible for want of a stamp.

Knowles, Q.C. Edward James, and T. Jones, shewed cause against the rule, and contended that fraud was the ground upon which the plaintiff's case rested to recover back his money from the defendant, as the stakeholder, and that being so, the agreement which described and falsely named this horse was admissible in evidence, not as a legal and proper agreement, but as a link in the chain to shew the fraud, and how it was practised; for that purpose it required no stamp, and was admissible in evidence without. The authorities referred to were Coppock v. Bower, 4 M. & W. 361; Reg. v. Gompertz, 9 Q. B. 824; Smart v. Nokes, 6 M. & Gr. 911; Keeble v. Payne, 8 A. & E. 555; Williams v. Gerry, 10 M. & W. 296; Enthoven v. Hoyle, 16 Jur. 272.

Wilkins, Serjt. and John Henderson, contrà, in support of the rule.—The agreement on its face was good and binding upon both parties; to render it legally and properly admissible in evidence to prove any fact or statement contained therein, it should have been first stamped: why should it be admitted to prove one link in a chain, or received as evidence of fraud, when it was inadmissible legally to shew any agreement at all. The documents in all the cases cited, with only one exception, were upon the face of them nullities, and, therefore, are distinguishable from the present.

POLLOCK, C. B.—We are all of opinion in this case, that the rule should be discharged. I think it really undistinguishable from that of Reg. v. Gompertz, reported in the 9th Q.B. 824; that was an indictment for conspiracy, and in the course of proving a conspiracy to defraud, carried into effect by prevailing upon the prosecutor to accept bills, a warrant of attorney given to him for the purpose of inducing him to accept,—reciting the acceptance, was held,—may be given in evidence though unstamped; that case was rightly decided, and I quite concur in the considered judgment of the Court, as expressed upon that point. Here the ground of impeachment was—fraud; and there was no doubt, as my brother Wilkins admitted, very gross fraud; and where the object of the evidence is not to enforce or set up the instrument as a valid instrument, but merely to shew that it was part of a scheme of fraud, and so to use it for a purpose collateral to the object apparent upon the face of it, it has been frequently held that a written instrument requiring a stamp, but unstamped, is admissible. If the agreement in this case had to be used as an agreement to uphold the terms of it, no doubt it should have been stamped; yet if not used as an agreement, but merely to identify it with the scheme which it was the plaintiff's case to shew was practised upon him, then I think it was properly admissible. In the same way, if it had to be used for any criminal purposes, such as to prove forgery, &c. it would not require any stamp. It was contended that the rule would be a bad one, and that a party ought not to be allowed to give it in evidence for one particular object or purpose, and not another; nor ought the plaintiff to be allowed to take advantage of his own agreement to the fraud; but he does not, what he says in effect is, that the agreement is not worth a farthing—I was cheated, it was a fraud upon me; this case therefore is governed by the Queen v. Gompertz, and the rule must be discharged.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion—what the plaintiff says in substance is, you have paid over the money when you ought not to have done so; there was a gross fraud practised upon me by some sharpers, and you knowing it, have paid over the money to one of those sharpers, and how be does it is this (The learned judge then stated the circumstances.) In the case of Coppock v. Bower, the agreement was illegal on the face of it, and here it is by shewing it to be bad by the fraud that was contrived.

PLATT, B.—The rule in this case ought to be discharged. I do not follow the learned counsel for the defendant, when it is argued that if the agreement be good on its face a stamp should be imposed to render it admissible. Suppose two small bills not stamped were to be obtained from the party giving them by way of cheat, and through some scheme of deception practised upon the party sought to be charged, they may be given in evidence to shew how the fraud was practised on him, although the instruments were unstamped. The learned Baron then referred to the several cases cited on behalf of the plaintiff, and said he was of opinion this agreement was admissible for the purpose of shewing partly by it the whole system of fraud, which would establish the plaintiff's case, and for that object the agreement required no stamp.

MARTIN, B.—I am utterly unable to distinguish this case from that of Reg. v. Gompertz. If that ? did not exist, I own I had not so clear an opinion upon the subject as have been now expressed by the other members of this Court. Rule discharged.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

Ex parte STEVENS, re AN ATTORNEY.

Rule calling upon an attorney to pay over money, and answer the matters of an affidavit.

Prideaux moved for a rule calling upon an attorney of this Court to shew cause why he should not pay over a sum of money and answer the matters of an affidavit. It appeared that one Geo. Grove being in embarrassed circumstances, applied to the attorney in question for his legal assistance. The attorney suggested that the creditors should be prevailed upon to take a composition upon their debts; and, accordingly, he saw several of them, and it was arranged that Grove should assign all his property for the benefit of his creditors, and that they should receive 2s. 6d. in the pound upon their respective debts. A deed of assignment was accordingly executed, and one of the creditors, a Mr. Stevens, was appointed assignee and trustee under it. The same attorney being continued to get in the assets and pay the creditors, he got in several sums of money, but paid none of the creditors; and some of them who had refused to come in under the deed of assignment having pressed the debtor, the attorney advised him to pass through the County Court as an insolvent debtor, and accordingly he prepared his schedule, and therein he represented that he had paid various creditors under the composition deed the sum of 38*l*. 16s. 6d.; also 18s. 3d. for post-office orders and stamps, and had deducted 10*l*. for the expenses of the insolvent in passing through the Court, whereas, in fact, he had not paid any of the creditors, and had received from the insolvent himself 10*l*. for carrying him through the Court.

Rule nisi.

NASH v. THE COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE.

Drawback upon bricks under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 9, s. 2.—Mandamus to Commissioners of Inland Revenue to pay over amount of drawback.

Broom moved for a rule calling upon the Commissioners of Inland Revenue to show cause why a mandamus should not be directed to them, commanding them to pay over to Mr. Nash a sum of money which he claims of them in respect of certain drawbacks on bricks as provided for by the statute 13 & 14 Vict. c. 9, s. 2. It appeared that Mr. Nash had been for many years a maker of bricks, at Great Grimsby, in Lincolnshire, and had entered into contracts with the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, for the supply of bricks for the Great Grimsby Docks. After the passing of the before-mentioned Act, which abolished the duty upon bricks, and provided for a drawback in respect of bricks in the possession of the makers, the excise officers took an account of the bricks on Mr. Nash's premises, upon which such drawback was due, when it was found that a sum of upwards of 700*l*. would be payable to him. This sum, however, was not paid, in consequence of the railway company having preferred a claim to the amount, and after Mr. Nash had in vain negotiated with the company to withdraw their claim, he presented a memorial to the Board of Inland Revenue, but received no satisfactory reply. It was suggested that as the board was wholly indifferent to whom they paid the money so that they paid it to right parties, that notice of this rule should be given also to the railway company, pursuant to the 1 Wm. 1, c. 21, s. 4. Rule nisi.

INSOLVENCY COURT.

Reported by DAVID CATO MACRAE, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Friday, May 21.

(Before Mr. Commissioner LAW.)

Re ROBERT GEORGE CLABBURN.

Jurisdiction of the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors and the County Courts—Re-hearing: Held, that there is no power in the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors to order the re-hearing of a case in the County Court, as there was formerly, to order the re-hearing of a case heard before a commissioner on circuit.

Semble, that the County Court may order a re-hearing.

Mr. Commissioner LAW said—An application is made to the Court, to exercise powers for compelling the insolvent to attend before the County Court of Norwich, in order that that Court may re-hear his case. I need not advert to the merits on which the motion founds itself, as I feel that the statute does not enable me to accede to it. It is made on this ground, that, the Act of 1838 having given us the power to enforce the attendance of an adjudicated insolvent for rehearing before a commissioner on circuit, this power can now be exercised with regard to the County Court; that, on the abolition of circuits, in 1847, it must have been the intention of the Legislature that a re-hearing should still be an attainable thing, and that it can only be attained by this Court empowering the County Court, as formerly a commissioner on circuit, to act under sect. 96 of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. This same question was discussed before the four commissioners on the 25th of June, 1849, in the case of Thomas Game, when we all agreed that this Court had not the power in question. The whole argument of the learned counsel, Mr. Griffits, to-day is, that as this power of compelling attendance for re-hearing has not been expressly transferred to the County Court, such a power must be still in this Court; and he insists that the 96th section of the Insolvent Act has not been altered or repealed. I say that it has been very seriously altered. It gave jurisdiction for this Court to compel a man to appear before a commissioner on circuit. Such jurisdiction falls to the ground when the tribunal of commissioner on circuit is abolished; and the clause in that Act cannot of itself give jurisdiction to make him come before a tribunal which was unknown when that Act passed. The only question must be this—whether there are words in the Jurisdiction Act of 1847 which may be construed as authorising us now to exercise a similar power, in compelling the party's attendance before a County Court. I fully agree that the Legislature can never have intended to make a re-hearing impossible. But it may be that those who were employed to frame an expression of the Legislature's intentions failed to do so; and before I commit a man for disobeying my order, I must find in some statute words which authorise me to make the order. It might have happened, that the late Act 10 & 11 Vict. c. 102, contained some general words enabling this Court to fulfil the views of the legislature in regard of the duties transferred to the County Court. If there were any such general words, giving us power for carrying the new scheme into effect, or the same powers in regard to hearings by the County Court which we had in regard of hearings on circuit or by justices, I would favour the most liberal interpretation of such words. But there are none such. The Act is a disabling Act upon the jurisdiction of this Court in reference to circuits; and, for the future, all that is enabling is in this one provision—that, when a country schedule has been filed, "the Court shall make an order referring the petition for hearing to the County Court, and shall transfer the petition and schedule for hearing accordingly." You cannot upon these words build a jurisdiction to inquire afterwards, whether an adjudication of the County Court has been properly or improperly made. You cannot assume a power to appoint a re-hearing by that Court, as to which we have not even the power to appoint a first hearing; and, if that Court should make its own appointment, there is no construction of language by which this Court can assume the power to make the insolvent go before that Court. It is the legal power that is wanting. This Court might be satisfied on the fitness of sending a case to the County Court for re-hearing. But where do we find the power of compelling the insolvent to appear and submit to it? I think, as before, that there are no words in any Act, special or general, which can be construed so as to give us that power. These observations are conclusive against the present application. There was an ulterior question on which I before expressed an opinion; namely, whether the County Court may itself compel a re-hearing. I continue to think that the reference for hearing, which goes from this Court, may and ought to be construed as including a re-hearing when necessary; and, if this is conceded, we are not at a loss for want of general words under which the County Court may fulfil the purpose of the legislature. Those general words are large in themselves, and they include expressly the power of remanding; a term which, though perhaps conceived in its vulgar sense by the framers of the Act, has no statutable meaning, save as incident to a rehearing. The circuits being abolished, the only Act which this Court does towards the hearing of a country case, is to refer it to the County Court for that purpose. This being once done, and the County Court being so invested with this particular jurisdiction, and with the express power of appointing its sittings for the fulfilment of it, which power neither the itinerant nor the local Court had under the prior system, it is no forced construction to say, that "hearing" must comprehend all hearing which the insolvent law contemplates—adjourned hearing—and, when necessary, re-hearing. The 96th section of the Insolvent Act, which has been appealed to, shews how this must be brought about: and I think the County Court may, under the large words which the new statute uses, claim to bring it about, as well as the discharge on recognisances and other proceedings necessary for hearing, which I pointed out in the matter of game, where this point was spoken of more at large. In those matters, as in this, the new Act has not recapitulated the machinery which that Court must use for accomplishing its duties. There are but one or two dissentients among the County Court Judges on the jurisdiction in recognisances. That jurisdiction is exercised under the general words aided by statutable inference: the County Court Judge is not specially empowered to bring the insolvent before him in that case, more than he is on the occasion of a re-hearing. Thus, while I recognise in the fullest extent that the Legislature cannot have intended to abolish all means of re-hearing, I find in the Act sufficient warranty for thinking that the County Court may appoint and enforce that process; but none for holding that this Court can go beyond the order of reference for hearing.

Equity Courts.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by C. H. KEENE, Esq. of Lincoln's-Inn, Barrister-at-Law.

March 30, 31, and April 7, 15, and 17.

NEWALL v. WILSON.

Patent—Injunction.

Where the plaintiff has been successful in proceedings at law and in equity with other persons, and has had exclusive enjoyment for a considerable period, the Court, although some doubt may exist as to the validity of a patent, will grant an injunction in the first instance, previously to putting the party to establish his right by an action at law.

An allegation not denied, that the defendant's circumstances are such as to render it improbable that he would be able to meet the pecuniary demands to which he would be liable if unsuccessful at law, is an additional reason for granting an injunction under such circumstances.

This was an appeal from the order of the Master of the Rolls of the 24th of March last, refusing to grant an interim injunction to restrain the defendant from infringing the plaintiff's patent, under the following circumstances. It appeared that on the 7th of August, 1840, the plaintiff obtained letters patent for the sale, use, and benefit for fourteen years of certain improvements in wire ropes made of untwisted wire, and in machinery for making such ropes. On the 6th of February, 1841, the plaintiff duly enrolled a specification of the said invention, and by a memorandum of disclaimer of the 4th of September, 1850, duly entered with the Clerk of Patents, and duly enrolled with the said specification, disclaimed a part of the invention, which he was doubtful whether it was new or of practical value. Various attempts were made to infringe the patent, and on the 2nd of August, 1841, the plaintiff filed a bill for an injunction against Andrew Smith, who, before the motion came on to be heard, commenced proceedings by scire facias to repeal the letters patent; but the Attorney-General refused to allow the same to be proceeded with. Negotiations for an arbitration then took place, which ended in nothing; but whilst they were going on, Smith desisted from and did not again resume his infringement.

In February, 1844, the plaintiff filed a bill against Rowland Webster and Son, for an injunction to restrain the infringement of the patent; and on a motion being made on the 22nd of May, 1844, before the Vice-Chancellor of England, it was ordered to stand over, with liberty to the plaintiff to bring an action to try the validity of the patent. The action was commenced in June, 1844, and nine pleas were pleaded by Messrs. Rowland Webster and Son, and at the trial the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff on all issues, and the judge duly certified that the validity of the letters patent came in question on such trial. On the 15th January, 1845, Messrs. Rowland Webster and Son obtained a rule for the plaintiffs to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered in the said action, and also for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Cause was afterwards shewn by the plaintiffs, but before judgment was given, Messrs. Rowland Webster and Son submitted to the verdict, and took out a license to work the said patent, for which they have paid to the plaintiff very considerable sums by way of royalty.

On the 16th December, 1850, the plaintiff filed a bill for an injunction against W. Wilkins and C. Weatherly, and on the motion coming on to be heard before the late Lord Langdale on the 24th of January, 1851, the plaintiff having already commenced an action against W. Wilkins and C. Weatherly, the motion was ordered to stand over, they undertaking to keep the usual accounts. W. Wilkins and C. Weatherly put in nine pleas to the action, but a verdict was found for the plaintiff on all the issues, and no question was reserved for the opinion of the Court; and on the 24th of February, 1851, the motion being renewed before the Master of the Rolls, his lordship granted an injunction, which is still subsisting.

On the 30th of July, 1851, the plaintiff filed a bill against Edward Weatherly, who had succeeded W. Wilkins and C. Weatherly in their business, to restrain him from infringing his patent in manufacturing a wire rope for the submarine telegraph between England and France, and on an ex parte application by the plaintiff on the 6th of August, 1851, the Master of the Rolls granted the injunction, and no application was made to dissolve it.

On the 28th of October, 1851, the plaintiff discovered that the defendant had been infringing his patent. A correspondence thereupon ensued, in which the defendant insisted that plaintiff had infringed a patent, which he had taken out, for a species of wire rope. It was charged in the bill, and sworn to by the affidavit of the plaintiff, and was not met by a denial from the defendant, that the defendant was selling the wire rope at prices greatly below the prices which the plaintiff, who had been at great expense in perfecting the said invention, was obliged to charge for the same, and that the plaintiff would sustain irremediable injury, if the said defendant was permitted to carry on the said manufacture; and that the said defendant was not a person of any capital or property, from whom the plaintiff could recover damages.

On the 9th of January, 1852, the plaintiff filed this bill, and on a motion being made before his Honour the Master of the Rolls, on the 24th March last, his Honour, refusing to grant an injunction, made an order, that upon the plaintiff undertaking to abide by any damages the Court might thereafter think fit to award, the motion was to stand over, the plaintiff to bring an action to try the validity of the patent, and the defendant also to keep an account.

Bethell, Roupell, and Cairns, for the plaintiff, the appellant, insisted, that as the plaintiff had been so often successful both in proceedings at law and in equity, against all persons whom he had discovered infringing his patent, he ought, considering the length of time for which he had enjoyed it, to be held to have established his right to its exclusive use, sufficiently to entitle him to an injunction until the legal right was determined by an action at law. (Hill v. Thompson, 3 Mer. 622; Stevens v. Keating, 2 Phil. 333.) That a patent is a contract with the Crown, of which the public is to have the benefit; and when the public has acquiesced for a considerable time in its validity, it ought to be assumed to be good, so far as to obtain protection by injunction. (Harmer v. Plane, 14 Ves. 130, 132, 133.) The Master of the Rolls did not apprehend or keep in mind this; he thought the matter merely between the parties themselves. The grant of the Crown ought to be preserved inviolate.

Sir Alexander Cockburn and Selwyn, for the defendant, contended, that if the conditions on which the patent was granted did not exist, it might be treated as a nullity by any of the public. The defendant can shew that there is no novelty in the patent, and may treat it accordingly. This he contended was proved by the defendant's affidavits, which shewed that, so far back as 1832, the defendant had made a similar wire rope (a piece of which was produced) for the use of the Haydock Colliery. That so far back as February 1837, there was published in the Mining Review a similar mode of making wire rope, the invention of Mr. Albert, in 1835, in use in the Hartz mountains; and afterwards, previous to the plaintiff taking out his patent, Mr. Albert's invention was explained in many periodicals of a similar character. Another objection to the injunction being granted before the trial was, that the plaintiff had made fraudulent misrepresentations with respect to his patent, because, in his bill and affidavit he stated that he was the true and first inventor within this realm, whereas, in his declaration for his patent, he stated that the said invention was partly communicated to him from a foreigner residing abroad. It was not, therefore, a proper case for the Court to interfere by injunction. (Perry v. Truefitt, 6 Beav. 66; Pidding v. How, 8 Sim. 477.) The onus lies on the plaintiff of shewing the truth of his statement to the Crown. (Hindmarch, 449, and cases there collected.) The affidavit in Smith's case shews that the statement was not made to the Crown per incuriam, for the same statement is made there. [Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—I do not think his statement is unfair.] (Minter v. Wells, 1 Webster, 132, 142.) The defendant himself has never used the plaintiff's machinery for making the wire, nor has the plaintiff ever done so. (Collard v. Allison, 4 Myl. & Cr. 487.) The defendant also insisted that the publication of Albert's invention in this country had not been referred to in the trials at law. (a)

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—The first question is, whether the letters patent, upon which the plaintiff grounds his case, have been shewn to have been bad in law. In my opinion they have not. The utmost extent to which the defendant has succeeded in the case which he has raised as to the validity of the patent, is to shew that some doubt may be entertained. I assume that the defendant has made way so far; beyond that, certainly not. Now the patent is of long standing; it has been a contract with society at large, and has been allowed to exist for many years. Now the question is, whether there has been enjoyment. Beyond all question there has, during a great number of years. The plaintiff's exclusive right has been asserted and submitted to. On the question of the validity he has succeeded at least once, if not more, at law and in equity, in circumstances as to which it is impossible that collusion can be alleged. And if, during the whole time the patent has subsisted in point of fact, the enjoyment and possession cannot be deemed perfectly conclusive, on the result of the evidence, there has been, in my opinion, considering the various proceedings which have taken place, and the conduct of Newall, as well as of various individuals, a sufficiency of enjoyment to bring the case within the principle of Harmer v. Plane and Hill v. Thompson, mentioned on the former occasion. On that occasion the argument was not concluded, and the case was broken off under these circumstances. There has been an imputation cast by the evidence of the plaintiff on the defendant's means to answer any pecuniary demand which may be made on him,—a question which is always disagreeable, and often irrelevant. I cannot, however, but consider that in a question whether an injunction should issue against continuing this alleged infringement of the plaintiff's patent, whether the Court has to consider the balance of inconvenience, either with reference to the parties themselves or society at large, it is a circumstance which cannot altogether be considered irrelevant; but it ought not, I agree, to be lightly touched upon. Now that circumstance, among many others, seems to have led, during the argument of the defendant's counsel, to a proposal from the plaintiff's counsel, that if security were given to secure such sums as might ultimately be awarded to the plaintiff, if successful in the question at law, the injunction would not be pressed for. The offer was accepted, and it was distinctly agreed that security should without limit be given, not on property, but that of two substantial persons. The matter stood over. Now it appears the security cannot be given. I do not rely altogether on that circumstance; but it is not to be disregarded. I am of opinion that the plaintiff undertaking to abide by any order respecting damages which the Court may make in the event of his failure at law, the injunction shall go according to the terms of the notice of motion, which I suppose is substantially according to the language of the prayer of the bill, without prejudice to any question; the order providing for a speedy trial.

(a) At the conclusion of Sir A. Cockburn's argument, it was suggested by the plaintiff's counsel, that if the defendants would enter into an undertaking for immediate trial of the action, and would give unlimited security for such sums as might be awarded to the plaintiff, if successful, the injunction would not be pressed for. The offer was acceded to by the defendant; but on his failing to give the required security, the argument was resumed on a subsequent day by Mr. Selwyn.

Lord Justice LORD CRANWORTH.—I take the same view as my learned Brother. It is always a delicate question as to whether you should grant or withhold an injunction; risk is run by granting the injunction, of doing an injury not capable of compensation; but on the other hand, by not granting the injunction, injury to an indefinite extent may be done to the plaintiff. (His Lordship here stated the proceedings of the plaintiff at law and in equity against other parties, which have been before mentioned.) Now, this is exclusive enjoyment; these proceedings were always perfectly successful; the attempts made to shew that it was not exclusive enjoyment wholly fail; and, looking at the specification, I should be slow to think that the enjoyment was not exclusive, because the plaintiff did not proceed by scire facias to repeal the letters patent. I think the Court must take the long enjoyment as primâ facie evidence of the plaintiff's rights, and that the Court ought to interfere by interlocutory injunction until the trial. Without intimating any opinion what may turn out to be his right on the trial at law, I entirely concur as to the order.

VICE-CHANCELLOR PARKER'S COURT.

Tuesday, June 1.

Ex parte GREENSHIELDS, re THE LIVERPOOL MARINE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Acts—Contributory—Bankrupt.

A. B. a shareholder in an Insurance Company, became bankrupt on October 30, 1848. The company carried on business until October 1, 1849, when they stopped. The affairs of the company being ordered to be wound up, the Master placed A. B.'s name on the list of contributories, as a shareholder liable to contribute to the losses on and subsequent to October 30, 1848. Upon appeal, the Master's order was discharged.

This was a motion on behalf of Mr. John Greenshields, to reverse the decision of Sir George Rose, made on the 27th of March, 1852, whereby J. Greenshields was included in the list of contributories of the above-named company as a shareholder, and liable to contribute to the losses, if any, sustained by the said company, on and subsequent to the 30th of October, 1848, for 100 shares of 100*l.* each. Mr. Greenshields held 100 shares in this company, and he became bankrupt on the 30th of October, 1848. On the 1st of October, 1849, the company stopped business, and in November 1850 an order for winding up its affairs was made. (16 Law T. 189.) The assignees of Greenshields were, on the 20th of November, 1851, settled on the list of contributories as liable quoad the estate up to the date of the fiat, and they subsequently disclaimed. The following is the Master's certificate:—

"I, the Honourable Sir George Rose, the Master charged with the winding up of the company, hereby certify, that on reading the deed of settlement thereof, and the certificate of conformity of John Greenshields, a bankrupt, and the assignees of his estate and effects having disclaimed all interest in the shares held by the said bankrupt, I have not fixed the said bankrupt with any liability in respect of any debt or demand arising or existent at and previously to his bankruptcy, but have left the same to be tendered as a proof against his estate, and that I have held the said John Greenshields to be personally liable, notwithstanding his certificate, for any demand or call that may have been made or may be made subsequent to the fiat against him, and have included him, or shall include him, in any call accordingly - Dated this 27th day of March, 1852."

J. V. Prior, appeared in support of the motion.—By the company's deed of settlement, dated the 5th of March, 1831, power is given in the 32nd clause for the directors to make calls. The 45th clause enables assignees in bankruptcy, among others, to sell shares under certain restrictions; and the 49th clause also alludes to a sale by assignees. The 73rd and 74th clauses contain provisions for the dissolution and winding up of the concern. The bankruptcy, therefore, so far as the bankrupt himself was concerned, dissolved the partnership that had existed between him and the other shareholders in the company, and the deed provided for placing other persons in his stead. (He cited The South Staffordshire Railway Company v. Burnside, 5 Exch. 129; Ex parte Kuper's Assignees, 3 De G. & Sma. 113.)

Selwyn, for the official manager, contended, that as this was a debt which could not be proved under the bankruptcy (5 Exch. 129), Mr. Greenshields' name must be placed on the list. The provisions made by the deed for the sale of the shares, upon a shareholder becoming bankrupt, proved that the shares did not become extinct by the bankruptcy.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, without hearing a reply, said that he thought this was a plain case. It seemed to him that the bankruptcy had dissolved the partnership, even though it were a partnership for a fixed term, and it was not possible to put the case higher than that of a partnership for a fixed term. The partnership here seemed to be for an indefinite term, until dissolved under the provisions of the deed of settlement. However, it was his Honour's opinion that the bankruptcy dissolved it, as regarded the bankrupt, upon that event. The bankrupt's rights were, to have the accounts taken, and the affairs wound up, and the results ascertained, whatever they might be. That resulted either in a proof against his estate, or a right in the assignees to receive something from the partnership. His Honour thought that was not varied by the clause in the deed that the assignees might part with the interests of the bankrupt, if they could find anybody willing to take them, who would thereupon become a shareholder. If that was not done, the concern was dissolved as to the bankrupt's interest in it. This being a proveable debt, he did not see what right there was to incur debts after the bankruptcy. Suppose this were the case of an ordinary partnership, and not affected by the Winding-up Act, the same principle would be applicable. Suppose there were six bankers in partnership, and that one became bankrupt, it would be impossible to say that liabilities could be incurred by the bankrupt in respect of the trade, after his bankruptcy, or that a different account could be taken against him after his bankruptcy from that taken against his assignees up to the bankruptcy. It appeared to his Honour to be totally different from the case in the Ex. Reports, which was not a case of an ordinary partnership at all, but of a company existing under an Act of Parliament, the shares in which were shares in certain property, and of a continuing nature, and the principles of an ordinary partnership did not apply, because the shares remained, and if the assignees did not take them, they must have belonged to the bankrupt, and he must have been liable on his covenants in respect of them. His Honour thought, in this case, that the partnership was dissolved by the bankruptcy, and the bankrupt ceased to have any concern in it, except for the purpose of ascertaining what was coming to him.

Master's order to be discharged, the bankrupt and the official manager to have their costs out of the estate.

Ex parte BURTON, re THE SEA, FIRE, LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Acts—Contributory.

A. B. in July 1849, for the purpose of being an agent, took five shares in a projected company, and signed a power of attorney for E. F. to execute the deed of settlement. In the following month A. B. wrote to request that his connection with the company might be put an end to. The directors released him from the agency, but refused to do so as to the shares, though they were willing to allow him to nominate another person to take them. E. F. executed the deed in October. The company being ordered to be wound up, Held, that A. B. was a contributory.

This was a motion to reverse the decision of Master Tinney placing the name of Mr. Charles Burton on the list of contributories in respect of five shares in the above-named company. In July 1849, Mr. Augustus Collingridge, the secretary and one of the directors of the company, called on Mr. Charles Burton, an auctioneer, at his place of business in Monmouth, and urged him to become an agent for the company. Upon Burton's assenting, Collingridge stated that he must hold at least five shares of 20s. each in the company. Burton eventually signed a printed paper in two places: the first signature being to an appointment of Collingridge to execute the company's deed of settlement in his name; and the second, to a request to be appointed agent. On the 17th of August, 1849, Burton being suspicious of the company, wrote to Collingridge a letter desiring to terminate his connection with the undertaking. On the 19th of August, Burton received the following letter from Collingridge:—

"Sea, Fire, Life Assurance Society,
31, Cornhill,
London, Aug. 18, 1849.

"Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th inst. and the directors accept your resignation to act as agent for the district of Monmouth. I have also to remind you that the amount of 5*l.* on your five shares was due on Saturday, the 11th inst. of which notice was given. I am now requested to inform you that the directors require that you pay the same on or before the 25th inst.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
"AUGUSTUS COLLINGRIDGE,
"Managing Director."

Mr. Burton then wrote as follows:—

"Dixton, Aug. 20, 1849.

"Sir,—In answer to yours of the 18th instant, I trust the directors of the Sea Fire Life Assurance Society will not insist upon making me a proprietor of shares, which I certainly should never have thought of applying for, but for the circumstance of being very much urged to take the agency for district of Monmouth. It was merely to comply with the Society's regulations upon becoming an agent to them that I applied for them, and when I requested the favour of being exonerated from the agency, I meant the shares also; and as the directors have been pleased to excuse me the one, I hope they will also the other.

"I remain, sir, yours respectfully,
"CHARLES BURTON."

To this the following letter was sent in reply by Mr. Collingridge:—

"Sea, Fire, Life Assurance Society,
31, Cornhill, London, Aug. 21, 1849.

"Sir,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, and am requested by the directors to inform you, that they cannot in duty to the shareholders whom they represent, release you from the shares you subscribed for, but to meet your convenience, the directors will allow you to nominate another party to pay upon the shares.

"I remain, sir, your obedient servant,
"AUGUSTUS COLLINGRIDGE,
"Managing Director."

The deed was not executed by Collingridge until October, and Burton never paid any money in respect of the shares.

Malins in support of the motion, contended that the power of attorney was revoked by Burton, and referred to The King v. Waite, 11 Price, 518.

Daniel and Roxburgh for the official manager, cited Ex parte Yelland (ante, p. 30).

Malins in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he thought the Master had come to a right conclusion. Before the 17th of August Burton had done all that was necessary to render him liable as a contributory. He had agreed to take shares by a formal instrument, which contained a power of attorney to Collingridge to execute the deed for him, and upon that shares were allotted to him, but he paid no deposit. Questions might arise whether the power was granted to Collingridge at all to execute the deed, or whether if so granted, it was countermanded. But his Honour thought there was no attempt on the part of Burton to countermand it. In a letter of the 17th of August Burton asked to have the connection put an end to. To this letter he received an answer which discharged him from being an agent, but reminded him that 5*l.* was due on his five shares. The reply to that was, "I trust the directors will not insist," &c. [His Honour read the letter before given.] That was a request to be discharged from the liability under which he had come, and the answer to it was a refusal. In that answer they said, "In order to meet your convenience the directors will allow you to nominate another party to pay upon the shares." Nothing more seemed to have been done. His silence left the matter where it was. It appeared that he was plainly liable.

Motion refused with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KINDERSLEY'S COURT.

Reported by W. H. BENNET, Esq. of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law.

Saturday, May 8.

SOLTAU v. DE HELD.

Practice—Bill pro confesso—Orders of May 1845.

A defendant who had gone out of the jurisdiction, and upon whom an attachment could not be served, was Held, to have absconded for the purpose of the suit; and a day appointed upon which the bill would be taken pro confesso against him, unless he then appeared. Notice on the solicitor to be good service.

Tripp (Malins with him) moved that, under the circumstances after stated, the bill might be taken pro confesso against the defendant. The bill was for an injunction, which had been granted, as to the ringing of the bells of a Roman Catholic chapel at Clapham, to the nuisance of the plaintiff, an adjoining householder.

Bagshawe, for the defendant, said that Mr. De Held was out of the jurisdiction, and was not likely to come back. But he would suggest that the order should be taken this day week, and some gentleman selected to answer on behalf of the defendant.

Tripp declined to accede to this suggestion.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said if parties chose to concur in any arrangement, a suggestion might be entertained; but if not the Court could only proceed upon the strict practice.

Tripp then proceeded to move to take the bill pro confesso, upon the affidavits of Mr. Hart, one of the solicitors of the plaintiff, and Mr. Reeves, the officer of the sheriff, who held the attachment against the defendant for not putting in his answer. The bill was filed on the 20th November, 1851. An appearance was entered for the defendant on the 25th, and a demurrer was put in on the 10th of December, and upon argument the demurrer was overruled and an injunction granted. On the 1st January, 1852, the plaintiff's solicitors being anxious to save expense, and put an end to further litigation, wrote to Messrs. Hart, the defendant's solicitors, requesting to know whether such a proposition met with theirapprobation, the injunction having been granted, and the answer put in, and suggesting the termination of the suit upon payment of the costs. To this letter Messrs. Hart replied, that as to that proposition, they had no answer to give; but wished to ask in their turn, whether it was intended or not to permit the defendant to ring one bell. Mr. Hart then wrote, stating Mr. Soltau's surprise at the cavalier manner in which his communication had been treated, and his only reply was that he intended to abide by the injunction. On the 20th of January, notice was given to Messrs. Hart, to put in the answer, and they obtained a month's time from the Master, Sir George Rose, and upon a representation that the defendant was abroad, obtained a further month's time, but on the understanding that no further time should be allowed. On the 13th March no answer having been put in, Mr. Hart again wrote and received an answer, that the defendant was still abroad, and it was desired to communicate with him. The attachment was then issued, but the defendant was not to be found, being absent in Belgium, or some place out of the jurisdiction. The affidavit of Mr. Reeve, the assistant officer of the sheriff, stated that he had attended twice at the defendant's residence, at Clapham, on the 25th of March and 14th April, and was told that the defendant was not there, and would not return for five or six weeks, and they could not tell when he would return. This application was made under the 77th and 78th order of May, 1845. The notice of motion was dated the 23rd of April, 1852, and fourteen clear days had therefore elapsed. It was, therefore, now asked, according to the practice, to take the order now, for some day to be fixed in the next term, when the defendant could appear if he wished, and was not then taken by surprise, and the order being served upon the solicitor, if the defendant was sincere, he might come forward. He cited Harrison v. Stewardson, 2 Hare, 533.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that no doubt some day must be appointed for taking the bill pro confesso; and he appointed the last cause day in Trinity Term, to take the bill pro confesso; and a copy of this order served upon the defendant.

Order accordingly.

THE ROCHDALE CANAL COMPANY v. RADCLIFFE.

Canal — Abstraction of water — Prescription — Pleading.

An Act of Parliament empowered a company to make and maintain a canal, and provided that the owners of land within twenty yards might draw from the canal sufficient quantities of water, for the sole purpose of condensing the steam used for working any engine. The public had the right of using the canal on payment of certain tolls, and the waste water of the canal was directed to be conveyed into the canal of the Duke of Bridgewater.

In an action by the company against the owner of lands, and a mill and steam-engine, within twenty yards of the canal, for drawing more water than sufficient to condense the steam, the defendant pleaded a right for twenty years before suit in the occupiers of his lands, mill, and steam-engine, of drawing water from the canal for other and different purposes than of condensing the steam, to wit, for supplying the boilers, generating steam, heating the mill, cleansing the boilers, and supplying a cistern on the roof of an engine-house. The replication traversed the right alleged in the plea.

The evidence was, that the defendant had in fact two mills, one built in 1823, the other in 1829, each having its separate engine, but the mills were connected at one point, and the jury found that they constituted but one mill. There was no proof of any cistern on the roof of an engine. In respect of the mill built in 1823, there had been an enjoyment for twenty years of the water, as of right, for the purposes mentioned in the plea, but the enjoyment in respect of the mill built in 1829, was under twenty years at the time of action brought:

Held, that the issue on the plea was distributive, and that the defendant was entitled to have the verdict entered for him on the issue, except as to so much as related to the supply of the cistern on the roof of the engine-house:

Held also, that the plaintiff should have new assigned as to the supply of the mill built in 1829.

Held also, that the plea was bad in substance, and that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment, non obstante veredicto, on the ground that there could be no easement gained under the circumstances, the Canal Company not being owners of the water in the canal, the public having the right of navigation, and the surplus water belonging to the Duke of Bridgewater.

Case, for abstracting water from the plaintiff's canal.

The 2nd count of the declaration stated, that after the making of the 31 Geo. 3, c. lxxviii. and at the time, when, &c. the plaintiffs were possessed of the said canal and cut, consisting of and being land covered with water; and that the defendant was possessed of certain lands within the distance of twenty yards from the said cut, and of a mill and steam-engine thereon, for the purpose of working the said mill. That the defendant wrongfully drew, abstracted, and diverted from the said cut, by means of divers drains and sluices, divers large quantities of water, the same being more than sufficient to supply the said engine with cold water, for the purpose of condensing the steam used for working the said engine; and wrongfully used and applied divers large quantities of water, drawn as aforesaid from the said cut, to other and different purposes and uses than the condensing the steam used for working the said engine.

The 4th plea.—To the 2nd count. That the defendant was the occupier of four acres of land in Richmond-street, abutting eastwardly on the said cut, and the occupier of a mill upon the said lands, and of a steam-engine and the said mill, the said lands, mill, and steam-engine being the lands, mill, and steam-engine in the 2nd count mentioned; that the said cut had been, and was for fifty years next before this suit, connected with the said lands, mill, and steam-engine, by means of the drains and sluices in the 2nd count mentioned. The plea then alleged a user as of right for twenty years before suit, ... the defendant, and the occupiers for the time being of the said lands, mill, and steam-engine, of drawing from time to time out of the said cut, through and by means of the said sluices and drains, and of using and applying for and to other and different purposes and uses than of condensing the steam used for working the said engine, to wit, for supplying the boilers of the said engine with water, and of generating steam for working the said engine, and of heating the said mill, and of cleansing the said boilers, and of supplying with water a cistern on the roof of an engine-house on the said lands, such quantities of water as were from time to time necessary and required by the said occupiers for the time being of the said lands, mill, and steam-engine. The plea concluded with an averment that the defendant took the water in the 2nd count mentioned in the exercise of the right in the plea mentioned.

Issue thereon.

At the trial before Williams, J. at the Liverpool Summer Assizes, 1851, it was proved that the defendant had two mills on the lands, the Old Back Mill, abutting eastwardly on the canal, and the New Front Mill, abutting westwardly on Richard-street; that they were connected at one end next to Richard-street, and each mill had a separate engine. The old mill was erected in 1823, and the engine supplied with water from the canal by a drain and pipes, for the purposes mentioned in the plea. The new mill was erected in 1829, and at the time of action brought there had only been about nineteen and a half years' user of the water of the canal for the supply of its engine—the supply being obtained by a prolongation of the drain made for supplying the engine of the old mill. There was no evidence of any cistern on the roof, or top of any engine-house. The jury found that the whole of the works constituted one mill, and that the user of the water had been as of right. But the whole plea not being proved, the user for the two mills not having been for twenty years, and there being no cistern on the roof or top of any engine-house, the verdict, under the direction of the learned judge, was entered for the plaintiffs on this issue.

A rule nisi having been obtained to set aside the verdict, and enter it for the defendant on this issue.

Saturday, April 17.—Knowles, Tomlinson, and Cowling shewed cause, and W. H. Watson, Willes, and Spinks supported the rule.

The points argued were, whether the verdict could be entered distributively under the Reg. Gen. 4, 5, 6, Hil. 4 W. 4.; and whether the plaintiffs ought not to have new assigned in respect of that portion of the mill, consisting of the New Front Mill, in which there had been the use of the water for less than twenty years.

JUDGMENT.

Tuesday, April 20.—Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—We are of opinion in this case, that on the fourth plea to the second count the verdict ought to be entered for the defendant, excepting so far as the plea alleges that the water taken from the canal, without the authority of the Act of Parliament, was used for the purpose of supplying with water the cistern on the roof of the engine-house. The jury have found that the water as actually used was used as of right, but was used for all the purposes alleged in the plea, except for the cistern, and if the use had extended to this we should have thought the verdict on the fourth plea ought to have been entered generally for the defendant, although the defendant was in the occupation of what was called the new mill, which had not been erected twenty years before the cause of action commenced, and he had used the water in an engine erected there. We think that the defendant sufficiently proves the allegation in his plea of the possession of the mill and the steam-engine, mentioned in the second count, and that he sufficiently proves the allegation of the use of the water for the first four purposes, by his having used it for those purposes in the old mill for more than twenty years. If the plaintiffs meant to rely on the unlawful use of the water for the engine erected within twenty years, they ought to have new assigned. On the part of the plaintiffs it is further contended that, as the defendant failed to prove the use of the water for the purpose of the cistern, the verdict ought to be entered against the defendant on the whole plea, because it is said the plea is not proved; but we think, according to the authorities which have been referred to, the issue upon the fourth plea may be applied distributively to the alleged purposes for which the water was used during the period of twenty years, and that part of those purposes being proved, pro tanto the verdict must be entered for the defendant; but, as he admitted that some of the water was taken by him for another purpose than that which he has proved, the verdict will stand for the plaintiffs with nominal damages. This will still leave the question open, whether the plea be good which alleges the use of the water beyond the purposes mentioned in the declaration. Mr. Knowles may take a rule to shew cause why there should not be judgment non obstante veredicto.

Monday, May 3.—W. H. Watson, Willes, and Spinks, shewed cause, and Knowles (Tomlinson and Cowling with him) supported the rule nisi, to enter up judgment on this issue for the plaintiff, non obstante veredicto.

The following sections of the Acts relating to the Rochdale Canal Company were cited and relied upon in the argument.

The 31 Geo. 3, c. lxxviii (an Act for making a Canal from the Calder Navigation to join the Duke of Bridgewater's Canal in Manchester) creates the corporation of the company of proprietors of the Rochdale canal.

Sec. 104 gives all persons liberty with boats, barges, and other vessels to use the canal on payment of the rates granted by the Act, and subject to the regulations of the company.

Sec. 113 gives the owners of lands, within twenty yards from the canal, the right to make a communication between the water therein and any steam-engine, by means of pipes, and constructed to prevent leakage or waste of water, and to draw from the canal sufficient water to supply the engine with cold water, for the sole purpose of condensing the steam for working such engine.

Then the 16 Geo. 3, c. xx (an Act relating to the Rochdale Canal Company), by sec. 23, gives the company the right to enter any building containing any steam-engine in order to examine the pipe used for conveying the water from the canal, and see that the water is not applied to any other purpose than that of condensing the steam of any such engine.

The 39 and 40 Geo. 3, c. 36 (an Act relating to the Rochdale Canal), by sec. 10, enacts that the waste water at the junction of the Rochdale and Ashton Canals shall be discharged into the basin of the Rochdale Canal, and the waste water of both canals shall be conveyed into the Duke of Bridgewater's canal.

M. & R. 211; James v. Plant, 4 A. & E. 749; Manning v. Wasdale, 5 A. & E. 758; Tebbutt v. Selby, 6 A. & E. 786; Grand Surrey Canal Company v. Hall, 1 M. & G. 392; Mayor v. Chadwick, 11 A. & E. 571.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that our judgment ought to be for the plaintiffs. By these Acts of Parliament, this company was established for making a canal for the public benefit, and when the canal was made, all her Majesty's subjects had the right of using the canal on payment of certain tolls. So that in fact the canal really became, as it were, a turnpike-road, and could only be kept in repair by having a necessary quantity of water, and any water beyond that quantity, was appropriated by the Acts to the Duke of Bridgewater. By sec. 113 of 31 Geo. 3, c. lxxviii, there is a special privilege given to the owners of lands within twenty yards from the canal, to take sufficient quantities of water from the canal to supply engines with cold water for the sole purpose of condensing the steam used for working them. And this power is qualified so that there shall be no obstruction to the navigation of the canal. The present action is brought by the company expressly on the ground that the Act of Parliament has been violated by the defendant. The declaration recites the passing of the Act of Parliament, and alleges that the defendant abstracted the water of the canal for other purposes than those of condensing the steam. The 4th plea justifies the taking in respect of a prescriptive right in the occupiers of the defendant's land. So that this plea is to be a justification for violating the Act of Parliament. The right is claimed to ta for supplying the engines, for generating steam, for heating the mill, and for cleansing the boilers, such quantities of water as were from time to time necessary. If this right had been confined to the surplus water of the canal, it would not have been a lawful grant, but it is not so confined. What effect might such a right produce on the canal? Why, it might stop the navigation altogether. It is utterly impossible to contend that there could be such a power in the company to make such a grant, for the water is not their property. If they had executed such a grant, it would have been illegal and void, and their successors would not have been bound by it. It could not have been pleaded in bar to the action, and if so, the supposed right of easement here pleaded, on the presumption of a grant, can as little be pleaded.

COLERIDGE, J.—The foundation of this plea must be a supposed grant from the company to be inferred from the defendant's user; but if these acts of user never could have been legal, the grant cannot be inferred. The company are not owners of the water of the canal, but limited trustees, for the public in the first place, of all the water necessary for the navigation of the canal, and then for the adjoining millowners for certain special u s. They can make no grant to the detriment of the public right, and if there is any surplus water, that belongs to the Duke of Bridgewater.

ERLE, J.—The defendant claims by this plea to impose a servitude on the company by reason of twenty years' user of the water of the canal, for the purposes pleaded. But there can be no easement unless the company are the owners of the water of the canal. They had only a right to the flow of the water of the canal for the purpose of navigation. Any grant of the water by the company would have been contrary to their duty and void, and twenty years' user of the water, does not establish the right here claimed.

Rule absolute to enter the verdict for the plaintiff, non obstante veredicto.

REG. v. AVERY.

Municipal corporation—Filling up voting-papers—5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 32.

A voter at a municipal election for town councillors may sign his voting-paper with the initials of his Christian names, and need not write his Christian names at full length.

A street in a parish P. was known as well by the name of The Street as of P. Street:

Held, a sufficient statement of the situation of the property in respect of which the burgess voted as in "The Street."

Quo warranto against the defendant, calling on him to shew by what authority he claimed to be a town councillor of the borough of Barnstaple.

The case was tried at the last Devon Assizes before Erle, J. and it appeared that there were persons who had voted for the defendant, and whose names were put on the voting-papers with initials, instead of full Christian names, as follows:—"W. Davies," "J. S. Clay," "A. B. Ambrose," and "T. Pigler." This form of writing the names was contended to be contrary to the provisions of the Municipal Corporation Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 32). There was another objection to the form in which the residences of some of the voters were described, the Act requiring "the name of the street in which the property is situated," to be upon the voting-paper. The verdict at the trial was taken for the defendant.

A rule nisi was on a former day (April 21) obtained to set aside that verdict, and enter it for the Crown, on the ground that the votes objected to for the above reasons being struck off, the defendant was not duly elected.

Crowder and Taprell shewed cause against the rule, and supported the defendant's right to the office. They contended that the use of initials only did not vitiate the votes. The 32nd section of the Act enacts, "That every burgess entitled to vote may do so by delivering a voting paper containing the Christian names and surnames of the persons for whom he votes, such paper being signed with the name of the burgess voting, and the name of the street in which his property is situate." Where the Legislature intended that the Christian name should be inserted at full length, it enacted in express terms that such should be the case. Here there was no enactment of that sort. It is true that the Act, sec. 15, directs the burgess lists to be made out according to the form in Schedule D, and that in the schedule there are separate columns for the names, with the words "at full length;" but that is merely a directory provision, and cannot affect the 32nd section. There are similar enactments in the Reform Act and in the Registration Act, 6 Vict. c. 18; but it had never yet been held that the insertion of the initials of the voter's name invalidated his right to vote. On the contrary, the provision that if the name was wholly omitted it should form a valid objection, shewed, by implication, that the use of initials was not a conclusive objection. There were several statutes which furnished analogies on this subject. Thus, in the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 14, relating to the publishing of newspapers, the name of the publisher at full length is expressly required. Then, Uniformity of Process Act, 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 39, 12, requires the name of every writ to be indorsed with the name and place of abode of the attorney issuing it; but in several cases it has been held that the name of the firm was sufficient. But if the use of the initial was not absolutely correct it was only an imperfect description; and sec. 142 (the interpretation clause) enacts, that no misnomer or inaccurate description of any person in any voting-paper shall hinder the full operation of this Act, provided the description be such as to be commonly understood. The description is sufficient if the party is known by it. The Hartlepool case established that proposition. It did so here. It was the form in which the voters ordinarily described themselves. Then, when they came up to vote they might be asked the questions as to their identity mentioned in sec. 34. There could, therefore, be no deception practised, and it that alone against which the Legislature desired to guard.

The Attorney-General, Slade, and M. Smith for the relator.—It is contended that the ordinary signature of the parties was sufficient. But that was not so. The voting list in this very borough shewed the confusion and uncertainty that would follow from such a practice. There are on that list two names, one of William and the other of Walter Fry, both of Lower Maudley-street. Now, suppose that each had described himself as "W. Fry, of Lower Maudley-street," how could one be distinguished from the other? The Municipal Corporation Act required the burgess list to be made up according to the form in the schedule, and the schedule contained the form with the description of the "Christian and surname at full length." The Hartlepool case was not an authority for the other side, for there the name was put on the list by the mayor, on the insufficiency of the claim being explained, but no such explanation could be given at the election. The list presented there ought to be correct; the more so as no inquiry but that in which was involved the two questions mentioned in the Act could be made, and on those questions would not give the least information on the subject. The 32nd section said that the paper should be signed by the name of the party voting. That must mean the Christian and surname of such party, and though a contraction of the Christian name might be sufficient, no one could say that an initial letter was a Christian name, for there was no letter capable of being mentioned that might not stand for half-a-dozen different names. If so, then uncertainty was introduced into the description of the voter, and of course personation and all other offences of a like kind could easily follow.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I must confess that I have not been able from the first to feel any doubt upon this question. The case depends upon the 32nd section of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, which directs the mode in which voting-papers shall be filled up. Among other directions is this one:—"That such papers shall be previously signed with the name of the burgess voting." And what we have to determine is, whether voting-papers, containing surnames in full, but Christian names in initials, by which the persons are well known at Barnstaple, are to be considered as papers signed with the names of the burgesses. We must give to this Act of Parliament the construction which it is natural to put on the words, and the grammatical and the common sense to be ascribed to the words thus employed. The paper is to be signed by the man or some one for him. What is the meaning to be put on such an order? It is that he shall sign the paper in the ordinary manner in which he signs his name. We must take notice of that. Now, we know that in ordinary life names are often signed with initials only for Christian names and with surnames written at full length. A will signed in this way is always allowed to be well signed by the testator. All deeds so executed are well executed, and the rights of families are thus absolutely bound. It is allowed, under the Statutes of Frauds, that the name of the agent will be sufficiently inserted to satisfy the provisions of that statute, if the paper is signed with the Christian name in initials. In all these cases the practice is well known, and it was well known to the Legislature when it passed this Act. For, in some particular instances, the Legislature has required that the names shall be written at full length, and when that is declared to be necessary, the requisition must be complied with. But here nothing of the sort is required. But the Act says, that the paper shall contain the Christian names and surname of the party for whom the voter votes, but it does not make any reference to a model of the form in which the writing of the name shall take place. Various cases have been brought before us, by Mr. Taprell, shewing that it is not always necessary to write the Christian name at full length, with respect to process; notices to justices need not be signed at full length, and there are various other cases in which it is sufficient if the name is written in the usual manner. The Attorney-General properly allowed that a contraction of the Christian name would in some cases be sufficient. Then comes the Hartlepool case, which seems to me to be not only in point with the present, but goes the full length of it. The 15th and 17th sections set out the form. Two questions may be put to the voter, viz.: Are you the person whose name is signed A. B. to this voting-paper? and, Are you the person whose name appears as A. B. on the burgess-roll now in force in this borough? And if the person answered falsely, he would be liable to prosecution and punishment for perjury. It seems to me, therefore, that with papers thus prepared, the election may take place with perfect propriety and safety. Great confusion would arise if it were otherwise. I am therefore of opinion that this rule must be discharged.

COLERIDGE, ERLE, and CROMPTON, JJ. concurred.

Another set of objections was then raised to four votes, on the ground that the property in respect of which the voter voted was not properly described. The property was described as in The Street thus:—

Parish.	Name of Voter.	Property.	Street, Lane, &c.
	Cooksley.	House.	The Street.

There is only one main street in the parish of Pilton, which was called as well by the name of "The Street," as "Pilton-street." There were other small streets and lanes. The voters' properties were in the main street.

Slade and M. Smith objected that the description of "The Street" might equally apply to the small streets as well as the main one.

CAMPBELL, C.J.—This objection is unarguable. According to the evidence, the description of the street has been strictly complied with, being that by which it is known.

Judgment for the defendants.

Friday, May 28.

Ex parte DEATH, jure THE VICE-CHANCELLOR, &c. OF CAMBRIDGE.

Prohibition—University decree—Discommuning.

In 1847, the vice-chancellor and heads of houses of Cambridge University made a regulation that tradesmen with whom under-graduates contracted a debt exceeding 5l. should give notice every quarter to the tutor of the person so indebted, on pain of being discommuned. D. a tradesman, having violated this regulation, was summoned to appear before the vice-chancellor and heads of houses, and presented himself with his attorney; but the vice-chancellor refused to allow the attorney to appear; upon which D. withdrew, but afterwards received a notice that he would be heard alone. At the day appointed he failed to appear, and the vice-chancellor and heads of houses made an order, forbidding under-graduates to deal with D. until a stated time:

Held, that they had a right to make such order for the discipline of the university, and that the proceedings against D. were not in the nature of judicial proceedings.

This was an application for a prohibition to the vice-chancellor and heads of houses of the University of Cambridge, to prohibit them from enforcing an order of the 24th of May instant against Mr. Death.

On the 11th February, 1847, the vice-chancellor and heads of houses of the university made the following regulation:—

"That any tradesman or dealer with whom any person in statu pupillari shall contract a debt exceeding 5l. shall be required to send notice of the amount of the sum at the end of every quarter to the college tutor of the person so indebted, on pain of being punished by being discommuned or otherwise, as the vice-chancellor and heads of houses shall think fit."

It appeared that Mr. Death, a livery-stable keeper in Cambridge, being a creditor of an under-graduate for a debt exceeding 5l. had received a summons to attend before the vice-chancellor and heads of houses for an alleged violation of the above regulation. On the day appointed he presented himself with his legal adviser, but the vice-chancellor refused to allow his legal adviser to appear, upon which Mr. Death withdrew. He afterwards received a notice that the vice-chancellor and the heads of houses would hear Mr. Death alone on the 24th of May instant, at the lodge of King's College. On the 24th of May, Mr. Death not appearing, an order or decree was made, forbidding the under-graduates to deal with Mr. Death from the date thereof until the end of next Term (i. e. 16th of December, 1852). Mr. Death alleged that his losses in consequence of this order would amount to 450l.

W. N. Watson, in support of the application, contended, first, that the vice-chancellor and heads of houses had been acting judicially, as appeared by the issuing of the summons, and the tribunal before which Mr. Death was summoned to appear, and that Mr. Death was entitled to appear with the assistance of his solicitor. Secondly, that the regulation of the 11th of February, 1847, was illegal, being made by the vice-chancellor and heads of houses, instead of the senate of the university, which alone had authority to make laws. (Rex v. The Chancellor, &c. of Cambridge, 6 T. R. 89; Ex parte Robert Speakman, 1 Q.B. 965, note a.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—I am of opinion that to grant a prohibition in this case would be to interfere most improperly with the discipline of the university. I most highly approve of the regulation of Feb. 11, 1847, and I have no doubt of the power of the vice-chancellor and the heads of houses to make such regulation, and should be sorry that there was any obstacle to its being enforced. There has been no judicial proceeding here on the part of the vice-chancellor and the heads of houses; they merely lay down a necessary and wholesome regulation that the under-graduates shall not deal with tradesmen and contract debts exceeding 5l. without such tradesman giving notice every quarter to the tutor to whose care such under-graduate is entrusted. And when a tradesman is to be discommuned, it is merely that the under-graduates are cautioned not to deal with such tradesman for having violated this regulation. We take notice of the vice-chancellor's court, but here there was no proceeding in that court. Though there was a summons from the vice-chancellor, it was not from him in his court; it was but a notice to give the applicant the opportunity of saying whether the information the vice-chancellor had received was true or not. To say that a tradesman who was so summoned before such a domestic forum, was at liberty to appear by counsel and attorney, was quite untenable. Then, as to the decree itself, as there has been nothing more done than to discommune the applicant, that is, to caution the under-graduates not to deal with the party, what has been done is within the authority of the vice-chancellor and heads of houses.

COLERIDGE, J.—I cannot see anything like an attempt to encroach on judicial power, which does not exist. The mode in which discommuning operates is by telling the young men not to deal with a particular tradesman. That, when stated by itself, is clearly within the competency of the governing body of a place of education. But it is said, that there has been a judicial proceeding in this case because there has been a summons. We must look to the substance of the proceeding, and it is nothing more than an attempt to enforce a sumptuary regulation with the desire not to proceed so as to injure any one who may have been unjustly informed against. The summons being tantamount to this, "Come, if you please, and explain, before we enforce the regulation against you." If the party has a right to attend, with legal assistance, why has not the pupil? And then, what will become of the discipline of the university?

ERLE, J. concurred.

CROMPTON, J.—If I thought the regulation was as wrong, as I think it wise and useful, I should say that we ought not in this case to interfere. The heads of houses have a right to say that the under-graduates shall not deal with persons with whom they think they ought not to deal. There was no occasion to send a summons at all to the party, but the sending of it does not turn this into a judicial proceeding. Rule refused.

REG. v. STREET.

Poor-law auditor—Disallowance of overseers' accounts—Litigation as to rates—Duty of summoning vestry.

It is not in itself a valid reason for disallowing in overseers' accounts items of expense incurred in litigation with a railway company, as to the amount at which the company was to be assessed to the poor-rates, that the overseers did not, before incurring those expenses, summon a vestry to consider the propriety of incurring them.

A rule had been obtained, calling upon the auditor of a poor-law union, comprising the parish of Ringwood, in Hampshire, to shew cause why his disallowance of 73l. in the overseers' accounts of the year 1848, which had been removed by certiorari, should not be quashed. The item of 73l. formed part of the costs of defending an appeal by a railway company against a poor-rate; and the reasons assigned by the auditor for disallowing it were two. First, that the overseers ought, prior to incurring any of those expenses to have summoned a vestry, and taken the opinion of the inhabitants as to the propriety of doing so. Secondly, that after the Court of Quarter Sessions had reduced the assessment, subject to a case for the Court of Q. B. the overseers ought, as soon as practicable, to have summoned a vestry, and taken the opinion of the inhabitants upon the propriety of proceeding with the case reserved, and as to the amount at which the company should be assessed.

By the affidavits it appeared that in July 1847, before the overseers whose accounts formed the subject of the present rule came into office, a vestry meeting was held for the purpose of considering the dispute which had then arisen between the railway company and the parish; and at that vestry meeting it was resolved to assess the company at 416l. per mile, making a sum of 2,708l. In December of the same year, application was made by the then overseers to the Poor-law Board for information as to the mode in which they should assess the company; but the Poor-law Board declined to give any information, referring the parish officers to the proper tribunal for deciding those questions. On the 24th of the same month another vestry was summoned; and at that meeting it was resolved, that unless the company would consent to be assessed at 2,000l. the overseers should take proceedings to enforce a rate at that amount. The rates in question made in 1848 by the succeeding officers, were accordingly made upon that amount; and against these rates the company appealed. The Quarter Sessions reduced the rateable value from 2,000l. to 300l. subject to a case for the opinion of the Court of Q. B.; but that case was not proceeded with, it being ultimately agreed between the parties that the rate should stand at 450l. rateable value. After the audit, which was concluded in June 1849, a vestry meeting was called, and the expenses sanctioned.

Collier now shewed cause against the rule to quash the disallowance; and contended that the auditor was right in holding that, after notice of appeal had been given by the company, the overseers ought to have summoned a vestry before they actually entered upon an expensive litigation, the result of which shewed them to have been egregiously wrong in the amount of the assessment. So, afterwards, they ought not to have abandoned the case without taking the opinion of the inhabitants. (R. v. Gwyer, 2 Ad. & Ell. 216; R. v. Fouch, 2 Q.B. 308; R. v. The Great Western Railway Company, 13 Q. B. 327; 18 L. J. 145, M.C.)

Poulden, contrà, was not called upon.

COLERIDGE, J. (a)—This question must be determined upon the reasons assigned by the auditor; and the first reason assigned is, that prior to incurring any of those costs, the overseers ought to have called a vestry meeting. He therefore gives no opinion, that what the overseers did was hastily or unadvisedly done; but he raises the simple question whether in all cases the parish officers must go to the vestry to sanction them in defending a rate appeal; and whether if they do not, however prudently they may have acted, they must pay out of their own pockets any costs which can not be obtained from the other side. Now no case has gone that length; and it is obvious that many circumstances may exist to render such a course unnecessary. [His Lordship then stated the facts of this case.] Under these circumstances there is every reason to suppose, that the convening of a vestry would have been a more formal proceeding; and I think, therefore, that the first ground of disallowance entirely fails. As to the second also, it seems to me that there is no ground for complaining of the conduct of the parish officers. They do not blindly continue the litigation after the case has been reserved; but they see what arrangement can be made; and the rate is then raised from 300l. to 450l. I do not think that it can under these circumstances be said that there was any wanton abandonment of the rate, or any necessity for again appealing to the vestry. It is not pretended that they acted hastily, perversely, or malâ fide. The cases cited are quite distinguishable. R. v. Gwyer was upon a different Act of Parliament; and in R. v. The Great Western Railway, this Court thought that there was actual misconduct.

CROMPTON, J. concurred. Rule absolute.

REG. v. THE OVERSEERS OF SALFORD.

Excise—License for sale of beer—Certificate of overseer—Certiorari.

A writ of certiorari will not lie to remove a license for the sale of beer, granted by a collector or supervisor of excise, although granted without requiring production of the overseers' certificate according to section 2 of stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61.

A rule had been obtained calling upon the Board of Inland Revenue to shew cause why a license for the sale of beer, granted by a supervisor or collector of excise, to one Hague, at Salford, should not be quashed, on the ground that it had been granted without requiring production of the overseers' certificate according to section 2 of stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. The license had been brought up by certiorari.

Sir F. Thesiger (Att.-Gen.), (with him Sir F. Kelly (Sol.-Gen.), Watson, and Welsby) now shewed cause; and having objected that the writ of certiorari would not lie in this case, was stopped upon that point.

Pashley and Hall, contrà. The overseers have a discretion to grant or refuse the certificate (Reg. v. Kensington, 12 Q. B. 564); and if the excise officers assume to grant the license without requiring that certificate, they usurp the discretion of the overseers. [CROMPTON, J.—You must shew that the granting of the license is a judicial act.] It is as much so as the making of a county rate, or an order of sessions respecting fees (Reg. v. Coles, 8 Q.B. Rep. 75); or examinations, recognisances, and other instruments which are removable by certiorari. If there is any discretion to exercise, there is a judicial act to be done, although the jurisdiction may not be contentious. (R. v. Arkwright, 12 Q. B. Rep. 960.) The Board of Inland Revenue have large judicial powers; and they directed the granting of this license.

COLERIDGE, J.—We are not called upon to determine the extent of the authority given to the overseers. They may have a judicial authority, which is not subjected to revision by the Board of Excise, and I should certainly be sorry to say anything that might tend to the supposition that I was inclined to hold lightly the propriety of some local control in this matter; but the question is, whether this writ of certiorari was properly issued; whether the license is a judicial act, which can properly be brought into this Court by certiorari; and I think it clearly is not. The document itself is neither more nor less strong by reason of anything which the Board of Inland Revenue may have done; because there is an original authority in the collector and supervisor of excise to grant such a license. It is natural that he should apply for and receive instructions in such a case from the board; but the document still proceeds from him. Does he then exercise a judicial authority in granting the license? The license itself may, for want of the performance of a condition precedent, be no license at all; but if so, the party who assumes to act under it may be proceeded against according to the statute, and in that way the question may, after all, come before this Court; about which at present I say nothing. But if we were to hold this a judicial act, removable here by certiorari, it would be opening such a door to similar applications, and assuming such an interference with the acts of inferior officers, as would lead to very dangerous consequences; for if so, hardly anything could be done under parliamentary authority which would not be subject to revision in this court. The cases cited are manifestly distinguishable. The county-rate is made by the Court of Quarter Sessions, acting as a Court, and exercising its judgment as to the necessary amount and other matters. The examinations of witnesses under the statute of Wm. and Mary, and more recent Acts, are also taken by an officer who sits as a judge, though he is conducting only a preliminary inquiry. So the order of the Church Commissioners in R. v. Arkwright, for stopping footpaths through a churchyard, is clearly judicial, like the order of two justices for stopping footpaths; and even more so, because there is no appeal. But the act of the supervisor of excise in granting a beer license appears to me to be an act of a totally different character.

CROMPTON, J.—Assuming that the Board of Inland Revenue were wrong, and ordered the officer to do an illegal act, and that he exceeded his authority in granting this license, I am of opinion that it was not a judicial proceeding, and therefore ought not to have been removed here by certiorari.

Writ of certiorari quashed, and rule to quash the license discharged.

NOVELLO v. SUDLOW.

Copyright, infringement of—Stats. 8 Anne, c. 19, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, ss. 2, 15, and 16.

In case for the infringement of copyright. The plaintiff was proprietor of a musical work, containing, amongst other pieces, a part-song, called "The Wreath;" and the defendant, a member of a musical society, consisting of several hundred persons, who gave concerts, to which strangers were admitted on payment of entrance-money. By direction of the defendant (who formed one of a committee of the society), and without permission of the plaintiff, the above-named song was copied from a monthly number of the plaintiff's [illegible] amongst the members of the society, and used by them solely for the purposes of the concert. After the concert, the parts so lithographed were collected and retained by the society, and were not used on any other occasion:

Held, an infringement of the plaintiff's copyright, for which he was entitled to recover by action on the case, although the parts were not alleged to have been printed "for sale or hire."

By stat. 8 Anne, c. 19, "copyright" is expressed to be "the sole right and liberty of printing," &c.: and by stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, it is defined to mean, "the sole and exclusive liberty of multiplying copies of any subject," &c., thus protecting literary works from unauthorised publication by means other than the press. The 15th section of the last-mentioned Act gives a remedy by action only to cases where the subject matter is multiplied by printing, to cases of importation of such unlawfully printed books for sale or hire, and to the publication, exposure, and possession for sale or hire of such books:

Held, that this section does not, by specifying certain cases to which a remedy by action has been therein prescribed, restrict the right of action for infringement of copyright to those particular cases, so as to negative rights previously existent, or given in the Act, against "the multiplication of copies" otherwise than by printing. Therefore, where defendant had multiplied copies of the plaintiff's work for gratuitous circulation, without his consent, it was held a violation of plaintiff's copyright, for which he was entitled to recover.

This was a special case stated for the opinion of this Court. The action was in case, for the infringement by the defendant of the plaintiff's copyright, in a musical work called "Benedict's Part-Song Book." The special case stated that the plaintiff was the proprietor of the periodical work in question, and that in the month of May, 1850, a part containing a song called "The Wreath," was published, the copyright in which belonged to the plaintiff. The defendant was a member of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, which society consisted of several hundred persons, who gave concerts. In August 1850 the defendant was one of a committee for the management of a concert, at which the vocal music was performed by a choir consisting of 235 members, who all performed gratuitously; but many of the audience were not members of the society, and were admitted to the concert on payment of sums fixed by the committee. It was resolved by the committee before the concert, that Benedict's part-song, "The Wreath," should form part of the performance; and for the purpose of providing the choir with the vocal music of the song, it was, by the defendant's directions, and without permission of the plaintiff, copied from a monthly number of the plaintiff's work, which belonged to the society, and the respective bass, soprano, tenor, and alto parts, which in the work are printed together, were lithographed separately, and used by the members of the society solely for the purposes of the concert. After the concert the parts so lithographed were collected and retained by the society, and they were never used on any other occasion. Upon hearing of this the plaintiff wrote to the defendant, requiring that the lithographs should be delivered up to him, and that the society should purchase of him an equal number of copies; to which the defendant replied that, as the society had never lithographed the song for sale or hire, he was at a loss to know in what way they had infringed the plaintiff's copyright. The result of the correspondence was the present action.

Phipson, for the plaintiff.—By sec. 2 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, "Copyright," as referred to in that Act, is defined as meaning "the sole and exclusive liberty of printing, or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject to which the said word is therein applied." Bearing this definition in mind, the purpose of the legislature, in framing sec. 15 of that statute will be apprehended. By that section it is enacted, "that if any person shall print or cause to be printed, either for sale or exportation, any book in which there shall be subsisting copyrights, without the consent in writing of the proprietor thereof, or shall import for sale or hire any such book, so having been unlawfully printed, from places beyond the sea, or knowing such to have been so unlawfully printed or imported, shall sell, publish, or expose to sale or hire, or cause to be sold, &c. or shall have in possession, for sale or hire, any such book so unlawfully printed as aforesaid, such offender shall be liable to a special action on the case, at the suit of the proprietor of such copyright." This statute, after clearly defining what copyright is, gives certain rights to the proprietors of copyrights for the protection of their property. In the present case, the copyright to the work in question was in the plaintiff; his right has been invaded by the defendant, and he is entitled to maintain his action by declar- [illegible] section, taken in conjunction with the 2nd. vests in the plaintiff a right of action against whoever multiplies copies of his property. Miller v. Taylor, 4 Burr. 2403. It must be taken that there is copyright at common law; at all events, there is no case shewing that copyright does not exist at common law. The plaintiff has a right of action irrespective of that arising under the statute. Under sec. 15 the owner of the copyright is the only person entitled to multiply copies. Any person may print copies to give away, and the owner has no remedy under that section. The remedy provided by the Act is thus not co-extensive with the grievances which may arise. Again, take the case of "hiring;" that section gives no power to prevent hiring; a man may hire out for profit any number of copies with impunity, as far as that section goes. This being so, it is clear that some remedy must exist for such wrongs, though it may not be under the statute; the inference then is, that the Legislature never intended to interfere with the pre-existing rights of proprietors of copyright, but left them enforceable as they were before. By the statute, a "written consent" is required for the multiplication of copies. Whatever is meant by the word "hire" in the 16th section, it does not affect multiplication of copies. There is nothing to restrict the general right vested in the plaintiff, because it happens that a remedy has been specified by statute as applicable to some particular cases. Here a general right to multiply copies is in the plaintiff, and in him alone, unless, by his written agreement; the defendant has printed plaintiff's music without such consent, by lithography, and distributed the copies amongst the members of a society who paid money for their privileges. This is an infringement of plaintiff's copyright; if it be not so held, there will be no limit to piracy, and no protection for literary property. (Beckford v. Hood, 7 T. R. 620; The North Shields Ferry Company v. Barker, 2 Ex. 136.) [JERVIS, C.J.—A printer pirates a book, and a bookseller sells the pirated copies; the bookseller is made liable by this Act; he is bound to inquire into the printer's title.] This statute does not deal with those who sell innocently; that is, unaware of piracy. Arguing the case in the form least favourable to the plaintiff:—Here the defendant has published Benedict's part-songs (which belong to the plaintiff) by distribution amongst performers; the remedy afforded by statute is not only inadequate, but is inapplicable; it cannot, therefore, be that he has no remedy, he may therefore maintain his rights as before the statute. (King v. Harris, 4 T. R. 205.) [JERVIS, C.J.—You do not deny that if there is copyright at Common Law the statute restricts it.] It restricts it to the extent of the cases mentioned in the 15th section, and not further. This action is, for the reasons given, clearly maintainable; judgment should therefore be for the plaintiff.

Willes, for the defendant.—None of the inconveniences, which it has been said by the other side would follow, are to be apprehended if the Court should take a view adverse to the plaintiff in this case. The case instanced was that where a sum of money is paid for admission to the society's performance. Societies for private amusement, like literary and scientific societies in the country, admitting strangers on payment of a sum of money, are in a widely different position to this society, which is strictly private: musical parts are here distributed among the members for private use, and that certainly cannot be called a publication. If the argument for the plaintiff is to prevail, it would extend to give an action even in the most trifling case—such, for instance, as the copying out a piece of music for a pupil to play. But the best answer to the plaintiff's case is, that the Legislature have by statute laid down the amount of protection which, as a matter of justice between parties, authors shall enjoy. [JERVIS, C.J.—It certainly is a strange mode of considering the Act, which the preamble states is for "the better encouragement of literary works," to say it curtails instead of extending the privileges of copyright.] The Court has not to consider here whether there is copyright at common law, for here there is a statute which gives and defines copyright; and it has been decided that where there is a statute which shews what shall be a right, thenceforward parties are bound by its terms, and cannot stand on a common law right. [JERVIS, C.J.—I understood Mr. Phipson to say that where a statute provides a specific remedy for a particular grievance; the party injured must rely on the statutory relief, though a remedy also lies at common law. [TALFOURD, J.—He says that the statute gives copyright to parties for a certain term, and that their right under it is to multiply copies. There must be a remedy co-extensive with the injury.] It is not necessary to consider the question as to copyright at common law; it is with the statute we have to deal. It is admitted that if a right is conferred by the statute, the plaintiff has a remedy by such action as this. But the statute gives no copyright against such a proceeding as the defendant's in this case. By that admission, the case of Beckford v. Hood is rendered inapplicable. The 16th section should be read in conjunction with the 15th. At any rate, it is more favourable to the defendant, for it deals with multiplying books for sale, and not the mere multiplying of copies; it affords strong grounds for inferring that the prohibition intended by the Legislature was only directed against multiplying copies for the purpose of gain. [JERVIS, C.J.—No one can doubt what is the history of that section. It is copied from Lord Brougham's Patent Act, which repeated what had already acquired the force of law, by the construction of certain new rules, so that we have now two patent laws.] What the Legislature intended to forbid was simply infringement for the purposes of gain. Taking the 15th and 16th sections together, the Court must arrive at the conclusion, that the cases are therein specified in which alone the Legislature intended to grant a right of action. The copyright now existing is the creature of that statute. [JERVIS, C.J.—Do not take that as a matter of course, for some learned persons may doubt it.] There is admittedly high authority on both sides. One learned writer has leaned two ways, according as he happened to have Lord Camden or Lord Mansfield as a subject for biography. If they please, people have a right to prevent the emanations of their genius from being disseminated at all. The whole difficulty arises from the fact that men will publish their ideas. [WILLIAMS, J. referred to Boosey v. Jeffreys, 17 Law T. 110.] It is not clear that the opinions expressed in Miller v. Taylor, and Boosey v. Jeffreys, are applicable in the present case. Whatever may be the plaintiff's right at common law, it is hard to see how, by merely noting a tune on lines a person can acquire copyright at all. A man has as great a right to hear the musical notes of another man as to hear the notes of a nightingale, without paying for them. Has any man a right to prevent another from repeating his poems or his tunes? Noble thoughts and sentiments originate in savage countries, where there exists no method of fixing and perpetuating them by writing. Could persons in those countries be prevented from repeating, and in that way disseminating them? But whether there exists a copyright at common law or otherwise, is not material; the Legislature, by passing an Act, abolished any common law right, and made express provisions for all rights which it intended should be perpetuated. We must look to the Act, and there is nothing in it favourable to the plaintiff's claim in this action except what is weakly inferential. If such rights as the plaintiff asserts here, do exist, the Legislature has given no means of enforcing them, and the defendant is therefore entitled to judgment.

JUDGMENT.

Friday, May 7.—The COURT now delivered judgment.—In this case the plaintiff, by the declaration, alleged that he was proprietor of the copyright in a book, being a musical composition, and that whilst such copyright was subsisting, the defendant, without his consent, wrongfully printed a lithograph, and published divers copies of the same work, contrary to the form of the statute, whereby the sale of the book was injured, and he, as proprietor of the copyright, sustained damage. The defendant pleaded not guilty. The parties, by consent, stated a case, in which the sufficiency of the declaration and the effect of the facts agreed on are presented for our decision. The effect of the statement is that the defendant, a member of the Philharmonic Society, desirous to perform the music in question at a concert, consisting of its members and persons admitted for money, caused portions of the plaintiff's work to be lithographed for the use of the members, to the number of 235, and who were, without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright, supplied with lithograph parts of the composition to a corresponding extent, with the defendant's sanction. The question arising on the declaration, which alleges the printing and publishing, without alleging that the printing and publishing was for sale or hire, and upon the facts, is, whether the publication of the copies of the work in which the plaintiff had a subsisting copyright, not being for sale or hire, gave a right of action? The case was argued before us on both sides, with an abstinence from a consideration of the question left undecided by the case of Miller v Taylor, whether at common law authors have a copyright in their works. The learned counsel on both sides agreed in considering the case as dependent upon the construction to be applied to the statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, whereby the previous Acts relating to literary copyright are repealed, and the term they had defined is extended; and the view which we take of this case enables us to adopt the position taken by the parties, and to decide it on the construction of that statute. The interpretation clause of that Act, which precedes its other provisions, enacts that the word "copyright" should be construed to mean the sole and exclusive liberty of printing or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject, to which that word is therein applied The third section defines the duration of such copyright. Several subsequent sections treat such copyright as property, and sec. 25 enacts, "that it shall be deemed personal property transmissible by bequest, and, in case of intestacy be subject to the law of distribution." It was conceded in the argument, and admits of no doubt, that if the statute, thus vesting a peculiar property, had contained no provision for the redress of its infringement, the ordinary rule, by which the common law gives an action on the case for the violation of rights conferred by statute, would apply, and would render the multiplication of copies by lithograph, without the consent of the proprietor, the subject of such an action as that before us. But it was contended that the statute 5 & 6 Vict. 45, by giving, in sec. 15, a remedy by action in cases which do not involve the subject of complaint, operates as a limitation of the right before conferred, and this prevents the ordinary rule from attaching. It was not denied, that according to the doctrine in Beckford v. Hood, 7 T. R. 620, if the statute had, like the 8th Anne, c. 19, given penalties for infringement of copyright, even in the same clause which defined the right, the party aggrieved would not be thereby deprived of the remedy by action, which the common law would attach to his right. But it was argued, that as by the clause in question the remedy is given by action, such remedy must be taken to be co-extensive with the right. By the 15th clause it is enacted, "that if any person shall print or cause to be printed, either for sale or exportation, any book in which there shall be subsisting copyright, without the consent in writing of the proprietor thereof, or shall import for sale or hire any such books, so having been unlawfully printed in parts beyond the seas, or knowing such book to have been so unlawfully printed or imported, shall sell, publish, or expose for sale or hire, or cause to be sold, published, or exposed to sale or hire, or shall have in his possession for sale or hire any such book so unlawfully printed or imported, without such written consent as aforesaid, such offender shall be liable to a special action on the case, at the suit of the proprietor of such copyright." In answer to the argument that this clause purports to apply the remedy by action to all cases of infringement, it was argued for the plaintiff that its object might be especially to provide in cases of infringement by printing or publishing for sale or hire, that a written consent should be necessary for the justification of such acts by a stranger to the copyright; and the peculiarity of the expression, "special action on the case," and the description of the party against whom the remedy is given as "an offender," are referred to as indicating the intention, or, at least, the spirit of the Legislature. The language, however, of the clause is not new; it is adopted from the corresponding section of the 54 Geo. 3, c. 156, s. 34, which it follows, except that instead of repeating the words, "without the consent in writing," to each condition of infringement, it uses the words, "so unlawfully printed," &c. which were perhaps incorrectly adopted to avoid repetition. Whether the words so substituted have the effect of implying the necessity of written consent, or whether the last words, "without such written consent, as aforesaid," apply to all the antecedents, are questions only incidentally raised, as affording argument or illustration of the matter in discussion, and which we do not feel it necessary to decide. A more important consideration arises from the difference between the description of the exclusive copyright conferred on authors by the statutes 8 Anne, c. 19, and 54 Geo. 3, c. 156, and that defined by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. By the statute of Anne, such right is expressed to be "the sole right and liberty of printing;" whereas by the interpretation clause of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, it is expressly defined to mean the sole and exclusive liberty of printing, or otherwise multiplying copies, of any subject to which the word is therein applied, thus protecting literary works from unauthorized publication by other means than the press. Now, the 15th section applies this remedy by action only to cases where the subject matter is multiplied by printing; and therefore, if this clause is regarded as a restriction of the remedy it gives to the cases which it enumerates, to the exclusion of the common law consequences of remedy for wrong, it must be construed as destroying the effect of the words, "otherwise multiplying" which point in the most distinct manner to modes of infringement not before rendered illegal. We cannot think that such a restriction could be in the purpose of the Legislature, which would have been directly accomplished by omitting to introduce the words "otherwise multiplying," and therefore we conclude that it is impossible to gather from the 15th section that clear intention to limit a right expressly given, which is necessary to the argument for the defendant. It may also be observed that the following section 16, when requiring the defendant to give notice of his objection to the author's clause, "in any action for printing any such book for sale, hire, or exportation," implies that an action will lie for printing for hire, to which the special action on the case, given by the 15th clause, is not in terms applied, and thus fortifies the conjecture that the 15th section was not intended, by enumerating certain cases of infringement, to take away the common law remedy in all others. It is, however, enough for us to determine that we cannot collect from this or any other clauses of the Acts, an intention of the Legislature to restrict the right which in express terms it gave. It is admitted that the plaintiff preserves the right; the act of the defendant in multiplying copies of his work without his consent for extensive, though gratuitous circulation, is a violation of the right; the remedy by action on the case therefore attaches, on principles which are not disputed, and the plaintiff is consequently entitled to our judgment.

Judgment for the Plaintiff.

(Before JERVIS, C.J.)

ANONYMOUS.

A distringas to compel appearance will not be granted for an indirect purpose.

Honyman moved for a distringas to compel appearance on an affidavit shewing that attempts had been made to serve the defendant at 2, Shooter's-court, Throgmorton-street, that being defendant's office, not residence. [JERVIS, C.J.—It should be at defendant's residence, if possible.] Yes; one Butler, a clerk of defendant's, had called and paid 10*l.* on account, and this is sworn in the affidavit, but unfortunately it is not stated when this was done, and it might, therefore, have been beforehand. But an application had been made before Williams, J. at chambers to stay proceedings on payment of the balance after the payment of the 10*l.* by Butler. [JERVIS, C.J.—It appears, then, that the defendant knows all about it; is that a case for a distringas?] The defendant now offers to come in and pay two guineas only for costs, being the amount indorsed on the writ. We want the costs of the attempts to serve. A letter has been received from defendant's attorney saying he is ready to receive process.

JERVIS, C.J.—You are perverting defendant's offer made for the purpose of saving costs into completing your materials for a distringas. If you are entitled to the costs of the attempts to serve, you must get them in a direct way, after appearance. It would be a perversion of the statute for me to grant a distringas.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, May 27.

DALBY v. THE INDIA AND LONDON LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—This was an action between two insurance companies. One Wright had insured the life of the late Duke of Cambridge in the Anchor Insurance Company for 1,000*l.* The Anchor Insurance Company then effected a cross policy on the same life with the defendants; subsequently Wright surrendered his policy to the Anchor Company for an annuity. Upon the death of the Duke of Cambridge the defendants refused to pay the claim made upon them by the Anchor Company, on the ground that when Wright had surrendered his policy, and purchased the annuity, they had no longer an interest in the life of the Duke. An action was brought, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff, leave being reserved to the defendants to move for a rule for a nonsuit, or to enter the verdict for the defendants. The case had been already once argued, and was set down to be re-argued this day. The question of law was, whether, to support a declaration on a life policy, it was necessary that there should be a continuing interest down to the time of the action brought, according to the decision in Godsall and Boldero. Bramwell, Q.C. was part heard in support of the verdict, when the Court intimated that inasmuch as they were asked to overrule Godsall and Boldero, the case had better be taken at once to the Ex. Ch. CRESSWELL, J. consenting to settle the bill of exceptions, if counsel should be unable to agree upon it.

Rule enlarged, with concurrence of both parties, for the purpose of a bill of exceptions being agreed upon.

BARTHOLOMEW v. BROOKFIELD.— ——— moved for judgment as in case of a nonsuit. This being the day after the rule was due, the Court said it was too soon.

Friday, May 28.

EDWARDS v. CHAMPION.—This was a case sent down from the Court of Chancery for the opinion of this Court. Lee, Q.C. appeared for plaintiff, and Wills for defendant. It was prayed by Lee that inasmuch as the case did not state the facts sufficiently so as to raise the points intended to be settled by the judgment of the Court, the case might be allowed to stand over, in order that it might be taken back to the Court of Chancery and there amended. Stands over.

BODEN v. WRIGHT.—Willes.—This is a demurrer to a plea to a declaration on a bill of exchange, which states that except as to 10*l*. there was no value or consideration for the making of the bill. The denial of consideration contained in the plea is confined to this, that "before and at the time of accepting the said bill, there was no value or consideration, &c., it does not shew that there was no value received for the bill at a subsequent time. The plea is bad for this reason, both on special and general demurrer. It is consistent with this plea that defendant had received full value from the drawer. Cowling, in support of the plea,—It is not necessary by the general rules of pleading, to state negatives. You cannot under the new rules plead generally "no consideration," for those rules compel the defendant to plead all the facts, shewing that no consideration was given for the bill. Those facts must be pleaded affirmatively, and not negatively. By the 2nd and 3rd of the new rules, everything the defendant desires to plead must be pleaded affirmatively, such as infancy, coverture, and the like. The plea states that the bill was accepted on certain terms, and it is hard to see what more it could say, or what more can be required. (MAULE, J.—The true spirit of the new rule is that the defendant must shew how there was no consideration. JERVIS, C.J.—What the defendant should have done is to say that there never was any consideration for the defendant's acceptance. MAULE, J.—I never knew a plea of want of consideration which did not contain a general allegation that there was no consideration other than that therein named; here "no consideration" is, indeed, alleged, but it is not alleged sufficiently.) There is an illustrative case on the point, Easton v. Pledall, 1 Cr. M. & R. 198. The question here is, how far do the new rules require the defendant to be particular? (Mills v. Oddy, 2 Cr. M. & R. 103.) (MAULE, J.—The case is very clear. There must be judgment for the plaintiff. I pray to amend on the usual terms of payment of costs. JERVIS, C.J.—Let there be judgment for the plaintiff, with leave to amend in four days on payment of costs. Defendant to take short notice of trial.

Judgment for plaintiff.

FRIAR v. ROE.—This was an action on a promissory note, and the declaration contained a count on an account stated. The defendant pleaded several special pleas to the count on the note, and to the account stated he pleaded the Statute of Limitations. The case came before the Court on a special verdict. Wise for the plaintiff. The note had been given in 1840, but did not become due till 1845, and for the plaintiff it was contended that the note was evidence of an account stated in 1840, though right of action did not arise till 1845; and that this barred the operation of the Statute of Limitations, which defendant had pleaded (Willersh v. The Countess Dowager of Carlisle, 1 H. Bl. 631; Wheatley v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 533; Williams v. Moore, 11 M. & W. 265.) Parties may agree at any time on an amount due, but not then payable, it is debitum in presenti solvitur in futuro. (Irving v. Beach, 3 M. & W. 90; Clayton v. Gosling, 5 B. & Cr. 360, (Cundy v. Peril, 7 M. & W. 191, Watkins v. Wake, 7 M. & W. 188, Rhodes v. Gent, 5 B. & Ald. 245, Chitty on Bills, 582, Story v. Atkins, 2 Strange, 719.) J. Brown for the defendant. The only case bearing in favour of plaintiff is that of Rhodes v. Gent, which contains the dictum of a single judge, which is favourable to plaintiff. The learned counsel proceeded to distinguish the cases cited, and to offer other authorities, but the point was not decided. Brown having urged that the special verdict as drawn did not state the facts sufficiently to raise the point for the opinion of the Court, he stood on his strict rights, and called on the Court to award

JERVIS, C.J.—In this case there must be a venire de novo; it was the duty of the jury to find on the facts necessary to raise the point, there being no finding on the facts in either of the two issues left for our consideration, the case must be commenced over again. Venire de novo.

COUSENS v. GRAHAM.—— moved for a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be set aside. The action was brought by an attorney against another attorney for agency charges. The plaintiff had sent in his bills unsigned to the defendant in a signed letter. The under-sheriff nonsuited him. The rule was asked on the ground that the plaintiff had refused to be nonsuited, and that the sending a bill unsigned in a signed letter was a compliance with the statute. JERVIS, C.J. referred counsel to a case reported 7 C.B. 742, and granted a Rule nisi.

FREEMAN v. TRAINAR.—Phinn moved for a rule to show cause why judgment should not be entered up as of Michaelmas Term last. The plaintiff had died after an award upon a reference had been given in his favour. The application was on the part of the executrix. Rule nisi.

FULHAM v. LUCAS.—R. A. Fisher moved for a distringas to compel appearance. Granted.

Re STEVENSON, One, &c.—Prentice moved the Court on behalf of one Dr. Stevenson for a rule calling upon Stevenson, an attorney of this court, to shew cause why he should not deliver his bill of costs, and give credit therein for various sums paid him on account of the applicant. Rule nisi.

Re COBBETT.—Mrs. Cobbett again moved the Court for a writ of habeas corpus to bring her husband, with view to his discharge. The ground stated was, that prisoner was detained after the writ of rebellion against the prisoner had expired, and that the keeper of the Queen's Prison had made false returns to the Queen's writ. Writ refused.

GREGORY v. THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.—On this case being called Atherton, Q.C. asked the Court to let it stand for Wednesday. Stands for Wednesday.

BROWN v. COOPER.—Barnard shewed cause against a rule obtained by Reed for judgment as in case of nonsuit. As it was entirely a question of the amount an attorney is entitled to, plaintiff wished not to go to trial, but refer the matter to the Master to find what sum is due.—JERVIS, C.J.—Why was that not proposed before? You must give peremptory undertaking to try at the sittings after term in London.

Rule discharged on peremptory undertaking.

Ex parte MARY ANN SCOTT.—Byles, Serjt. applied to the Court on the part of Mary Ann Scott, that she may be allowed to transfer property, which came to her in her own right and for her separate use, without the concurrence of her husband. The application is under the Fines and Recoveries Act. It appears by the affidavit that the parties were married in 1828, that in 1830 the husband went to Canada, leaving his wife in England. He was accompanied by one James Rushworth. The husband, on his arrival in America, wrote to his wife, stating that he was going into the interior of the country, and since that time she has never heard from him. Three years afterwards the wife wrote to Rushworth, who in reply informed her that since her husband had gone up the country he had never heard of him. But since then a man named Bull informed the wife that he knew her husband, that he was living in Canada, had married again, and had said he would never return to England. JERVIS, C.J.—That will do, brother. Leave granted.

JOHNSON v. LANSLEY.—This was an action on bill of exchange. Channell shewed cause against rule obtained by Phinn to enter the verdict for the defendant, on the ground that the bill was given for money won by gambling on horse-racing. Rule discharged.

Re EDWARDS (Assignees of Parker, a bankrupt) v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—J. Brown moved for a rule to shew cause why the Master should not be directed to review his taxation in this matter, he having only allowed a sum of 100*l*. out of 1,000*l*. claimed for costs of notice of trial. The rule was refused.

To be reported.

DIBBEN v. SNELL.—Wharton moved for a distringas to compel an appearance. Granted.

Tuesday, June 1.

DOE d. ROBERTON v. GARDINER.—This was a special case, in which the Court were to draw any inferences that a jury might. It appeared that in 1805 William Roberton, and Mary his wife, demised some premises in Manchester to one J. Heath, through whom the defendant claims "to hold from the 25th December last for ever," at a rent of 120*l*. per annum. At that time they were seised in fee of one moiety of the premises in question, and for their joint lives and the life of the survivor of them in the other, with remainder to the lessor of the plaintiff and his sister, now dead. W. Roberton died in 1812, Mary Roberton in 1843. Rent under the deed had ever since been paid. In 1850 notice to quit was given to the defendant, and an action of ejectment brought to recover one moiety, on the ground that the deed was a mere lease in the ordinary form, with the exception of its attempting to demise the premises for ever; and that rent having been paid ever since, it had been since Mary's death a tenancy from year to year, and that profits of the land had been received, so as to prevent the Statute of Limitations running according to secs. 3 and 35 of stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27. On the other side it was contended, that the effect of the deed was to convey the fee of the land, on the one hand, and to create a perpetual rent-charge, on the other; and that the annual payment had been since made, not as profits of the land, but as a rent-charge, and that therefore the statute was a bar to the action; and the Court were asked, on the part of the defendant, to presume an order to support the deed as a feofment, a livery of seisin; or that the premises were in the occupation of tenants, so as to support the deed as a grant.

Cowling for the lessor of the plaintiff, and Tomlinson for the defendant. Cur. adv. vult.

HOBBY v. BUDD.—Keane moved for a rule to shew cause why a peremptory undertaking to try should not be enlarged until an inspection of documents should be had. Rule nisi.

WORMS v. RIDER.—On motion of Windsor, rule nisi for rule to serve notice to compute by sticking of notice in the office of the court.

Wednesday, June 2.

SOLOMON v. HOWARD.—Henderson moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the trial of this cause should not be postponed till the return of defendant from China. JERVIS, C.J.—There will be no rule in this case. It any hardship will result to the plaintiff he must bear it, he brought it on himself by leaving the country, he had to choose between two positions, he thought it more to his interest to go abroad than remain and defend the case, he must, therefore, withdraw his plea or take the consequence. Rule refused.

STYLES v. BUSWELL.—Field moved for a rule calling the judge of the County Court of Leicestershire, held at Lutterworth, and one Styles, to shew cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue in this case, on the ground that the judge had taken upon himself to adjudicate on a question where title to an incorporeal hereditament was in dispute, and consequently one in which he had no jurisdiction. Rule nisi.

GREGORY v. THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.—This was a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the record in this case should not be amended by inserting the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber; and why the defendant should not pay the costs incurred subsequently to that judgment. It appeared that the case having been carried to the Court of Exchequer Chamber, that Court, in the absence of the parties, gave judgment "for the plaintiff on the demurrer, with the costs of the demurrer, and for the defendant on the issues;" but one of the counsel for the defendant, by mistake, endorsed his brief, "Judgment for the defendant, with all the costs;" and it was so entered on the record; upon which the plaintiff's attorney, without making further inquiry, carried the case to the House of Lords, where the matter was again argued, and the real judgment given below affirmed. When the rule was moved for some days ago, the Court referred it to the Master to inquire and report when the attorneys for the respective parties first knew of the mistake, and the Master now reported that the plaintiff's attorney did not know of it until after the writ of error had been sued out in the House of Lords, and but a few days before it was argued there, and that the defendant's attorney knew of it before the plaintiff's attorney, but only a few days previous. Mansty contended that upon this report the defendant ought to pay all the costs that had been unnecessarily incurred since the judgment in the Exchequer Chamber. Atherton, Q.C. having been heard contra, JERVIS, C.J.—This rule must be absolute, and the defendant must pay all the costs, including the costs of this application. Rule absolute.

CLEMENT v. GWYNNE.—Hunt shewed cause against rule for judgment as in case of nonsuit obtained by Cross. It was arranged that the rule should be discharged in a peremptory undertaking, to try at the first sittings before the Secondary of London. Rule discharged.

Thursday, June 3.

EDWARDS and OTHERS v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the Master should not review his taxation. 300*l*. had been allowed for costs of notice of trial; first, no notice of trial was necessary; secondly, 300*l*. is exorbitant. Rule nisi.

JERVIS v. ——.—Shee, Serjt. applied to the Court to postpone this case, the demurrer book being imperfect. Stands over until Tuesday.

STEADMAN v. CHAPPELL.

Rule nisi to discharge plaintiff's rule for a new trial.

CANNON v. PENNINGTON.—Speak moved for a rule to shew cause why the Master should not tax the costs of issues in fact found in favour of the plaintiff at Carlisle, and of a demurrer also found in his favour. It was an action of formedon, and costs were claimed under 4 & 5 Ann, c. 16, ss. 4 and 5, and under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 34. (Dulwich v. Page, 2 T. R. 391, Calendar v. Howard, 20 L. J. 66, C.P., and Partridge v. Gardiner, in the Ex. Ch. were referred to. Rule nisi.

Re SUSANNAH FLETCHER.—Crouch applied for leave to S. Fletcher to convey property without the concurrence of her husband, who had gone abroad in 1840, and had not been since heard of. Granted.

ANDERSON v. HEYWOOD.—Boril moved for a rule to shew cause why the defendant should not be paid the costs of a mandamus. An order had been made for a commission to examine witnesses in India, which being objected to, application was made to the Court for a mandamus, which was granted. The facts were proved in our favour, and they were necessary to be proved, the plaintiffs refusing to admit them. [JERVIS, C.J.—Bridges v. Fisher, 1 Bing. N.C. is against you.] That case is distinguishable, and does not lay down a general rule. Rule nisi.

MEGGESON v. LADY GLAMIS.

SELLS v. BOWES.

Landlord and tenant—Tithe.

The landlady of an estate being lessee of the tithes thereof, agreed by her agent to demise that estate subsequent to the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71 (the Tithe Commutation Act), to a tenant at a certain rent, tithe free. There was no deed executed; and the rent being in arrear a distress was levied for the whole, including the sum which would have been payable in respect of the tithe-rent charge: Held, she was entitled to do so, under the terms of the agreement, notwithstanding there was no letting of the tithes to the tenant by deed, as the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 80, provides that any tenant who shall hold his lands under an agreement that the same shall be holden by him free of tithes, and who shall pay any such rent-charge shall be allowed the same in account with his landlord.

This was an action of replevin, tried before Parke, B. at Chelmsford. A distress had been levied for rent.

Pleas, non tenuit and riens in arrear.

It appeared that in 1846 there was a negociation for letting Woodhall Farm, the property of Lady Glamis, to the plaintiff, at a corn rent of 400*l*. per annum, tithe-free, under a formal lease; but objections having been made by him to the proposed draft, no lease was executed, and the defendant was let into possession, and so remained under a parol letting at 400*l*. a-year, tithe-free. After paying his rent for some little time, during which no demand of tithe was ever made on account of Lady Glamis, who was lessee of the tithes of the parish under the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's for three lives, renewable for ever, the plaintiff fell into arrear to the extent of 1,045*l*. and a distress was put in for that amount of rent in arrear on the farm in question, when the goods were replevied, and this action brought. Under these circumstances, Parke, B. was of opinion that there had been not only a demise of land, but of the tithe also, and that as the latter could not be demised except by deed, there could not be any power in the landlord to distrain for it, and he accordingly directed a verdict for the plaintiff for 4*l.* 4*s.* reserving leave to the defendant to move to enter a verdict for him for the rent, and also for the value of the goods, and a rule having been obtained to that effect,

Chambers, Q.C. Willes, and Lush, shewed cause. The question is, whether or not there was a demise of the tithe as well as the land, if so there was no deed, and the letting of tithes could not be otherwise than by deed, and a deed was requisite; there is no difference in this respect, since the Tithe Commutation Act, it was necessary before, so it is now. Suppose these parties had insisted upon having their rights according to the terms of their agreement, properly and legally carried out, and applied to the Court of Chancery to compel it, that Court would have directed an actual demise by deed to be executed to carry out the agreement; or suppose Lady Glamis had sold the tithes, it would have been necessary for the tenant to have had a deed demising the tithes to have properly protected himself. (Gardiner v. Williamson, 2 B. & Adol. 336.)

James, Q.C. and Rodwell, in support of the rule. —The Tithe Commutation Act, 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 80, makes a great difference; the landlord is bound now to pay the tithe-rent charge, unless there be an express agreement to the contrary. See Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant (6th edit.), 566, 567; the words "tithe-free," in the agreement, might be rejected as surplusage. The plaintiff gets nothing by the insertion of these words in his agreement, more than the law gave him without them.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Saturday, May 8.—PARKE, B. delivered judgment. This was a case tried before me at Hertford. It appeared upon the trial that there had been an agreement between Lady Glamis's agent and M Meggeson, to demise the lands tithe free on certain terms: 100*l.* for the first year, and for the second and subsequent years of the term, which was to be twenty-one years, varying according to the average price of corn. There were other stipulations in this agreement for a lease, not finally assented to by Mr. Meggeson, so that the lease was never prepared. Mr. Meggeson entered and occupied, and there was sufficient evidence of his agreeing to pay a rent of 400*l.* a year, and the agent swore that all these lands were meant to be demised tithe-free. Lady Glamis being the lessee of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, having a lease for lives of the tithes, and the land also in this case belonging to her, it was sworn by the agent that the understanding was with Mr. Meggeson that he was to pay 400*l.* a year, the lands being tithe-free. At the trial I reserved the question, but it struck me at that time, considering only the situation of the tithes before the passing of the late Act, that if there was a demise by the owner of the tithes for the time being of lands tithe-free (they being separate inheritances), it really meant an agreement on his part to demise both the tithes and the lands at the joint rent of 400*l.* a year - there being no demise in this case by deed, the tithe did not pass, and consequently it could not be said the lands were holden at any certain rent. Whether that would have been the consequence if the Tithe Commutation Act had not passed, is a matter, I believe, on which the Court is not agreed, and upon which it is unnecessary to say anything. But the effect of the Tithe Commutation Act appears to relieve all difficulty in this case. The Tithe Commutation Act passed before this agreement with Mr. Meggeson, and I should say there was ample evidence of his agreeing to hold at the rent of 400*l.* a year, not upon the terms of a rent varying according to the price of corn. A distress was made, and the goods of the plaintiff, Mr. Sells, were in one case distrained, and he contested the legality of the distress; and in another case there was a replevin by Mr. Meggeson, to which there was an avowry on the part of Lady Glamis at a holding of 400*l.* a year. The only question is, whether this demise being subsequent to the Tithe Commutation Act, calculated at 400*l.* a year, the intention being that the tenant should not pay a tithe-rent, the tithe having ceased to exist in point of law, whether that was a misdescription, or whether the defendant did hold the lands at 400*l.* a year. Mr. Rodwell has referred us to the 80th section of the Tithe Commutation Act, which appears to us to solve any difficulty in the case. The parties must be presumed after that to have contracted, as the 80th section says they are to be presumed to contract; and, that 80th section provides, if there be any agreement for a lease of lands made subsequent to such commutation, any tenant who shall pay any such rent-charge shall be allowed the same in account with the landlord; and it provides sufficiently for this case, for as Lady Glamis was the owner of the tithes, and it was meant that the tenant should pay 400*l.* a year for the land, and not pay tithes, if she afterwards chose to distrain for this tithe-rent, she would be compelled to allow that in the account, and the tenant would occupy the land at 340*l.* a year, the rent-charge being 60*l.* It appears to us that the parties are to be taken to have contracted with regard to the 80th section; that the contract was a contract for 400*l.* a year; and if Lady Glamis chose afterwards, with the understanding that she should not enforce it (whether any action would lie against her for enforcing it or not is not a matter in quesion)—but if she did choose to enforce it, then Mr. Meggeson would have had his relief against her; and therefore we think that in this case there was sufficient evidence, notwithstanding that Lady Glamis was the owner of the rent-charge substituted for the tithes, that, as between him and Lady Glamis, he was to occupy at 400*l.* a year. Consequently the verdict ought to be entered, pursuant to leave reserved by me, for the defendant in both the cases. The rule will therefore be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

THE PRUDENTIAL ASSOCIATION v. CURZON.

Bond Stamp.

This was an action upon a bond for 300*l.* and had a 3*l.* stamp impressed on it. A policy of insurance had been effected to secure the same amount, the annual premium payable thereon being 23*l.* which if the obligor did not regularly pay, the obligees had power to do so. The cause was tried before Parke, B. in Middlesex on the 25th May instant, when it was objected for the defendant, that the stamp was insufficient, as the bond required a stamp as for an unlimited sum, or it wanted two stamps, one in respect of the principal money thereby secured, and the other for the premiums payable upon the policy. The plaintiffs were nonsuited, with liberty to move to set aside that nonsuit, and enter a verdict for the amount sought to be recovered.

Jos. Brown now moved accordingly, and contended the 3*l.* stamp was sufficient; he referred to the condition of the bond by which the amount to be recovered was limited. (The Stamp Act, title "Bond," 9th division, and the 5th division of the directions; Dearden v. Binns, 1 Man. & Ry. 130; Annandale v. Pattison, 9 B. & C. 919.) Rule nisi.

THOYTS, Assignee, &c. v. HOBBS.

Insolvent Debtors' Amendment Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 96) Construction - Voluntary preference fraudulent against assignee.

A person in insolvent circumstances assigned the whole of his goods except about 10*l. worth, by bill of sale to the defendant, one of his creditors, for a debt then due, and the goods were conveyed away by night, &c. More than three months afterwards he filed his petition in the Insolvent Court, and the plaintiff was appointed his assignee, who brought this action to recover from the defendant the value of such goods:*

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, as the bill of sale was made prior to three months before the filing of the petition, and there was no evidence to shew that the insolvent had at the time he gave the bill of sale, any view or intention of then petitioning the Court for protection from process.

This was an action for money had and received, tried before Mr. Justice Wightman at Reading, when the plaintiff obtained a verdict for 100*l.* The plaintiff was assignee of one Goddard, an insolvent, and the defendant was a person to whom Goddard had conveyed his goods more than three months previous to his insolvency. It appeared that about the 30th April, 1850, Goddard was indebted to his landlord in a considerable sum for rent, and to other creditors also for various debts; he was, in fact, in insolvent circumstances, and on going to the defendant, to whom he was then also indebted, and stating his situation, a bill of sale in the most general form was immediately prepared of all his goods, so as to leave not 10*l.* worth of property upon his farm, excepting the growing crops; the whole of his goods was at once conveyed away and by night to the defendant. In June 1851 Goddard was summoned to the County Court for nonpayment of a sum of money previously ordered to be paid, and committed for nonpayment. He then on the 30th June, 1851, signed his petition, and filed it on the 15th July. on the 13th August he came up for hearing; and the question was, whether the conveyance of the goods by the bill of sale to Hobbs was or was not a voluntary preference, fraudulent, and void, as against his assignee the present plaintiff, under the Insolvent Debtors Amendment Act. (7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 19.) The jury having found it was, a rule nisi had been obtained to set aside the verdict, on the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury, and also for misdirection.

Alexander, Q.C. (Griffits with him), showed cause.—By the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 19, it is enacted, "That if the petitioner shall, before or after the filing of his petition, in contemplation of his becoming insolvent, or being in insolvent circumstances, voluntarily convey, assign, transfer, charge, deliver, or make over, any estate security, real or personal, for money, bond, bill, note, money, goods, or effects whatsoever, to any creditor or creditors, or to any person or persons, in trust for, or to or for the use, benefit, or advantage of any creditor or creditors, or to any person who is or may be liable as surety for such petitioner, every such conveyance, assignment, transfer, charge, delivery, and making over, shall be deemed fraudulent and void, as against any assignee or assignees of the estate and effects of such petitioner, appointed under the provisions of the said recited Act, and of this Act, or of either of them; provided always, that no such conveyance, assignment, transfer, charge, delivery, or making over, shall be so deemed fraudulent and void if made at any time prior to three months before the filing of the petition; and not with the view or intention by the party so conveying, assigning, transferring, charging, delivering, or making over, of petitioning the Court for protection from process." It is admitted this does not come within the first part of the proviso of that section, because the bill of sale was prior to three months before the filing of the petition; but it was certainly with the intention by Goddard of petitioning the Court for protection from process—the evidence shewing that he was then insolvent, and there being no other course by which he could get relief. The question, at all events, was one for the jury; the same as it was held to be so in respect of a contemplated bankruptcy (Aldred v. Constable, 4 Q.B. 674); and there was evidence here from the circumstances stated to go to the Jury. [MARTIN, B. mentioned Morgan v. Brundrett, 5 B. & Adol. 289.] As to the misdirection, the learned judge at the trial had this section of the Act of Parliament before him when summing up, and the questions he left to the jury were reduced to writing, and were these—1st. Was the bill of sale voluntary? The jury answered, Yes. 2nd. Was the bill of sale by Goddard with the view or intention of petitioning the Insolvent Court for protection from process at any time when he might apprehend proceedings would be, or were, taken against him? The jury answered, Yes. There was no misdirection of the jury therefore at the trial, and the verdict ought to stand. Gibson v. Boult, 3 Scott, 229, was also cited.

Keating, Q.C. (Pigott with him), contrà, not called upon.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be made absolute, as the question in reference to the meaning of the proviso of the 19th section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, was not correctly left to the jury: that proviso is, that no such conveyance, assignment, transfer, charge, delivery, or making over, shall be so deemed fraudulent and void, if made at any time prior to three months before the filing of the petition; and not with the view or intention by the party so conveying, assigning, transferring, charging, delivering, or making over, of petitioning the Court for protection from process. The conveyance or assignment in this case was more than three months before the filing of the petition, and there was no evidence given to shew that the bill of sale was made with the view or intention by Goddard of petitioning the Court for protection from process. In order to render it void in reference to that proviso, he must have had at the time a then present intention of petitioning the Court, or distinctly expecting to do so by some distinct pressure, and not with a view from any expectant pressure; a person may be poor, and have numerous creditors, and yet have no intention to petition the Court for protection from process. The true point seems to me not to have been correctly put to the jury, and I think the rule should be absolute.

PLATT, B.—I am of the same opinion. The question turns upon the construction of the 19th section of the Act of Parliament referred to the Insolvent Debtors Amendment Act [the learned Judge read the proviso at the end of that section]. It is said that Goddard, at the time he made the assignment of his goods to the defendant, must necessarily have contemplated petitioning the Court for protection from process, he being then in insolvent circumstances, and it is to be left to the jury in the same way it heretofore has been with respect to supposed similar questions as to intended bankruptcies; but then a person could not have been made bankrupt, as he can now, by his mere voluntary acts on his own petition. Here the act is to be his own, and right and liability appear to me in the argument to be confounded. I see no ground for supposing the learned judge's direction to be correct, or that there was any evidence to prove that Goddard had at the time the bill of sale was given any view or intention whatever of petitioning the Court for protection; that evidence was indispensable to the plaintiff's case, and to hold otherwise would be abandoning the object of the Act of Parliament. All the notes furnished in reference to the learned judge's summing up appear to agree, and that direction seems to me to be incorrect.

MARTIN, B.—I am also of the same opinion. The question is, whether Goddard's bill of sale is good; and I own that as against the plaintiff I think it is. The way in which the goods were removed seems to me to have been for the purpose of preventing the landlord's taking them for rent, and not with any view or intention at all of petitioning the Court for protection. A debtor has a right, if he pleases, to transfer his property to any particular creditor, unless he does it contrary to the terms of some Act of Parliament. This Act (the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96) is not the Insolvent Act, but is for a particular purpose; it begins by reciting, that it is expedient to amend the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, the Insolvent Debtors Act; and by the 19th section provision is made as to any voluntary conveyance or preference being deemed fraudulent and void as against assignees under certain circumstances, such as an assignment within three months o the filing of the petition, or if at the time of the conveyance there was then any intention of petitioning the Court. It is for those seeking to set aside such conveyance to shew that intention, and prove it affirmatively; and it seems to me in this case that there was not a particle of evidence to go to the jury to shew that he contemplated then petitioning the Court for protection from process. I think too all these Acts should be construed strictly, and this rule therefore ought to be made absolute. Rule absolute.

JOLLY v. HANCOCK and ANOTHER.

Vendor and Purchaser.

Fines and Recoveries Act, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74—Acknowledgment of deed by a married woman—Certificate with affidavit to be filed.

An objection was taken to a title by a purchaser, that the certificate and affidavit of the due acknowledgment of deed to pass the interest of a married woman, had not been duly filed of record with the proper officer according to the provisions of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74. He brought an action to recover back his deposit because the title was defective in that respect:

Held, that he was entitled to do so, and that the title was defective without the due filing of those documents.

This was an action tried at Stafford before Wightman, J. The plaintiff obtained the verdict, with leave to enter the same for the defendants or to reduce the damages. The action was brought by the purchaser against the vendor to recover back the deposit paid on entering into the agreement for the purchase, on the ground that a title had not been made out. A rule nisi having beer obtained by the defendants, Keating, Q.C. and Whitmore shewed cause.

The only point in this case is, whether the acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman, made perfect in every respect, excepting the subsequent enrolment of it in the Court of C. P. is sufficient, and whether without such enrolment a purchaser is bound to accept a title under it. The plaintiff submits he is not. The question entirely depends upon the construction to be put upon the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, the Fines and Recoveries Act. Secs. 77, 81, 86, 87, and 88, are the most important in reference to it; the 77th provides that a married woman, with her husband's concurrence, may dispose of lands, &c. as a feme sole, in manner there described; the 81th states that when a married woman shall acknowledge a deed, the person taking the acknowledgment is to sign a memorandum and a certificate of the taking of such acknowledgment to the effect there mentioned; the 85th requires that certificate, with an affidavit verifying it, to be lodged with an Officer of the Court of C. P. who is to cause the same to be filed of record in that Court; and the 86th, that when the certificate of the acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman shall be so filed of record as aforesaid, the deed so acknowledged shall, so far as regards the disposition, release, surrender, or extinguishment, thereby made by any married woman, whose acknowledgment shall be so certified concerning any lands or money comprised in such deed, take effect from the time of its being acknowledged, and the subsequent filing of such certificate as aforesaid shall have relation to such acknowledgment. The Report of the Real Property Commissioners was referred to, also Hayes on Conveyancing, 672.

Alexander, Q. C. and Pigott contrà, contended that the interest of the married woman being conveyed and disposed of according to the Act, the title was good, as her interest had passed, notwithstanding the documents required had not been filed of record. It was also contended that notwithstanding this acknowledgment might not have been perfected, yet still the title was good even without that. [This latter point was objected to by the plaintiff's counsel, the only question being, as they contended, upon the effect of the nonfiling the certificate, &c. and such point only appearing upon the notes furnished by Wightman J. the Court, so decided.]

POLLOCK, C. B.—I am of opinion that this rule should be discharged; the several sections of the 3 & 4 Wm 4, c. 74, make it essential that this document should be not only acknowledged, but the proper certificate and affidavit should be duly filed of record in the Court of C. P.; and, on filing the same, the deed by relation is to take effect from the time of its acknowledgment; the officer with whom they are lodged is to make an index of the same, and to deliver out copies of such certificates so filed, which is to be received as evidence of the acknowledgment of the deed to which such certificate shall refer. It is impossible, as it seems to me, after reading the whole of these clauses to arrive at any different conclusion; that appears to be the clear intention expressed by the Act, and the object of the Legislature. This is the first case that has been, I believe, decided upon the subject, and the Court thought that, under the circumstances, it would be right to grant a rule nisi, that the matter might be discussed and then determined. We are all now of opinion that to make the title perfect these documents should be filed of record, according to the provisions of the Act of Parliament; this rule, therefore, must be discharged.

PLATT and MARTIN, BB. delivered similar judgments. Rule discharged.

Re an Appeal between THE GOVERNORS OF THE BEDFORD GENERAL INFIRMARY, Appellants; and THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE BEDFORD IMPROVEMENT, Respondents. (a)

Rate—Public building—Frontage on footpath and highway.

The 43 Geo. 3, c. 128, s. 59, imposes a rate of a shilling on all halls, gaols, chapels, meeting-houses, schools, alms-houses, and other public buildings, for every yard running measure of the length in front.

Held, that a general infirmary was a public building liable to be rated under the above section, and that it was liable to be rated for the frontage abutting on a footway as well as for that abutting on the highway.

This was a special case from the quarter sessions, stated for the opinion of the Court under the provisions of a recent Act (12 & 13 Vict. c. 45). It was an appeal against an assessment for the improvement of the town of Bedford. The questions raised were, whether the Bedford Infirmary was a "public building" within the meaning of the Bedford Improvement Act, and therefore rateable; and also whether, if rateable, the commissioners had adopted the correct mode of rating.

Worlledge, on behalf of the commissioners, contended that the building in question did fall within the Act, which rendered liable all halls, chapels, schools, meeting-houses, almshouses, and all other public buildings, and embraced existing and all future erections. As to the mode of rating, he contended that the principle on which the rate was to be assessed was settled last Term (The Justices of Bedford, Appellants, v. The Commissioners of Bedford Improvement, Respondents, 19 Law T. Rep. 112), and that the building in question was rateable under the Act for the whole length of its frontage, whether it extended along a footpath or way, or along a turnpike or carriage road.

Pearse, for the trustees of the infirmary, submitted that the Act should be limited to buildings ejusdem generis, and that this building did not come within that rule. As to the mode of rating, he denied the liability to be rated for the frontage along the footpath, and confined the liability to the frontage extending along the turnpike road to the width of the entrance gates, the building in question standing within a large enclosed area. He cited Casher v. Holmes, 2 B. & Adol. 592; Blanford v. Morrison, 15 Q. B. 724.

POLLOCK, C. B.—We are all agreed that this infirmary is a public building within the Act, and I am of opinion that the rate must be assessed for so much of this property as abuts on the Ampthill-road, and so much as leads up to the pasture grounds. [A plan, which was to be taken as a part of the case, was marked by the respective counsel.] If this is not a public building, what is it? It is an infirmary supported by annual subscriptions and donations, and I think clearly comes within that denomination. Well, then, the question is, how is it to be rated? The Act makes no distinction between a public highway and a footpath, and I therefore think that the portion of this property subject to the rate is to the extent I have before stated, and I think when you are to apply the expression in the Act to a church-yard, which, although having no entrance to the highway, would still be liable, the whole of the area of these premises abutting on the Ampthill-road, and so far as the pasture is liable to be rated, whether occupied by the actual building or used as a yard or garden.

(a) These commissioners receive their powers under the Act 43 Geo. 3, c. 128 (local and per.), the 59th section of which provides "That the sum of 1s. and no more, shall yearly be rated and assessed upon all halls, gaols, chapels, meeting-houses, schools, alms-houses (except the alms-houses founded by Christie Skinner, deceased), and other public buildings, churchyards, chapel-yards, and meeting-house yards within the said town, for every yard running measure of the length in front of such halls, gaols, chapels, meeting-houses, schools, alms-houses, and other public buildings, churchyards, chapel-yards, and meeting-house-yards," &c.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion. I think a public building means a building not used for private purposes, and this I think is clearly a public building. We decided last term that for the purpose of being rated the four sides of a building abutting severally on four different streets are fronts of that building, and applying that principal to this case I think there is no difficulty in determining that the appellants are liable to this rate.

PLATT and MARTIN, BB. concurred.

Judgment for the respondents accordingly, but, as they had rated the hospital for a part of its front along private property, as well as the turnpike and footpath, in respect of which there was certainly no liability, the judgment to be without costs.

Re an Appeal between THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE BEDFORD UNION, Appellants; and THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE BEDFORD IMPROVEMENT, Respondents.

The 13 Geo. 3, c. 98, exempted the Bedford House of Industry from all parochial and Parliamentary taxes, other than those at the time of the passing of that Act imposed: the 43 Geo. 3, c. 128, subjected all public buildings to a rate for the improvement of the town:

Held, that the latter enactment had the effect of repealing the former so far as related to the rate in question.

This case also came before the Court on a special case, and, in addition to the two points mentioned in the first case, it involved a third question, viz. whether, as by the 19th section of the "Bedford House of Industry Act," 43 Geo. 3, c. 98, the building in question was declared to be exempt from all parochial and Parliamentary taxes other than those at that date imposed on it, it could be made liable to be rated under the Improvement Act, which passed subsequently.

Worlledge, for the respondents, contended that the latter Act must prevail.

Pearse, for the appellants, was called on, and contended that the two Acts were not inconsistent. He cited Williams v. Pritchard, 4 T. R. 2; Palmer v. Earith, 14 M. & W. 428.

At the close of the argument,

The COURT gave judgment in favour of the commissioners, that the guardians were liable to be rated for the Kimbolton-road frontage: rate to be amended by striking out the south side, with the like exception as to costs.

Judgment for the respondents accordingly.

TAMBISCO v. PACIFICO.

Security for costs—Foreigner.

This Court will not compel a plaintiff who is a foreigner to give security for costs, where he is at the time actually in this country, and makes an affidavit, stating that he intends to remain here until judgment in the action.

An application had been made in this case to a learned judge at chambers, to compel the plaintiff, who was a foreigner, his permanent residence being abroad, but who had come to this country for the purpose only of bringing this action, to give the defendant security for costs. No order was made, and a rule nisi having been obtained for that purpose.

Willes shewed cause, and contended that, although the authorities may be said to be somewhat conflicting, yet the better opinion was that the plaintiff, under circumstances like the present, should not be obliged to give security for costs; indeed, he had stated in his affidavit that he was a foreigner and stranger, and it was impossible he could give security; that he had come to this country for the express purpose of bringing this action, and intended to remain here until judgment was given. The cases shew that a foreigner in this country, though his permanent residence be abroad, yet if his visit here be anything more than of a merely temporary nature, he will not be compelled to give this security. (Ciraguo v. Hassan, 6 Taunt. 20; Anon. 8 Taunt. 737; Anon. 3 Moore, 78; and Dowling v. Harman, 6 M & W. 131.) The only case the other way appeared to be Oliva v. Johnson, 5 B. and Ald. 908.

T. Jones, contrà. The plaintiff states that he intends to remain in this country until judgment: no doubt; and then, if judgment is against him, he will immediately return to Athens. He says he is here only for the purpose of this action, which is a good reason for the defendant to ask for security. Oliva v. Johnson, 5 B. and Ald. 908; Gurney v. Key, 3 Dowl. 559; and Naylor v. Joseph, 10 Moore, 552, are strong authorities for the defendant. The cases are conflicting upon the subject, and that being so, the reasonable rule to be adopted is that the plaintiff should give security. [MARTIN, B.—Oliva v. Johnson was determined on the last day of Term.]

POLLOCK, C.B.—I think this rule should be discharged; the point has been decided already by this Court, in the case of Dowling v. Harman (reported in the 6th M. & W. 131). The Court there determined not to grant such an application as this, where the plaintiff, though a foreigner, and usually resident abroad, is at the time actually in this country. That rule seems so reasonable, and the contrary proposition so unreasonable, that it would be matter of surprise if it were otherwise, for then every foreigner who came to this country to enforce his rights, and could not give security, would necessarily be shut out from remedy. The plaintiff states that he came from Athens to this country entirely for the purpose of bringing and trying this action, and shall remain here until judgment is obtained. I think, therefore, the case of Dowling v. Harman governs the present; that case appears to be in accordance with most of the other cases upon the same subject, and is the one by which we are bound.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion. It is requisite for a plaintiff to state in his affidavit that he is actually resident in this country, to prevent a stay of the proceedings until security for costs be given; and, looking at the plaintiff's affidavit in this case (not as if there were a special demurrer to it), it would seem to be sufficient; the statement of the fact that he is resident here is the criterion, and he says he is resident in this country.

PLATT, B.—I thought that the rule in this court was uniform upon this subject—namely, that the Court will not grant a stay of proceedings until security for costs be given, where the plaintiff, although a foreigner, usually resident abroad, is at the time actually resident in this country; the plaintiff in this case states in his affidavit that he is resident here, that he came over for the purpose of the action, and intends to remain until judgment; that seems to be sufficient.

MARTIN, B.—I am of the same opinion. Baron Parke lays down the rule very clearly in 6 M. & W.; if there had been a difference in the general practice in the Q.B. I think he would have then recollected it.

REG. (on the prosecution of William Major and Others) v. THOMAS MAJOR.

Indictment—Certiorari—Costs.

The defendant was indicted for perjury, and he removed the indictment by certiorari, entering into the usual recognizance for costs. Upon the trial he was found guilty and afterwards sentenced. The prosecutors were parties who would have been injured if the perjury had been successful, which it was not:

Held, that notwithstanding the perjury had failed in its object, the prosecutors were entitled to their costs under the 5 & 6 Wm. & M. c. 11, s. 3, as "parties grieved or injured" within the meaning of that section.

In this case the defendant had been prosecuted and found guilty of perjury under the following circumstances:—A will under which the prosecutors were interested was the subject of a suit in Chancery, and was referred to one of the Masters for certain purposes; a state of facts was brought before such Master, alleging that the defendant was indebted to the estate in a certain sum of money; the defendant opposed such state of facts, and one of the affidavits filed by him in support of his opposition became the subject of the present indictment for perjury in the Central Criminal Court, which, however, was removed by the defendant into this court, and upon his trial he was found guilty, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment; subsequently the attorney for the prosecution delivered his bill of costs against the defendant for the prosecution of such indictment, together with an appointment to tax the same before the Master of the Crown Office. Upon the taxation, the defendant appeared and objected to such taxation, upon the ground that the prosecutors were not directly injured by the act which was the subject of the indictment, the perjury having failed in its object, and that he was not, therefore, liable to the payment of their costs. Upon this the Master postponed his taxation, that the question might be raised in this court.

Willes now, therefore, moved for a rule calling upon the prosecutors to shew cause why the side-bar rule for the taxation of costs should not be set aside; and he contended that as the perjury of the defendant was defeated before any injury was effected by it, the prosecutors were not entitled to their costs under the 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 11, s. 3, which enacts that "if the defendant prosecuting such writ of certiorari be convicted of the offence for which he was indicted, then the said Court of King's Bench shall give reasonable costs, if he be the party grieved or injured," &c.; that the object contemplated by the perjury was not effected, and that the case came therefore within the ruling in R. v. Ingleton, 1 Wils. 139, cited in 1 Burn's Jus. 577, where it was held that the Act does not apply to persons merely intended to be grieved, but only to those who have suffered actual injury. In that case, the defendant was indicted for attempting to set fire to the house of one Easton, and the indictment also charged that he solicited Mason, one of the prosecutors, to assist him; and upon Mason and one Glenton informing the mayor of this, they were both bound over to prosecute. The indictment was removed by certiorari by the defendant, and he was convicted; and upon its being afterwards urged that the defendant was obliged to pay the prosecutor's costs, the Court said, "This case is not within the Act, for the Act extends only to officers and persons really injured, which neither Glenton nor Mason are, for there was no damage done to the house, but only intended to be done, nor are either of them officers."

WIGHTMAN, J.—I do not think that case applies. Suppose a rule to shew cause in a suit were obtained in this Court, upon a false affidavit, but that, notwithstanding the Court should reject the affidavit, there should be other circumstances which should induce the Court to make the rule absolute, and the party should be indicted for perjury, would that not be within the Act, because the perjury had not been successful? Unless a perjury is successful, no one can be injured; and if that be the test, this Act would not apply to any case of unsuccessful perjury, which is certainly a startling proposition.

BAIL COURT.

Willes.—It may be so; still the Act gives costs only to the party grieved or injured. The case cited is strong upon the point.

WIGHTMAN, J.—In that case the act was not completed; it was a mere intent and a solicitation, and nothing was really done. Such a case as the present is a very common one, and yet it has never before been questioned. In my opinion, it is sufficient if the act is completed, and may have caused a damage. Here the false swearing obliges the prosecutors to take steps to defeat its object. I think that, supposing the perjury had been ultimately successful, any particular party would have been injured thereby, such party is within the meaning of the Act. Rule refused.

Tuesday, June 1.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

REG. v. JOHN JAMES, CHARLES STADEN, and JOHN BROOM.

Certiorari to remove an indictment.

The Court refused to grant a certiorari to remove an indictment when found at the ensuing assizes, as by so doing it could not be tried at such assizes:

Semble, that where an indictment is to be tried at the assizes, the Court will not listen to any suggestion of prejudice on the part of the jury.

In this case the three defendants had been committed by certain justices at Brighton to take their trial at the last assizes for Sussex, upon a charge of conspiring to cheat the prosecutor at cards. They were subsequently admitted to bail. No bill was, however, preferred at such assizes, in consequence of the absence of the prosecutor, but it was believed that one might be preferred at the ensuing assizes.

Parry now moved for a certiorari to remove such indictment when found into this court, that it may be tried upon the civil side of the assizes, and he grounded his application upon an affidavit which alleged that the prosecution was got up for corrupt purposes; that the defendants were anxious to have the assistance of Queen's Counsel; that important questions of law were likely to arise; and that as they feared a petty jury would be prejudiced against them, they were desirous of being tried by a special jury.

WIGHTMAN, J. thought that he ought to refuse the rule, particularly as by granting it (as the indictment was not yet found) the effect would be to postpone the trial of the indictment over the next assizes; and also as he could not suppose that where a jury are selected from the whole county it would be prejudiced against the defendants.

Writ refused.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF SURREY, re THE INHABITANTS OF ABINGER.

Indictment for non-repair of a highway—Costs of prosecutor—Order for indictment.

The parish surveyors were summoned for not repairing a road; when upon their disputing their liability the justices made an order under sec. 95 of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, for an indictment against the inhabitants. To this indictment the defendants pleaded the liability of the occupier of a certain farm to repair the road ratione tenuræ, and upon the trial the jury found for the defendants. Upon this the prosecutor applied to the Sessions for an order for his costs, which was refused.

Upon an application to this Court for a mandamus to the justices to make an order for the costs of the prosecution, it appeared that one of the justices who made the order for the indictment was the landlord of the farm, the tenant of which was found by the verdict liable to repair the road, and hence, that he was an interested party; and so the order for the indictment was void.

It did not appear, however, that upon the application to the justices at special sessions anything was said about the liability of the tenant of the farm to repair; nor did it appear that there was any collusion whatever between the justice who was the landlord of the farm, and the prosecutor:

Held, that in making the order for the indictment the justices were acting ministerially, and that the interest of the justice was not such as rendered the order void, and that the section as to costs being imperative if the proceedings were regular, the prosecutor was entitled to his costs.

In this case Pitt Taylor had in Easter Term obtained a rule calling upon the justices of Surrey to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding them to direct the costs of the prosecutor in this case to be paid to him, as directed by sec. 95 of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50.

The rule was obtained upon the following statement of facts.

Application having been made to justices, under sec. 94 of the above Act, for an order for the repair of a highway, the surveyor appeared and disputed the duty and obligation of the parish to repair, whereupon the justices, pursuant to sec. 95, directed a bill of indictment to be presented at the next Quarter Sessions for Surrey against the inhabitants of the parish, which was accordingly done. To this indictment the parish pleaded the liability of another party to repair, namely, the occupier of a farm called "Abraham's Farm," ratione tenuræ. At the trial, which was at a sessions subsequent to the finding of the bill, the jury found for the defendants, and hereupon the prosecutor applied for his costs under sec. 95, which enacts, that "the costs of such prosecution shall be directed by the judge of assize before whom the said indictment is tried, or by the justices at such quarter sessions, to be paid out of the rate made and levied in pursuance of this Act, in the parish in which such highway shall be situate," &c. The Sessions, however, refused to give the prosecutor his costs. Upon moving for the rule nisi, it was contended that the Sessions were wrong, for that the section is imperative, and gives the Sessions no discretion upon the subject, the prosecutor being entitled in any event to the costs of the prosecution; and Reg. v. Yorkhill, 9 C. & P. 218; and Reg. v. Pembridge, 3 Q. B. 903, were cited.

Upon shewing cause, an affidavit was used, which disclosed that one of the three justices who made the order for preferring the indictment, was a Mr. Lee Steere, who was the landlord of the farm called "Abraham's Farm," which was then occupied by his tenant, and which by the verdict of the jury was found to be liable to repair the road; and that Mr. Steere took an active part at the trial in assisting the counsel for the prosecution, though he did not sit as a justice, or take any part whatever upon the trial in his character of a justice. It did not appear that at the hearing before the petty sessions, when the order for the indictment was made, that any mention whatever was made of the liability of the occupier of Abraham's Farm to repair, or that anything transpired upon the subject until plea pleaded.

Pashley, Q.C. and B. Robinson, shewed cause (8th May), and they contended that as Mr. Lee Steere was one of the justices who signed the order for the prosecution, and he became an interested party, that the order was invalid, and that consequently the trial and all proceedings upon it were void. (R. v. Martin, 2 Q. B. 1037; R. v. The Cheltenham Commissioners, 1 Q.B. 467; and R. v. The Justices of Hertfordshire, 6 Q. B. 753.) [WIGHTMAN, J.—The justice, in making the order decides nothing; he merely puts the law into operation.] It is final as to the proceedings to be taken. Also the statute directs that the bill of indictment is to be preferred at the next general quarter sessions, and the costs of the prosecution are to be directed by the justices at such quarter sessions; and in the present case the indictment was not tried at the next sessions, but at the sessions after, when they had no jurisdiction. (R. v. Belton, 11 Q.B. 379.) [WIGHTMAN, J. — You must go the length of saying that the entire proceedings were void. If you can make out that the prosecutor and Mr. Steere were acting in collusion with each other, there would be great force in your argument that the proceedings were void, but there is no evidence of that.] The justices at sessions have a discretion to inquire as to whether or not the original order was good. (R. v. Chedworth, 9 C. & P. 28; R. v. Heanor, 6 Q.B. 745.)

Pitt Taylor and Sumner, in support of the rule, argued, that it was imperative upon the Sessions, to make the order for costs, as decided by the cases of R. v. Yorkhill, 9 C. & P. 218; and R. v. Pembridge, 3 Q. B. 903; that in the cases of R. v. Chedworth, 9 C. & P. 28, and R. v. Heanor, 6 Q. B. 745, in which it was held that the prosecutor was not entitled to costs, the finding of the jury negatived the road being a highway at all. [WIGHTMAN, J.—The question is simply, whether or not the order for the indictment is good; for if it be, the Sessions were bound to grant the costs.] The order itself discloses no interest, nor did any appear at the time the order was made; it only arises in consequence of the plea pleaded by the defendants. The surveyor merely denied the liability of the parish in general terms, without throwing the liability upon any other party. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Is it not a question of fact, whether or not, at the time of the making of the order, Mr. Steere was interested? He may have well known that the parish was not liable to repair, and that he was.] At the trial he took no part in the proceedings as a justice, and it was at that time that the question of fact was decided. But making the order was not a judicial act, but merely a ministerial one, for the justices were bound to make the order on the liability of the parish being disputed. Ex parte Stanton, 21 L. J. 7, Bktcy. as to what is a judicial and what a ministerial act. [WIGHTMAN, J.—That is the real question; because, if this is merely a ministerial Act, it would not be void.] The Quarter Sessions had no jurisdiction to inquire as to whether or not the original order was bad, and there is no evidence to shew that Mr. Steere believed he was interested.

[The point as to the next Sessions was abandoned.]

Cur. adv. vult.

WIGHTMAN, J. now gave judgment as follows:—This was an application to make a rule absolute for a mandamus to the justices of Surrey to allow the costs of the prosecutor of an indictment, against the inhabitants of the parish of Abinger for non-repair of a highway. The indictment had been preferred by the prosecutor, Richard Gates, at the Quarter Sessions, by the order of three justices at a special sessions of the highways under the 94th and 95th sections of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50. The parish pleaded that John Chapman was liable to repair the highway as occupier of a farm called Abraham's Farm, ratione tenuræ, and upon the trial a verdict was found for the parish. The prosecutor applied for his costs under the 95th section, which were refused on the ground that one of the three magistrates who made the order for preferring the indictment was himself the landlord of Abraham's Farm, and so interested in the matter in respect of which he made the order. There was no doubt that Mr. Lee Steere, one of the justices who made the order, was the landlord of Abraham's Farm; and it appeared by the affidavit, that at the trial of the indictment he sat by the counsel for the prosecution and assisted him: and there can be no doubt but that when the parish sought to excuse themselves from the repair of the highway by alleging the liability of the tenant of Abraham's Farm, Mr. Lee Steere was interested in the result, as it would deteriorate the value of the farm if it was charged with the repair of the highway. The question, however, is not whether he was interested in the question raised by the plea, but whether he had such an interest at the time the order was made as would disqualify him from acting, or if he had any interest, it was such as could have influenced either his own conduct, or have enabled him to influence the conduct of the other magistrates who acted with him. There does not appear upon the affidavits any sufficient ground for imputing collusion between Gates, the prosecutor, and Mr. Steere previous to or at the time of obtaining the order. Gates, indeed, appears to have been a bonâ fide prosecutor, and to have cared little who was liable to repair, provided the road was made good. It appeared that he had complained to a previous tenant of Abraham's Farm a few months before going before the justices, of the road being out of repair, and said that he would have it repaired; and that, upon the tenant's saying that the parish had done no repairs to the road, but that he, the tenant, had done them during the tenancy (which was seventeen years), Gates said that he should indict the road and find out to whom it did belong; that the tenant did some repairs to the road after this in the presence of Gates himself, but the road still remaining out of repair, he summoned the surveyor of the parish, under 94th section of the Act, to appear before the justices at the special sessions for the highways. The surveyors of the parish accordingly attended at the special sessions, which were holden before three justices, of whom one was Mr. Lee Steere, and no question was made but that the way was a highway, and that it was out of repair. But the surveyor alleged that the parish were not bound to repair the road, but did not state or suggest who ought to do so, or that any other person or persons was or were liable to repair it. The three magistrates, including Mr. Steere, then made the order for preferring an indictment against the parish. The first and most important question is, could the magistrates have done otherwise as the case appeared before them, than make the order? The statute in the 94th and 95th sections provides that if a highway is out of repair, and information on oath is given to a justice, he may issue a summons to the surveyor of the parish, or other person chargeable with the repairs to appear before the justices at a special sessions for the highways, and if upon the hearing of the summons, the obligation to repair is denied by the surveyor on behalf of the inhabitants, or by any other party charged therewith, it is lawful for the justices, and they are thereby required to direct an indictment against the inhabitants of the parish, or the party to be named in such order, and the costs of such prosecution shall be directed by the justices at the Quarter Sessions, if the indictment is tried before them, to be paid out out of the rate made in pursuance of the Act in the parish in which the highway is situate. The parish is, in every case, primâ facie liable to the repair of the highways within it, and though Gates might have been told that the tenant of Abraham's Farm usually repaired the highway in question, he would be well warranted in summoning the persons primâ facie liable, namely, the parish, by means of the surveyors, and leaving them to discharge the parish if they could, by showing a liability in some other person. But it was not suggested on the part of the parish, that the tenant of Abraham's Farm, or any other person than the parish was liable. It was not made a question whether the parish or somebody else was liable, and as the statute is in terms imperative, I do not see how the justices could do otherwise than make the order, nor how any interest that Mr. Steere might have in the question that the parish afterwards raised, could influence or affect the making of the order. As the case stood at the time the order was made, I am at some loss to discover such an interest in Mr. Steere as would make the order bad because he joined in it. If the affidavit shewed that the summons was taken out, and the indictment preferred at his instigation, and that Gates was not a real prosecutor, but colluding with Steere, the case would assume a very different character; but Gates appears, as far as I can judge from the affidavits, to have been a bonâ fide prosecutor, and it would certainly be hard upon him to lose his costs, because the order which the magistrates could not refuse as the case stood, was signed by one who had an interest in the question which was subsequently raised, but which was not raised when the order was made. If it had been suggested to the justice, that the tenant of Abraham's Farm was liable, and the question had been whether he or the parish should be indicted, and Mr. Steere had joined in an order to indict the parish, I should certainly have thought the order void on that ground. But no such suggestion was made, and the justices could only order the indictment against the parish. The question is not whether the parish or Mr. Steere shall pay the costs, as he cannot be liable to pay them in any view of the case, but whether Gates shall lose them, because Steere, over whom he had no control, joined in making the order. I certainly concur in the decisions that if any part be taken in a judicial act by a person who is interested in it, such act is void; but it seems to me that, in making the order in question, the magistrates were not called upon to exercise any judgment; and that, as the case was presented to them, they could only make the same order whether Mr. Steere was landlord of Abraham's Farm or not, and that that circumstance was not material, and could have no influence in making the order. It appears to me, upon the whole, that the order is not void, for the reasons I have mentioned; and that as no collusion is shewn between Gates and Steere in obtaining the order, and as Gates appears to have been a bonâ fide prosecutor, he ought to have had his costs, it being imperative upon the Court of Quarter Sessions to grant them, unless the order or the conduct of the prosecutor can be impeached. I am the more disposed to make the rule absolute, as I do not conclude the parties by doing so, though I should if I refused it. A return may be made to the mandamus, if the parish or the magistrates are dissatisfied with my opinion, or wish to add further facts, which may alter the view which I have taken of the case. The rule, therefore, will be absolute.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF KENT, ex parte WAGHORNE.

Certiorari to bring up a conviction that it may be quashed for want of jurisdiction.

Horne moved for a certiorari to bring up a conviction made against the applicant, Waghorne, by two justices of the county of Kent, in order that it might be quashed. It appeared that the conviction was made under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, s. 6, the offence being the making use of a false certificate in order to obtain a license to keep a beer-house. The objection to the conviction was that the justices had acted without jurisdiction, the offence being committed by an application to the justices in petty sessions at Maidstone, within which petty sessional division the house was situate, and it was sworn that the justices of Maidstone had exclusive jurisdiction over all offences within their jurisdiction, and not mere local jurisdiction. The county justices had acted as if they had concurrent jurisdiction in Maidstone, which they had not. He cited and referred to 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c 53, s. 6; 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 85; and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, s. 6.

Ex parte HAYLOCK.—In this case Mr. Haylock had been charged before certain justices of the Isle of Ely, with having written upon the pavement certain defamatory words referring to a Mr. Watt, and he was thereupon ordered to enter into recognisances to keep the peace, or be committed for a certain term; and as he did not enter into such recognisances, he was committed accordingly. He then obtained a writ of habeas corpus, and on its return, he was ordered by this Court to be discharged. (See Ex parte John Haylock, 19 Law T. Rep. 125.) The order having also been returned by certiorari, it now became necessary, pursuant to the 11 & 12 Vict. c 44, s. 2, before any ulterior steps can be taken on behalf of Mr. Haylock, that such order should be quashed. Prentice now moved accordingly. Rule nisi.

CHARD v. CHARD.

Solicitor and client—Change of solicitor—Purchase of a suit by one solicitor from another—Practice—A suit ought not to be the subject of a purchase.

The Court discountenances the practice of one solicitor, either in person or by agent, acting for more than one party to a suit.

Can solicitors to whom the conduct of a suit has been transferred, claim the costs when they have not been entered upon the record?

This was an appeal from a decision of the Vice-Chancellor, Knight Bruce, who dismissed the petition, but without costs.

Bacon and Willcock were for the appellant.

Rolt and Bickner for the respondents.

The facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of the present report, appear in the

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is a case of a very unusual nature. An administration suit was instituted by a Mrs. Chard (the petitioner), who employed as her solicitor a Mr. Lord, who was also concerned as solicitor for some of the defendants. Mrs. Chard entered into an agreement with this gentleman, under the terms of which she was to make to him periodical payments for certain expenses; the remainder of the costs were to be paid at the conclusion of the proceedings, and he was to deliver to her, from time to time, taxed bills of costs. Mr. Lord accordingly commenced and conducted the suit until the end of Hilary Term, 1843: at that time, feeling incompetent to go on, very probably for want of funds, he entered into a negociation with Messrs. Blake and Tamplin, which led to an agreement, under which Mr. Lord agreed to transfer the suit to these gentlemen for 50*l*.; in fact, they bought all the interest that might arise to Mr. Lord from the further prosecution of the suit for 50*l*. From February 1843 to December 1844, these gentlemen did the whole of the work relating to the suit, but the change of solicitors upon the record was not made until the latter date. Mr. Lord did not communicate to Mrs. Chard that he had so transferred the suit, and he was considered and treated by her as if he were still the solicitor. We find Mrs. Chard advancing money to him down to December 1844. The suit was bought by Messrs. Blake and Tamplin from February 1843—that is not disputed; but Mrs. Chard went on advancing Lord money for costs precisely in the same way as she had been accustomed to; he received all the costs as if he had done all the labour, and he received them without the knowledge of Messrs. Blake and Tamplin. These gentlemen were substituted as the plaintiff's solicitors by an order dated in February 1843, but Mr. Lord continued on the record as solicitor for some of the defendants down to December 1844. Now without saying whether under such a state of circumstances, solicitors, who had not been solicitors on the record, could claim costs, even assuming that they had actually performed all the work—yet I do hold that Messrs. Blake and Tamplin are bound to allow Mrs. Chard for these payments. They must be presumed to have known of their having been made to Mr. Lord: independently of the question which I have suggested, I think, according to their own shewing, and on their own agreement, they must be considered as acting for Mr. Lord; and this view is borne out by the evidence which is now before the Court. The effect of the agreement between Messrs. Blake and Tamplin and Mr. Lord was to place the former in the shoes of the latter, and bound by all the equities affecting him. They say there was a mistake as to the terms under which they purchased the suit, and that they had acted on the ground that Mr. Lord was the solicitor concerned for all parties; he represented himself to have been so, when, in point of fact, he was not: whatever the real facts were, I cannot permit them to say that that which they took under this agreement was not properly obtained. They were bound to inquire, and I cannot allow them to plead ignorance of the relationship subsisting between Mr. Lord and their client. From the time of the agreement they did all the work as her regular attorneys, and by the agreement which they had made, they must be considered as representing Mr. Lord; he transferred the suit to them. Then it has been attempted to be shewn that these gentlemen are not entitled to the costs, although it has been clearly shewn that they did the work. Now if Mr. Lord was entitled to the costs from Mrs. Chard, Messrs. Blake and Tamplin were entitled to receive them from Mr. Lord, because, as I have already said, they bought them of Mr. Lord. Now I must say the Court does not and will not countenance one solicitor acting for all parties, and I fear there is a very general practice, but one not at all to be approved of, for a solicitor who is concerned for several parties, to represent some of them by one of his clerks, who may have been admitted an attorney. This course I consider reprehensible, and one that ought to meet with the censure of this Court. The costs of the suit which was instituted by Mrs. Chard have been made a source of traffic. A suit ought not to be bought; it is not a thing to be bought and sold; but as Messrs. Blake and Tamplin have bought it, I hold them to be bound by all the equities which existed between Mr. Lord and Mrs. Chard. I hold them bound by every thing which took place prior to Hilary Term 1843, between Mr. Lord and Mrs. Chard. They were bound to inquire, and I cannot allow them to say they were ignorant of the relationship that existed between those persons. Messrs. Blake and Tamplin, in buying this suit, were entitled to take all the benefits arising from the purchase, and those benefits they must take cum onere. The order that I shall make will be, that the costs of the suit be paid to Messrs. Blake and Tamplin, they repaying to Mrs. Chard any sums paid by her to Mr. Lord previously to the order of December, 1844, appointing those gentlemen her solicitors. I shall follow the order of the Vice-Chancellor, by refusing to make any order on this petition as to costs.

Re HERTFORD CHARITIES.

Costs of the appearance of trustees on a petition to which there was no opposition disallowed.

This was a petition for the confirmation of the Master's report for the appointment of new trustees of the charity, which consisted of three particular subjects.

Giffard appeared in support of the petition, which was presented under Sir Samuel Romilly's and the Municipal Corporation Acts, and asked, under particular circumstances, for payment of the costs out of pocket only out of the surplus funds arising from a sum of Consols standing to the credit of one of the subjects. There were no other available funds. The costs of a former petition had been paid out of that fund.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—On such a point I decline to follow the authority of my predecessors. The other subjects of the charity have an interest in the appointment of the trustees. These subjects are of value. They must bear their proportion of the costs.

Walker appeared for certain of the trustees, and asked for his costs, and stated that according to the modern practice he was entitled to receive them. He had been served.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Whatever the practice may be, in this case I cannot allow them. I do not admit it to be as stated, but were it so, I should break through the rule. Had there been any difficulty of construction, or other extraordinary circumstance, it might have been right for you to have appeared; but where there is no opposition to the confirmation of the report, and no necessity for an appearance on the part of the trustees, I cannot allow the charities to be put to the expense of a useless proceeding.

SEAGRAVE v. POPE.

Building society—Construction of rules—Terms of redemption.

A. B. the owner of shares in a benefit building society, constituted under the Act 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 32, received from the society 541l. as an advance on his shares, and gave the society a mortgage on leasehold property. A question being subsequently raised as to the terms on which A. B. was entitled to redeem:

Held, on a redemption bill filed by A. B. that the mortgage was a security to the society not only for the sum actually advanced, and interest, but also for all payments to which, according to the rules of the society, A. B. would be liable during the entire period calculated for the duration of the society.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, who held that the plaintiff, Mr. Fleming, who had contracted to sell the mortgaged property to the plaintiff Seagrave, was entitled to redeem according to the terms of the deed of security and the rules of the society, on payment of the money advanced at the time his notice expired, with interest at 4*l*. per cent. from that time; and that in ascertaining the balance due he was entitled to credit for subscription moneys, but not for redemption moneys, and should be debited with such of the latter as were not paid at the expiration of the notice, but not with any monthly payment after the end of the month. The rules of the society, the security, and material facts of the case are very fully reported, 14 Law T. 524.

Bacon and Hardy, for the respondents, cited 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 32; Mosley v. Baker, 6 Hare, 87; S. C. on Appeal, 18 L. J. Ch. 457; 13 Jur. 817.

Russell, Rolt, and Terrell, for the appellant, cited Sampson v. Pattison, 1 Hare, 533.

Bacon, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is a complicated case, arising out of a question connected with a building society, the subscribers of which were to pay a certain monthly sum for a period of years, till the aggregate sums paid by all the subscribers would allow each of the subscribers to receive 100*l*. But as it was obvious that the payment of these monthly sums would amount to a considerable sum before each subscriber was paid his 100*l*. it was provided that when the 100*l*. was raised, or such a sum as the directors might think suitable, then a certain number of shares should be put up to auction, leaving it to each subscriber to make an offer for receiving his share in anticipation, by discounting the 100*l*. as it were; that is to say, by saying how much less than 100*l*. he would take in present payment, rather than wait till the prescribed period for his 100*l*. in full. Now, the mortgagor had become, at one of those auctions, the bidder for a considerable number of shares, and he gave for them certainly a large discount. Now, as the subscribers were only entitled to receive their 100*l*. when the payments they made had produced the sum of 100*l*. it became necessary that the society should have some security that that those who received their 100*l*. or so much of their 100*l*. as they chose to accept, in order to get it by anticipation, would continue still to pay up their quotas. There are many arrangements in the rules of the society for this purpose, many of them complicated and difficult, but I think they are all capable of being reconciled with each other, and with the object in view. In the present case the plaintiff gave security by executing the mortgage on his property, which is the subject of the present suit. The society said that the mortgage was given to them as security that he would continue his payments till he had paid up the sum he had originally contracted to pay—100*l*. But the mortgagor said no. According to the articles of the society he had received a certain sum of money in respect of a certain number of shares, and the security he had given was only a security for the repayment of the sum he had received and interest; and therefore he now claimed to have his property redeemed. The decision of the Court below was in support of that view. Unfortunately I have come to quite a different conclusion. I am satisfied that the security is a security to the society that he would continue to make the payments which he ought to do, and which he would have done if the society had continued on the simple plan on which it was first founded—that nobody should receive anything till all had paid up their 100*l*. and therefore that the plaintiff is not entitled to redeem the property on such terms as he had pleaded. The judgment, therefore, which I shall hand over to the registrar, is to repel this attempt to redeem, and to declare that the party is not entitled to redeem it in the way proposed by the bill. I have taken full notes of the case, and I will give a fuller judgment afterwards if the parties desire it.(a)

The present was the thirteenth minister of the congregation using and claiming to be the owners of the Meeting-house, and at the time of his election as minister, was a licentiate and ordained minister of the Established Church of Scotland. He subsequently seceded from the Established Church of Scotland, and adhered to the Free Church:

Held, affirming the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, that by such adhesion he became disqualified for the ministry of the Church of Scotland, and incapable of being minister or pastor of the Meeting-house.

Where a trust is created for religious worship, and it cannot be discovered from the deed creating the trust what was the nature of the religious worship intended by it, it must be implied from the usage of the congregation.

It is competent for a congregation acting unanimously, and with the concurrence of the trustees (if any) to introduce into their system and constitution new regulations; regulations not in contravention of any deed of trust or foundation, not subversive of the original system or constitution, and not opposed in principle to it.

Semble, that the unanimous votes of an entire congregation and their trustees could not convert a Trinitarian into a Socinian foundation, a Protestant into a Popish, or a Presbyterian into an Episcopalian Institution.

If, in a particular chapel, the doctrine preached has immemorially been uniformly consistent, and the maintenance of that doctrine formed an essential part of the object for which the chapel was founded, in such a chapel the Court will not permit a doctrine, which would be in contravention of those objects, to be preached.

Where a course of practice has long prevailed on any particular subject, the inference that it has been a just and legal course is consistent with law and reason; and if the right of a Scotch ordained minister to be minister of a particular meeting-house were to be questioned, on the ground that the original foundation was for English ordained ministers only, the fact that Scotch ministers had always been appointed would be most important, probably conclusive on the subject.

The Court will not stay the execution of a decree, pending an appeal to the House of Lords, unless it can be satisfactorily proved that its being issued will create irreparable injury.

This was an appeal from a decision of the late Vice-Chancellor Sir James Wigram. The questions involved in it were analogous to those raised in the cases of The Attorney-General v. Welsh and The Attorney-General v. Munro, and as far as the term "Protestant Dissenters" was concerned, The Attorney-General v. Shore.

The suit was instituted by information, and bill filed in the year 1846, at the relation of the plaintiffs, who were four of the surviving trustees of the Low Meeting-house at Berwick-upon-Tweed against the Rev. Alexander Murdock, the officiating minister, and the other surviving trustees of the meeting-house, and prayed a declaration that the premises comprised in an indenture of the 22nd of May, 1719, and the chapel called the Low Meeting-house, were subject to trusts for the appropriation of the same as a church or place of public religious worship on the model of the church of Scotland, and in as strict connection therewith as was practicable; that no minister or other person was qualified for, or competent to exercise the office of minister or pastor of the Low Meeting-house, not being a licentiate and recognised minister of the Church of Scotland, and in full connection therewith; that the defendant, Murdock, might be restrained by injunction from occupying or using the pulpit of the Low Meeting-house, and preaching or teaching in any manner therein, and from officiating as minister or pastor thereof, and, if necessary, might be removed by decree from his office of minister or pastor; that the defendants (Wilson, Smith, and Thompson) might be restrained by injunction from allowing the use of the pulpit to any person, and permitting any person to preach or teach as minister, not being a licentiate and recognised minister of the Church of Scotland; and from allowing the premises to be used in any other manner than as a place of public religious worship on the model of the Church of Scotland: that all necessary directions might be given for the election and appointment of a minister; and a declaration that the stated to have co-operated and concurred with the defendant Murdock, in his alleged dissent from the Church of Scotland and adherence to the Free Church, and to have insisted on his being retained as minister) had been guilty of breach of trust, and, if necessary, that they and the remaining defendants might be removed; and that new trustees might be appointed. A motion for an injunction, according to the prayer of the original bill, came on to be heard on the 31st July, 1846, when his Honour, Vice-Chancellor Wigram, made an order, "restraining the defendant, Murdock, from teaching or preaching otherwise than in conformity with the doctrines, discipline, and practice of the Established Church of Scotland."

It appeared that the defendant Murdock was elected minister or pastor of the Low Meeting-house in the year 1836, and was the thirteenth minister who had held that office since that congregation was first formed, of which the congregation then using and claiming to be the owners of the Low Meeting-house were the successors. At the time of his election to be minister, Murdock was a licentiate of and an ordained minister of the Established Church of Scotland; but it was alleged had since adhered to that body which (in consequence of the decision in the Auchterarder case) seceded from the Established Church of Scotland, and constituted what was then and now called the Free Church; and that Murdock, having then adhered to the Free Church party, had become disqualified for and was incompetent to exercise the office of minister or pastor of the aforesaid Low Meeting-house.

The first instrument under which the meeting house appeared to have been acquired by the predecessors of the present congregation was an indenture of feoffment of the 27th of September, 1717, whereby John Simpson enfeoffed John Douglas and his heirs with a burgage or tenement, barn, and garden therein described; John Douglas by lease and release, dated the 21st and 22nd of May, 1719, conveyed the premises to Stow and five others and their heirs. Stow and the three other surviving releasees in 1731 by lease and release conveyed the premises then described as "all that burgage or tenement, and garden thereto belonging, on part whereof there has been lately erected a house, now used as a meeting-house for a congregation of Protestant Dissenters," to Sibbitt and Temple and their heirs. Sibbitt and Temple, later in the year 1734, conveyed the premises by the same description to Stow and seven others, their heirs and assigns. In 1766, by indenture of lease and release made between Stow, apparently the surviving releasee named in the preceding deed, of the one part, Hodgson and several others, described as members and contributors to the support of the pastor of and belonging to the meeting-house, and John Gardner, of the other part, reciting the deeds of August 1734, and that the premises by right of survivorship were then legally vested in Stow, it was witnessed that Stow did thereby declare that the premises were so conveyed upon trust only, and to and for the people or congregation of Protestant Dissenters then known by the name of the congregation or people belonging to the Rev. Master John Turner, and to and for no other use, intent, or purpose whatsoever; and Stow thereby conveyed the same to Hodgson and the other parties of the second part, upon trust for the people or congregation then lately belonging to the said John Turner, and whereof John Gardner was then pastor or minister, and in trust and confidence that the trustees to whom the Low Meeting-house was thereby conveyed should permit the same to be used, occupied, and enjoyed as and for a meeting-house or place for the assembly of a particular church or congregation for the worship or service of God by the society or congregation of Protestant Dissenters known by the name of the congregation lately belonging to the said John Turner, and whereof the said John Gardner was then the pastor or minister, and for the use or convenience of all such others as should thereafter come into and join the said society and attend the worship of God in the said place, and should contribute and pay towards the support of the minister for the time being of the said congregation, and towards keeping the said meeting-house in repair. In this deed was contained a power of appointing new trustees, and the persons so to be appointed trustees were to be "such sober and religious persons, being Protestant Dissenters of good credit and reputation, and also members of the said meeting-house, and contributors towards the support of the pastor thereof for the time being, as were most likely to defend, perform, and promote the trusts thereinbefore expressed." The subsequent deeds, down to those of October 1835, under which the plaintiff and defendants became trustees, referred to the deed of January 1766, as expressing the trusts of the property.

Proceedings were instituted against Mr. Murdock before the presbytery of Dumfries, and in August 1845 sentence was pronounced by that presbytery, declaring that Mr. Murdock had by his own act ceased to be a licentiate of the Church of Scotland as by law established, and that he was thenceforth by law disqualified not only from receiving any presentation or appointment to a parochial or other spiritual charge in the said church of Scotland, but also from retaining the status of the minister of the said church in any place whatsoever, unless reproved by the competent ecclesiastical judicatory. Mr. Murdock had protested against the jurisdiction of the presbytery of Dumfries, and he adduced evidence in the cause for the purpose of shewing that it was not binding upon him, or that he was not thereby disqualified for the ministerial office in the Church of Scotland. The cause came on to be heard before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram on the 29th of June, 1849, and the nine following days, and on the 7th of November following his Honour Sir James Wigram, assuming that the trusts of the Low Meeting-house were declared by deed, as was the case in The Attorney-General v. Welsh, and in The Attorney-General v. Munro, and that Murdock had seceded from the Established Church of Scotland, and adhered to the Free Church, and that the act of the generally assembly of the 2nd of June applied to Murdock upon those hypotheses, decided that the case of The Attorney-General v. Munro was a direct authority entitling the plaintiffs to the relief they sought. That although it was not proved that Murdock had signed any deed of demission or other formal act by which he had in terms seceded from the Established Church of Scotland, yet his Honour considered that no such express act was necessary. The act of the general assembly of the 2nd of June, 1845, decided, that adherence to the resolution of the synod held at Berwick on the 16th of April, 1844, was alone sufficient to dissolve the connection between those adhering members and the Established Church of Scotland; and that as the act of the assembly treated the adherence itself as a repudiation of that connection, and as Mr. Murdock had so acted as to have brought himself within the scope of the act of the general assembly, his Honour decided that he was disqualified from being a minister of such Low Meeting-house, and that there was nothing to distinguish the present case from The Attorney-General v. Munro, either upon the question of removing the trustees, or upon the question of costs. From this decision the defendant Murdock and the trustees concurring with him appealed.

The Solicitor-General, Little, and T. Deere Salmon were for the relators and plaintiffs.

Rolt, Malins, and Selwyn for the defendants (the appellants).

JUDGMENT. (a)

Friday, Jan. 23.—Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—The controversy in this suit, caused by information and bill, concerns the trusts, upon which a small landed property at Berwick-upon-Tweed, on part of which stands a building called the Low Meeting-house, now Hide-hill Chapel, is held. It is, and has for many years, been a place of worship for Protestant Dissenters, that is, as the relators and plaintiffs say, for Protestant Dissenters of a particular class and description, not Protestant Dissenters generally—a limitation of the term which the appellants, who are three of the defendants, do not concede or admit. But that it has always been and ought to be continued to be used as a place of worship for Protestant Dissenters in some sense, and that of this place of worship and its connection there ought to be a settled minister, having the right, while duly retaining that office, and willing and able for the purpose, to perform its functions, are propositions common to the disputants, and to be taken for granted; as likewise is the proposition that the term Protestant Dissenters must in the cause be understood as a term used in England concerning the congregation of a place of worship situate in England. The main, or perhaps substantially the sole question, is as to the fitness and qualification for the particular ministerial office that has been mentioned, of the appellant, Mr. Murdock, and as to the fitness of the two other appellants, who are two of the trustees of the property, for the purposes to which it is applicable to continue in the trusteeship. But there is substantially no difference between the cases of the appellants, for if Mr. Murdock ought not to continue to be the minister, it seems to me plain enough that, entertaining the same views, and associated and acting together as to every thing material in this litigation, the three ought alike to be removed or retire; and if Mr. Murdock ought to be allowed to continue as the minister, there is no case against either of the other appellants. The principal or sole contention of the relators and plaintiffs (the principal respondents in this appeal) may be stated thus:—They may be considered as insisting, first, that it is absolutely necessary to a due administration of the trusts by which the property is bound, that the minister on the foundation should be, when appointed, and should, while it is minister, continue to be, in communion with the Established Church of Scotland; should when appointed, be, or have been, a licentiate of the Established Church of Scotland; and should, while the minister on the foundation, be and continue a minister of the Established Church of Scotland. They insist, in the second place, that Mr. Murdock with whom the other appellants make common cause, though when he became the minister on the foundation, and for some years afterwards, he had those qualifications, did subsequently, and before the institution of the suit, avow and pursue opinions and a line of conduct disqualifying him as a minister of the Established Church of Scotland, and ceased not only to be a minister of that church, but also to be in communion with her. Each of these propositions is combated by the appellants, who insist that Mr. Murdock is a peaceable and fit person to be and continue the minister upon this foundation; that he was so when first elected and placed on it, and that he has ever since continued to be so. Such is the main or sole issue, or such the main or sole issues before us for determination; and that determination must depend (for the controversy, if not merely of fact, is more of fact than of law) on the evidence, the admissible evidence before the Court, especially as it has been stated by the counsel on each side that they believe the cause, as it stands, to contain all the evidence capable of being usefully brought forward. His lordship thought it more convenient to deal with the second proposition of the relators first, and having read the two earliest entries from the kirk session records, shewing the manner in which Mr. Murdock's election or appointment took place, and also some minutes from the books of proceedings of the presbytery of Kelso, said, these documents lead to the inference that it was in the character of a person in communion and connection with the Established Church of Scotland,—in the character of a person qualified by doctrine, opinions, and conduct to be one of her ministers,—that Mr. Murdock was elected to be the minister upon this foundation, and that he became so in the character of an actual minister of the Established Church of Scotland. He seems to have continued in the same communion until the schism and disruption to which I must now refer, and I may state that by the words "the Established Church of Scotland," I mean that church in a Presbyterian state, and by the words "Presbyterianism," or "Presbyterian," their sense with me is to be taken as Trinitarian, and not Socinian. In the year 1843 a great secession from the Established Church of Scotland took place, an occasion on which the general assembly of that church formed and promulgated the enactment of May 1843, and which will be found stated at length in the case of The Attorney-General v. Munro, 2 De Gex and S. 180. Of this enactment Mr. Murdock disapproved. He attended and participated in the meeting or assembly of the synod of the Presbyterian Church in England, or called the synod of the Presbyterian Church in England, which took place in Hyde-hill Chapel itself in April 1844, and concurred in certain overtures and resolutions [certain passages of which his lordship read]. Soon after these proceedings the general assembly of the Established Church of Scotland enacted first, the Act of the 27th of May, 1844, and then that of the 2nd of June, 1845, both of which are set forth in the report of The Attorney-General v. Munro. In the evidence, whether documentary or parol evidence, there is not anything that I have been able to discover leading or tending to a conclusion different as concerning this part of the case from that to which, in my opinion, the documents and circumstances I have stated tend and lead—a conclusion, namely, against the appellants. It must necessarily, I think, on the materials before the Court, be taken that before and at the time of the institution of this suit Mr. Murdock had ceased to be and no longer was a minister of the Established Church of Scotland; had ceased to be and no longer was qualified to be a minister of that church; had ceased to be and no longer was in communion with her. But then comes to be considered the proposition of the materiality of that state of things, the proposition affirmed by the relators and plaintiffs and denied by the appellants, that by ceasing to be a minister of the Established Church of Scotland, by ceasing to be in connection with that church, by ceasing to be in communion with her, Mr. Murdock became disqualified and unfit to continue or be the minister upon the foundation in question. This point, depending on the evidence in the suit, considered with a due regard to the nature of the pleadings, is certainly, I think, not concluded by the deeds of 1717, 1719, 1734, and 1766, or any one or more of them, or any later deed; for I am clearly of opinion that neither the appellants' contention nor the respondents' contention is inconsistent with the language of either of those instruments. The litigants on each side say that the congregation in question is a congregation of Protestant Dissenters, and has always been so, and they assert, therefore, that Master John Turner's congregation was a congregation of Protestant Dissenters; the appellants and respondents differ, it may be, as to the meaning of the term, but that difference does not necessarily involve, does not necessarily imply, a contradiction of the deeds on either side. The affirmation or the denial that the minister on this foundation must needs be in connection or communion with the Established Church of Scotland, or must needs be a minister of that church, may well be maintained by persons submitting to be bound by every word of each of the deeds. [His lordship here thought it right to refer to some portions of the doctrines stated by Lord Eldon, in the case of Attorney-General v. Pearson; and such portions as his lordship read will be found in 3 Mer. 400, 409, 411, and 412.] It is to be observed that, subject to the question whether Erastianism, or analogous to Erastian views, is an opinion belonging to religious belief or religious doctrine, the dispute before us is not one that concerns religious belief or religious doctrines, or except as to the qualification of the pastor or minister, the form or manner of conducting Divine worship. But it cannot, I think, be considered that the manner of conducting Divine worship is not at all touched by the question, to what church in point of discipline the minister belongs, or the question whether, through his own conduct and proceedings, he has ceased to be a member of that church, of which, when chosen, he professed, and must by the electors have been thought, to be a member. Nor, if the manner of conducting Divine worship is not so touched, does it seem to me that Lord Eldon's doctrine is inapplicable to the mere qualification of the minister in other respects than those points of opinion on which the plaintiffs and defendants here are agreed. Now, it appears to me to be a just inference from the pleading and evidence, and to be a fact established, that the congregation in question was, at the time of its original formation, in the latter half of the seventeenth century, and has thenceforth to the present day continually been in theory, opinion, views, and profession, Presbyterian. It appears to me proved also that during fifty years at least next before the election of Mr. Murdock, and during sixty years at least next before the commencement of this suit, the uniform course, usage, and practice of the congregation in question and its trustees, support, I do not say conclusively establish, the contention of the relators and plaintiffs in this respect. It must, upon the evidence, be taken that during that period more than five pastors or ministers have been chosen and appointed, each one of them who preceded Mr. Murdock was, when chosen, a licentiate of the Established Church of Scotland, or an ordained minister of that church,—was, when first settled in the office, an ordained and recognised minister of that church, and so continued while in connection with this foundation; and there is not, I think, the least reason to believe that either was an Episcopalian or not a Protestant Dissenter, or not in theory, not in opinion, not in profession, or not, so far as possible, in practice, a Presbyterian. The question then appears to be whether it was originally, or had before the election of Mr. Murdock become in an effectual manner, a private law or governing and binding regulation of this congregation, that its minister or pastor at all times should be in communion with the Established Church of Scotland, should be or have been a licentiate of the Established Church of Scotland, and should be a minister of that church. It appears to me to be competent to a congregation of Dissenters acting unanimously, and with the concurrence, where they have trustees, of those trustees, to introduce effectually into their system and constitution new regulations from time to time, regulations at least not in contravention of any deed of trust or foundation, not subversive of the original system or constitution, not opposed in principle to it; but whether the unanimous votes of an entire congregation, and their trustees could be of such force as to convert a Trinitarian into a Socinian foundation, a Protestant into a Popish, a Presbyterian into an Episcopalian institution, is not a point before us. The congregation and foundation to which this suit relates were originally, or have ever been, Presbyterian. Nor is anything said by the information and bill, or done by the decree, not consistent with Presbyterianism, or not within Presbyterian limits. My opinion is, that before the year 1720, or before the year 1767, it was not necessary that the pastor or minister of this congregation should be or have been a licentiate of the Established Church of Scotland, should be a minister of the Established Church of Scotland, or should be in a state of communion with that church; it was competent to the entire congregation for the time being acting unanimously and with the concurrence of their trustee or trustees, to resolve and agree effectually (I am not saying irrevocably) that every future minister or pastor should be a person in communion with the Established Church of Scotland, should be or have been a licentiate of the Established Church of Scotland, and should be a minister of that church; such a resolution, such an agreement, was not nor would be to extend or change, though it was or might be to restrict, the class from which the minister or pastor of the congregation was to be chosen. Nor could such a restriction be in the unquestionable circumstances of the case considered absurd or unnecessarily mischievous, necessarily inexpedient, or necessarily unprincipled. I think it to be a just and correct inference from the whole of the admissible evidence that, long before the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Murdock's immediate predecessor, it was determined by the congregation, and approved by the trustees, that the minister for the time being on the foundation, should always be or have been a licentiate of the Established Church of Scotland, should always be an ordained minister of the Established Church of Scotland, and should therefore necessarily be a person in full communion with that church. The effect which a continued and unbroken usage during a considerable number of consecutive years has in this country on rights of property, or questions concerning property in various instances, is well known, and the present is a controversy about property. Whether it is affected by the statute of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, or by the principle on which the case of Lord Cholmondeley v. Lord Clinton was decided by Sir Thos. Plumer in the House of Lords, or Stocker v. Berny, The Mayor of Hull v. Horner, Beckford v. Wade, Gibson v. Clarke, Chalmer v. Bradley, Doe v. Cooke, Doe v. Lawley, Doe v. Barnard, or any other case belonging to either of the same classes, was decided, I do not express an opinion further than I have done; but certainly I view the observations of Lord Eldon in The Attorney-General v. Pearson, as not without bearing on the present cause. It has been suggested that the proximity of Berwick to Scotland, and the legal state and social condition in which, as to religion, during the latter half of the seventeenth century, and the whole of the eighteenth, Scotland and England respectively from time to time were, ought to be considered sufficient to account for the constant practice during the sixty years next preceding the suit of having as ministers or pastors upon this foundation, such persons as during that period were so, on the appellants' theory, as distinguished from that of the relators and plaintiffs: to this view I find myself unable to accede. It may be true, if we suppose the case of an office requiring to be filled by a man of learning, which, during sixty consecutive years and more has been uniformly filled by a graduate, for example, of the University of Oxford. It might be unsafe, therefore, to hold that only a graduate of Oxford could be appointed; and other such examples or cases might easily be suggested. But the circumstances of the particular occasion or instance must always be attended to. Long practice or usage as to one subject may be of more or less force, than long practice or usage as to another. The person having judicially to decide on the fact, on the weight of circumstantial evidence, on the inference to be drawn from a series of events, must form the best estimate he can judicially of the mass of materials before him, and all its particulars, and come to a conclusion accordingly. Upon the whole, the pleadings and evidence now before this Court leave me in no state of uncertainty what are the trusts to which the property in dispute is subject, and so far as the disqualification of Mr. Murdock is concerned, leave me in no state of doubt whether a breach of trust has been committed by the appellants. On this my deliberate view of the pleadings and of the evidence, I feel bound to declare the office of minister or pastor vacant, and to affirm the Vice-Chancellor's decree.

(a) This judgment of the Lords Justices is very much condensed. To insert it at length would occupy too much space. Its delivery occupied two hours and a half.

law. What were the purposes for which the founders of the Low Meeting-house in 1719 subscribed their money? For as the rights of the parties are not touched by the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 45, the meeting-house must, according to my view of the case, continue to be used for the same purposes at the present day. Where the trusts on which a chapel has been founded, have at or about the time of the foundation been declared in writing, there is not in general much difficulty in carrying them into execution. But where no such writing exists, where the Court is left to find out from mere subsequent usage what were the original purposes of the foundation, what was the doctrine which the founders considered essential to be preached, what the discipline which they considered essential to be followed, the task often becomes one of great difficulty. There will, indeed, in general be some prominent and leading points as to which no doubt will exist. If in a particular chapel the doctrine preached has, as far back as living memory can go, been uniformly consistent with what has been called orthodox dissent: that is to say, has been based on the doctrine, amongst others, of the Trinity, there can be no difficulty, in coming to the conclusion, as a matter of fact, that the maintenance of that doctrine formed an essential part of the objects for which the chapel was founded; that to preach Socinianism or modern Unitarianism would be in contravention of those objects, and so a use of the chapel which this Court would not permit. This would, I think, be a legitimate and reasonable inference independent of the consideration that the Toleration Act did not extend to those who denied the doctrine of the Trinity. The inference from usage is, from the important nature of its subject-matter, irresistible, that what has been uniformly done constitutes an essential part of the original purposes of the foundation. There are many cases in which it is hard to say, whether what has been uniformly done, has been so done because it constituted part of the original objects of the founders, or merely because it has been thought from time to time the most convenient mode of carrying those objects into effect. I confess that some grave difficulties of this nature have presented themselves to my mind in considering what ought to be taken as the purposes for which this chapel was founded, and consequently as to what are the trusts on which the building is now held by the trustees. The nature of these difficulties I shall best explain by considering the precise terms of the material parts of the decree which was made in the Court below. The decree begins by declaring that the property comprised in the indenture of the 22nd day of May, 1719, and the chapel are subject to the trusts as to such meeting-house, for the appropriation of the same as a church or place of public religious worship, on the model of the Established Church of Scotland, and as to the residue of the said property for the benefit of the congregation of the said meeting-house. Now to this part of the decree I entirely accede, understanding as I do the words "on the model of the Established Church of Scotland," to mean only "in the same mode in which worship is conducted by that church." The property was aptly and sufficiently described, in the deed of 1731, as a house then used as a meeting-house for the congregation of Protestant Dissenters. The only reason for describing it at all was to identify the property intended to be conveyed. For that purpose the description adopted was quite sufficient, and it was neither necessary nor probable that such a deed should contain any statement as to the nature of the doctrine preached, or the discipline followed within the walls of the building conveyed. And with respect to the suggestion that at the time of the foundation of the chapel Protestant Dissenters were generally inclined to overlook the differences among themselves, and to consider it a sufficient bond of union that they were opposed to the Established Church, I adopt the view taken by the Vice-Chancellor Wigram. However those principles might have prevailed in the case of a mere charitable gift in a trust, for instance, to distribute money among indigent Dissenting ministers, or indigent Dissenting poor, it never could have prevailed in the case of persons founding a chapel. In such a case the inference is almost irresistible that the founders must have contemplated the erection of a building, in which they would intend that principles of religious belief should be expounded, and religious practice be enforced, in the mode considered by them most consistent with true and genuine Christianity, and to which they had themselves been accustomed. I consider it therefore perfectly clear that the object of the foundation was the erection of a building, in which religious services should be conducted according to some definite form of worship. The question then is, according to what form? This also appears to me to be free from all doubt, according to the Presbyterian form. All the evidence shews that this has been the mode in which the worship has been conducted, as far back as there are any means of inquiry; and I am perfectly satisfied that this has been the case from the very date of the foundation, and long before that date by the congregation by whom the chapel was built. I entertain no doubt but that the worship has always been conducted in conformity with "the Directory for the Public Worship of God," by which the mode of worship in the Church of Scotland now is, and ever since the year 1690 has been, regulated. I am satisfied, further, that the conducting the services according to that mode must have been the main, if not the only object of the founders. On such a point I cannot suppose them to have been indifferent; and therefore I think the declaration in the decree which appropriates the chapel in question as a church or place of religious worship, "on the model of the Established Church of Scotland," is perfectly right, assuming that these latter words mean no more than according to the Directory for Public Worship used in the Established Church of Scotland. But the decree, after making the declaration, goes on to declare that "no minister or other person is qualified for, or is competent to exercise the office of minister or pastor of the Low Meeting-house, without being a licentiate and recognised minister of the Established Church of Scotland, and in full connection therewith." To this declaration I confess I cannot accede. I do not think that the evidence justifies it. It imposes, as I think, a restriction on the future choice of ministers, for which I can discover no warrant. In order to sustain this part of the decree, the relators must make out first, that in fact all the ministers of the Low Meeting-house have, since its foundation, been licentiates and recognised ministers of the Church of Scotland (making due allowance for any occasional deviations from this general practice which can fairly be attributed to accident or oversight); and, secondly, that this connection with the Church of Scotland was one of the objects of the founders, to permit a departure from which would be a breach of trust. The evidence does not satisfy me that Mr. Smith, who became minister of the Low Meeting-house in 1797, and the six ministers who have from time to time succeeded him, were all ordained to this particular congregation by some Scotch Presbytery. But let it be assumed for the purposes, of argument that they were; then arises the question, whether the connection of all the ministers with the Scotch Church is to be deemed an essential part of the objects originally contemplated by the founders, or is to be attributed to accident or some other cause. I think that even if all the ministers could be shewn to have been licensed by the Church of Scotland, still it will not be reasonable to infer, that it was in the contemplation of the founders, that this connection must always and under all circumstances continue. I come to this conclusion, having considered the history of Presbyterianism as connected both with England and Scotland, and the condition in which the founders of the meeting-house and those who have since from time to time formed its congregation, have stood with reference to their religious wants. When I speak of the history of Presbyterianism, I confine myself to that which may be collected without liability to error, from the law, or what for a time had the force of law in this country, and from the laws of Scotland. Looking at the question merely in the abstract, and without reference to the circumstances of this particular congregation, I think it was very unlikely that a congregation of Presbyterian Dissenters in England founding a meeting-house in 1719, when possibly there were some who might recollect the Presbyterian form of worship as having been the established religion of their own country, and when the traditions as to the ascendancy of that mode of worship in this country must have been strong in the minds of all, should intend to make it an essential point that their minister should, under all the circumstances, be a minister ordained by the Church of Scotland; and, if this be a reasonable conclusion, I think it derives great additional weight, when we look to the particular circumstances under which the congregation of Master John Turner existed; and I think that the history of this congregation makes it particularly unlikely that the founders of the chapel could ever have contemplated what this decree declares to be essential, namely, that the minister of the chapel must be a licentiate and minister of the Church of Scotland. Is there, then, anything in the subsequent history of the foundation which ought reasonably to lead to the inference which is the foundation of this declaration in the decree? The circumstance relied on is one always entitled to great weight, namely, long continued usage, that is, the fact that all the ministers since 1719 have been Scotch licentiates and ministers. I have already stated that, in my opinion, it is made out that, since the year 1780, or thereabouts, all the ministers of the meeting-house have been either Scotch licentiates or ministers ordained by a Scotch Presbytery; and I shall assume, for the present, that this has been so for the whole period. But what then? The question still arises, to which I have already adverted, — How and why has it happened that this uniform selection of Scotch licentiates and ministers has prevailed? Is this a matter in which we reasonably infer from the usage that what has so been uniformly done was part of the trust, as we certainly may reasonably infer that the celebration of Divine [illegible]vice according to the Presbyterian model was part of such trust? Where a course of practice has long prevailed on any particular subject the inference that it has been a just and legal course is consistent with law and reason; and, therefore, if any one were now to attempt to call in question the right of a Scotch ordained minister to be minister of the Low Meeting-house, on the ground that the original foundation was for English ordained ministers only, the fact that Scotch ministers had always been appointed would be most important, probably conclusive, on the subject. The extreme improbability that for above a century such a practice, if illegal or contrary to the trust, should have been allowed to exist, would well nigh countervail any evidence which could be brought to shew that it was contrary to the original intention of the founders. But that is not here the point in dispute. No one questions the right of a Scotch ordained minister to become the minister of this chapel, if he be duly chosen. The question is not whether he may, but whether he must, be a Scotch licentiate or minister, and on this latter question the usage, though certainly not to be disregarded, as affording no evidence on the point, is yet to be compared with the other circumstances and to be weighed against them. The usage may have prevailed, because it was the only usage consistent with the trust, it may have prevailed because it was the most convenient usage, and I think the latter is the more reasonable inference from the facts of the case. The earlier ministers might have been, and probably were licensed or ordained by the Church of Scotland, but neither as to Turner nor those who preceded him, nor as to Gardner, is there any evidence satisfactorily shewing that they were such Scotch licentiates or ministers. The point is not perhaps very material as to those who preceded Turner, but as to him, it is most important, for if he were not a licentiate and recognised minister of the Church of Scotland, it is very difficult, indeed, to suppose that those who built the chapel during his ministry, and for him, could have intended to impose such a qualification on all future ministers. It may, however, be said, that as there is not any proof that Turner was not a Scotch licentiate and minister, it may fairly be assumed that he was so by reasoning backwards from more modern times, that for more than half a century all the ministers have been Scotch licentiates; therefore, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it is fair to infer that all have been so ever since the foundation. This may, in some cases, be a legitimate mode of reasoning; but it is entitled to little weight when the more modern usage can be explained on grounds inapplicable to the earlier period. Now, in my opinion, the near neighbourhood of Berwick to Scotland, and the constant friendly intercourse between them, together with the probable difficulties which the congregation of the Low Meeting-house might experience in obtaining proper ministers from England, may well explain the reason why, in fact, they have always been obtained, for a long time back from Scotland. But the matter does not rest on any general reasoning of this kind. There are circumstances in evidence which seem to me strongly to illustrate the view which I take of this part of the case, and to shew that the choice of Scotch ministers, for the last half-century has arisen from other causes than the positive obligations of the trust. The question is, not what would now be the best means of securing a succession of strict Presbyterian ministers, but what were the conditions and restrictions contemplated by the founders. Perhaps, if they could in 1719 have foreseen what would happen a hundred or a hundred and twenty years later, they might have framed a trust conformable to the declaration in this decree; perhaps they might not; but this is mere matter of speculation, in which we have no right to indulge. The question is not what declaration of trust might have been expedient, but what trusts can be inferred as having actually been in the contemplation of the founders. I do not think that any such restriction confining the ministers of the Low Meeting-house to licentiates of the Church of Scotland, as is required by this decree, can be so inferred. For the reasons, therefore, which I have endeavoured to explain in detail, I am of opinion that the decree, so far as it declares that no person is qualified to be a minister or pastor of the Low Meeting-house without being a licentiate and recognised minister of the Established Church of Scotland, and in full connection therewith, is erroneous, not being warranted by the evidence. I think it is [illegible]cient that he be a Presbyterian minister regularly ordained to the congregation, according to the Presbyterian mode of ordination as preached in England, Scotland, and Ireland. It now becomes my duty to state that so far as the case of the defendant Murdock is concerned, I am clearly of opinion that the decree is right in declaring that he has ceased to be qualified to exercise the office of minister of the Low

Meeting-house, and so in giving the necessary directions for preventing him from using, and the trustees from permitting him to use the chapel. The grounds on which I come to this conclusion are very short and simple. Mr. Murdock's ordination was, in fact, a Scotch ordination. He was ordained by the Presbytery of Kelso. That ordination was certainly sufficient to qualify him to hold the office of minister of the Low Meeting-house; but it was necessary not only that he should be in the first instance duly ordained to the chapel, but further, that such ordination should remain in force so long as he should continue in the post of minister. It is an essential part of the Presbyterian system, that none but a regularly ordained minister or licentiate, should preach or perform divine service. This is the rule laid down in the Acts regulating Presbyterian church government both in England and in Scotland. Now it appears to me perfectly clear, on the evidence, that Mr. Murdock has absolutely ceased to be an ordained minister of the Church of Scotland; in fact, by his answer he repudiates all connection with that Church. Even, if he had not done so, I am satisfied, as a matter of fact on the evidence, that Mr. Murdock, being a member of the synod, held at Berwick on the 16th of April, 1844, did adhere to the resolutions, then and there adopted; and that being so, he was brought within the express terms of the Act of general assembly, of 2nd June, 1845, which enacts and declares that all members of the synod, who so adhered, are no longer members of or in communion with the Established Church of Scotland. The effect of that enactment was, not directly to remove Mr. Murdock from his situation as minister of the Low Meeting-house: neither the general assembly nor any Scotch Court could effect his civil rights in this country, but it certainly was within the competence of the general assembly to deprive him of his status as an ordained minister of the Scotch Church, and that has been effectually done. He is no longer an ordained minister of that Church, and if not of that Church, then of no other Presbyterian church whatever, and, therefore, not now capable of being minister or pastor of the Low Meeting-house; on this part of the case I have nothing further to add. The result of my judgment being, that the decree is wrong in declaring that the minister of the Low Meeting-house must be a licentiate and recognised minister of the Established Church of Scotland, and in full connection therewith, it necessarily follows that, in my judgment, the directions consequent on that declaration are also wrong. The decree will, of course, be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Saturday, Jan. 24.—Rolt, on behalf of Mr. Murdock and the defendant trustees, against whom the decree had been made, moved, the leave of the Court having been previously obtained, that the execution of the decree of the Vice-Chancellor might be suspended, pending an appeal intended to be presented to the House of Lords, and urged that if the decree of the Court were put in execution, the congregation of the Low Meeting-house would be dispersed, and the appellants thereby sustain irreparable injury; and that although the appeal to the House of Lords might be successful, the parties could not then be placed in their original position; and cited the cases of Smith v. Grazebrook, 3 Mac. & Gor. 6; Wallum v. Ingilby, 1 Myl & K. 61; Attorney-General v. Richards, L. C. 31st July, 1844; Garcia v. Ricardo, 1 Phillips, 498; Wood v. Milner, 1 J. & W. 636.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—I do not see how the appellants will sustain the irreparable injury which has been suggested; and although speaking for myself alone, I might have been disposed to grant this motion, yet as two judges to one have agreed that the appellants are wrong, I do not see why it is more reasonable that those who up to this time have been decreed to be in the right, should forego what they are entitled to, than that those who are found to be wrong should have possession of that which at present they are declared not to be entitled to hold. If the House of Lords should decide that the decree below was wrong, and that the confirmation of it was wrong also, the appellants will be entitled to repossess the chapel as before. I do not see that the rights of those in whose favour a decree has been twice pronounced should be delayed. As to the dispersion of the congregation, the Court cannot listen to that.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—The effect of the decree as it stands, whether it be erroneous or correct, is to establish or to restore that state of things which for more than fifty years before the commencement of this litigation existed, quietly and undisturbed; and as every judge before whom this case has been heard is of opinion that the minister should be displaced, I think that the application is altogether groundless, and must be refused.(a)

(a) We are given to understand that there will not be an appeal to the House of Lords in this case.

VICE-CHANCELLOR TURNER'S COURT.

Reported by J. HENRY COOKE, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

March 1 and 2.

WALKER v. TIPPING.

Will—Construction—Annuity.

A testator gave to his grand-nephews and nieces as follows:—To A. 300l. to be laid out in an annuity for life; to B. 300l. to be paid to him at twenty-one; to C. 300l. to be sunk in an annuity for his life; to D. 300l. at twenty-three years of age; to E. 300l. annuity for life; to F. 300l.; to G. 300l. annuity for life; and to H. 300l. to be sunk in an annuity for her life; and he also gave his gardener 10l. annuity for life:

Held, that the just rule of construction that words are not to be added to or transposed in a will if, as they stand, they are susceptible of a reasonable construction, and therefore that the words "annuity for life" passed not mere gross sums of 300l. to be enjoyed in the shape of annuities, but life annuities of 300l. a-year each.

The testator in this case, B. Walker, by his will dated in 1843, bequeathed to the nephews and nieces of his sister, namely:—to A. B. 1,000l.; to D. 300l.; to E. F. 300l.; to G. H. 1,000l.; to J. K. 300l. (and so on in different amounts); he then proceeded—"I give and bequeath to my grand-nephews and nieces as follows, viz.: to Mary Puckles, 300l. to be laid out in an annuity for her life; to F. Walker, 300l. to be paid to him at twenty-one; to Alfred Walker, 300l. to be sunk in an annuity for his life; to William Walker 300l. at twenty-three years of age; to Joseph Walker, 300l. annuity for life; to Hannah Roberts, 300l.; to Martha Roberts, 300l. annuity for life; to Martha Walker, 300l. to be sunk in an annuity for her life; and I bequeath to John Feather, my gardener, 10l. annuity for life." After the testator's death a question was raised whether the testator meant to give Joseph Walker and Martha Roberts mere sums of 300l. to be laid out in annuities for their lives, or 300l. a-year for life each, which they claimed.

Rolt and Bagshawe, for the plaintiffs, the two legatees.—There would be no doubt whatever on this will if there were no other gifts than these two; and the fact of other gifts, whether similar or different, being given in different words, cannot affect the construction. The testator uses the word "sunk" when he intends that the sum named should be the whole amount to be sunk. The ages at which the various bequests are to take effect vary in different cases; there is, therefore, but little force to be attributed to the similarity of the sums named in the different bequests. These gifts to Joseph Walker and Martha Roberts are precisely in the same words which the testator uses in the bequest to John Feather, where it is incredible he should have intended the 10l. to be a gross sum invested as an annuity. Wordsworth v. Wood, 4 Myl. & Cr. 641, was cited and remarked on.

Walker and Tillotson for the executors.—The several gifts of 300l. were all intended to be the same. There is not a single hint through the will of any intention to make so great a difference in the amount of the benefits he gives to a class of persons, who all stand in the same degree of relationship to the testator. Where necessary, this Court will change the order of the words used, with a view to make out a consistent intention, and if need be, will supply a word evidently omitted by mistake. Here the testator makes annuity gifts, then bequeaths gross sums; and when again resuming annuity gifts, omits the word "sunk," which he had before used when dealing with annuity benefits; and if that word were supplied the construction and intention would alike be reasonable. In Viner's Abridgment, Devise D, 81, it is laid down thus:—"A bill for a legacy testator devises 550 (omitting pounds) to his daughter Mary; and he also devises 550l. to his daughter Barbary. The defendant insists that the devise of 550 to the plaintiff is void for uncertainty, not saying 550 what. [COWPER, C.—The subsequent devise to the other daughter makes this extremely clear that the testator meant 550l.; and it is as certain and good as if the word 'pounds' had been expressed.]" In the present case add the word "sunk," in the same way as Lord Cowper added the word "pounds," and the meaning is plain and consistent.

Rolt, in reply.—However you may refer to other parts of a will to elicit an intention, you cannot resort to them to create an ambiguity. Where there is an ambiguity you may go to other parts to explain it. To say that there is a uniformity of scheme in this will is a mistake, for the gifts to the nephews and nieces of the testator's sister range from 1,000l. to 300l.; and when the gifts are to the persons whom he describes as his grand-nephews and nieces, the sums are directed to be paid at different ages, and in different ways; one at twenty-one, another at twenty-three, some in gross sums, others in annuities to be purchased with certain sums, and in the instances of the plaintiffs of annuities of particular amounts.

Tuesday, March 2.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The first question which arises on this will is, what is the natural import of the words the testator has used, taking the clause by itself. There are only two modes in which these words can be read: they either amount to a gift of a principal sum of 300l. to be enjoyment by way of an annuity; or else it is a gift of 300l. per annum. The first construction cannot be got at without the addition of some words to direct the conversion of this, if a capital sum, into an annuity. The second construction is plain enough on the face of it. Can we then, or rather must we, turn to the rest of the will and see whether this clause seems to agree with the remainder of the will, before we give effect to it? Now the rule I take to be, that no addition to, or transposition of the words of a gift can be made, if they are susceptible of a reasonable construction as they stand. The second construction, as I have mentioned, is clear and simple, and therefore, on the words of that clause, this is a gift of 300l. per annum. But then it was said that the context shews the intention of the testator to have been different. I have therefore to consider first whether the Court can resort to the context under such circumstances; and secondly, whether the context if admissible does clearly shew any contrary intention to the plain meaning of this gift, taken by itself. Now in Mellish v. Mellish, 4 Ves. 45, Lord Alvanley says, at p. 48,—"The question is, can I see sufficient to enable me to declare that demonstrably and incontrovertibly the name of 'Ann' has crept in by mere mistake? I really believe it was so, but I dare not as a judge take upon myself to say this word cannot be reconciled with the rest of the will; and I have always understood that where there is a mistake or an omission, all the Court has to do is to see whether it is possible to reconcile that part with the rest, and whether it is perfectly clear upon the whole scope of the will that the intention cannot stand with the alleged mistake or omission." And then again, p. 50,—"The rule is that wherever there is a clear mistake, or a clear omission, recourse is to be had to the general scope of the will, and the general intention to be collected from it; but the first thing to be proved is, that there is a mistake. I do not find enough to convince me that there is a mistake; and wherever it comes to be a doubt, the safest way is to adhere to the words." I adopt the rule thus laid down by Lord Alvanley in every point. I think the Court must be satisfied that something more was intended before it will go to the context to do away with what would be the clear meaning of a gift standing alone. But in the next place, if I resort to the context I find nothing there to guide me with certainty to the conclusion that the testator had a different intention from what appears from the words of the gift. The different gifts in the will are differently expressed; and difference of expression seems to imply difference of intention. As to the argument attempted to be drawn from the relation between the parties, it is impossible that the Court can decide the rights of parties under a will upon the ground of the connection between them. Precisely the same reasoning applies to the gift to Martha Roberts.

SMITHSON v. WHARTON.

Practice—Infant defendant abroad at the time of filing the bill, afterwards coming within the jurisdiction.

Prendergast, on behalf of an infant defendant in this cause, who was out of the jurisdiction when the bill was filed, moved for the appointment of a guardian, the infant having now come within the jurisdiction, and that thereupon this defendant might be at liberty to attend before the Master under the decree made in the cause on the 9th of November, 1850, and to adopt, with the approbation of the Master, the proceedings in the cause.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he thought there should be two orders. He would, therefore, make the common order for the assignment of a guardian, and a separate order for a reference to the Master to inquire whether it would be for the benefit of the infant to adopt the proceedings which had been taken in the cause, and if so, then that the infant should be at liberty to adopt them and to attend the future proceedings.

Ex parte MARKWELL, re THE METROPOLITAN RAILWAYS JUNCTION COMPANY.

Joint-Stock Companies' Winding-up Acts—Member of provisional committee—Contributory.

*A. B. in September 1845, upon the application of the local solicitor and agent of a proposed railway company, agreed to become a member of the provisional committee, upon condition that he was to be free from liability. The business of the company was transacted by a committee of management, and A. B. did not attend any meeting. In October 1845, A. B. applied for 200 shares, and although there was no evidence of an allotment to him having been made, two letters of A. B. requesting time for payment of calls were produced. The Master placed A. B.'s name in the list of contributories, and on appeal it was Held, that the case was within the authority of Upfill's case, and that A. B. was properly placed on the list.

This was a motion on behalf of Mr. James Markwell, that the order of Master Brougham, dated the 19th day of March, 1852, whereby he ordered that James Markwell should be placed on the list of contributories as a contributory, might be discharged.

The Metropolitan Railways Junction Company was projected in 1845. Mr. Markwell being possessed of land in the neighbourhood of Billericay, near which the line of railway would pass, was, in September 1845, applied to by Mr. Woodard, a solicitor and local agent for the company, who advised him to have something to do with the railway, adding that he thought if he (Markwell) became a patron of the line, with four or five others he had in his list of clients, it would be of great service to Markwell. Upon this Markwell gave Mr. Woodard his consent to be put upon the provisional committee as a patron of the line, and upon condition that he should be free from liability. Mr. Woodard, in his evidence, stated that he was authorised to make this stipulation with Mr. Markwell by the solicitors and the secretary of the company, and several other gentlemen present at the company's office on the 19th of September. Mr. Markwell never attended any meeting of the provisional committee, and the business connected with the scheme was transacted by the committee of management. On the 8th of October, 1845, Mr. Markwell sent an application for 200 shares, but although there was no evidence of any shares having been allotted to him, the following letters addressed to Mr. Humphreys, the company's solicitor, by Mr. Markwell, were produced:—

"Long's Hotel, October 22, 1845.

"Dear Sir,—The pay-day of the Metropolitans coming so soon after the allotment frightened all my acquaintances and myself; also sorry that they remained at par. It would have been judicious to have postponed the pay-day, as the panic in all the new projections alarms every body. My wife, in addition to having been told, saw my name in the papers, and it has caused great uneasiness in that quarter. I must entreat you, therefore, to get that withdrawn, that domestic difference may cease. With regard to the payment of the deposit, the affair came so sharp, that I was not by any means prepared, having all my ready cash out. I hope, however, that the company will see the necessity of postponing the day of payment, like the London and Exeter, which have postponed theirs for a week. I only came to town to-day from the country.—I am, dear Sir, yours obediently, "J. Markwell."

"Long's Hotel, October 25, 1845.

"My dear Sir,—I am extremely obliged to you for your indulgence. There are two reasons for my delay in paying on the Metropolitans. The one is, in consequence of this panic, which will soon subside. I have upwards of 3,500*l.* worth of scrip, and it has locked me up, like a great many more. The other is, the awful state of the market generally. So if the indulgence could be extended, it would be all the better. This settling day is frightful. I am obliged to go into the west of England, but shall be back in eight or nine days.—I am, Sir, your very obliged, "J. Markwell."

Daniel and Roxburgh, in support of the motion, contended that the case was distinguishable from Upfill's case, the committee of management not being the same as the provisional committee. The condition upon which Markwell's consent to be placed on the committee had been given would prevent his liability as a contributory. (Ex parte Roberts, 3 De G. and Sma. 205; 2 Mac. & Gord. 192.) Besides these circumstances, there was no evidence of any number of shares having been allotted. (Ex parte Carmichael, 17 Sim. 163.)

Bacon and Selwyn, for the official manager, said that the case was within the authority of Upfill's case, and that the conditional agreement was not entered into by any one who had authority to bind the company.

Daniel, in reply, referred to Morris v. Cooper, H. L. and Norris v. Bright, H. L.

The Vice-Chancellor said, he thought Upfill's case decided the present case. That was an authority binding on this Court, and whatever might be said of the reasoning in that case, his Honour did not think that there was any difficulty in applying the case to another in which the circumstances were similar. Upfill's case decided that a member of the provisional committee, who accepted shares allotted to him, was a contributory. Here a gentleman was clearly a member of the provisional committee, and he accepted shares. There was a letter from him which was evidence of that. It appeared to his Honour that there was no doubt of there being an allotment and acceptance of shares, but it was for him to shew of what that allotment consisted. Mr. Markwell said that there was a special agreement between himself and the governing body, by which it was stipulated that he was to be under no liability. The evidence of that agreement was loose, and there might be doubts raised as to the authority of those who entered into it to bind the company. But, passing by that, what was the nature of the agreement itself? This gentleman appeared to have had no intention originally of taking shares at all, but he stipulated that, by becoming a member of the provisional committee, he was not to be subject to any liability—he was to be merely a patron of the scheme. If he had remained merely a member of the provisional committee, he would have been under no liability; but at a subsequent period he agreed to take shares, and he then entered into an entirely different relation, which brought upon him the liability which was considered to attach in Upfill's case. If he had repeated the stipulation that he was to be under no liability, the question would have been the same as that which was raised in Roberts's case, and the Court would then have had to consider how that case would bear upon this. It appeared then to his Honour, that when Markwell took shares he entered into a new relation with the company, and did not then stipulate that he should be free from liability, and therefore the case was within the authority of Upfill's case.

Motion refused with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KINDERSLEY'S COURT.

Reported by W. H. Bennet, Esq. of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law.

Monday, May 31.

Marshall v. Scott.

Practice—Short cause.

If, when a cause is set down as a short cause, the counsel for either party certifies in person to the Court that the hearing will take considerable time, the Court will order it to be placed back in the general paper.

This was a cause which had been set down in the paper and came on to be heard as a short cause. The question in dispute between the parties to the suit was, as to the proper terms and covenants to be inserted in a lease. This had been referred in the usual way to the Master, who, after considerable litigation before him, had settled and approved the draft of the lease, and the only thing to be done in the cause was to confirm the Master's report as to this lease, and other consequential directions; as also the question by whom the costs of the suit were to be paid.

Stuart and Shebbeare stated these facts in a few words.

Malins (with him Erskine) offered, if the plaintiff would consent to pay his own costs of the suit, to let the cause be heard as a short cause; otherwise, as the question by whom the costs should be paid, and the quantum of costs which had been incurred by each party in the Master's office was open to considerable difficulty, and would necessarily take some time in explaining to the Court the course which had been pursued by each party in the Master's office, it could not be heard as a short cause. The terms of the lease had been adopted from states of facts brought in by both parties. This offer being declined,

Stuart, with much earnestness, contended that the plaintiff had a right to the cause being heard as a short cause; for, if not, in every cause where an unreasonable offer was made and not agreed to, the Court was at the mercy of any party who should assert that the cause could be intentionally prevented from being heard as a short cause, which it really was, to the great delay of a plaintiff.

The Vice-Chancellor said he would not allow any cause to be heard as a short cause in which counsel should state to him on his credit that it was absolutely to the interests of his client to enter at length into a discussion which should shew to the Court that the cause was not in fact a short cause.

Ordered to be placed back in the general paper of causes.

May 27 and 31.

Longstaff v. Rennison.

Legacy, or debt.

A sum of 350l. had been secured by a promissory note made by a testatrix to A. and B. and on the same day as the date of this promissory note she executed her will, in which she ordered and directed, "that the debt of 350l. which I owe to A. and B. and for the security of the payment of which I have given them my promissory note, and all other my just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, shall be paid by my executors hereinafter mentioned;" and the residue of her estate she gave to be "applied towards establishing a school in connection with a Baptist chapel at S." The promissory note had been handed over to A. and B. with an intimation to them by the solicitor of the testatrix, that the said promissory note was for the use of the Baptist chapel in S. aforesaid: Held, that the sum secured by the promissory note was a legacy to A. and B. for such purposes as they could by law apply it.

This cause came on for further directions and costs on the Master's general report; and a question arose whether, under the circumstances after stated, a sum of 350*l.* was a debt due by the testatrix to the defendants Carrick and Sample, or whether it was a legacy of that amount payable to them, and upon which of course legacy duty was payable. The special circumstances found by the Master were as follow:—Margaret Clay, by her will, of the 28th March, 1844, bequeathed partly in the words following,—"I order and direct particularly the debt of 350*l.* and interest, which I owe to the Rev. John Donald Carrick and the Rev. George Sample, and for the security of the payment of which I have given them my promissory note, payable to them or their order on demand, and all other my just debts, and funeral and testamentary expenses, to be paid by my executors hereafter mentioned;" and after giving instructions as to her funeral, and bequeathing various pecuniary legacies, she declared that "as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of her trust estate, moneys, chattels, and premises, after payment of the before-mentioned legacies, debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the expenses of proving and carrying into execution the trusts of that her will, and all expenses incident thereto respectively, she willed, bequeathed, and directed her said trustees, and the survivor, and the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of such survivor, to pay and apply the same towards establishing a school in connection with the Baptist chapel of North Shields for the time being, and to pay the same over to the treasurer for the time being of such school then or thereafter to be built, whose receipt should be a good and sufficient discharge for the same to her said trustees;" and the said testatrix appointed the said defendants, John Rennison and Matthew Popplewell, executors of her said will. The said defendant George Sample died since the institution of the suit, and the promissory note in the testatrix's will mentioned bore date the 28th day of March, 1844, and was delivered to the defendant John Donald Carrick in or about the month of July, 1844, by the hands of the said defendant John Rennison, who received the same from the hands of Joseph Laing, the then attorney of the said testatrix, Margaret Clay; and the testatrix freely and voluntarily made and signed the promissory note, and there was no debt due from the testatrix to the defendant John Donald Carrick and the defendant George Sample, or either of them, at the time of her making and signing the note; and the said promissory note was not drawn by the said defendants John Donald Carrick and George Sample, nor under the instructions or at the request of them, or either of them, nor did they, or either of them, ever apply to call upon or speak to the said testatrix with the view or for the purpose of obtaining the said promissory note from her, or of inducing her to make or sign the same. No agreement or understanding was ever made or come to between the said testatrix, the defendant John Donald Carrick, or the defendant George Sample, or either of them, as to the mode in which the proceeds of the said note should be applied: nor did the defendant John Donald Carrick and the defendant George Sample, or either of them, do any act, or make, or in the lifetime of the said testatrix, receive any communication to or from the said testatrix, or any other person, from which any charitable or other trust as to the said promissory note could be implied, and that about twelve months previous to the decease of the testatrix she informed the defendant John Rennison that she had made a promissory note for 350*l.* payable to the defendant John Donald Carrick and the defendant George Sample, and that she had given the promissory note to Joseph Laing, who was then acting as her attorney; and the said testatrix then authorised the defendant John Rennison to obtain the said promissory note from the said Joseph Laing, and deliver the same to the defendants John Donald Carrick and George Sample; that the testatrix also, at or about the same time mentioned to the defendant John Rennison that she wished the defendants John Donald Carrick and George Sample to apply the amount of the promissory note to and for the use of the Baptist chapel in Stevenson-street, in the borough of Tynemouth, in the county of Northumberland, and that she had no doubt but that they would apply the money rightly, as she had every confidence in them. That, in July 1844, the defendant John Rennison received the said promissory note from the said Joseph

Laing, and within a day or two after the defendant John Rennison had so received the same, the said defendant John Rennison gave the said note to the said defendant John Donald Carrick, one of the payees of the said note, as before mentioned; and that the said defendant John Rennison did not at that time, nor at any other time in the lifetime of the said testatrix, inform the defendants, John Donald Carrick and George Sample, or either of them, what were the wishes of the testatrix as to the application of the said sum of 350*l.*; but the defendant John Rennison, told the defendant John Donald Carrick, and subsequently the defendant George Sample, that he was desired by the said testatrix to give them the note, but no explanation of the reasons for making the said gift was given to them or either of them by the defendant John Rennison in the lifetime of the testatrix. That Joseph Laing was now deceased, and that the said testatrix did not at any time desire the defendant John Rennison either to inform or not to inform the defendants John Donald Carrick and George Sample, or either of them, that it was her intention that they, the defendants John Donald Carrick and George Sample, should not sue in her lifetime upon the said promissory note for 350*l.*; and that at or about the time when the said defendant John Rennison obtained the promissory note from Joseph Laing and delivered the same to the defendants John Donald Carrick and George Sample, the testatrix mentioned to the defendant John Rennison, that the purpose to which she wished the defendants John Donald Carrick and George Sample to apply the money in tended to be secured by the said promissory note, was for the use of the Baptist chapel in Stevenson-street, aforesaid, she desired the said defendant John Rennison not to inform the said John Donald Carrick and George Sample of such her wishes with respect to the application of the money until after her decease. That the testatrix never at any time made any allusion to the application of the said money for the purpose of establishing or supporting a school in connection with the Baptist chapel or otherwise, and that the aforesaid particulars respecting the wishes of the said testatrix, as to the use to be made of the said 350*l.* were in fact communicated by the defendant John Rennison to the defendants John Donald Carrick and George Sample, some time after the decease of the said testatrix. On these facts the Master had found that the sum of 350*l.* secured by the said promissory note to the testatrix was a legacy charged on the mixed fund arising from the testatrix's estate.

The cause now came on for further directions.

JUDGMENT.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he had been anxious to see whether in this case he could not save the parties the expense and delay of a reference to a Court of Law to try the legal question, and that he thought he could now do so. The point was a simple one. The testatrix the same day on which she made her will also signed a promissory note for 350*l.* [His Honour here stated the before-mentioned facts of the case.] Now, the note was made without any consideration, and voluntarily. She did not, on that day deliver it to the payees, but to her solicitor, who subsequently delivered it to the parties before mentioned. On the same day as the date of the note the testatrix made her will, by which she treated this 350*l.* as a debt, and so recognises it, and directs this and all other her debts to be paid by her executors. The Master has reported the special circumstances, and submitting the facts to the Court, reports it as a legacy. The question is, whether it is to be considered as a legacy or a debt. He (the Vice-Chancellor) considered that upon the authorities cited, it was very questionable whether it would be considered as a legal debt; but whether so or not a Court of Law was the proper tribunal for the decision of that question. But considering that if not valid as a debt it clearly was a legacy, and the parties assenting to his decision without the reference to a Court of Law, he should decide, as the Master had reported, that the amount of the note must be considered as a legacy. If a debt, it would not be liable to legacy duty; that being declared to be a legacy, it would be so liable, the parties taking it as a legacy payable with the duty, and not to take it in preference to the debts. He should, therefore, confirm the Master's report, and allow the parties to take it as a legacy, subject to the trusts declared by the will of the testatrix. The effect of his deciding it in this short form would be to leave either party to take the opinion of a Superior Court if they wished it, without having the question incumbered with recitals.

Order accordingly.

SHEPHERD v. THE MARQUIS OF LONDONDERRY.

Tithes—rent-charge in lieu of—Distress—Stat. 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, ss. 45, 71, pendency of suit touching the right to any tithes—Jurisdiction of Tithe Commissioners to make award.

A suit between two rival claimants to the ownership of tithes admitted to be payable to somebody is not "a suit touching the right to any tithes" within the meaning of sec. 15 of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71.

The tithes of the parish of St. G. belonged to a lay impropriator, and upon proceedings being taken for the purpose of commutation, it was objected by the owner of certain lands, which, under an Act of Parliament with the usual clauses, had been allotted to him in respect of burgage tenements, of the tithe of which he was the owner, that a suit in equity was pending "touching the right to the tithes," and therefore that the jurisdiction of the Tithe Commissioners to make an award, was, by the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 45, taken away until he should have determined the matters in difference. The suit was in fact between the lay rector, who claimed the tithes of the allotments, and the owner thereof, who claimed to be owner of the tithes as well as the land. The Tithe Commissioner overruled the objection, and made his award:

Held, that the 45th section did not apply to such a case; that the award therefore was valid, and would support an avowry to replevin brought for distraining for the amount of the rent-charge assessed on the lands allotted in respect of the burgage tenements.

This was an action of replevin, to which the defendant avowed as impropriate rector of the parish of St. G. entitled to rent-charge instead of tithes, under an award of the Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales. The plaintiff pleaded in denial of the rent-charge, and at the trial, which took place before Williams, J. contended that, as there had been at the time of the making of the award a suit in Chancery, of which the commissioners had notice, and as they had been called on to decide it, and had not done so, the award had been made without jurisdiction. In Re The Crosby-upon-Eden Tithe Commutation, 18 L. J. 258, Q.B. was cited, and secs. 24, 45, and 50 of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71. The bill and answer were read, and it appeared that there were some burgage tenements in the parish, to the owner of which a former impropriator had conveyed the tithes, so that the owner of the land and the owner of the tithes had become the same person; allotments had been made under an Act of Parliament in respect of these burgage tenements; and it was contended that these allotments followed the nature of the burgage tenements, and were free from tithes, that is, that the tithes belonged to the owner, and not to the impropriator. The rent-charge distrained for was in respect of the land allotted to the owner of the burgage tenement. The learned judge before whom the case was tried, Williams, J., overruled the objection, and a verdict was found for the defendant, with leave to the plaintiff to move to set it aside and enter one for himself. Against the rule cause was shewn (Feb. 3) by

Watson and T. Jones.

Knowles and Atherton, contrà.

The arguments are sufficiently stated in the following judgments.

JUDGMENT.

PATTESON, J.—This was an action of replevin, with an avowry for a rent-charge under the Tithe Commutation Act. The Marquis of Londonderry was the impropriator of the tithes of the parish of St. Giles, and there had been a commutation, under the statute 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, and he had distrained for the rent-charge. Then there was also an award made, and it was said there was a suit in Chancery pending; notice was given to the assistant commissioner that a suit was pending, but he seems to have disregarded it, and made no inquiry, as it was said, as to whether the marquis was rector, although he did determine that the land was not exempt. Then it appeared that there were some burgage tenements in the parish, and those burgage tenements had been, I may say, exempt from the payment of tithes. It was in this way,—the former impropriator had conveyed the tithes to the owner of the burgage tenements, so that the owner of the land and the owner of the tithes was the same person; and these premises in respect of which the distress was made for the rent-charge, were allotments made in respect of those burgage tenements. The Act of Parliament under which the allotment had been made contained the usual clause that the allotment should follow the nature of the land in respect of which it was allotted; and therefore it was said, that the tithe of the allotment would belong to the owner of the land just as much as the tithe of the burgage tenement in respect of which the allotment was made. That is purely a question of title. It was argued, and very strongly, that under the 45th section of the Tithe Commutation Act, where there is a suit pending "touching the right to any tithes, or if there shall be any question as to the existence of any modus or composition real, or prescriptive or customary payment, or any claim of exemption from or non-liability under any circumstances to the payment of any tithes, or touching the boundary of any lands, or if any difference shall arise whereby the making of any such award by the commissioners or assistant-commissioner shall be hindered, it shall be lawful for the commissioners or assistant-commissioner to appoint a time and place in or near the parish for hearing and determining the same, and the decision of the commissioners or assistant-commissioner shall be final and conclusive on all persons subject to the provisions thereinafter contained." And clearly the substance of the argument, as it seemed to me when the matter was discussed before us, was what was the meaning of the words "suit pending touching the right to any tithe?" If it means touching the right to any tithe not including the title of the person who claims them to have tithes at all, as against some other person who claims them, then no doubt this would be a matter which the commissioners might have determined, and which might have hindered their making their award, and so there might be an objection to the award raised. But if, on the other hand, "touching the right to any tithe," is to be coupled with other words in this section, and particularly to be coupled with the words "whereby the making of the award of the commissioners shall be hindered," then it appears quite clear that a question of title between one person and another, rival claimants (if I may so call them), would not be such a suit as would hinder the making of the award by the commissioners, because it is clear the commissioners would have no right to determine such a question between A. and B. That is laid down by the decisions of this Court in Reg. v. The Tithe Commissioners, 15 Q. B. 620; and Re Crosby-upon-Eden Commutation. And we must take that to be clearly the opinion of this Court, that the law has laid down that the tithe commissioner has no power to determine a pure question of law between rival claimants to tithe, which is admitted to be due in some shape or other to one or the other; but that all he can do is to determine the question of right to tithe; that is to say, whether the tithe is payable in kind, or whether there is any exemption from it altogether, or whether there is any modus,—a question between an alleged tithe owner and an alleged tithe payer, not between rival tithe owners. I think that is the right construction of the Act of Parliament. All the cases that have been decided lead to that conclusion. Indeed, I do not very well see that it is possible to say we can consider the words of the 45th section, "touching the right to any tithe," in the sense of a dispute between A. and B. rival claimants, without really and truly overturning the decision in the 15th Q.B. It was said that was not conclusive upon this occasion, because it was not a case where there was any suit pending, but was a case where there was only a difference. It is said that it is true that where there is only a difference, and no suit pending, that must be a difference by which the making of the award was hindered; and it was conceded if that was a difference between A. and B. as to which of them was entitled to the tithe, that it would not be such a difference as would hinder the making of the award. But, it was urged, that the words in the earlier part of the section, "suit pending touching the right to any tithe," must have a different construction; and although the nature of the difference was precisely the same, yet the circumstance of a suit being pending would give the commissioners jurisdiction to determine it. I do not think we need enter into the question whether the commissioners would have a right to determine the suit, supposing it was a suit between a tithe owner and a tithe payer, or whether it must be determined in the Court in which the suit is pending or not. We did not expressly determine that point. I think we guarded ourselves from doing so in the case already alluded to. (Re Crosby-upon-Eden Commutation.) We guarded ourselves against being concluded by any opinion to that effect, nor is it at all necessary here for us to determine it; because, as far as I see, it appears to me that the 45th section really must be taken altogether, and that the circumstance of a suit being pending does not alter the nature of the difference which exists, and that the words "whereby the making of any such award shall be hindered," must be applied to the whole of it; and if so, this was a case which the tithe commissioner could not determine. If he could not determine it, it was a case which did not hinder the making of his award, because he might make his award, determining, as he did, that the land was liable to pay tithe to somebody: he would fix the rent-charge, and it would be payable to the person entitled to it. Now, I should have thought the 45th section almost sufficient to establish that point: but there may be a doubt whether the Legislature did not mean something different at the beginning of the clause; whether, taking the 45th section by itself, they meant to attach the words "whereby the making of the award should be hindered" to "a suit pending" or not. When, however, we look to the 71st section, then I think the matter is perfectly clear, because the 71st section reserves all the rights of the parties, and says that persons who have a claim to tithes shall have the same claim to the rent-charge which is fixed by the commissioners in lieu of tithes. There is, therefore, the same power for any person who says "I am the tithe owner," as against another person who says "I am the tithe owner" likewise, to raise that question after the tithe is commuted into a rent-charge as there was before, and no injury or mischief is done to anybody. Taking all the language of the Act and the cases that have been before us into consideration, I think that Mr. Knowles was pressing the cases that he cited further than they would fairly and legitimately bear. It is very true, that neither of the cases which were cited makes against him, but neither are they authorities for him; but the principle of those cases is against him altogether, because they go to shew that the tithe commissioner cannot meddle with anything unless he has power to determine that very thing. I think, taking the 45th section and the 71st section, and the Act altogether, it is quite clear he had not the power to determine this question, which is a pure question of title between the Marquis of Londonderry and the owner of the land quâ tithe owner, assuming him to be the owner of the tithe as well as the land. It was a pure question of that sort, and not a question as to whether the land itself was liable to pay tithe to somebody. Therefore it seems to me the avowry is correct, and that this rule, which has been obtained to set aside the verdict, must be discharged

COLERIDGE, J.—I am of the same opinion. My brother Patteson has gone so fully through the facts and the law that I shall add very little, and, as regards the facts, I shall rely upon the statement he has made. Now, the law turns upon the construction of the few words of the 45th section of the Tithe Commutation Act. Mr. Knowles's contention in the first instance, as I understood it, was, that the words "pending any suit touching the right to any tithes," included only the right of any one of two or more persons to certain tithes, the existence of which in some shape was undisputed; that is, where the land was titheable either in kind or by modus, or commutation in some way; and that it did not mean a suit touching the right of any person whatever to tithe from the land, raising a question, therefore, of the titheability of the land. Now, taking it in that narrow point of view, if it meant that,—there would be this remarkable unreasonableness—I should say almost absurdity—in the framing of the section, that you would have a provision in the same section for questions and differences, short of suits, which involve that same legal point which is supposed to be excluded when there is a suit; and thus there would be no provision at all for the suit involving the question of titheability; and yet there can be no doubt whatever that a suit pending the right to tithes understood in that latter meaning most clearly would have hindered the tithe commissioner making his award, would be a thing above all others that would impede him, because until he had ascertained the titheable matters in the parish, of course the object and the whole purpose of what he was about could not have been carried into effect. That seems to me a very strong answer to that narrow point of view for which Mr. Knowles first contended; but if he meant to say, or if the learned counsel who was with him meant to say, "any suit pending touching the right to any tithes," might include both questions, that is, the right both of one or more claimants, or the liability of the land to tithe at all, then the consequence is this, that you include the question of title, which does not prevent the tithe commissioner from making his award, because his award may perfectly well be made as to the total gross commutation without reference at all to the rival claimants of any particular part of it; and further than that, you include a suit which, according to the decisions of this Court (which, of course, we are not prepared at present to overrule), has no effect in preventing the award being made. That is an unnecessary thing. And further than that, if you hold that point of view it is impossible to give full effect to the 71st section, on which my brother Patteson relies, and which he pointed out as strong to shew that that cannot be taken to be meant. There seems to me to be another argument which has no yet been mentioned against that mode of construing it. This is a very strong section of an Act of Parliament; it takes a great many questions of a most difficult nature away from the tribunal that was best fitted for the decision of such questions, and carries them (as I think was observed in one of the cases) before a tithe commissioner, no doubt a perfectly respectable and learned man, it may be presumed, in the law; yet it carries them before him to be decided without any of the assistance that a properly constituted court would have. Now, I think you ought not to extend beyond its mere purpose the construction of a section that is so very strong in its nature, and you do extend it beyond its very necessary purpose if you take it to apply to any suit which does not prevent the tithe commissioner from making his award. And there is another observation that seems to me to favour also this limited mode of construction, which is this,—that according to the old rule you should look at the context and see what the other things relating to it are. Now, all the other things that are specified are such as would prevent the tithe commissioner from making his award. Therefore, I think that is another ground for inferring that nothing more was intended to be provided for by this section than such suits, such questions, and such differences as prevented him proceeding to make his award. This, which is merely a contention between the two parties which shall have the titheable matter which is admitted to belong to some one or another, is one that does not prevent him making his award, and therefore I think it cannot be taken to be within the true meaning of the Act of Parliament.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The question in this case was, whether the commissioner could make a valid award during the pendency of a suit in equity touching the right to tithes? Now, it was contended that there was such a suit in equity, that it came within the 45th section of the Act of Parliament, and that until that suit had been determined no valid award could be made. The question then really is this, whether the suit which was existing was a suit contemplated by the 45th section of the Act, because if it was there is no doubt that not only the suit which is mentioned there, but the differences that are mentioned in that section, must all be determined by the commissioner, and all come within his jurisdiction to determine before the award is made. Now, I confess I was very much struck with a comparison of three of the sections of the Act of Parliament, namely the 45th, the 21st, and the 50th. The 45th says, "that if any suit shall be pending touching the right to any tithes, or there shall be any question as to the existence of a modus or composition, or touching the situation or boundary of the land, or if any difference shall arise whereby the making of the award of the commissioners shall be hindered, then it shall be lawful for the commissioner to determine the same." The 50th section then says, "that as soon as all such suits and differences shall have been decided, then the commissioner shall frame the draft of an award, which draft shall contain all the particulars hereinbefore required to be inserted in any parochial agreement, or any schedule thereto." By the 21st section the parochial agreement and schedule are, amongst other matters, to "set forth all the lands of the said parish which are subject to the payment of any kind of tithes, and also the true or estimated quantity in statute measure of land subject to tithes within the parish which shall be then cultivated as arable, meadow, or pasture land, or as wood land, common land, or howsoever otherwise; and shall also set forth whether any modus or composition real, or prescriptive or customary payment, shall be payable, instead of all or any of the tithes of the said parish, and which lands or tithes respectively covered thereby; and shall also set forth which of the said tithes, moduses, compositions, or payments, are payable to the tithe-owner, or if there is more than one tithe-owner, to each of the several tithe-owners in the said parish, distinguishing in what right every such tithe-owner is entitled to such tithes." Now, if the question had depended solely upon those three sections in the Act of Parliament, the terms "any suit touching the right to tithes" being very general, I should certainly have gravely doubted whether this was not a case in which the commissioner could not make a valid award until such a suit had been determined. Now, the suit when it comes to be examined, the question being whether it is a suit within the meaning of the 45th section—whether it be a suit touching the right to any tithes—on examination turns out to be a suit not in respect of the payment of tithes at all, or a question whether there be a modus or a composition, or whether any tithes are payable; but it is in effect a suit between two rival tithe owners, not doubting that tithes are payable for the lands in question, but the question to be decided in a Court of Equity being to whom of two rival claimants they are to be paid. Now if such a suit as that were to be within the 45th section, it would be directly inconsistent with the provisions of the 71st section, and therefore it seems to me, that looking at the 71st section it is perfectly clear that the Legislature never intended that a suit between two rival tithe owners should be one of those included within the 45th section, and which the commissioner is to determine before the making of the award. As I said before, it would be entirely inconsistent with the provisions of the 71st section, the first part of which is in these terms: "That any person having any interest in or claim to any tithes, or to any charge or incumbrance upon any tithes before the passing of this Act, shall have the same right to or claim upon the rent-charge for which the same shall be commuted, as he had to or upon the tithes, and shall be entitled to have the like remedies for recovering the same as if his right or claim to or upon the rent-charge had accrued after the commutation." It would be merely futile if this suit is only touching a claim between two rival tithe-owners which shall have it, if the commissioner were to make any decision upon the subject, because it would not at all bind the rival claimant, who might under the 71st section institute suits to determine their respective rights; and everything would be in the same situation as if the commutation occurred long after the decision of the commissioner. It seems to me, therefore, that taking the 71st section in connection with the other sections, it is quite clear that a "suit touching the right to any tithes" would not apply to a case where the suit is between the claims of two rival tithe owners which shall have it. Upon that ground the plea seems to me to be bad, and the rule will be discharged.

ERLE, J.—I concur in this judgment, for the reasons that have been so fully given, and I have nothing to add. Rule discharged.

Thursday, May 27.

CROSSTHWAITE, Administrator, v. GARDNER.

Pleading—Count by administrator on debt due to intestate—Evidence.

A. entered into a special contract to do certain work for B. for a sum specified. When part of the work was done A. died, and the work was finished by C. at B.'s request. In an action by C. as administrator of A. against B. to recover a proportionate part of the specified sum:

Held, that the above facts would not support a count alleging that the defendant was indebted to the intestate in his lifetime for work done by him, and that the money was payable on request.

Debt by administrator for work and labour done by the intestate. The count alleged that in the lifetime of the intestate the defendant was indebted to him for work and labour done by the intestate, in a sum of money payable on request.

Plea—The general issue.

At the trial it was proved that Mr. Barrow, the intestate, in his lifetime, entered into a contract with the defendant to do certain work for a sum of 15*l*. Barrow died in March 1851, there remaining at that time work undone to the value of about 30*l*. The plaintiff completed the work on his own account by agreement with the defendant, and afterwards took out letters of administration. The present action was brought by the plaintiff in his representative capacity to recover a proportionate part of the sum of 415*l*. for the work done by Barrow before his death. It was objected that the plaintiff could not recover upon the count as framed; but the learned judge directed a verdict for the plaintiff, giving the defendant leave to move. A rule was accordingly obtained to enter a nonsuit, against which

Atherton and Cowling shewed cause. The circumstance of death is immaterial, because by consent of the defendant the special contract was rescinded; and the effect of that rescission is, that the work was done upon a quantum meruit, and if so there was a debt from the defendant to the intestate in his lifetime for the work which he had done. [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—The difficulty is that the special contract subsisted down to the time of Barrow's death.] When the special contract is rescinded, it is nihil ab initio. The defendant might have insisted upon Barrow's representatives completing the contract; but he agreed that it should be rescinded, and so Barrow might have sued for the value of the work done by him as soon as it was done. The Statute of Limitations would run from the moment when the last work was done; at that moment a debt accrued to the intestate, and so the count is well framed.

Knowles and Addison contrà. Upon this count the administrator can only recover in respect of a cause of action complete in the lifetime of the intestate; and upon the facts, it is clear that no cause of action was complete in Barrow's lifetime. (Cowper v. Godmond, 9 Bing. 748; Churchill v. Bertrand, 3 Q. B. 568.)

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—I am sorry that this objection should prevail, but we must see whether this count is proved. It alleges that in the life-time of the intestate the defendant was indebted to him for work and labour done by the intestate, and for which the defendant was liable to pay him on request. Now that is to be proved; and I am of opinion that the special agreement to do the work for 415*l.* which was to be paid when the work was completed, does not prove it, because the work was not completed in the life-time of Barrow. The evidence indeed shews that the special contract was rescinded after his death; but does that shew that the defendant was indebted to Barrow during his life-time? I think not; because during his life-time the special contract was in full force. The rescission of the contract amounted to a fresh agreement that the work already done should be paid for on a quantum valebat; but that was after Barrow's death. The only way of putting the case for the plaintiff is to consider the special contract altogether annulled by the rescission, so that the case stood as if there never had been any special agreement; but if that were so, this inconvenient consequence would follow, that a plea which was bad when pleaded, might be made good by a rescinding of the contract subsequent to the commencement of the action. So the Statute of Limitations would, I think, begin to run from the date of the fresh agreement; because otherwise it must be said that the cause of action had accrued when it had not accrued, and that although the plaintiff could not sue during the interval between the time when the work was done, and the time when the contract was rescinded, yet the statute would run against him during that interval, and he would be deprived of a portion of the six years. I cannot, therefore, think that the rescinding is to be treated as an utter annihilation of the contract from the beginning; and if not, then the count is not proved. I do not think there would have been any difficulty in framing a count to meet these facts.

TIMMINS and WIFE v. GIBBONS, P.O.

Money had and received—Deposit with banker—Bank notes—Guarantee of solvency of maker—Failure of consideration.

A. deposited with a banker notes of a country bank: and received a memorandum acknowledging the receipt of so much money, "for which we are accountable," the bank agreeing to pay interest, and the depositor to give fourteen days' notice before withdrawal. Before the banker could present the country bank-notes for payment the country bank had failed; of which the banker immediately gave notice to A.:

Held, that A. could not recover the amount in an action for money lent, or money had and received, as the consideration for the banker's promise had wholly failed.

Assumpsit for 65*l.* money lent, and money had and received. Plea, non-assumpsit.

At the trial, which took place before Wightman, J. at Stafford, it was proved that the female plaintiff, before her marriage, on the 26th June, last year, deposited at the Dudley branch of the Birmingham Banking Company 15*l.* in Bank of England notes, and 65*l.* in notes of the Stourbridge Bank. Upon this deposit the Banking Company gave a receipt acknowledging the receipt of 80*l.* "for which we are accountable," to be repaid, with interest, upon the depositor giving fourteen days' notice of withdrawal. The latter notes were payable either at Stourbridge, or at Glyn's, in London; and were sent to London by the same night's post. On the 27th they were presented at Glyn's, and refused, the Stourbridge Bank having stopped payment that morning, but having continued its payments the whole of the 26th. On the 28th notice of the failure of the Stourbridge Bank was given to the female plaintiff, and the notes tendered to her, but refused. After giving fourteen days' notice, the female plaintiff applied to the Dudley Bank for 80*l.* but they declined to pay more than the 15*l.* which had been deposited in the Bank of England notes. The learned judge thought that the consideration for the promise had wholly failed, and that the defendant, who was the public officer of the Birmingham Bank, was entitled to a verdict upon [illegible]l issue, it being admitted that there was [illegible] on their part. Last Term a rule was [illegible]l to enter a verdict for the plaintiff. Against which,

Alexander and Chance shewed cause.—This rule was obtained upon the authority of some dicta in Camidge v. Allenby, 6 B. & C. 373; but the case itself has no application to the present; because there the defendant was guilty of laches; and even assuming that in that case the transaction might be regarded as a sale of the notes, the present transaction cannot be so treated. But it is difficult to reconcile those dicta with subsequent cases. (Turner v. Stones, 1 D. & L. 122; and Rogers v. Langford, 1 Cr. & M. 637; Henderson v. Appleton, Add. to Chitt. on Bills, p. 658, 7th edit.)

Keating and Gray, contrà.—The principle enunciated by the judges in Camidge v. Allenby, is, that if notes are received as cash, the person who receives them takes the risk; there is no warranty that the notes are worth what they purport to be worth, though there is a warranty that they are what they purport to be. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—If there is a sale of the notes, then caveat emptor; but does this transaction amount to a sale?] Yes; because there was nothing said to limit the liability of the person who received the notes; and they were not received in payment of an antecedent debt. The banker received them as part of the ordinary currency of the country; and he would have performed his contract if he had paid the amount of the notes without returning the same notes. It is, in truth, a ready money transaction; and the distinction has been constantly maintained between such a transaction and payment of an antecedent debt. (Buller's Nisi Prius, 277; The Bank of England v. Newman, 1 Ld. Raym. 442; Ward v. Evans, 2 Ld. Raym. 928.) The special terms upon which this money was deposited shew that the banking company received the notes as money.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that this action cannot be maintained either upon the count for money lent, or that for money had and received. At the time of the deposit both parties believed that these notes were valuable securities, but they turned out to be of no value; and no laches is attributable to the Dudley Bank. The transaction, therefore, is the same as if the Stourbridge Bank had failed long before the deposit of the notes; and can it then be said that a deposit of securities which turn out to be of no value will support a count for money lent or money had and received, there having been a total failure of consideration. No doubt, where the transaction can be resolved into a sale of a negociable instrument, the person who receives it must stand the risk; caveat emptor; but it is impossible to consider this deposit as in any respect resembling a purchase of the notes. They were received as being of value, but they were of none. Now, Mr. Keating and Mr. Gray lay it down as a general rule, that where bank-notes are paid and received, they are always taken at the risk of the receiver, if they are what they purport to be, excepting in the case of payment for an antecedent debt; but many cases were put in the course of the argument which would break in upon that rule. For example, if I ask a friend to give me change for a bank-note, and he does so, there is no antecedent debt; but if the bank-note turns out to be of no value, the loss must, in such case, fall, I apprehend, upon him who has received the change by way of accommodation. And, indeed, I see great difficulty in drawing the distinction which has been adverted to between the case of payment at the time for goods sold and payment on the following day. There must always be a moment previous to the payment, during which the buyer would be indebted to the seller: but it is not necessary for us now to give any decided opinion upon this subject; for this case may be decided upon the grounds already stated, in perfect accordance with the cases of Camidge v. Allenby, and Turner v. Stones.

WILKINSON v. THE ANGLO-CALIFORNIAN GOLD MINING COMPANY.

Joint-stock companies—Deed of settlement—Certificate of proprietorship—7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, s. 51.

A holder of shares in a joint-stock company formed under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, who has not signed the deed of settlement, is not entitled to demand and have delivered to him by the company a certificate of proprietorship in conformity with sec. 51 of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110.

The declaration stated that the defendants were a joint-stock company completely registered under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, and formed by a deed of settlement dated the 16th August, 1851. That the said deed of settlement contained, amongst others, a provision that the capital should be 50,000*l.* in 100,000 shares of 10*s.* each, the 10*s.* for each share to be paid-up within twenty-one days after complete registration; and one, numbered 179, that notwithstanding the dates of the respective execution of these presents by the parties hereto, the contract intended to be effectuated by these presents shall be held to have commenced as and from the day first above written; and that the share or shares of every such subscriber for any part of the capital of the company, who shall not execute these presents within three months from the date hereof, shall be forfeited if the board of directors shall think fit, and the amount paid upon such share or shares shall become the property of the company. That the plaintiff was a subscriber for twenty shares, such shares to be received by the plaintiff as soon as the defendants were completely registered as such company, and had paid up the full amount of 10*s.* per share upon the said twenty shares, and had duly executed the said deed of settlement, except as to the before-mentioned provision, numbered 179. That the plaintiff became and was entitled, by virtue of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, to have made out by the defendants a certificate of the proprietorship of each of the before-mentioned shares, and delivered to him, the plaintiff, on demand.

Averment of demand of such certificate by the plaintiff.

Breach, refusal by the defendants to make and deliver the certificate.

Plea.—That the company was within the operation of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, and that the plaintiff had not executed the deed of settlement.

Demurrer thereto.

Paterson, in support of the demurrer, relied upon two points, first, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to execute the deed of settlement; and, secondly, that it was only necessary for him to execute such a deed as the company were authorised by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, to frame. The meaning of the word shareholder in the Act, as expounded by the interpretation clause, sec. 3, is only to be adopted where such meaning is not excluded by the Act. The enactment in sec. 3, that a shareholder is a person entitled to a share in the company and who has executed the deed of settlement, is not applicable to sec. 26, which provides that no shareholder shall be entitled to receive any dividends or profits until he shall have executed the deed of settlement. Then sec. 51 enacts, that on demand of the holder of any share, the company shall cause a certificate of the proprietorship of such share to be delivered to such shareholder. The penalty for not executing the deed is imposed by sec. 26, and there is no provision in sec. 51 requiring the shareholder to execute the deed before he shall be entitled to a certificate of proprietorship.

Willes, contrà.—The averment in the declaration, that the plaintiff has executed the deed, except as to one clause, is idle, for if the individual shareholders have the power of excepting to any particular clauses of the deed of settlement, how could any joint-stock company be carried on? The interpretation clause, sec. 3, makes a distinction between a subscriber and a shareholder, and the plaintiff comes within the class of subscribers, and not that of shareholders. Sec. 26 enacts, that the shareholder, until he shall have executed the deed of settlement, shall not be entitled to the remedies or powers given by the Act, and one of those powers is the right to demand a certificate of proprietorship. Such certificate can only be wanted as evidence that he is a shareholder, and to enable the plaintiff to take his shares into the market and sell them. It is just and reasonable that a shareholder should execute the deed of settlement before obtaining the certificate under sec. 51, and there is nothing in the section or subject-matter thereof to exclude the definition of the word shareholder in the interpretation clause. The plaintiff, therefore, is not entitled to have such certificate until he has executed the deed of settlement.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that the defendants are entitled to our judgment. The question depends upon the construction of sec. 51. Looking at that, without the interpretation clause, I should say that the plaintiff was entitled to our judgment; but then we have the interpretation clause, and parliament, in its omnipotence, may impose any meaning on terms it pleases. Sec. 3 says, that the following words are intended to have the meanings hereby assigned to them, so far as such meanings are not excluded by the context or by the nature of the subject matter; and among others the word shareholder is to mean any person entitled to a share in a company, and who has executed the deed of settlement, or a deed referring to it. There is no repugnancy in giving that meaning to the words holder of any share, in sec. 51, for it may very well mean that no shareholder shall be entitled to a certificate of proprietorship until he shall have executed the deed of settlement. The plaintiff is the holder of shares, but has not executed the deed of settlement, therefore he is not entitled to the certificate. In sec. 26 there would be repugnancy in giving the meaning in the interpretation clause to the word shareholder, and, therefore, that is not to be adopted.

COLERIDGE, J.—In order to have the certificate of proprietorship, the plaintiff must bring himself within sec. 51. It was contended for a little while, that the words therein, "the holder of any share," were not equivalent to the expression, shareholder, but it cannot be contended that they do not mean the same thing. If the meaning of the word, shareholder, then, in the interpretation clause, is not excluded by sec. 51, the plaintiff must be a person who has executed the deed of settlement before he can demand a certificate of proprietorship. This construction meets the justice of the case.

ERLE, J.—We are to see on what title the right to a certificate of proprietorship is given; it is on that of being a shareholder, and turning to the definition of that term in sec. 3, it means a person entitled to a share, and who has executed the deed of settlement. An inchoate shareholder is termed a subscriber in sec. 3, and he becomes a shareholder when he has done all that is requisite by the preliminary stages. To claim a certificate before executing the deed of settlement would be to thwart the intention of the Act, and to allow parties to have a false semblance of proprietorship.

CROMPTON, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. I confine myself to the ss. 3 and 51.

Judgment for the defendants.

REG. v. THE EAST LONDON WATERWORKS COMPANY.

Paving rate—Liability of Waterworks Company in respect of mains and pipes.

Paving Commissioners were authorised by their Act of Parliament to rate all persons inhabiting, holding, occupying, possessing, or enjoying any land, house, shop, warehouse, &c. or other tenement or hereditament:

Held, that a water company was rateable in respect of its pipes as occupiers of land under that enactment, although the same Act of Parliament gave to the Paving Commissioners some control as to the position of the pipes, and contained many special provisions respecting water-pipes eo nomine, as well as some provisions respecting the rates, which could only apply to such premises as are the ordinary subjects of tenancy; and although premises were to be rated in different proportions, according to their situation and the degree of benefit derived from the operations of the Paving Commissioners.

Upon appeal against a rate made by the Paving Commissioners of Bethnal-green, a special case was stated. The appellants were an incorporated company, established by an Act of Parliament for the purpose of supplying parts of the eastern part of the metropolis with water. By an Act of Incorporation of the said company (the 47 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. lxxii.), amongst other powers and privileges conferred on the said company, they are, by sec. 32, empowered for effectuating the purposes of the Act, to dig and break up the soil and pavement of any of the roads, highways, footways, streets, and public places of certain parishes and places therein mentioned, including the parish of St. Mary's, Whitechapel; and to sink and lay pipes, trunks, and other conveniences for the purposes aforesaid; and to put stop-cocks or plugs or branches from such pipes, trunks, and other conveniences, in such places and in such manner as shall be necessary for the purposes aforesaid, and do all such acts as they (the said company) should from time to time think necessary and convenient for completing, amending, repairing, improving, and using the works authorised by the Act. The respondents are the commissioners acting under and in pursuance of Acts of Parliament of the 11 Geo. 3, c. xii. and 57 Geo. 3, c. 29. By the 11 Geo. 3, c. xii. the commissioners are empowered to pave the streets and ways of the districts, and, in certain cases, to make, alter, and remove sewers, drains, and grates, and to cause the streets and ways to be watered, and to perform certain other matters in the said Act specified. The 36th section of the said Act of 11 Geo. 3, c. 12, is as follows:—"And for defraying the charges and expenses attending the execution of the several powers by this Act granted, be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this Act, a rate or assessment, over and above all rates and assessments now payable, shall once in every year, or oftener if it shall be thought needful by the said Commissioners, &c. be made, laid, and assessed by the said commissioners, &c. upon all and every person or persons who shall inhabit, hold, occupy, possess, or enjoy any land, house, shop, warehouse, cellar, vault, or other tenement or hereditaments, within any of the said streets, squares, &c. so as such rate or assessment, rates or assessments do not in any one year exceed in the whole the sum of 1s. 2d. in the pound of the yearly rents or yearly value of such of the said lands, houses, shops, &c. respectively, as shall be situate in any of the said streets, squares, &c. the greater part or parts of which said streets, squares, &c. shall be actually begun to be paved, &c. and not exceeding 9d. in the pound of the yearly value of such of the said lands, houses, &c. as shall be situated in any of the said streets, squares, &c. which shall be actually begun to be new paved, the footway whereof shall be constructed with new or flat stones, and the carriageways thereof with the old stones which shall be taken up in the same or any other of the streets, &c.; and not exceeding 6d. in the pound of the yearly value of such of the said lands, houses, &c. as shall be situate in any of the said streets, squares, &c. which shall only be repaired by virtue of this Act." By the 24th section of the 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, it is enacted, that all rates or assessments made and signed from and after the passing of this Act, for or in respect of or towards the paving or repairing the pavements of the streets or public places in any parochial or other district, &c. by virtue of any local Act or Acts of Parliament or by virtue of this Act, shall be laid upon all and every person or persons who do and shall inhabit, hold, occupy, be in possession of, or enjoy any messuages, tenements, lands, grounds, coachhouses, stables, cellars, vaults, houses, shops, warehouses, or other buildings or hereditaments situate or being within any of the streets or places within the said district, &c. The respondents have paved and repaired the streets, ways, and public places of the said district, and otherwise acted in the execution of the several powers by the said Act of the 11 Geo. 3, c. xii. granted; and the district of the said commissioners is within the jurisdiction of the said Act of the 57 Geo. 3, c. 29. The appellants are the owners, and possessed of certain main and branch pipes, with the cocks and plugs belonging thereto, running underground through the streets, squares, lanes, courts, alleys, ways, and other public passages in various parts of the district embraced by the said Act of Parliament of the 11 Geo. 3, c. xii. and within the limits of the jurisdiction of the respondents as such commissioners, and which parts of the said district have been paved and repaired, and over which the said commissioners have otherwise exercised the powers of the last-mentioned Act, for the purpose of conveying water, and through which main and branch pipes water is conveyed by the appellants to the inhabitants of such district and others. The plugs and stop-cocks inserted in various parts of the said pipes are inclosed in smaller pipes, the extremities of which last mentioned pipes terminate in iron boxes, which rise to and form part of the surface of the said streets. The appellants have been possessed of their mains and pipes, &c. for upwards of thirty years, and until the year 1851 were never assessed to a paving-rate or any rate whatever for the said district under the said Acts of the 11 Geo. 3, c. 12, and 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, or either of them; but the said company have from time to time been assessed to, and have paid the rates, for the relief of the poor and for the maintenance of the police, and the rate for lighting and cleansing the streets and other public places, in the parish of St. Mary, Whitechapel, and the rate for repairing the church of the said parish, which rates have been from time to time assessed, by virtue of a statute passed in the 46th year of the reign of his Majesty King Geo. 3, for the maintenance of the poor within the parish of St. Mary, Whitechapel, &c. the 53rd section (the Rating clause) of which was set out in the case. If the Court shall be of opinion that the appellants are, under the circumstances aforesaid, liable to be rated in respect of the said mains, pipes, &c. or any of them, or of the lands, ground, or space which they or any of them occupy, the said rate is to be confirmed; but if the Court shall be of the contrary opinion, then the said rate shall be quashed or amended by striking out the assessment on the appellants.

Pashley (Aspland with him), for the respondents. The words of the 11 Geo. 3, c. xii. s. 36, are precisely the same as the words of the statute of Elizabeth; and by many decisions it has been settled that water and gas companies are rateable to the relief of the poor in respect of their pipes as occupiers of land. (R. v. The Corporation of Bath, 14 East, 609; R. v. The Rochdale Waterworks Company, 1 M. & S. 634; R. v. The Brighton Gas Company, 5 B. & C. 466; R. v. Foleshill, 2 Ad. & E. 593.) In the cases, in which they have been held not rateable, the decision has proceeded upon the ground that the word "land" was not found in the particular statute. (R. v. The Manchester and Salford Waterworks, 1 B. & C. 630.)

Bovill, contrà.—The case of The Chelsea Water Works Company v. Bowley, 20 L. J. 520, Q. B. establishes the principle that the Water Company in respect of their pipes, enjoy an easement only, and are not occupiers of land, tenements, or hereditaments. [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—That decision proceeded upon the peculiar provisions of the Land-tax Acts, affecting the relation of landlord and tenant.] So there are numerous provisions in the 11 Geo. 3, c. 12, which shew that the Legislature did not intend to include water-pipes under the general word "land" in the rating clause. The preamble recites that the Act is for the benefit of the inhabitants and persons passing through the streets, so that the water company are not included amongst the persons benefited; and there is a series of provisions respecting the repair and position of the water-pipes, in all of which water-pipes are described eo nomine. (Secs. 14—19.) There are also special provisions as to the rating of meeting houses, void spaces of ground, empty houses, and other matters; some of which appear to apply to all that was intended to be rateable, and yet would not apply to water-pipes, of which in truth there is no occupier. (Secs. 42, 43, 44.) In the General Act (57 G. 3), there are similar clauses, giving a control to the Paving Commissioners with respect to the pipes, and imposing various charges upon the Water Company. (He referred to ss. 10, 12, 15, and 52 of the General Act; to R. v. East London Waterworks Company, 21 L. J. 49, M.C.; Crease v. Sawle, 2 Q. B. 862; and The Constables of Chorlton v. Walker, 10 Mee. & W. 755.) [ERLE, J.—The Act of Parliament seems to contemplate a different degree of rateability, according to the state of the pavement; so much in the pound for the paved streets, less for the partially paved, still less for the unpaved; but the pipes pervade the whole district, and as to them the precise state of the surface seems indifferent. Still I suppose the calculation must be made for the purpose of rating of the number of feet of pipes under the unpaved streets, the number under the partially paved, and the number under the completely paved.] That enactment alone makes it clear that the Legislature only intended to give the power of rating the ordinary subjects of tenancy, as land, houses, shops, warehouses, and the like, in the popular understanding of those words.

Pashley in reply.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that this property is liable to be rated under s. 36 of 11 Geo. 3, c. xii. which authorises a rate to be laid upon every "occupier of land and houses." Those are the very words of the stat. 43 Eliz. and by a long series of decisions, beginning with the Bath case and including the Brighton case, and others to the same effect, it is settled that such pipes are rateable to the relief of the poor as land. Now that being so, I can see no reason why the same construction should not be put upon the same words in this Act of Parliament. In R. v. The Manchester and Salford Waterworks Company, the pipes were held not rateable, but solely on the ground that the word land was not to be found in that statute; and that the other general words were to be considered as referring to matters ejusdem generis with those previously enumerated. So the late case between Mile-end Old Town and this very company proceeded upon the same ground. Mr. Bovill, however, places great reliance upon the case of The Chelsea Waterworks Company v. Bowley; but that proceeded entirely upon the peculiar provisions of the Land Tax Acts, and the Court cautiously guarded itself against being supposed to interfere at all with the decisions upon the statute of Elizabeth. All that was there said was, that the occupation of land by pipes may be the exercise of an easement only, or it may be the enjoyment of an interest in the land, and that in that case the company did not appear to have such an interest in the land as was liable to the land tax. But the land here is used by the company for their pipes; and I see nothing in the Act to shew that such property was not intended to be rateable. There can be no doubt that the company do derive benefit from the operations of the Paving Commissioners, and though the situation of the pipes may be altered by the Commissioners, they are lawfully placed where they now are in the occupation of the water company; and I think, therefore, that the rate is well imposed.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am of the same opinion; and I do not at all proceed upon the ground that the plugs appear to occupy some portion of the surface. I regard the case as if the surface and the subsoil were completely divided for the purpose of occupation and rating; and so regarding it, I think that the words of the rating clauses are quite large enough to include this description of property, and it has been so held in a variety of cases.

ERLE, J. concurred.

CROMPTON, J.—The only doubt I have felt was created by the conclusion of sec. 36, making a different amount payable according to the state of the pavement; but I think that that provision is not enough to control the ordinary construction of the other words.

Rule discharged.

REG. v. THE REGISTRAR OF FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

Friendly Society—Place of meeting—10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 10—9 & 10 Vict. c. 27, s. 12.

A Friendly Society cannot, since the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 27, s. 12, hold its place of meeting, or alter the same to any other county than that in which it was established for the purpose of its business.

This was a rule nisi, calling upon the Registrar of Friendly Societies to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding him to certify an amended rule of the Kent Mutual Insurance Society to be conformable to law, and in compliance with the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, and 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 40, or to point out in what respect the rule was defective. Under those Acts the society was bound to have its place of business within the county in which its rules were enrolled with the clerk of the peace, but a recent statute, the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 27, s. 12, having repealed the provision which required the rules to be enrolled with the clerk of the peace, and required the rules in future to be transferred to the Registrar of Friendly Societies, the society claimed a right to have a place of business out of the county. They had accordingly altered their rules, and removed their place of business from Rochester to Old Jewry, in the city of London; but the registrar, acting under the advice of the then Attorney-General (Sir A. E. Cockburn), had refused to certify the rule so amended.

The Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, and B. Andrews, now shewed cause against the rule.—The question depends on the effect of the 12th section of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 27 upon the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56. The 3rd section of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, that the transcript of all rules of friendly so- . shall be transmitted to, and enrolled by, the ____ of the peace of the county in which the society is intended to be established. By the 10th section, the rules of every society formed under the Act were to specify the place or places at which it was intended the society should hold its meetings; provided that such society should have power to alter their place of meeting when necessary, on giving notice of the alteration to the clerk of the peace, and provided that such place of meeting should be within the county in which the rules of the society were enrolled. By the 12th section of the recent Act for the regulation of friendly societies, the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 27, it was enacted that so much of the 10 Geo. 4 as required the transcript of the rules to be deposited with the clerk of the peace should be repealed, and that all transcripts of such rules as by the statute of Geo. 4 were deposited with the clerk of the peace, should be returned to the Registrar of Friendly Societies. It was contended that as this section repealed the enactment contained in the 10 Geo. 4, and the rules were no longer required to be enrolled within the county, it also repealed the proviso which required the place of business to be within the county. But, from an examination of the general provisions of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, ss. 11, 26, 27, it is plain that these societies were intended to be of a local nature, and it would be in the highest degree inconvenient, and it could hardly be the intention of the Legislature, that a society established in a distant county should have its only place of business in the city of London.

Willes in support of the rule.—It is true, that by the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, these societies were intended to be of a local nature, but the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 27, introduced a new state of things, and the control and jurisdiction over them were vested in a central officer, the Registrar of Friendly Societies. Sec. 12 of that Act substitutes the registrar for the clerk of the peace of the county with regard to the custody and enrolment of the rules; and all the consequences flowing from the custody of the rules by the clerk of the peace are thereby repealed; and among them, sec. 10 of 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, which required notice of the intended change of place of meeting to be given to the clerk of the peace of the county in which the rules are enrolled.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that the rule ought to be discharged. The Registrar of Friendly Societies acted quite rightly in refusing to certify this alteration of the rules. It is allowed that under the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, the society could not make this rule, there being restrictions therein to prevent that being done. Reliance was therefore placed on the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 27. But this statute does not expressly repeal the proviso annexed to the 10th section of the 10 Geo. 4; and I am of opinion that it is not impliedly repealed, but may stand with the enactment contained in the recent statute. There is no contrariety in these restrictions remaining in force after all that is expressly repealed by the statute of Victoria being repealed. If there was any doubt about the matter, the inconvenience which would result from a different construction would be entitled to great weight in showing what the intention of the Legislature was.

COLERIDGE, J.—Nothing is more clear than that these societies were intended to be local. For one particular purpose, viz. with regard to the place of meeting, there is good reason why they should be locally confined. The general meetings should be held in the county where the members reside. To say that the spirit of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 27, is to centralise the places of meeting, and that they should all be brought to the place where the Registrar of Friendly Societies resides, that is in the county of Middlesex, is to say that no such meetings shall take place for any useful purpose, for it is quite obvious that no such meeting could be fairly held. The 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 10, enacts that the place of meeting may be altered upon giving notice to the clerk of the peace of the county within which such society shall be held, provided that the place at which such society intend to hold their meetings shall be situate within the county in which the rules of the society are enrolled. Turn, then, to the repealing enactment 9 & 10 Vict. c. 27, s. 12, "so much of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56. as requires that a transcript of the rules shall be deposited with the clerk of the peace of any county, and a certificate thereof returned to the society, and that the same shall be laid before and allowed and confirmed by the justices, shall be repealed," &c. The repeal is confined to taking away the jurisdiction of the magistrates as to the allowance and confirmation of the rules, and the enacting part is that the rules shall be deposited with the registrar. There is not one word said about the place of meeting, and there is nothing to destroy the enactment requiring it to be in the county where the society is held.

Erle, J. was absent from Court during this case.

CROMPTON, J.—The 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 10, gave power to these societies to hold their meetings and to alter their places of meeting provided they were held within the county in which the rules of the societies were enrolled. It would be a strong thing to say that their meetings might be held anywhere in England, but if the Legislature has said so, it must be so. The enacting part of sec. 12 of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 27, provides a new custody for the rules of these societies, i. e. in the Registrar of Friendly Societies' office, and then proceeds to say that the effect shall be the same, and that all the provisions of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, shall apply to them as if they had been confirmed by the justices and filed with the rolls of the sessions of the peace. Then what is that effect with regard to the place of meeting? why, that it may be altered, provided the alteration be to a place in the county where the society is held.

Rule discharged.

Ex parte THE REV. F. ROSE.

Prohibition—The Church Discipline Act.

Proceedings were instituted under the Church Discipline Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 3, and the commissioners reported to the bishop that there was a primâ facie ground for instituting further proceedings (sec. 5); but the party inculpated consented to the bishop pronouncing sentence without further proceedings, and the bishop accordingly pronounced sentence of deprivation for three years with a condition annexed, that at the end of that period the party should produce to the bishop a certificate to be approved of by the bishop, of three beneficed clergymen, of his having conducted himself well during the suspension. At the end of the three years the party produced such a certificate, but the bishop declined to receive it on the ground of one of the clergymen, who signed it, being incompetent to judge of the party's conduct during the time:

Held, that the above sentence of the bishop was legal, and that there was no ground for a prohibition to restrain the bishop from carrying out the sentence.

Sir A. E. Cockburn (with whom was Couch) applied for a rule, calling upon the Bishop of Oxford to shew cause why a prohibition should not issue prohibiting him from further carrying into effect a sentence of suspension pronounced upon the Rev. Francis Rose, D.D. rector of Woughton, and also rector of Little Woolston, in the county of Buckingham. Some years ago a charge of adultery was made against Dr. Rose. The Bishop of Oxford appointed a commission, under the Church Discipline Act, to inquire whether there was a primâ facie case against him. The commissioners reported to the bishop that there was a primâ facie case, and on that report being made, Dr. Rose was advised to submit himself at once to the judgment of the bishop. Sec. 6 of the Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86) enacts that in all cases "where proceedings shall have been commenced under this Act against any such clerk, it shall be lawful for the bishop of any diocese within which such clerk may hold any preferment, with the consent of such clerk, and of the party complaining, if any, first obtained in writing, to pronounce, without any further proceedings, such sentence as the said bishop shall think fit, not exceeding the sentence which might be pronounced in due course of law, and all such sentences shall be good and effectual in law as if pronounced after a hearing, according to the provisions of this Act." Dr. Rose having consented to submit himself to the judgment of his bishop, the latter at once proceeded, under the above section, to pronounce sentence. The bishop's sentence was, that Dr. Rose should be suspended from his office for the period of three years, and that upon the expiration of the three years he should produce a certificate of three beneficed clergymen in his vicinity of his good behaviour during the term of his suspension, the said certificate to be approved by the bishop before the suspension should be taken off. On the expiration of the three years, Dr. Rose produced to the bishop a certificate signed by three beneficed clergymen in his neighbourhood, stating that he had been of good behaviour, as required; but the bishop declared that he was not satisfied with the certificate, inasmuch as it was signed by a clergyman who, from his age and infirmities, was an incompetent judge. Dr. Rose was thus placed in very great difficulty. The sentence of suspension required that the certificate of good behaviour should be signed by three clergymen; but as the bishop had expressed himself dissatisfied with that which had been sent in, it was quite impossible for Dr. Rose to comply with the requirement, as the other beneficed clergymen in the neighbourhood had not been resident in the neighbourhood so long as three years. The Court would have to consider how far it was consistent with the law that in passing sentence the bishop should be at liberty to attach a condition which might have the effect of entailing upon the party an indefinite suspension.

COLERIDGE, J.—The bishop might have deprived the party altogether. The Church Discipline Act enabled the bishop to pronounce such sentence as he might think fit, "not exceeding the sentence which might be pronounced in due course of law."

Sir A. E. Cockburn.—If the bishop pronounced sentence of suspension, he must proceed according to the rules which applied in such cases. In the case of Watson v. Thorp, 1 Philli. Eccl. Rep. one of the objections made to the sentence of suspension was, that the certificate should be approved by the judge. In that case the Court appeared to have doubted whether that condition of the sentence could be sustained; but as the certificate, if improperly refused, would have been a ground for appeal, the Court confirmed the sentence upon the other grounds. In the present case, however, Dr. Rose had no appeal. The party was completely at the mercy of the bishop, who was able to convert a sentence of temporary suspension into one of virtual deprivation.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. said that in O'Connell's case, 11 Cl. & Fin. 155, the objection to the securities was that they were to continue in force for three years after they had been approved. That might have amounted to imprisonment for life. It was within the power of the ordinary to pass sentence of deprivation, but he had passed only a mild sentence of suspension for three years, with a reasonable condition that the suspension should not be taken off till he had produced a certificate satisfactory to the bishop, signed by three beneficed clergymen in the neighbourhood that he had been of good behaviour for three years.

Sir A. E. Cockburn then contended that a sentence of suspension should be definite, like a punishment, and that the bishop had no greater power than a judge of the Ecclesiastical Court.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that there is no ground for this prohibition. There was a proceeding against this applicant for adultery, and the commissioners had reported to the bishop that there was a primâ facie case for instituting further proceedings. Instead of insisting on further inquiry, he submitted at once to receive the sentence of the bishop, and in effect pleaded guilty before the forum of the bishop, under the Church Discipline Act. The sentence then passed was a judicial sentence, and it did not exceed that which might have been passed on the applicant in a proceeding according to the ordinary course of law; on the contrary, a sentence of deprivation might have been passed. The condition annexed to it was most reasonable, and, but for the locus pœnitentiæ involved in that c[illegible] tion, a more severe punishment would, no d[illegible] have been inflicted. It seems to me that such power as this condition implies ought to belong to the bishop, and there is no authority to shew that it does not.

COLERIDGE, J.—Suspension may be of several kinds; it may be for a limited time, or it may be unqualified in its duration. If it is a suspension for ever, it takes the name of deprivation; they are ejusdem generis. Here the applicant has been suspended for a limited period, with a most reasonable condition added, that the bishop should be informed by a certificate how he had conducted himself during the time of suspension. As to the bishop taking it for granted at the end of the time of his suspension that during that time he had conducted himself well, it is improper to expect the bishop to assume anything of the kind, and yet if the applicant has not done so, he is unfit to resume his duties in the parish. The added condition seems to me most reasonable, and when the applicant submitted himself to this particular jurisdiction, he was bound to know that he was taking his case out of the rules of the general law.

ERLE, J.—The only question is, whether it is shewn by the affidavits that the Court below has exceeded its jurisdiction. As there can be no doubt that for the offence here charged the bishop might have pronounced a sentence of deprivation, I cannot say that the sentence he did pronounce at all exceeded his jurisdiction.

CROMPTON, J.—This is a suspension which may be indefinitely prolonged by the non-performance of a condition; but even then it will only amount to deprivation, which sentence the bishop had the power to pronounce.

Rule refused.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

REG. v. THE BIRKENHEAD DOCK TRUSTEES.—Lord Campbell, C.J. delivered the judgment of the Court, affirming the rate. Judgment for the respondents.

COOKE v. GILHAM.—This was an action on an attorney's bill, tried before Wightman, J. in the Bail Court. Upon a plea that no signed bill had been delivered pursuant to the statute, the verdict had been entered for the defendant. Keating now moved, by leave of the learned judge, to enter it for the plaintiff. The question was, whether a bill was sufficient which showed that the business had been done in one of the Superior Courts, but not in which of them; and whether a bill containing some unexceptionable items was good as to those items, though it might not give sufficient information as to the rest. (Ivimey v Marks, 16 M. & W. 843; Anderson v Boynton, 19 L J. 42, Q.P.; Keene v. Ward, 13 Q B 515; 19 L J 46, Q.B.; and Hugh v. Clifford, 1 Ry. & Moo. were referred to. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE VICAR AND CHURCHWARDENS OF HAMMERSMITH.—Pashley moved for a rule for a mandamus to compel the Vicar and Churchwardens of Hammersmith to call a vestry meeting to determine the application of certain funds, which had arisen from the sale of waste lands in the parish to the Great Western Railway Company. By the Acts of Parliament the money was to be applied to such general purposes as the vestry should direct. A vestry meeting had been held, and several propositions made; but, by the course taken by the chairman, it was now alleged that the inhabitants had been prevented from voting at all upon one amendment which was moved. Rule nisi.

Re GROVE.—Collier moved to strike an attorney off the roll, at his own request, in order that he might be called to the Bar. Application granted.

HALL v. THORNTON.—This was an action by the executor of the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note; tried before Wightman, J. in the Bail Court, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff. Unthank moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. In answer to a plea of the Statute of Limitations the plaintiff proved payment of interest by an agent of defendant within six years; but the defendant swore that that agent had received from him both principal and interest, to be paid to the testator. That being so he had no authority to pay the interest only; and the unauthorised payment was no evidence of a new promise by the defendant. (Landsell v. Bonsor, 2 Bing. N. C 241.) By the COURT.—He was not the less authorised to pay the interest because he was authorised also to pay the principal; and he did pay the interest quâ interest Rule refused.

Ex parte RICHARD ASHTON.—Archbold moved for a rule for a certiorari to bring up a conviction, whereby the applicant was convicted of an offence against his license to sell ale, in "suffering an unlawful game called dominoes to be played in his house;" whereas dominoes is not an unlawful game. 33 Hen. 8, c. 9, s. 17, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, were referred to. Rule nisi.

REG. v. SAVILLE.—Collier showed cause against a rule calling on the prosecutor of this criminal information to shew cause why he should not pay the costs of the defendant, who had been acquitted. By the practice of the Court the defendant is not entitled to more than 20*l* the amount of the recognisance, and that is always obtained by a side-bar rule. M. Smith, contrà.—The practice may limit the amount to 20*l*; but the statute does not. It entitles the defendant to his costs generally. R v. Woodfall, 2 Stra. 1131; and R. v. Filewood, 2 T. R. 145, were mentioned. Rule discharged on payment of 20l.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF HILLINGDON.—Gray showed cause against a rule for a mandamus to the defendants to meet in vestry, and elect a surveyor of highways for the remainder of the present year. At the usual vestry meeting held for that purpose, a contest had taken place between two candidates, which was decided first in [illegible] poll of the whole parish, which the chairman refused, on the ground that the election was at an end. Pashley, contrà. R. v. Lambeth, 8 Ad. & El 358; Stoughton v Reynolds, 2 Stra. 1045; R. v. The Archdeacon of Chester, 1 Ad. & El. 342; Campbell v. Maund, 5 Ad. & El 865, were referred to. The Court thought the election perfectly valid, there having been a tacit agreement that it should be decided by a poll of the inhabitants then present in vestry. Rule discharged with costs.

ADDISON v. THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSES OF PRESTON.

Municipal corporation—Debt for salary of Judge and Assessor—Payment out of borough fund—5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, ss. 92, 118.

By section 92 of the Municipal Corporations Act 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, it is enacted "that after the election of the treasurer in any borough, the rents and profits of all hereditaments and the interest of all moneys belonging to the corporation shall be paid to the treasurer, and be by him carried to the account of the 'borough fund,' which fund shall be applied towards payment of the salary of the mayor, &c. and of the respective salaries of the town clerk and treasurer, and of every other officer whom the council shall appoint:"

Held, that a "Judge and Assessor" appointed by the council with a fixed salary could not maintain an action of debt against the corporation for such salary.

This was an action of debt brought by the plaintiff to recover salary as Recorder of Preston. The declaration stated that the defendants were indebted to the plaintiff in 52*l.* 10*s.* for one year's service and attendance in holding a Court of Record, which by charter or custom was and ought to be holden in and for the borough of Preston, as the necessary officer other than the recorder (to wit, the judge and assessor), upon the appointment of the council of the said borough, such appointment being made according to 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, and for the salary, therefore due and of right payable, and in 52*l.* 10*s.* for work and labour, attendances, &c. The defendants pleaded Never Indebted. In order to raise the question for the decision of the Court, the parties agreed to state a special case under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 25. The case stated that up to the passing of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, the mayor, recorder, and aldermen of Preston were by charter justices of the peace for the borough, and that a separate Court of Quarter Sessions was held in and for the said borough. The mayor was elected annually. The recorder was elected by the common council. There was in the borough, by charter, a Court of Record for the trial of civil actions, regularly held, and not regulated by any local Act. Of this Court the mayor and two or more aldermen were, by charter, the judges. The plaintiff was elected recorder in 1832, and has continued to be so called to the present time. He was, when elected, a barrister of more than five years' standing. Up to and at the time of the said Act he acted as assessor of the said Court, which was always held before the judges designated by the charter. No formal appointment as assessor was made. On the 1st of January, 1836, the members of the new council, under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, elected a mayor, and appointed the plaintiff as judge and assessor of the said Court during his good behaviour. The said Court has been regularly held over since, and the plaintiff has acted as judge and assessor, and has always been of good behaviour. Nothing was done respecting the plaintiff's salary until the 1st of January, 1838, when a resolution was passed by the council, "that the salary of the judge and assessor be fixed at the yearly sum of fifty guineas, to commence from the 1st of January, 1836, the date of his appointment." On the 1st of January, 1850, the council passed a resolution altering the salary of the judge and assessor from fifty guineas to ten guineas. The plaintiff refused to accept the reduced salary; and no sum having been paid for his service for the year ending the 1st of January, 1851, he brought this action.

J. Henderson and Hon. G. Denman for the plaintiff.—There is in this case a clear right of the plaintiff to receive, and an obligation on the defendants to pay the sum claimed in this action for duties performed for the defendants. The principle is affirmed in a dictum of Holt, J. (6 Mod. 27), cited in Hopkins v. The Mayor of Swansea, 4 M. & W. 621 (affirmed on Error, 8 M. & W. 901), "Wherever a statute enacts anything, or prohibits anything for the advantage of any person, that person shall have remedy to recover the advantage given him, or to have satisfaction for the injury done him contrary to law by the same statute." In the present case a statute imposes a duty on a corporation to appoint an officer by whose services they benefit, and there is consequently upon them an obligation to pay. On that proposition of law is based the plaintiff's case. That case is distinguishable from Bogg v. Pearse, 2 L. M. & P. 21; 20 L.J. 99, C.P. on which the other side will rely. But in that case there was no statutory obligation on the defendant to pay street-keepers and the like officers; so that one branch, and that a most material one, of the proposition here relied on, was wholly wanting. Here the plaintiff has a statutory right to maintain this action. Besides this, the liability of commissioners of paving and that of a municipal corporation stands on different grounds. In Hopkins v. The Mayor of Swansea, if it had been tenable the same objection as that made here would apply. As to the appointment of the plaintiff, the case states that no formal appointment was made before the passing of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, but it is found that he acted as assessor previous to that time; no appointment was necessary; there was a ratification of plaintiff's authority as assessor by the corporation in their permitting him to act, and by payment of salary, and that is sufficient. (Reg. v. Grimshaw, 10 Q.B. 747.) [JERVIS, C.J.—The decision there went only to this, that so far as regarded the exercise of jurisdiction, the Court would not treat an office as vacant where a coroner had been recognised by the council, and had performed the duties of his office for many years.] The case cited is decisive as to appointment: the office has been full, the plaintiff being assessor. [WILLIAMS, J.—Before the Municipal Corporations Act the mayor was judge, and the plaintiff sat as his assessor.] Yes; and being assessor before that Act, it becomes material to consider what change in his position that statute has effected. He relies upon that Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76), the 118th section of which, "that in every borough in which, by charter or custom, there is or ought to be holden a Court of Record, for the trial of civil actions, not regulated by the provisions of any local Act of Parliament, or in which, at the time of the passing of this Act, a barrister of five years standing shall not act as judge or assessor; the recorder, or in the absence of the recorder, or in case there shall not be a recorder, such officer of the borough as by the charter constituting such Court, or by custom, shall be the judge, shall continue to be and act as such judge, and the council of such borough, in every case, whether such Court be regulated by the provisions of a local Act of Parliament, or otherwise, shall have power for that purpose to appoint the necessary officer other than the recorder, before whom such Court is to be holden; and every such judge or assessor, other than the mayor, shall hold his office during good behaviour." Here the plaintiff comes within the first part of the section. There being no new recorder appointed for Preston, under the Municipal Corporation Act, it became the duty of the council to appoint the "necessary officer;" and this they did by the appointment of 1st January, 1836, when, in fact, the plaintiff became appointed judge, holding during good behaviour. They also, under sec. 58, fixed a salary for him from that date. [Cresswell, J.—Could the mayor sue for his salary?] Yes; the proposition must be extended so far as that. [Cresswell, J.—Then he would be suing himself.] He is a separate officer. By sec. 92 the obligation of the corporation to pay, and the right of plaintiff to receive, is indicated. By that section it is provided that the rents and profits of all hereditaments, and the proceeds of all moneys, &c. belonging to the corporation, or to any member or officer thereof in his corporate capacity, and every fine and penalty for any offence against the Act shall be paid to the treasurer and carried by him to the account of the "borough fund," which fund is to be applied towards the payment of the salary of the mayor, &c. "and of the respective salaries of the town clerk and treasurer, and of every other officer whom the council shall appoint." Here then there is a recognition by statute of the right of plaintiff to receive, and of the obligation on the corporation to pay his salary. [Jervis, C.—Suppose there were no funds?] Then the action would be profitless, for there can be no ca. sa. against a corporation. [Jervis, C.J.—He must be paid out of a particular fund.] That is no objection to the right of plaintiff to maintain this action. As to the obligation to pay, this is exactly what has been settled in Hopkins v. The Mayor of Swansea. [Williams, J.—In that case there was an averment that the treasurer had received and was in possession of funds from a particular source for payment of the moneys claimed.] That averment was there necessary, because the money was only to be so applied when there was a surplus. It was the duty of the treasurer to pay; in fact, the treasurer's is the hand that pays, and it can hardly be contended that the corporation is not liable because it is the treasurer who pays. The 92nd section clearly imposes a duty on the treasurer to pay; and it is not to be upheld that, because the corporation have no power to raise funds by mortgaging or conveying their property, this action, which is for salary, cannot be maintained against them. But it has been said, that if the corporation have power to fix, they have also power to reduce the salary. It would be contrary to public policy that a corporation, when once it has fixed, should have power to reduce salaries. [Jervis, C.J.—A like question was considered in the Queen's Bench: it arose respecting the county constabulary. The question was, whether, where an officer had been once appointed with a salary, the office to be held during good behaviour, his salary could be reduced?] Here the salary was fixed by the parties themselves at a particular sum, and there exists no power to alter it. Suppose it was a mere case of master and servant; clearly the master could not of his own act, and without consent, diminish the servant's wages; and it would be a most arbitrary and unjust thing that the salary of a judicial officer such as the plaintiff should be dependent on the will of a corporation, to be reduced at pleasure.

Byles, Serjt. (Segar with him). The proper mode of trying the question here raised is not by an action of debt; for, in order to ground an action of debt against the corporation, there must be either a positive contract, or there must be a statutory liability on the corporation in their corporate capacity to pay the salary. There is clearly no contract; it follows, then, that to make the corporation liable, the statute must prescribe a remedy against them in their capacity as a corporation upon a particular fund—a remedy in personam, and not in rem. The right of the plaintiff, as it appears by section 92, is to be paid out of the borough fund. Here it does not appear that there is a borough fund; and, so far as that section is concerned, the corporation might have to raise such a fund by a borough rate. This being so, how can the plaintiff substantiate his right to have his salary paid out of the corporation property? If it be held he is so entitled, he might have an elegit against the property of the corporation. It was held, in Jones v. The Mayor, &c. of Carmarthen, 8 M. & W. 605, that the town clerk of a borough could not maintain an action of debt against the corporation, for duties performed, under the Municipal Corporations Act, his right being limited to the borough fund, and from that alone he is to be paid. That case is directly in point. The proper mode in which the plaintiff ought to proceed to enforce his claim, if such he has, is pointed out in a recent case decided in this Court (Bogg v. Pearse, ubi suprà). There is this material difference between the case cited in argument for the plaintiff (Hopkins v. The Mayor, &c. of Swansea), and the present case, that there the corporation had the money in their hands, and were bound to pay it over by the statute. The corporation had a clear and indefeasible right to reduce the plaintiff's salary at their pleasure; and as to the appointment of plaintiff on 1st of January, 1836, it was void. (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 105, s. 9.)

J. Henderson, in reply, referred to Comyn's Dig. (A.) 9, and insisted that Hopkins v. The Mayor of Swansea was a case directly in point as applied to the present. With respect to Jones v. The Mayor of Carmarthen, he distinguished that case, and shewed its inapplicability upon the ground that the services performed by the town-clerk in that case were not properly the subject of remuneration, and therefore the plaintiff could not recover for them. As to the language of Lord Abinger, with reference to the position that payment be made out of the borough fund, if made at all, it was merely an obiter dictum, and not a well-considered remark. He referred to Tilson v. The Warwick Gas Company, 4 B. & C. 962; and to Carden v. The General Cemetery Company, 5 Bing. N.C. 253.

Jervis, C.J.—I am of opinion that the defendants in this case are entitled to judgment. With the strong view I entertain on the first point, I think it is not necessary to hear counsel further, or to enter upon consideration of the second and third points. As to the principles on which the first point are to be determined, there seems to be no real difference between the arguments on both sides. This is an action of debt, and it is admitted it cannot be maintained by reason of any contract, express or implied, subsisting between the parties. It is, however, said on the one hand, and admitted on the other, that an action will lie if the rule of law which is laid down is applicable to the case, that in order to maintain an action there must be a legal right to receive on the one hand, and a legal liability in the corporation personally so described on the other to pay; and if those two, right and liability, co-exist in this case, it is contended on the one hand and not disputed on the other that an action of debt will lie. And I think for the purpose of this case, we may assume that that proposition is well collected from the authorities, and could be supported if it were necessary to contest it on this occasion. It is not upon the rule itself, but upon the application of the rule, that this case depends. There may, and taking it for granted that the second and third points are in favour of the plaintiff, there possibly does exist on his part a legal right to receive his salary; but the second proposition on which the action of debt depends is in my opinion, wanting in this case; namely, legal liability on the part of the corporation, as corporators, to pay out of their corporate property, not out of a specific fund, but out of all their property, the debt which the plaintiff contends they are liable to pay. I think this action must be viewed as one brought to recover the debt specifically from any of the property of which the defendants as corporators have the administration; and that we must take it that he asserts by his declaration that he has a right to have his debt paid out of all the property of the corporation which could be made available for the payment of debts, and that if the plaintiff is right, the defendants would have a right, or would be bound to pay the debt or salary out of their corporate property as distinguished from the borough fund. Now, my opinion is, that, upon the true construction of the Act of Parliament, although on the one hand we may assume that the officer has a right to receive his salary, on the other hand, at the same time when the legislature is creating a power in the corporation to fix a salary, it points out a particular and definite fund out of which that particular salary is to come, and the particular officer by whom that payment is to be made; and that when the legislature says that the assessor, amongst other persons (which I assume to be the case, for the purpose of the argument), is to be paid out of the borough fund, and the officer, with knowledge of that provision, takes the appointment so created, that he has no right to say—"I will divert the corporate funds from their original intention or purpose; and because you will not pay out of the borough rate or borough fund, I will not resort to my prerogative remedy to compel you to raise the fund, and so pay my salary out of the fund defined by the Act, but I will sue you personally, so as to enable you by collusion, or in invitum to compel you to waste the corporate property, out of which it was not intended by the Act that you should pay that particular sum." I think, therefore, when they took upon themselves by the Act the right to nominate the salary or pay it to the officer, they took it with the obligation to pay out of a particular fund, to be administered by a particular officer; and although this would give to the plaintiff a right to receive the amount, and so give him part of the remedy, it does not cast upon the defendants the personal liability to pay out of their corporate property the particular debt; and, therefore, that the second requisite, without which it is admitted the action will not lie, is wanting in this case. Therefore, our judgment should be for the defendants.

Cresswell, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. Assuming, for the purpose of this discussion, that Mr. Addison was well appointed the assessor of this court, and that afterwards the salary was well granted, and that the attempt to reduce that salary by subsequent order was not according to law, still I think he can have no action of debt against the corporation to recover this money. As my lord has pointed out, the statute shews that, when appointed and when he had a salary, it was to be paid out of the borough fund. The mode of administering that fund is pointed out by the statute. The salary in question is appointed to be paid out of that fund; his right to have it is a right to have it out of that fund; and it is not a debt attaching upon the corporation. I think, therefore, that the action of debt against the corporation cannot be maintained.

Williams, J.—I am also of the same opinion. I give no opinion as to any point which has arisen in this case, except as to the question whether an action of debt would lie to enforce the payment of the amount of the plaintiff's salary; assuming that he is a salaried officer, properly appointed under the Municipal Corporation Act. I am of opinion that no such action can be maintained. The plaintiff, in this case, has no general right to payment out of the corporation property, as he had in the case of Hopkins v. The Mayor of Swansea; he has no right to payment of his salary here except out of the borough fund; and if that fund is incapable, by want of assets, of paying the salary, he must, by some means or other, procure that it shall become capable by means of a rate before he can get his salary. I think that in that state of things there is no foundation for an action of debt against the corporation. Therefore, this action must fail.

Judgment for the defendants.

Foster v. Crabb.

Pleading—Special traverse.

The matter of inducement and the traverse must each be a sufficient answer in themselves.

The replication need only answer what is set up in the plea, where the plea is in confession and avoidance.

In an action of detinue brought by one of two persons jointly entitled to the possession of a deed, the defendant pleaded that the deed was delivered to him by the other, and that he held it by his authority. To which there was a special traverse that it was delivered to him by the other person, it being stated in the inducement that it was delivered to him by one G. on behalf of the plaintiff, and that defendant held it on behalf of the plaintiff:

Held, on special demurrer, that the replication was good.

This was an action of detinue, brought to recover possession of an annuity deed, in which the plaintiff and one Swindall were interested. The plea set out the deed, and then went on to allege that Swindall had possession of the deed, and delivered it to the defendant, and that defendant detained it by the authority of Swindall. To this there was a replication denying that Swindall had obtained possession of the deed before the plaintiff, which was demurred to, and upon that there had been a decision in favour of the defendant. There was then a new replication in the form of a special traverse, stating in the inducement that before the defendant had possession of the deed, one Green had possession of it on behalf of the plaintiff, and on behalf of the plaintiff delivered it to the defendant, who holds it on behalf of the plaintiff and by the plaintiff's authority, and then traversing specially the allegation in the plea that Swindall delivered the deed to the defendant. To this there was a demurrer, which now came on for argument.

J. Brown, in support of the demurrer.—The replication does not answer the whole plea, which, after alleging the delivery of the deed by Swindall to the defendant, goes on to say that the defendant detains the deed by the authority of Swindall, which last allegation is not answered; and if Swindall authorised the defendant to keep the deed, it is the same thing as if Swindall kept it himself, and is an answer to the declaration. By our demurrer we only admit what is material in the replication; that is, in this instance, that Swindall did not deliver the deed to the defendant; and the Court cannot assume how the defendant got possession of the deed. He may have got it by trover, and have been subsequently authorised by Swindall to detain it. The effect of a special traverse is explained in Stephens on Pleading, p. 175. [Maule, J.—The matter upon which the question of law arises is set out by way of inducement; and the question is, whether the matter so set out is sufficient, taken as true. You might have traversed any of the facts alleged in the inducement.] But whether that be so or not, the traverse is of something immaterial, and that is sufficient on special demurrer. It is insufficient by itself; for the defendant might have found the deed, and have been subsequently authorised by Swindall to keep it. But the inducement is insufficient, for it alleges that the defendant holds the deed by the authority of the plaintiff, and it does not shew any demand on the part of the plaintiff.

Grey, contrà.—The real question is, whether it is material from whom the defendant got the deed. I submit that it is, and decides the action. The plea alleges, 1st, that Swindall got the deed into his possession. 2ndly, that he delivered it to the defendant. 3rdly, that defendant detains it by the authority of Swindall. If that is so, the plea is a good answer. If the second of the above propositions be struck out, it is not sufficient, for the two other allegations are connected by means of the second, and they must be all taken together, for if the second were struck out the plea would then allege that Swindall had possession of the deed, and that defendant detains it by his authority, which would be consistent with the plaintiff's case, because, supposing Swindall had once possession of the deed, and plaintiff had somehow obtained it, and had then delivered it to defendant to keep for him, upon defendant's refusal to redeliver it, the plaintiff would have a right of action against him. That state of things is consistent with the plea, that proposition being struck out, for Swindall may afterwards have authorised the defendant to keep it for him. The traverse, therefore, is sufficient in itself. [JERVIS, C.J.—On special demurrer you must shew both the inducement and the traverse to be good]. The inducement is sufficient. The plea is one in confession and avoidance, and admits the plaintiff's title as shewn in the declaration, unless the plea is an answer, but the replication is an answer to the plea, and it is not necessary in the replication to shew a complete title, because that is admitted before by the mode of pleading, unless displaced by the plea. The introductory matter is an argumentative expansion of the traverse, and it is therefore only necessary in this inducement to state facts inconsistent with the allegation in the plea traversed; and we allege that Green delivered the deed to the defendant, and that defendant holds it by plaintiff's authority, and that is inconsistent with his holding it by Swindall's authority. The inducement must be taken in reference to the manner in which the defendant got the deed, and it means that he got it in the way stated, and in no other, and so is sufficient.

J. Brown, in reply.—The inducement must be sufficient in itself. (Stephens on Pleading, 183; Com. Dig. Pleading, G. 20.) The inducement here alleges that the defendant holds by the plaintiff's authority, without saying down to the time of the action brought. [MAULE, J.—If the replication is an answer to the plea, that is sufficient.] Then the traverse is insufficient by itself. Suppose it was found that the alleged bailment was negatived, then the record would shew that the defendant held the deed by the authority of Swindall, but it would not appear how he got it. The plea sets up an answer to the declaration; and the replication, in one state of circumstances, is an answer to the plea, in another (e. g. if defendant got the deed by trover) it is not. But the plea is good in itself, and therefore the replication must be good in all circumstances.

JERVIS, C.J.—I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to the judgment of the Court. The object of a special traverse is correctly stated in Stephens. The plaintiff may by it present a traverse on which issue in fact may be taken, and he may expand it in the inducement, so as to raise an issue in law. But they must both be sufficient. The defendant here might have taken an issue in fact on the special traverse, or he might have demurred generally, or he might have traversed the inducement. On all the points the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment. As to the traverse, strike out the allegation in the plea traversed, then the plea would be bad; for, being a plea in confession and avoidance, if the matter of it is not supported, the declaration remains good. The meaning of the plea of the defendant is, "I displace your right as alleged in the declaration, because Swindall delivered the deed to me." The plaintiff answers, in the replication, "Not so; I delivered it to you." And that is material, because a subsequent direction by Swindall to the plaintiff to keep it would not do. As to there being no allegation of a demand of redelivery, that is not pointed out in the grounds of demurrer. As to the technical objection, that the inducement says the defendant holds the deed by the authority of the plaintiff, without limiting it by saying down to the time of the action brought, the allegation is that Green delivered it to the defendant, and the defendant held it and holds it by the authority of the plaintiff; and that must be taken to mean, not that the defendant now holds it by plaintiff's authority, but that he obtained it by that authority.

The rest of the Court concurred.

DWYER v. COLLINS.

Evidence—Notice to produce—When it may be given during the trial—Attorney—Privileged communication.

A defendant was required to prove upon the trial the identity of the bill of exchange declared on; he had given no notice to produce it, but asked the plaintiff's attorney whether he had the bill then in court with him. The attorney upon being compelled by the judge to answer that question, said he had it in court. he was then required by the defendant to produce it, but he declined to do so. A notice to produce was then served; the bill not being produced, secondary evidence was thereupon given of its contents:

Held, that secondary evidence of it was admissible: and that the attorney for the plaintiff had been properly obliged to answer whether or not he had the bill in his possession in court at the trial.

The privilege of an attorney does not extend to matters of fact which he knows by other means than confidential communication with his client, although if he had not been employed as an attorney he would not have known them.

This was an action by an indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange. Plea that the bill was given for a gaming debt. The cause was tried before the Lord Chief Baron, and the defendant obtained the verdict. The defendant proved that he never accepted any bill for the drawer, except to realise bets, but being required to prove the identical bill sued on was the one so given, called upon the plaintiff to produce it, which he declined to do, no previous notice to produce having been given. The plaintiff's attorney, on being asked whether he had the bill with him, declined to answer, on the ground of its being a breach of professional confidence, the learned judge having decided he must answer, he admitted that the bill was in his possession, and in court. The bill was then called for, and a notice to produce it then served. The bill was not produced, and the learned judge thereupon admitted secondary evidence of its contents. A rule nisi had been obtained to set aside the defendant's verdict, on the ground that no notice to produce having been previously given, secondary evidence of the bill was improperly admitted, and also that the attorney's knowledge as to the bill which he had been obliged to disclose, was privileged.

Hawkins shewed cause.

Udall, in support of the rule (called upon by the Court), cited Goodered v. Armour, 3 Q.B. 956; Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250; Cook v. Hearn, 1 Mood. & Rob. 201; Rowe v. Harvey, 4 Bur. 2484; *Doe dem. (7th edit.) lays it down as clear, so does Starkie on Evidence; Sturge v. Buchanan, 10 A. & E. 598. Cur. adv. vult.

Saturday, May 8.—PARKE, B. delivered judgment.—This case was argued a short time ago in this court. The plaintiff sued the defendant on a bill of exchange; the defendant pleaded one plea only, that the bill was given for a gaming debt. On the trial before the Lord Chief Baron, the defendant gave evidence of the gaming, and swore that that was the only bill he ever gave to the drawer; that the bill endorsed to the plaintiff was by way of payment of the debt then incurred, and the defendant's counsel being called upon to prove the identical bill declared on was that which was given on the occasion, called for the bill, which the plaintiff's counsel declined to produce. He then asked the plaintiff's attorney, who was present in court, whether he had the bill with him? The plaintiff's counsel objected that such a question need not be answered, because it would be a breach of professional confidence to do so. The Lord Chief Baron, after consulting some of the other judges of this court at that time sitting in the Exchequer Chamber, decided that the question must be answered. The attorney admitted that the bill was in his possession and in court, and the defendant's counsel called for its production, which was refused. He then offered to give secondary evidence of the bill, to which it was objected by the plaintiff's counsel, that there ought to have been a previous notice to produce. The Lord Chief Baron, after consulting the same judges, ruled that it was competent for the defendant's counsel to do so: the evidence was given, and the verdict passed for the defendant. Mr. Humphrey obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, which the Court granted, as we thought the subject fit to be more fully considered, and decided, notwithstanding the opinion we had given to the Lord Chief Baron, and on which he had acted. The case was very fully argued at the Bar, and we had all the authorities consulted. We are of opinion that the rule ought to be discharged. We do not propose to decide whether the defendant's evidence in this case, that no other bill was given to the drawer who indorsed it to the plaintiff than the one for this gaming debt, superseded the necessity of further proof, nor to consider the question whether the pleadings themselves gave, as usual, notice that the bill must be the subject of inquiry, so that though in an action of trover for a written instrument which is described in it, where a notice to produce is unnecessary, it having been decided by the Court of Q. B. in Read v. Gamble, 7 A. & E. 597 (note); Goodered v. Armour, 3 Q. B. 956, followed by this Court in the case of Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250, that in a case like the present the pleadings do not give constructive notice, we wish to decide this case on the more general ground, the principal subject of argument at the bar. There are, therefore, two questions to be considered: first, whether the plaintiff's attorney was protected from answering the simple question as to the bill being in his possession and in court; secondly, whether upon his refusal it was then competent for the defendant to give secondary evidence of its contents, no previous notice to produce having been given. We are of opinion that the ruling of the Lord Chief Baron was right on both questions. The relation of attorney and client prevents the former from disclosing any communication made to him in the ordinary course of his employment, and on the faith of the confidence which the client reposes in his legal adviser. But that privilege does not extend to matters of fact which the attorney knows by any other means than confidential communication with his client, though if he had not been employed as an attorney he probably would not have known them. Thus he may prove his client's swearing to the truth of an answer in Chancery, and his handwriting by seeing it to documents prepared by him, or in which he has seen in the course of his employment the name of his employer, and in the same way he may prove the fact, the particular document is then in his possession and in court, for this is not a fact professionally communicated to him, though of course he could not be compelled to disclose the contents of any document which is professionally entrusted to him, and which he is acquainted with only by virtue of professional confidence. That the privilege of an attorney does not extend to protect him from answering whether the document is then in court was decided by Abbott, C.J. at Nisi Prius, Broad v. Pitt, Mod. & Mal. 235; and Eicke v. Nokes, in the same book, 303. Lord Tenterden permitted a clerk of the defendant's attorney to be asked whether a copy of a bill had not been given to him by the defendant. The Court of Q. B. decided in the case of Coates v. Birch, 2 Q.B. 252, that an attorney might be asked whether he had in his possession at the trial and in court a warrant, though he said he had no document that he had not received from his client in the course of his professional communication. These authorities are quite satisfactory to us, for it is obvious the answer to the question betrays no secret directly or indirectly communicated to him in professional confidence. On the other hand, there are some authorities cited against the admissibility of this question. The first is Cook v. Hearn, 1 Mood. & Rob. 201, in which it is said that Patteson, J. refused to permit a question to be put with respect to a rule of Court, because no notice to produce had been given, and he also decided that the notice to produce then was too late. The report goes on to say, that the course adopted was approved of by Taunton, J. and myself, in the following Term. It is very doubtful from the report whether the question was disallowed by Patteson, J. and so far as I am concerned, I think there must be a mistake either of my own or the reporter, as it is at variance with the opinion I have always had upon the subject, and made a note to that effect the first time that I saw this in the printed book, and on referring to my own manuscript in Michaelmas Term 1832 of the motion for a new trial, I find no trace of such a circumstance. The rule was moved for on the ground that it appeared there was a written agreement or lease, on the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses, which was not produced, and a rule nisi was granted suggesting a stet processus. This case is by no means a sufficient authority, and no other was cited which is in point; nor are we aware of any. This objection, therefore, cannot prevail. The next question is whether the bill, being admitted to be in court, parol evidence was admissible on its nonproduction by the attorney on demand, or whether previous notice to produce was necessary. On principle the answer must depend on this, why the notice to produce is required. If it be to give to the opponent notice that such a document would be used by the party to the cause, so that the opponent may be enabled to prepare evidence to explain or confirm it, then no doubt a notice at the trial, although the document be in court, is too late; but if it be merely to enable the party to have the document in court to produce it if he likes, and if he does not, to enable his opponent to give parol evidence; but if it be merely to exclude the argument that the opponent has not taken all reasonable means to procure the original, which he must do before he can be permitted to make use of secondary evidence, then the demand of production at the trial is sufficient. We are not able to find a trace of the reasons suggested upon the part of the plaintiff until that mentioned by Mr. Starkie in his book on Evidence; and there is no authority referred to in the notes which support such a position. If this be the principle on which notice to produce is required, the measure of the reasonable length of notice could not be the time necessary to procure the document, a comparatively simple inquiry, but the time necessary to procure evidence to explain or support it, a very complicated inquiry, depending on the nature of the plaintiff's case, the document itself and its bearing on the case; and in practice such matters have never been inquired into, but only the time with reference to the custody of the document and the place where it is, whether it was in the custody of the attorney or client, and the residence or convenience of the parties to whom notice has been given, and the like. We think the plaintiff's alleged principle is not the true one, on which the notice to produce is required, but that it is merely to give sufficient opportunity to the opposite party to produce it if he pleases, and thereby to secure the best evidence of its contents; and the request to produce it immediately is quite sufficient for that purpose, if the document be in court. There is no case in support of the plaintiff's position, when properly looked at, except that of Cook v. Hearn, above referred to, which we think, for the reasons given before, quite insufficient, though a case is said to have been quoted by the late Lord Abinger, when at the Bar, mentioned in the report of Doe v. Grey, reported in 1 Starkie, 284, but not reported elsewhere, in which Lord Kenyon is said to have told an attorney that he need not produce an instrument which had a subscribing witness, unless he had notice in time to enable him to produce the attesting witness. There is probably a mistake in this, as the party requiring the document would have been bound, if it were produced, to call the subscribing witness, unless in the excepted cases, where the party producing it claims title under it. This case cannot be relied on. In Doe v. Grey itself it did not appear that the attorney had received the notice to produce, which the night before was served upon the wife, or that he had the case itself in court, nor does that fact appear in either of the cases of Read v. Gamble or Lawrence v. Clark, before referred to. The expression that the counsel refused to produce is not necessarily equivalent to the fact of the document being actually in court at the time of refusal; and it does not appear from any part of the report that the document was actually in court. For these reasons, we are of opinion the course pursued by the Lord Chief Baron was perfectly right, and fortunately for the ends of justice it is so, for it certainly would have been a considerable scandal upon the law if, when the document itself was in court actually in the hands of the party whom the gaming was proved, and no other bill of exchange was proved to have been given that the defendant should fail because he had not given notice to produce, the day before the trial. It really would have been a scandal to the law. It is impossible to say that there would be any justice in such a case in requiring any previous notice to produce. Rule discharged.

WALLINGTON v. DALE.

Patent — 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 83; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 69, ss. 5 & 6.

A patentee may disclaim as to a part after he has assigned his patent.

This was a patent case. A rule had been obtained calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why a verdict should not be entered for the defendant on the ground that there was no specification, and why the judgment should not be arrested on the ground of the insufficiency of the declaration, or why a new trial should not be had on the ground of misdirection, that the verdict was against evidence, and on affidavits.

The Attorney-General (Webster and Fletcher with him) shewed cause.

Sir Fitzroy Kelly (Crowder, Crompton, and Hindmarsh with him) in support of the rule.

Cur. ad. vult.

The facts of the case appear in the judgment.

POLLOCK, C.B.—This was a motion for a new trial or to enter the verdict for the defendant on the third issue, or to arrest the judgment. The grounds for so much of the motion as referred to a new trial were first, that the verdict was against the evidence; secondly, that the learned judge misdirected the jury; thirdly, on the ground of the affidavits which strongly supported the testimony of a witness named John Cox for the defendant, to whom, as they swear, the jury would not give credit, and whose evidence, if believed, undoubtedly entitled the defendants to a verdict, and so the learned judge at the trial directed. It was an action for the infringement of a patent for the manufacture of gelatine. The cause was tried in London at the sittings after last Trinity Term, when the verdict passed for the plaintiff on all the issues. The motion now to be disposed of before us was made in Michaelmas Term, and was argued on the 20th and the 22nd of January last. As to the verdict being against the evidence, my learned brother Alderson, who tried the cause, was not dissatisfied with the finding of the jury, which finding was objected to chiefly on two grounds. First, that there had not been an infringement of the patent; secondly, that the jury ought to have believed the witness John Cox, according to whose testimony the plaintiff's method had been published and used in Scotland long before the patent was granted. It appears to us, without entering minutely into the merits of the patent in detail, that the plaintiff's process, substantially, apart from Cox's evidence, was new and different from any other disclosed in the various specifications or processes given in evidence, including Cox's, and that proved as used shews it was indisputably useful; and we think it was entirely a question for the jury whether the shreds or cuttings used by the defendant, certainly not so small as those used by the plaintiff, were an infringement of the patent, and we are not disposed, nor is my brother Alderson, to find fault with the verdict of the jury on this head. With respect to the witness Cox, considering the nature of his own patents, and all the evidence which he gave, and that he never produced such an article as the plaintiff's, we are not surprised that the jury did not put sufficient confidence in his testimony to find upon it a verdict for the defendant. There will, therefore, be no rule on the ground of the verdict being against the evidence. We think also the ground of misdirection fails, as we are of opinion the case was properly left to the jury by my learned brother Alderson. With respect to the motion to enter the verdict for the defendant on the third issue, on the point which was reserved at the trial, we are of opinion that the verdict was right. It was contended by the learned counsel for the defendant that the form of the issue made it necessary for the plaintiff to prove, not only a sufficient and good specification, on the face of it, of the process, but also of the apparatus; and though the declaration might, perhaps, have been so framed as to require proof of the specification or of the process only for which the patent after the disclaimer must be considered as having been granted, concerning this we think that there is a specification of an apparatus, and a sufficient one, namely, the use of the plane, and although a patent for such apparatus would be bad, perhaps, for want of novelty, no question of novelty arises upon this plea; and we therefore think the objection is fully answered in point of fact, and that the specification contained an apparatus as well as a process. On the point of arresting the judgment, the ground of which was, that the disclaimer was entered, not by the plaintiff, but by the patentee after he had assigned all interest, we think our judgment must be for the plaintiff. The record itself discloses that the original patentee entered the disclaimer after he had assigned his interest, and it was contended before us on the part of the defendant, that the patentee had no power to do so. The power to disclaim any part of the title or of the specification of a patent is given by the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 83, s. 1, and it may be done by leave of the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General. Some doubt might have been entertained whether the plaintiff, after assigning his interest, could enter a disclaimer; but we think the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 69, ss. 5 & 6, have put an end to such doubt by enacting, expressly, that no objection shall be made in any proceeding whatsoever on the ground that the parties making such disclaimer or memorandum of such alteration had not sufficient authority in that behalf. We are of opinion that it was not competent to the defendant to take such an objection, and this ground for a new trial also fails. There is one other point remaining to be disposed of, that is the ground for a new trial on the affidavits filed by the defendants. At the trial the witness Cox was called to prove that he had publicly expressed and disclosed the invention claimed by the plaintiff, he being apparently a witness in a respectable situation of life, and if what he stated was true, the verdict, as already observed, ought to have been for the defendant. The result of the affidavit is this, that the evidence of Mr. Cox, doubted by the jury, was really true, and that if the whole case as now presented by the affidavits were before a jury, it would be believed, and had it been before the jury it would have been believed by them. We might, perhaps, be disposed to think, that if the case now before us related to a matter on which the verdict and judgment would be final and conclusive, then there is some ground for asking for a new trial on payment of costs. But the present proceedings will not be final and conclusive; it is still open to those who desire to discuss the validity of this patent to do so by scire facias, in which proceeding all those persons who have made affidavits in support of the testimony of Cox may be examined as witnesses; and if the jury should believe that Cox and these persons who have made affidavits speak the truth, then it will be their duty to find in the proceeding by scire facias on behalf of the Crown. But with respect to the present question, it may be observed that the matter did not come upon the defendant by surprise. The defendant made such preparations for this specific issue as he thought would be sufficient; at the trial it turned out, in the opinion of the jury, it was not sufficient, and we think, therefore, we ought not to grant a new trial in this case, but to leave the defendant to proceed by scire facias if he should be so advised. The rule, therefore, must be discharged, and our judgment must be for the plaintiff. Rule discharged.

HUNT v. HEWITT.

Inspection of documents—14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6—Practice.

To obtain an inspection of documents under the New Law of Evidence Act, the affidavit must shew, first, that a suit is pending, and what is the nature of that suit, and the question to be tried in it, and that the applicant has just grounds to maintain or defend it; and, secondly, the affidavit must state, with sufficient distinctness, the reason of the application, and the nature of the documents required to be inspected, in order that it may appear to the Court or Judge that the documents are asked to enable the party to support his own case, and not to find a flaw in the case of his opponent: and also that the opponent may admit or deny the possession of the document.

This was a rule under the 6th section of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the defendant should not be at liberty to see the day-book or journal of the plaintiff, and take a copy of it, so far as related to this action; and why an order of Platt, B. should not be amended. The action was by an architect for a certain commission on a building contract for surveying and superintending the building of certain houses, &c. and the order of the learned baron was, that the defendant should be at liberty to inspect certain plans, but he refused to make an order as to the books. It appeared on the affidavits that the plaintiff and defendant were never in direct communication with each other, but that the work had been done in consequence of orders given to the plaintiff by an attorney, who swore that credit had been given to him, the attorney, and that it was important for the defence to inspect the plaintiff's books to enable him to prepare his pleas.

Lush shewed cause.—This is one of those fishing applications which the Court will not encourage. The affidavit merely amounts to this: "I believe there are entries in your books which will probably make for my defence, utmost it amou[...] defendant that [...] pledge his credit, and the attorney does not swear that he did not do so. He referred to Storey's Equity Jurisprudence, sec. 325. The plaintiff's answer is, that the work was done by him on the defendant's property; that he was employed by the attorney as the agent of his uncle, the present defendant, and from time to time reported to the attorney the progress of the work. He further swears he keeps a diary, but no other day-book or journal; that there are entries in it of work done for the defendant and for other people, and that there would be great difficulty in separating the items, and that its production will furnish no evidence in support of the defendant's case; he also swears that he never gave credit to the attorney. The object of the application is to try to find out some evidence that credit was given to some one else, and not to the defendant.

Honyman in support. — In equity it is competent for the plaintiff to state anything in a bill of discovery, but the applications to the Courts of Common Law under this statute must be on oath, and it is impossible that it can be sworn what the contents of this book are, the defendant never having seen it. The affidavit states that this book would shew that the work was not done as alleged. [ALDERSON, B.—In the case of Bolton v. The Corporation of Liverpool, 1 Myl. & K. 88; 3 Sim. 467. The rule laid down by the Lord Chancellor was this: "A party has a right to the production of deeds sustaining his right affirmatively; but not of those which are not immediately connected with the support of his own title, and which form part of his adversary's. He cannot call for those which, instead of supporting his title, defeat it by entitling his adversary. Those under which both claim he may have, or those under which he alone claims. Thus an heir-at-law cannot in that character call for the general inspection of [...] in the possession of the devisee."] These documents cannot be evidence for the plaintiff. The defendant states three things: first, that the work was not done; secondly, that the credit was not given to him, the defendant, but to the attorney; and, thirdly, that the charges are excessive. [ALDERSON, B.—It is doubtful whether this affidavit goes far enough. The defendant says "he has reason to suspect that there are certain entries in this book;" in fact, he wants to see if the plaintiff has made any mistake by accidental entries.] If a defendant in equity will not deny that he has the books or documents sought to be discovered in his possession, he cannot excuse their production by saying that they do not relate to the disputed matter. (He referred to Mr. Pollock's book on this section of the New Evidence Act, and Attorney-General v. Corporation of London, 12 Beav. 8; 13 Jur. 374; 14 Jur. 205; and Smith v. Duke of Beaufort, 1 Hare, 520, there cited. [ALDERSON, B.—If you were to say that on the production of this book it would appear that the plaintiff gave credit to some one else than the defendant, I think that would do. [PARKE, B.—The plaintiff does not say that there are no charges relating to this claim in this diary.] The excessive amount of the charge is not attempted to be denied. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C.B.—In this case an application was made to the Court to compel the plaintiff to allow the defendant an inspection of a day-book or journal kept by the plaintiff. An application had previously been made of a more extensive nature to my brother Platt at Chambers. That was a summons to inspect all documents in the custody or under the control of the plaintiff relating to the action, particularly the day-book or journal, and any other books containing an entry of business done for the defendant's nephew or for several other persons named, and also all plans in his (the plaintiff's) possession or custody of any house, drains, roads, carcases, or other portions of the defendant's estate in respect of the alleged surveying and superintending, the erection and foundation of which, the action is brought. This summons was supported by an affidavit laying no sufficient ground for inspection of all the documents. Platt, B. made an order to inspect the plans only. An application was then made to the Court on an amended affidavit for an inspection of the day-book and journal, and a rule nisi granted. It was heard before us in the course of Hilary Term, and we took time to consider, not so much on account of any difficulty in the present case as on account of the importance of the practice under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, sec. 6, upon which it is extremely desirable to lay down some rules. The section is in these words:—"Whenever any action or other legal proceeding shall henceforth be pending in any of the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster or Dublin, or the Court of Common Pleas for the County Palatine of Lancaster, or the Court of Pleas for the County of Durham, such Court and each of the judges thereof may respectively, on application made [...] to such action or other legal proceeding, and, if necessary, to take examined copies of the same, or to procure the same to be duly stamped, in all cases in which, previous to the passing of this Act, a discovery might have been obtained by filing a bill, or by any other proceedings in a Court of Equity, at the instance of the party so making application as aforesaid to the said Court or judge." It seems to us to be clear, from the words of the section, that the Legislature never intended to give the Courts of Common Law powers to compel the discovery by a bill or analogous proceeding; the only power given is to allow not a discovery but an inspection by one litigant party, of documents in the custody or under the control of the opposite litigant party, with certain restrictions or limitations. First, there must be a "suit or other proceedings pending;" secondly, the documents must relate to "such action, suit, or other proceedings;" and, thirdly, the cases in which inspection is to be granted must be such as those where inspection could be obtained by filing a bill for a discovery, or by other proceedings in a Court of Equity, at the instance of the same party. All that is stated on the subject of discovery is by way of limitation or description of the subject of inspection. We think this question has been put on the right footing by Mr. Charles Pollock, in his treatise on Discovery, pp. 9 and 10; and there is a decision of Mr. Justice Erle, in Galsworthy v. Norman, 21 L. J. 70, after consulting the other judges of the Queen's Bench, that the Courts of Law have no power of compelling a discovery; and this Court, on one or two occasions, has intimated its opinion to the same effect in Pepper v. Chambers, Michaelmas Term, 1851, and Hilary Term 1852, 18 Law T. 109, 210. In order to accomplish the object of obtaining such inspec-[...] a bill of discovery, or any analogous mode of proceeding in Courts of Common Law, the old mode of obtaining inspection of documents in the hands of the opposite party must be adapted to it. It has been usual for the Courts, in the exercise of their equitable jurisdiction, to grant such inspections, first, as a substitute for oyer, which at Common Law applied to some instruments only; by usage the power of inspection was, with certain conditions, extended to all. Secondly, upon the equitable principle, that a cestui que trust had a right to oblige his trustee to give an inspection; the Courts of Law always compelled it, where they could consider the opposite party as holding the documents under an express, or implied trust, for the applicant. In the former case an affidavit, generally speaking, was unnecessary; in the latter it was required, unless the facts were admitted in the statement of the applicant's attorney, —a course usually adopted at Chambers, to save expense. The old mode of obtaining inspection ought to be adopted under the new Act of Parliament, with such alterations as the nature of the case requires. Under the recent Act of Parliament, where an inspection is litigated, an affidavit will no doubt be necessary as to all the disputed facts; and if all are disputed, the affidavit ought to state a sufficient case in all respects to entitle the applicant to inspect, as would have been necessary to obtain an inspection, which the Court had before, and still has the power to grant at Common Law. The affidavit, therefore, ought not only to shew that an action or other proceedings is pending, but also to state not a mere suggestion, but circumstances sufficient to satisfy the Court or judge that there are in the possession, or under the control, of the opposite party, certain documents; and that those relate to "such action," or other legal proceedings, a primâ facie case calling for an answer, must at least be stated in this respect, as it must in the old proceeding, to obtain inspection of documents held by a trustee. Further, the affidavit must shew that the applicant would, by a bill of discovery or other proceedings, be able to obtain a discovery and inspection of those documents. Under the last head we must follow the rules established in Courts of Equity, within which every plaintiff must bring himself, in order to obtain an inspection by bill of discovery; and therefore, if the facts be disputed, the affidavit ought to state all that a plaintiff in equity must state, in order to entitle himself to a discovery and inspection. Whatever difference there may be with respect to some points in the Law of Discovery, for instance, as to the mode of pleading in equity, to raise the objection on the part of the defendant, the general principles laid down are free from doubt, and are fully explained in the able treatises of Sir James Wigram, Mr. Hare, and the little work published by Mr. Charles Pollock. The right of a plaintiff in equity is limited, first, to a discovery confined to a question in the cause; secondly, to such material documents as relate to the proof of the plaintiff's case on the trial; and does not extend to the discovery of the [...] shew first what is the nature of the suit, and of the question to be tried in it; and it seems, also, that he should depose in his affidavit to his having just ground to maintain or defend it. Secondly, the affidavit ought to state with sufficient distinctness the reason of the application and the nature of the documents, in order that it may appear to the Court or judge that the documents are asked in order to enable the party applying to support his case, not to find a flaw in the case of the opponent; and also that the opponent may admit or deny the possession of them. To this affidavit the opponent may answer by swearing he has no such documents, or that they relate exclusively to his own case, or that he is for any sufficient reason privileged from producing them, or he may submit to shew parts, covering the remainder, on affidavit that the part concealed does not in any way relate to the plaintiff's case. The same course would be pursued in equity. Although the recent Act of Parliament has not given the Courts of Law the direct power of compelling the discovery of documents, and in that respect they are not so effective as Courts of Equity, they have in truth nearly as great power given by the section in question, for it will rarely happen, when documents material to the issues are really in the hands of the opposite party, that there would not be sufficient circumstances known to the applicant to constitute a primâ facie case for him, and to justify the interference of the Court or a judge, if no answer is given to them by affidavit. The new measure will therefore, in practice, be nearly as effective as if the power of compelling a discovery were expressly given to the Common Law Courts. It remains to apply these observations to the affidavit in question. It does state the question and ground of defence, namely, that the work was never done; that, if done, it was charged at too high a rate; and further, that it was done on the credit of another, not the defendant. The defendant's case is therefore of a negative character; he does not seek to know the evidence by which the plaintiff supports his case, for the journal or day-books would not be evidence for the plaintiff. The defendant, in support of such a case, has a right to a discovery on the principle of the case of Smith v. The Duke of Beaufort, 1 Hare, 507; 1 Phil. 209; but so far as relates to the discovery of the journal as evidence in support of the defendant's case, that the credit was given to another, the affidavit is defective, as it does not deny that the deponent was authorised to bind the defendant by his contract, and if he was, it is wholly immaterial whether credit was given to him in the plaintiff's journal or day-book; but the book must be inspected to see if there be any entry, and if any, what price is therein charged as the value of the works. The rule will therefore be absolute.

Rule absolute.

FREGARD v. BARNS and BARTON.

Parish constable—County constable.

When a warrant is directed to a parish constable only, it should be executed by him, and not by a police constable of the county.

This was an action of trespass for false imprisonment, tried before Talfourd, J. in Wiltshire; the plaintiff was nonsuited, but the damages were assessed by the jury at 15*l.* in case the Court should be of opinion the nonsuit was wrong, leave was given to the plaintiff to move to set aside that nonsuit and enter a verdict in his favour for the 15*l.* if the Court should be of opinion the plaintiff was so entitled. The plaintiff had been accused by the defendant, Barns, of an indictable offence, and the warrant for the plaintiff's apprehension was directed only "To the Constable of Dauncey, in the said county." There was a parish constable of Dauncey regularly appointed, but this warrant, instead of being executed by him, was handed over to the defendant, Barton who was a police constable of the county, who had, it was contended, no authority to execute the warrant, and the arrest made by him was therefore improper. A rule nisi having been obtained to set aside the nonsuit (see antè, p. 67), and enter the verdict for the plaintiff,

Crowder, Q.C. and Hodges for the defendant Barns, shewed cause, and contended that the arrest was proper, and that Barton had power to execute the warrant under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 8, the Act by which he was appointed, and that the form of action was wrong, the action should have been in case not trespass. (West v. Smallwood, 3 M. & W. 418; Brown v. Chapman, 6 C. B. 365; 1 Dow. & Ry. 103; Barber v. Rawlinson, 1 C. & M. 330.)

Slade, Q.C. for the defendant Barton, the constable.—The warrant was a sufficient protection for Barton under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 8. If not, then, as the action was not brought for more than six months after the alleged trespass, it is prohibited by the 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, s. 8. (Parton v. Williams, 3 B. & Ald. 330; Cox v. Reid, 13 Law T. 158 1 Chitty's Stat. 650.)

Kinglake, Serjt. (F. Edwards with him), for the plaintiff. [The Court intimated that the form of action in trespass was correct.] He then referred to Rex v. Weir, 1 B. & C. 288; 5 Geo. 4, c. 18 s. 6; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 10; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109 s. 15 (the Parish Constable Act); 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93 s. 8 (the County Constabulary Act); 24 Geo. 2 c. 44, s. 8; and the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 27. (He was then stopped.)

ALDERSON, B.—You have satisfied us that the parties should have followed the direction of the warrant, and that the parish constable of Dauncey was the person who should have executed it; you will, perhaps, consent that the verdict should stand as against the defendant Barns, but not as to the constable Barton?

PLATT and MARTIN, BB. expressed similar opinions. Consented to accordingly.

PORCH v. CRESWELL.

Profert—Oyer—Excuse for profert.

In an action upon a mortgage-deed, the plaintiff excused himself in the declaration from making profert of the deed by alleging that the deed was in the possession of the defendant:

Held, that defendant might plead that the deed was not in his possession, with and in addition to pleas in bar (i. e.) non est factum, payment, and cancellation.

Covenant upon a mortgage-deed. The declaration contained an excuse for making profert by alleging that the deed was in the defendant's possession. The plaintiff wished to traverse that statement, besides pleading at the same time non est factum, payment, and that the mortgage-deed had been cancelled; a rule nisi having been obtained for that purpose, Milward shewed cause.—This plea proposed to be added, denying the excuse given in the declaration for making profert—that the deed is in the defendant's possession—is new; it is a plea in the nature of a plea in suspension or abatement, and cannot be pleaded with other pleas in bar of the action generally. The plaintiff was obliged either to make profert, or an excuse for profert, otherwise the declaration would have been demurrable. [MARTIN, B.—And unless the defendant is allowed to traverse that averment, you go on in your action afterwards, inferring conclusively that the deed is in the defendant's possession. ALDERSON, B.—Is there any authority shewing that such a plea as this can be pleaded with other pleas, which are pleas in bar?] Not any, except a case relied on by the other side in 1 Espin. 337.

Willes, contrà.—The defendant ought to be permitted to traverse such an averment in the declaration as this upon principle, but there is also authority for it. The statute of Anne has no bearing upon the present case. He then referred to the following authorities, as shewing that such a plea might be allowed:—Comyn's Dig. title "Pleader," O 1; Read v. Brookman, 3 T. R. 151; particularly Ashhurst's judgment there; Smith v. Woodward, 4 East, 585; and Beckford v. Jackson, 1 Esp. 337; there the plaintiff declared on a deed, and to avoid profert alleged that it was lost by time and accident. The defendant pleaded similar pleas together without objection:—1st. Non est factum. 2nd. That the deed was not lost or mislaid; and upon both of which pleas issues were joined. In 3 Chitty on Pleading, p. 175, a precedent is given, and, as a further plea to the action [He was then stopped].

POLLOCK, C.B.—Under such circumstances, we think this plea may be pleaded with the others, as proposed. Rule absolute.

COE v. PLATT.

Factory Act (7 Vict. c. 15, ss. 21 and 73)—Construction of—Machinery to be guarded and not cleansed while in motion.

The Factory Act (7 Vict. c. 15, s. 21), enacts that every fly-wheel directly connected with a steam-engine or water-wheel, or other mechanical power, whether in the engine-house or not, and every part of the steam-engine and water-wheel, and every hoist near to which children or young people are liable to pass or be employed, and all parts of the mill gearing in a factory shall be securely fenced, and every wheel race not otherwise secured, shall be fenced close to the edge of the wheel race, and the said protection of each part shall not be removed while the parts required to be fenced are in motion by the action of the steam-engine, water-wheel, or other mechanical power for any manufacturing process:

Held, that the mill gearing in each separate room is separate and distinct from the mill gearing in any other room, and requires fencing only while some manufacturing process is going on in that room, and it is in motion for that purpose.

This was an action tried at Liverpool, before Cresswell, J. and was brought to recover damages for an injury sustained by the plaintiff at the factory of the defendant, in consequence, as the declaration charged, of an omission to fence a portion of the mill gearing. A verdict was returned for the defendant on the 1st, 2nd, and 6th issues, and a rule nisi granted to set aside that verdict, and to enter it for the plaintiff, with 150*l.* damages. The question depended upon the construction to be given to the 7 Vict. c. 15 (the Factory Act), entitled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Labour in Factories."

Knowles, Q.C. H. Hill, Q.C. and J. Henderson, shewed cause.

Wilkins, Serjt. and Atherton, Q.C. in support of the rule. Cur. adv. vult.

Thursday, June 3.—ALDERSON, B. delivered judgment.—We are of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged. There is no question here as to negligence; at common law the defendants have taken all those precautions which, but for the special provisions of the statute as to fencing the mill gearing, would be required from cautious men. But no doubt this vertical shaft was in motion, and was not fenced at the time the accident happened, the fact being, that the fence was down during the time repairs were going on, and the shaft was being prepared to be put into gear in order that the machine might be set to work again for the purpose of resuming the manufacturing process in the room where the plaintiff was at the time. The arrangement of the machinery in this factory was this. The original moving process was conveyed along the lower floor of the factory by a horizontal shaft, which communicated motion by its own revolution to certain machinery there used for the first process in manufacturing cotton. This same horizontal shaft communicated also motion to one or more vertical shafts, each passing through the upper floors in succession, and being used a part of it in each floor for turning machinery there situate. Each of these vertical shafts was so placed as to be turned whenever the horizontal shaft revolved, and none of them could be stopped so long as the horizontal shaft continued in motion. At the time of this accident one of these shafts, having a portion of it passing through the floor where the plaintiff was, required some adaptation of the machinery usually worked on that floor, and was under repair for that purpose. It was not at the time employed in communicating motion to any machinery usually working and communicating directly with it, situate either on that or any other floor, above or below. In fact, all the machinery actually moving at the time of the accident was moved either by the horizontal shaft alone, or by it and the other vertical shafts in the factory; it would have all of it continued in exactly the same motion if this particular vertical shaft had been wholly removed, or had never existed at all. The question is, whether under these circumstances the Act imperatively required the defendant to keep the fence round this vertical shaft at this time and under these circumstances. The question depends on the 21st section of the Factory Act considered in connection with the 73rd section—the interpretation clause. The 21st section says, "And be it enacted, that every fly-wheel directly connected with a steam-engine or water-wheel, or other mechanical power, whether in the engine-house or not, and every part of the steam-engine and water-wheel, and every hoist or teagle near to which children or young people are liable to pass or be employed, and all parts of the mill gearing in a factory, shall be securely fenced, and every wheel race not otherwise secured shall be fenced close to the edge of the wheel race; and the said protection of each part shall not be removed while the parts required to be fenced are in motion by the action of the steam-engine, water-wheel, or other mechanical power for any manufacturing process." Now I cannot help thinking that the probable intention of the Legislature in this clause was to give full protection to children and young persons who were engaged in attending to their duties on the machine put in motion by the mill gearing in the rooms or floors where such manufacturing process was going on, and that the protection was to be confined to the times when such process was going on there; for there seems to be no reason to give protection by fencing when no one was in the usual course of his or her ordinary duties likely to be there at all; and this would be accomplished by our holding that the mill gearing in each separate room is separate and distinct from the mill gearing in any other room, and requires fencing only while some manufacturing process is going on in that room, and it is in motion for that purpose. This is, I think, the proper construction of the 21st section. But undoubtedly it may be plausibly argued that the whole of each vertical shaft is not one mill gearing, and that if it is turning machinery in another room it is in motion for a manufacturing process; and if this were the case here it might be fit to have a further argument before we decided otherwise. This case also might be put as one of some difficulty. Suppose the injury arose from the defective fencing off of this horizontal shaft at the time when by its own proper revolution it was not turning any machinery in the ground-floor immediately connected therewith, but was immediately connected with machinery turned on the other floor by the vertical shafts connected with the horizontal shaft, and turned by it—it might then, perhaps, be said, that the horizontal shaft was in motion for a manufacturing process, and that the fencing it off was imperfectly required by the Act. But this case is clear of both these difficulties. Here the injury is received from the vertical shaft in motion, but at a time when by its motion it turns no machinery immediately connected with it, either in the room where it was, or in any other room, and connected, if at all, only immediately with the machinery on the ground-floor by means of the horizontal shaft, but not turning that machinery by means of its connection with the original moving power, but itself turned by the horizontal shaft which alone communicates with that original moving power. In truth, this vertical shaft was turning (actively of itself) nothing at all used for any manufacturing process; it did not therefore require at that time to be fenced. The defendants have not been neglectful at common law, nor have they omitted anything required of them to do at law, that is to say, they have not committed the offence; the rule, therefore, must be discharged. Rule discharged.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, June 3.

EVANS v. PARRY.—Crowder, Q.C. moved to stay further proceedings until after an action of ejectment had been tried, and to enlarge the peremptory undertaking until the last day of next Michaelmas Term. Rule nisi.

Ex parte STEVENSON.—Prentice moved for a rule to compel an attorney to deliver his bill of costs on Dr. Stevenson, and to give credit for all sums of money received by the attorney on account of Dr Stevenson; the money was received upwards of six years ago, and was more than sufficient to pay the bill, so that the attorney now said he had no bill, and by these means, with the aid of the Statute of Limitations, was endeavouring to prevent Dr Stevenson recovering the money so received for him by the attorney, an officer of the Court. Rule nisi.

GLYNN v. ROBERTS.—Brandt moved for a new trial, on the ground that the damages were too small, and the verdict against evidence. Rule refused.

BRADSTREET v. HAMMOND.—This was an action of replevin, tried at Norwich, before Lord Campbell, C.J. and a rule nisi had been obtained to set aside the verdict for the defendants, on the suggestion contained in the second plea, and to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for four guineas. Byles, Serjt. and O'Malley shewed cause. Palmer and Worlledge, contrà. Rule absolute.

SAME v. SAME.—A cross rule had been obtained to set aside the plaintiff's verdict on the first and second issues, and for a new trial.

Arranged that a bill of exceptions should be tendered to the ruling of the Chief Justice at the trial, and the points argued in a Court of Error.

PERRY v. DOIDGE.—Tried before Erle, J. at Exeter.—An action for slander. Plea, not guilty. Verdict for plaintiff. A rule nisi had been obtained for a new trial, on the ground that the slanderous expressions used were privileged communications. Crowder, Q.C. appeared to shew cause, the Court called upon Kinglake, Serjt. in support of the rule. Rule discharged.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

JACKSON v. CHICHESTER.—Scire facias on a judgment tried at Liverpool before Cresswell, J. Verdict for the plaintiff. This was a rule to enter a verdict for the defendant. The defendant pleaded a discharge under the Irish Insolvent Debtors Act, and the learned judge at the trial thought the identity of the plaintiff and his debts in the schedule of the defendant was not made out, but reserved leave for this rule. Mellish shewed cause. Watson in support. Rule discharged.

FOQUET v. MOORE.—This was a rule for a new trial on two points reserved. Crowder (Barston with him) shewed cause. Kinglake, Serjt. (C. Saunders with him) in support Rule absolute.

PONTING v. WATSON.—Tried before Talfourd, J. at the Somerset Assizes. Verdict for plaintiff for 20*l*. This was a rule for a new trial. The action was for libel and malicious prosecution. The question was whether malice was established, and whether the law was not put in motion by the magistrates, and not by the defendants. Butt shewed cause. Slade contrà.

Verdict for plaintiff for 5l. on 1st count, and stet processus on the 2nd and 3rd counts

DOE dem. JONES v. HUGHES. — Welsby shewed cause Bearan in support. Rule discharged

PEARSON v. BECK. Part heard.

PHILLIPS v. POUND.—Hawkins moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the defendant should not be discharged out of custody, and why he, the plaintiff, should not pay the costs of this application. Rule nisi granted.

—— v. ——.—Joyce moved to strike an attorney off the rolls on his own application. Granted.

Saturday, June 5.

GILMER v. THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY —Hall moved for a rule compelling the defendants to give inspection of certain documents, the affidavit being insufficient. Rule refused.

MATTERELL v. DRAKE.—Bramwell moved to enlarge the time for making the award. Both parties lived at Exeter, and it was an action by one attorney against another. The cause came on to be tried on the 20th November last before Martin, B. when it was thereupon agreed to be referred, but on the following day some different arrangement appeared to have been agreed to, which could not be carried out. Rule nisi.

———— v. ————.—W. M. Cooke moved to set aside an appearance entered according to the statute by the plaintiff for the defendant, on the ground of a defect in the jurat of the affidavit filed of the service of the writ. The appearance was entered on the 1st of June. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THORNTON.—This was a proceeding on the part of the Crown to enforce estreat of recognisances against two sureties by a principal and two sureties, on an indictment for not paying certain costs on the hearing of an appeal as to the stopping up a road; the appellant, not being successful, was ordered by the Court of Quarter Sessions for the county of Westmorland to pay costs, which not being paid, he was indicted · the principal had been discharged, the sureties had pleaded setting out the proceedings; the Crown here new assigned, and to this there was a demurrer, the effect of which would be, if the demurrer was successful, to discharge the sureties from responsibility. On the petition of the principal (the defendant) and his sureties, the Court stayed the proceedings on the recognisance as regarded the defendant (the principal) on account of his poverty, but without prejudice to the liability of his sureties (reported fully, 4 Ex. 820). Pashley, Q C (Hennikar with him) in support of the demurrer, for the sureties, referred to the 5 & 6 Wm & Mary, c. 11, ss. 2 & 3, and contended that the sureties had in all respects complied with the condition of the recognisance, which was in the terms prescribed by that Act: it says, "that the said recognisance shall not be discharged till the costs so taxed shall be paid." That cannot apply to the sureties who never became bound to pay costs. (Several other points were taken, such as, that the Court below had no authority to grant costs, that the recognisance did not appear to be taken by a person having competent jurisdiction, &c. but the Court overruled them.) The Attorney-General (Sir *F. REG. v JOHN SMITH.—Gray moved to discharge the defendant out of custody. GRIFFITH v FRY —Mellish shewed cause against a rule nisi obtained to compel the opposite party to grant an inspection of their books and ledgers, and also certain letters that had been written The defendants were brokers and agents for the plaintiff for the sale of tea. There were accounts between the parties amounting to upwards of 70,000*l*.; a set-off exceeding that amount, and then a further account delivered of about 40,000*l*. They extended over a period from the year 1843 to the present time; and necessarily were very complicated. The affidavit did not disclose, according to the judgment of this Court, in Hunt v. Hewitt, sufficient to justify at all events an inspection of the letters. Cowling, contrà.—The affidavit states that these letters are material and necessary, as the deponent is advised and believes. ALDERSON, B.—That is insufficient, it is like an application for a distringas to compel an appearance; there the party swears he believes in all the cases that the defendant keeps out of the way to avoid service; but that is not enough, he must shew us sufficient reasons for the Court to believe he is doing so; in an application for an inspection of documents in the possession of an opponent, he must shew us sufficient reason to believe those documents are material and necessary to his case.

Rule absolute as to such part of the books and ledgers as relate to the matters of the suit. As to the letters, rule refused.

MARTIN v. BREARY.—Bramwell moved for a new trial on the ground of the verdict being perverse. The action was upon a note for 50*l*. tried before Baron Platt, entered on the 4th June The learned Baron, who tried the cause, said, the verdict was certainly perverse. Rule nisi.

WATSON v. HUMPHREYS.

Writ of trial—Irregularity—Laches.

In an action of debt two issues were joined, and the plaintiff obtained an order to try before the sheriff, but in both the order and the writ of trial, the direction was to try the "issue" instead of "issues." At the trial, the defendant attended and pointed out the irregularity, but on the plaintiff electing to go on, he protested against the proceedings and retired. Hereupon the cause was tried in the defendant's absence, and the plaintiff obtained a verdict. Upon a motion subsequently to set aside the order, writ of trial, and all subsequent proceedings:

Held, that the application was too late, for that as the defendant knew of the error as soon as he was served with the order, he should have taken advantage of it before the plaintiff had taken the expensive step of proceeding to trial.

This was an action of debt, to which the defendant pleaded two pleas, and two issues were thereupon joined. Subsequently, the plaintiff's attorney took out a summons for leave to try before the sheriff, and an order was made, the defendant's attorney not appearing to oppose. The order, however, which was dated and served on the 10th of May last, was drawn up by mistake to try the "issue" instead of "issues," and the writ of trial was in the same form. Notice of trial was given for the 3rd of June inst.; and on the case coming on, it was objected, on the part of the defendant, that the undersheriff had no jurisdiction to try the issues joined, the order and writ of trial directing him only to try the issue. Upon this the plaintiff applied to the undersheriff to amend, which he declined to do, having no powers for the purpose, but he expressed his readiness to proceed with the cause if the plaintiff desired; and the plaintiff electing to go on, the defendant protested against the proceeding, and retired. Hereupon the plaintiff proved his case, and obtained a verdict.

Joyce now moved, on the part of the defendant, for a rule, calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the judge's order, the writ of trial, and all subsequent proceedings, should not be set aside with costs; and he contended that, as there were two issues raised, and the order and writ of trial were for the trial of only one issue, the proceedings were irregular, and that the irregularity was not waived by the appearance of the defendant at the trial, as he only appeared to protest, and took no part in the trial itself. (Dennett v. Hardy, 2 Dowl. & L. 484; Towers v. Turner, 15 L. J. 249, C.P.) [WIGHTMAN, J.—This is merely an irregularity in form. I think you are too late; if you had gone before a Judge at Chambers, it would have been remedied; you knew of the irregularity as soon as you are served with the judge's order, and yet you allow the plaintiff to go on and take a very expensive step, and then, for the first time, when he is ready to try his cause, you raise the objection.] He need not have tried his cause. It is an error upon the record.

WIGHTMAN, J.—Then you can have your writ of error: when you knew of the irregularity, you should have taken advantage of it at once, and then the plaintiff could have got it amended. Rule refused.

Ex parte THE PARISH OFFICERS OF SOUTH MIMS.

Watching and Lighting Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 90)—Rate—Validity of a public meeting of the ratepayers presided over by a party who is not a ratepayer.

Petersdorff moved for a rule calling upon William Phillimore and Charles Cotterell, esqrs. two justices of Middlesex, to shew cause why they should not make an order to enforce a rate made under the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 90, for lighting that part of the parish of South Mims which is situate within the town of Barnet.

It appeared that at a meeting of the ratepayers, convened pursuant to the provisions of the Watching and Lighting Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 90), the clergyman of the parish, who was not a ratepayer, took the chair, and at such meeting such proceedings were adopted as were necessary to give validity to the Act and the proceedings thereunder, amongst others, the collecting of a rate. Certain of the ratepayers, however, refusing to pay the rate, they were summoned before two justices, to shew cause why they refused; and then they set up as a defence, that the rate was void, inasmuch as the original meeting was a nullity, in being presided over by a person who was not a ratepayer. The justices thinking that this was a valid objection, refused to make any order. It was now contended, first, that the meeting was not void, for the reason alleged; 2nd, that the parties not having appealed against the rate as they may have done, could not now set up an objection to the rate itself, however they might on the ground of individual liability. Rule nisi.

Ex parte THE EXETER ROAD TRUSTEES.

Railway company—Repair of highway—Mandamus.

A railway company, in pursuance of their Act, caused a county bridge to be pulled down, whereby the county were absolved from the duty of repairing the road approaches thereto. The company having rebuilt the bridge, entered into an agreement with the trustees of the road to repair such road approaches to the new bridge. The road being out of repair, and the company neglecting to repair it, a mandamus was applied for to compel them to do the necessary repairs:

Held, that a mandamus would not, under the circumstances, lie against the company.

Collier moved for a rule calling upon the Exeter and Crediton Railway Company to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding them to repair a portion of a certain road, which is now in so defective a state as to be dangerous to the public.

The following were the facts:—At the time of the railway company obtaining their Act, there was over a certain stream a county bridge, and consequently the county were bound to keep the roads approaching such bridge in repair to the extent of 300 feet on each side. For the purposes of their Act, the company required this bridge to be pulled down, which was accordingly done, and the company erected another, whereby the liability of the county to repair the road approaches ceased. The company, however, entered into an agreement with the trustees of the road (which was a turnpike one), that they (the company) would for the future repair such portions of the road. The road being now out of repair, the trustees decline to repair it on account of the agreement with the company, and the latter themselves have wholly neglected to repair it. By sec. 58 of the 8 Vict. c. 20 (Railway Clauses Consolidation), it is enacted that "if in the course of making the railway the company shall use or interfere with any road, they shall from time to time make good all damage done by them to such road," &c. It did not appear that the company had in any way interfered with the road in question, except by erecting the new bridge.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The parties who are legally liable to the public are those who should be proceeded against. Independently of their agreement with the trustees, the company cannot be called upon to repair.

Collier.—This proceeding will be a convenient method for trying the liability of the company to repair. By erecting the bridge they have interfered with the road. There are difficulties in proceeding against any other parties.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I do not think that a sufficient case has been made out for a mandamus. The interference of the company appears at first to be this,—that without interfering with the road, they have taken down the bridge, which dispenses with the obligation of the county to repair the road. This is not such an interference, as it appears to me, as comes within the section. It resolves itself, therefore, into this,—the county not being liable to repair, the parish or the trustees may be, but not the company, except they have entered into some agreement, and so may be ultimately liable, but certainly not so as to be the subject of a mandamus.

Rule refused.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Monday, June 7.

Ex parte MARY SMITH.—Prentice moved for a rule calling upon the judge of the Sheriff's Court of London to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding him to hear an interpleader summons under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. In this case judgment had been recovered in the Sheriff's Court against one Eliza Smith, and execution issued against her goods, and certain goods were thereupon seized to which the present applicant laid claim. Upon this the high bailiff took out an interpleader summons, which was returnable on the 26th of May. On the 21st of that month the claimant gave a particular of her claim. The rule requires that such notice should be given five clear days before the return of the summons. On the case coming on it was objected that the claimant had not given five clear days' notice. The claimant explained the reason of her mistake, and requested the judge to adjourn the case that she might give better notice. But, on the case of Ex parte Tanner, 19 L. J. 318, Q.B. being cited, the judge held that he was bound by that case, and dismissed the summons. It was now contended that the case of Ex parte Tanner was not in point upon the subject, and that, in fact, the judge may have exercised a discretion and have adjourned the hearing, and that as he did not exercise his discretion, but thought himself bound by the case cited, the mandamus ought to go. Rule nisi.

CROWN CASES RESERVED.

Reported by A. BITTLESTON, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Saturday, April 24.

REG. v. GREENWOOD.

Misdemeanor—Uttering counterfeit coin—Absent participator a principal.

If two persons are engaged in the common purpose of uttering counterfeit coin, and in pursuance of that purpose one, in the absence of the other, puts off some pieces of the counterfeit coin, both may be convicted as principals, an absent participator in misdemeanor being a principal,

The following case was reserved by Talfourd, J.

The prisoner, William Greenwood, and one Johnson, were tried before me at the last assizes for the city of Exeter for a misdemeanor, in knowingly uttering a counterfeit shilling.

The evidence proved that the uttering charged in the indictment was effected by the prisoner Johnson in the absence of Greenwood; but that both prisoners were together before the uttering—each offering counterfeit shillings of the same description with that uttered by Johnson—that they both brought food purchased with the proceeds of such utterings, to a common lodging, and that Greenwood was taken on the same evening with a counterfeit shilling of the same mould in his possession, and with eight good sixpences and five fourpenny pieces, which left no doubt of their joint engagement in a common purpose of uttering base shillings, and sharing in the proceeds.

As to Johnson, the case was without doubt; and as to Greenwood, I directed the jury that if they thought he was engaged in the evening in question with Johnson in the common purpose of uttering counterfeit shillings, having one stock of such coin for their mutual benefit, and if in pursuance of such purpose Johnson uttered the shilling, they ought to find Greenwood guilty, subject to the question of law which arose on the facts, as to the necessity of the actual presence of Greenwood, or so near neighbourhood to amount to association in the very act, was necessary to support the charge. The jury found both prisoners guilty, and I sentenced both to six months' imprisonment and hard labour; but in deference to the authority of the case of Rex v. Else, Russ. & R. C. C. 143, and the opinion of Mr. Justice Coleridge, in Reg. v. Page, 1 Russ. on Crimes, 82, I reserved the question whether Greenwood was properly convicted, for the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal. The prisoner was undefended; but though in the absence of authority I should have thought it clear that, in a case of misdemeanor, an absent participator is a principal, and thought it right to reserve the question, which is, whether Greenwood was properly convicted.

The case was not argued by counsel.

POLLOCK, C. B.—We are all of opinion that Greenwood was properly convicted. There was unquestionably evidence of his being a participator in the offence; and in the case of a misdemeanor, an absent participator is a principal.

PARKE, B.—It is quite right that both the prisoners should be convicted upon this indictment. In misdemeanor all persons who are accessory before the fact may be indicted and treated as principals, though they should be absent at the time when the offence is actually committed. My brother Talfourd reserved this case in deference to the opinion of my brother Coleridge, in Reg. v. Page, and to the authority of the decision in Rex v. Else; but the observations of Mr. Greaves upon those cases are entitled, I think, to great weight; and it seems that the decision in Rex v. Else arose from the Judges not adverting to the distinction between misdemeanor and felony. The cases referred to of R. v. Soares, R. & R. 25, and R. v. Davis, Ib. 13, were cases of felonious forgery.

ERLE, TALFOURD, and CROMPTON, JJ. concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

BANKRUPTCY.

HULL DISTRICT COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Wednesday, Dec. 17.

(Before Mr. Commissioner AYRTON.)

Re ASHTON.

Reputed ownership.

Goods sent on sale and return, not actually delivered at the bankrupt's shop at the time of the bankruptcy, are not in the reputed ownership of the bankrupt.

Messrs. Apperley sent certain pieces of cloth to the bankrupt on sale or return, accompanied by a letter and invoice, which letter and invoice were received by the bankrupt before the adjudication; the cloths did not arrive at the station at Hull till after the adjudication. The messenger seized the cloths at the railway station at Hull, whereon Messrs. Apperley applied to the commissioner to order the cloth to be delivered up to them, which was resisted by the assignees, on the ground that the delivery at the railway was delivery to the bankrupt, and the cloths were consequently in the reputed ownership of the bankrupt. The commissioner took time to consider of his judgment, which was now delivered.

Mr. Commissioner AYRTON.—The statutory enactment now in force is to be found in the 125th section of the Bankrupt Act of 1849, which enacts, that if any bankrupt, at the time he becomes bankrupt, shall, by the consent and permission of the true owner thereof, have in his possession, order, or disposition, any goods or chattels whereby he was reputed owner, or whereof he had taken upon him the sale, order, or disposition as owner, then the Court shall have power to order the same to be sold and so on. It is to be noticed that the statute of James I. used the word "and"—"in his possession, order, and disposition;" whereas section 125, uses the word "or"—"in his possession, order, or disposition,"—which considerably enlarges the operation of the law of reputed ownership. In the present case, the goods in question were not within that portion of the clause which speaks of the bankrupt as being the "reputed owner," for no one ever saw the goods in his possession; nor had he "taken upon him the sale, order, or disposition as owner." All that remains to consider is, whether he had, at the time he became bankrupt, these goods in his possession, or in his order, or at his disposition. Messrs. Apperley contend that these goods were not, in fact, ever delivered to the bankrupt or to his agents, the carriers, the railway company. It has not been clearly ascertained on what days the goods arrived at and left Birmingham, to which place Messrs. Apperley paid the carriage, and from which place the bankrupt was to pay the carriage. But I intend to decide this question on the broad ground of whether these goods, sent on sale and return, and not accepted by the bankrupt, are within the law of reputed ownership. Upon looking the reported cases, I find three decisions appl to the particular question of goods sent on sa return. The first case is Neale v. Ball, 2 East, 117 (1801). There, bags of wool were sent on sale or return, on the 19th of February, and kept by the bankrupt till the 5th of March, when finding himself insolvent, he, for that reason, returned the wools; which were held by Lord Kenyon to be in the reputed ownership, his Lordship observing, "The jury were told by me that if the goods were not delivered to and accepted by the bankrupt, there was an end of the question, and the property remained in the hands of the consignors; but, if otherwise, the bankrupt had no power to rescind the contract when he returned them." The next case is Livesay v. Hood, Camp. N. P. 83 (1809). The marginal note there is, that goods in the hands of a retail dealer on sale or return are in the reputed ownership. The facts are, however, of too peculiar a nature to establish so general a proposition. Livesay, a wholesale hosier, agreed to furnish Almond, a retail hosier, with goods on sale or return. Almond was constantly to have a stock of hosiery from Livesay, to the value of 100*l*. which he was to sell, and the parties were to come to an account monthly. Almond became bankrupt, the assignees seized goods supplied under this agreement worth 61*l*. Livesay brought an action to recover the goods, but was nonsuited, Mr. Justice Lawrence saying, "This is a case within the statute. Under this agreement the bankrupt was to sell the goods, not as a factor, but as a principal. They appeared to the world as his property; and this reputed ownership was calculated to give him a delusive credit, which it was the object of the statute to prevent." The third and last case is that of Gibson v. Bray, 8 Taunt. 76 (1817). Shawls and laces were sent, by Morgan of London, to Markham of Sunderland, accompanied by a letter, hoping that some of the articles would be approved of, and desiring to have those articles which were not approved of returned as soon as possible. On the evening of the day of the arrival of the goods at Sunderland, the effects of Markham were seized under a fi. fa.; and, on the following morning, the sheriff shut up the shop, which was not ever re-opened. An action was brought for these goods by Morgan, against the assignees of Markham, who had become bankrupt. At the trial before Chief Justice Gibbs (1 Holt, N. P. Cases, 556), his Lordship directed a verdict for the plaintiff, on the ground that the goods were in the reputed ownership; afterwards however, a new trial was moved for, and ordered (8 Taunt. 76), the Court being of opinion that the goods were not in the order and disposition of the bankrupt. Mr. Justice Dallas said, "The bankrupt had not had a reasonable time wherein to judge what he would or would not take." Mr. Justice Park said, "We impugn not the cases of Neale v. Ball, and Livesay v. Hood. Markham had never any opportunity of exercising the discretion delegated to him, as to the selection of what goods he should keep, or what he should return...... There is no pretence for saying that a delusive credit could be raised. In Neale v. Ball, the bankrupt kept the goods from the 19th of February to the 4th or 5th of March; in Livesay v. Hood, the goods had been in possession of the bankrupt for nearly a month." And Mr. Justice Burrough observes, "The key to this case lies in the postscript to the letter, — 'shall be very much obliged to have them returned, what is not approved, as speedily as you can.' It is quite plain that Markham was to have a reasonable time to choose, whether he would have all the goods, or a part of them only; he had not a reasonable time in which to exercise his power of choice, nor did he exercise any power over these goods." The case of Gibson v. Bray is quite a precedent to govern the present. I may use almost the very words of Mr. Justice Burrough. The key to this case is, that the bankrupt was to be allowed a reasonable time to choose whether he would take all the cloth, or select only a portion, or reject the whole; he never had any opportunity of exercising this power, and he never accepted the whole nor any part of the cloth; he never did exercise any sort of control over the cloth, and there is no pretence for saying that any delusive credit was raised. I am therefore of opinion that the cloth in question was not in the reputed ownership of the bankrupt, and must be delivered up to Messrs. Apperley.

PROTECTION CASE.

Re HELLEN BOYD.

Plaintiff in custody for costs in an action for assault.

A plaintiff in an action for assault indebted for the costs applying for relief under the Protection Acts will have no day named for his final order.

Semble, that in the absence of any evidence as to the merits of the case, the day will be named after a short delay.

This petitioner came up for his first examination, and was opposed by Dowse for a creditor to whom he was indebted for the costs in an action for an assault. The learned counsel submitted that where an unsuccessful plaintiff in an action for an assault was indebted for the costs of the proceeding, the Court had no power to make a final order. That would be apparent by a reference to the 4th section of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, re-enacted by the 24th section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, which recited that "if the debts of the petitioner, or any of them, were contracted by reason of any judgment in any proceeding for breach of the revenue laws, or in any action for breach of promise of marriage, seduction, crim. con. libel, slander, assault, &c. the commissioner shall not be authorised in any such case to name any day for making such final order, or to renew such interim order." He relied upon those words, "if the debts of the petitioner, or any of them, were contracted by reason of any judgment in any action for slander." The defendant, the opposing creditor, had a judgment here to the amount of his costs. Then the Court was not to name a day for the final order. That was not the first time that a case of this sort had been presented to the Court. There was a case reported (Re James Miller, 1 Cox & Macrae, 35) upon this point. There the insolvent had been a plaintiff in an action for slander, and failing, he petitioned to be relieved from the debt arising from the costs. In this case insolvent was a petitioner to be relieved from a debt arising from the costs in an action brought by her for an assault, and in which she was unsuccessful. In the case reported, the commissioners had decided they had no power to name a day, and as this was a case precisely similar, he submitted that there was no power to name a day.

Sargood, for the insolvent, submitted that to lay down a principle that no plaintiff should be protected who brought an action, however just, was monstrous.

The CHIEF COMMISSIONER said, the only question was, whether it was within the language of the statute.

Sargood submitted, that it was the duty of the Court not only to read, but to construe it according to principles of justice, and principles of intelligence. It was the duty of a judge to decide what was the spirit and intention of the Act; he was quite sure the Court must hear the merits.

The CHIEF COMMISSIONER.—I think not; I am bound by the words of the Act, which the legislature has framed, and the Court is to administer.

Sargood said that as the objection was merely technical, might the petitioner come up at the next sitting of the Court?

The CHIEF COMMISSIONER.—I think that would be making a farce of the Act.

Sargood hoped there would be the shortest possible delay, if the merits were not gone into now so as to enable the Court to decide according to the justice of the case.

Dowse said, it was not necessary to go into the merits, as the Court had already decided it had no power to name a day.

The CHIEF COMMISSIONER.—Then the petitioner may apply on Monday next under the 28th sec.

CRANE v. REBELLO.

Administration, with the will annexed, of an insolvent estate refused to a creditor, granted to the residuary legatee.

This was a question as to the right of administration with the will annexed (the sole executor and the universal legatee in trust having renounced). The two parties claiming the administration were the son of the deceased, who was, as alleged, the universal legatee named in the will, and Mr. Rebello, a creditor of the deceased. A decree had issued at the instance of Mr. Rebello, calling on Mr. Crane, the other party in the suit, to shew cause why letters of administration, with the will annexed, should not be granted to Mr. Rebello as a creditor of the deceased. An appearance was given on behalf of Mr. Crane, when Mr. Rebello prayed to be heard on his act on petition, which in substance alleged that the estate of the deceased was hopelessly insolvent; that it was indebted to Mr. Rebello to the amount of 821*l.* 15s. for goods sold and delivered to the deceased in his trade (which was that of a wine merchant), and that divers of the creditors of the deceased, seven of whom were mentioned by name, and whose debts amounted together to the sum of 2,413*l.* 10s. were anxious, and had consented, so far as by law they might or could, that letters of administration, with the will annexed, of the estate and effects of the deceased, should be granted to Mr. Rebello, rather than to Mr. Crane, for the general benefit of the estate of the deceased; that none of the creditors held any security for their debts, and that their only chance of recovering their debts, or any portion of them, depended upon the diligence, care, and skill with which the estate of the deceased might be administered. The act further stated that Mr. Crane was wholly unfit and incompetent to administer the estate, that he was not in any business or employment, and that he had never exercised any such continuously. That he had been for many years wholly supported by an allowance of 2*l.* per week from the deceased. That he was, and long had been, addicted to habits of excessive intoxication; and that he had, in consequence thereof, suffered from attacks of delirium tremens, and that during the last year he had been subject to various insane delusions, and had often been insane, and of an unsound mind, and had been placed under the restraint of servants or keepers, by medical advice. That he would have been placed in a lunatic asylum at some time during the last year, but that did not take place by reason of the illness and death of his father, the deceased. The act also denied that Mr. Crane was the universal legatee named in the will, but merely a legatee, his sons being substituted as residuary legatees; and it further alleged, that the amount of the beneficial interest which Mr. Crane took under the will was left by the terms thereof entirely to the absolute discretion of the executor named therein, and that such beneficial interest was so restricted by the deceased's particular devise and directions, as he expressly declared in consequence of the incompetency and habits of intoxication of Mr. Crane. This act on petition was partly met by an answer on the part of Mr. Crane, denying his incompetency for business at any time, by reason of any mental ailment whatever, although excited at times when under the influence of spirits, but to the immoderate use of which he was not addicted in any either very unusual or remarkable degree, denying also the averments as to his insanity, and his contemplated or intended confinement in a lunatic asylum, and as to his otherwise being put under any custody or restraint.

Sir J. D. Harding, Q.A. appeared on behalf of Mr. Rebello.

JUDGMENT.

Sir JOHN DODSON.—It is the general rule that administration should be granted according to the interest, and that in cases, whether within or without the Statute of Distributions, the Court should entrust the management of the estate to those who have the greatest interest in it. Hence, where there is a will without the appointment of an executor, or where an executor refuses to act, the grant of administration, with the will annexed, is given to the residuary legatee, not the next of kin of the testator. This is the established practice of these Courts which has been approved of, and sanctioned by other Courts. With respect to creditors, it has been held that they have but an interior interest; that they cannot deny an interest, or oppose a will (Dabbs v. Chisman, 1 Phill. Eccl. R. 159; Elme v. Da Costa, ibid. 173); and administration is only granted to them on failure of a superior interest; they are therefore postponed to residuary legatees next of kin and legatees, and the solvency or insolvency of the estate cannot affect the question of right particularly in the case of a residuary legatee, who is the testator's choice. (Atkinson v. Barnard, 2 Phill. Eccl. R. 316.) That is not a solitary case. In the case of Graham v. McLean, 2 Curt. 659, Sir Herbert Jenner Fust held, "That administration could not be granted to a creditor when there was a party ready to administer who had a prior title;" but here the party seeking the administration in preference to the creditor is next of kin as well as residuary legatee; he combines in himself the two characters, and it would be contrary to law, as well as the practice of these Courts, to refuse administration with the will annexed to such a person. It was so held in Linthwaite v. Galloway, 2 Lee, 414; and the averment that there is no residue will not alter the rule. (Thomas v. Butler, 1 Vent. 217.) It has, however, been said in argument that a next of kin seldom seeks administration of an insolvent estate for an honest purpose; that observation is to be found in the judgment in the case of Wilby v. West and Smith, 3 Phill. Eccl. R. 382, as having originally proceeded from Lord Mansfield, and whether I may be disposed to coincide in those expressions or not, the circumstances of that case do not resemble these: in that case the guardian of the next of kin had renounced, and what the Court did was to refuse to allow her to retract her renunciation. The case itself when examined goes to shew that if she had not renounced, the grant would have been made to her as guardian to the residuary legatees in preference to the creditor. The conclusion, then, to which I must come, is, that Mr. Crane is entitled to this administration, unless sufficient grounds exist to disentitle him to it. Such grounds are said to exist by reason of Mr. Rebello being the more fit person as more conversant with matters of business, and that the other creditors are of that opinion. Where parties are all in consimili casu, attention might be given to an opinion of that kind so as to induce the Court to select an administrator, but here I have no such discretion. Another objection urged is, that Mr. Crane is subject to delirium tremens; but it is not alleged that he is non compos, nor is it proved that he is incompetent to manage this estate; on the contrary, affidavits brought in by him prove the contrary. I shall, therefore, decree the administration to Mr. Crane, he being by law entitled to it as the son and residuary legatee, in consequence of the renunciation of the executor and residuary legatee in trust, and I must condemn Mr. Rebello in the costs.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by P. J. M'KENNA, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

DAWSON, Executrix, v. NASH.

Tuesday, April 20.

Pleading—Statute of Limitations—Writ of summons—13 Vict. c. 18, Ir.; 2 Wm. 4, & 2 Vict. c. 110, Eng.; 10 Car. 1, sess. 2, c. 6, s. 15, Ir.; 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 4, Eng.

To a plea of the Statute of Limitations, the plaintiff replied that her testator had, within six years from the accruing of said cause of action, and in respect thereof, sued out against defendant, a writ of summons, and had afterwards died within four calendar months from the date thereof.

That the plaintiff within a reasonable time, namely, a year after the death of her testator, sued out against the defendant the writ of summons on the present action, to which the defendant appeared, and the plaintiff thereupon declared against her. To this replication the defendant rejoined the non-service of the writ sued out by the plaintiff's testator.

Held, on demurrer, that the rejoinder was bad, and that inasmuch as the prior writ, although not served, was in force at the time of testator's death, and as the plaintiff, within a reasonable time after the death of her testator, had sued out the writ on which the present declaration was filed, that the replication disclosing these facts was sufficient to bring the case within the equity of the excepted cases of the Statute of Limitations, and was a sufficient answer to the plea, and that the rejoinder, tendering an immaterial issue, viz. the service of the writ, was bad.

Semble, the mere fact of a person dying within the six years, will not be sufficient to enable his personal representative, after the six years have expired, to sue and take the case out of the operation of the statute, although the personal representative institute such suit within a reasonable time after the death of the testator or intestate, unless the deceased person had, before his death, and within the six years, instituted proceedings.

Assumpsit on a bill of exchange by the executrix of the drawer (the Rev. J. Dawson) against the acceptor. The defendant pleaded actio non. Replication as above. Demurrer and joinder. Grounds of demurrer that the said rejoinder neither confessed and avoided, nor traversed and denied the replication, but tendered an immaterial issue.

Robinson, in reply.

Saturday, April 24.—LEFROY, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court, after stating the pleadings. Dawson died in February, and in the month of August following the plaintiff as his executrix sued out the writ in the present case, on the which this declaration and subsequent pleadings were filed. To the replication a rejoinder was filed, alleging that the first writ in that replication mentioned, never was served on defendant, and that the appearance never was entered to the writ. The demurrer admits the facts stated in the replication, but alleges that they are immaterial. The question therefore is, whether the suing out of the writ when the party dies without having served it, and when his personal representatives, within a reasonable time, issue a new writ, constitutes a good replication, or, in other words, sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. The testator died on the day after that on which the writ was issued, and consequently within four months during which the writ was available. We may collect what the law is generally from the form of pleading. Now, the form of the plea here is, that the cause of action did not accrue within six years from commencing the said action. What, then, is the commencement contemplated by the plea? It evidently refers to a pending suit, that is the very suit in which the plea is filed. The law, however, in some instances allows the issuing of a writ at an antecedent period to be available to a party for taking the case out of the Statute of Limitations, if connected with the writ upon which the declaration has been filed. It does more; it allows, in some instances, the suing out of a substantive writ, other than that upon which the action is depending, to take the case out of the statute. In the first case, the writ must be shewn to be connected with the proceedings pending, and this is done by continuances; but the law allows a case to be taken out of the statute by a substantive writ in particular cases, although not connected with the proceedings going on when the first writ became unproductive in consequence of an arrest of judgment, outlawry, or reversal of judgment on a writ of error. In all these cases the law directs that the party shall have a fresh writ. There is, however, a fourth case, within the equity of the fifteenth section, when a testator or intestate, having issued a writ before the statute attaches, dies; in that case his representative is entitled to issue a new writ, provided he do so within a reasonable time, and thus take the case out of the statute, and a year has been generally held the period constituting a reasonable time. The rejoinder in this case admits the death of the plaintiff's testator pending the writ of summons sued out by him in his lifetime, and within the four months during which it was in force, but alleges that the writ never was served, nor any appearance entered upon it. The question then is, will this state of facts be sufficient to take such a case out of the statute? It was argued on the part of the plaintiff, that the mere death of the party within the six years will enable his representative to recommence the action after that period had expired, upon the authority of a paragraph in Buller's Nisi Prius, 159, and of the case of Karver v. James, Willes, 255. That case does not warrant in any degree the deduction drawn from it by the counsel for the plaintiff. When the statute once begins to run, it can only be stopped by these means, and in those cases I have mentioned. The question then really in this case is, whether, under these circumstances, we have a state of facts sufficient to take this case out of the statute. I cannot find any case under the like form of process where it was held necessary that the process which has been sued out should have been served and an appearance entered. It has been said that a process in the pocket of a party cannot be sufficient to evade the effects of the statute, and several cases have been cited to prove that position. But these were cases where the first writ had been sued out a great length of time before the second, and where it was tried to connect the two writs by continuances; but in more cases, where it has been said you cannot have continuances without having the writ returned, it was so held in order to prevent a person with a pocket writ being able, after the expiration of several years from the death of his testator, to come and enter continuances, and thus to keep a debt alive contrary to the real intention of the Legislature when passing this Act of 10 Car. 1. The allowing a person, however, within a reasonable time to proceed on a fresh substantive writ, as if it [illegible] the original writ sued out by the deceased, does not in the least conflict with the real objects of the statute or these cases. A writ neither served and returned, if a fresh writ be sued out within a reasonable time, may properly be held as coming within the equity of the cases excepted in the statute. In this case there was no necessity for continuances, as the writ now has a statutable continuance for four months from the issuing, by virtue of the Act, during which time the party dies, and his representative comes in within twelve months and institutes this present. Indeed, there would appear to be no necessity for service of this writ as there could be no continuance on it, and in those cases I have referred to it was held that appearances should be entered merely for the purpose of having continuances. For these reasons we are of opinion that the demurrer to the rejoinder must be allowed and judgment given for the plaintiff.

Re THE OXFORD AND WORCESTER EXTENSION AND CHESTER JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY, ex parte SHARP and JAMES.

Company—Winding-up Acts—Contributories provisional committee—Managing committee.

S. and J. were members of the provisional committee, and also of the managing committee of a railway company directed to be wound up under the Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Acts. By a resolution of the company 250 shares were to be offered to each member of the provisional committee, with a request that he would state on or before a day named, whether he would take that or any less number, and 250 shares in addition were to be offered to each member of the committee of management. By another resolution letters of allotment of 100 shares only were to be sent out with a communication that that number was part only of the 250 offered to the committee of management, and that it was the intention of the company to adhere to their original intention of apportioning to each member of the provisional committee the 250 shares if upon the completion of their arrangements they could do so. By another resolution the committee of allotment were to make an allotment according to a scheme under which S. and J. would have the same number of shares (500) each. By a minute made at a meeting of the managing committee, signed by the chairman, but not entered on the minutes of the company's books, it was reported that the committee had completed the allotment of shares according to the scheme. The names of J. and S. appeared in the books of the company as allottees for 100 shares each. The company subsequently resolved that the directors should be requested to execute the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement in respect of the 100 shares allotted to them, and that the further prosecution of the company should be postponed. J. and S. paid the deposit, and signed the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement in respect of the 100 shares. No further allotment took place, nor did it appear that either J. or S. ever signified their intention to take a larger number of shares than those upon which they had so paid the deposit. On the winding up of the company, it was Held (reversing the decision of the Master), that J. and S. were contributories in respect only of the 100 shares.

In cases arising under the Winding-up Act, the Lord Chancellor suggested that counsel should agree upon a state of facts to be submitted to the Court; that such state of facts should be perused, and, if found to be correct, signed by the counsel for the different parties.

The case of Hutton v. Upfill does not establish, as a general rule, that, because a man agrees to become a provisional committee-man, and accepts shares without doing any other act, or incurring any other liability, he is to be a contributory.

This was an appeal taken by leave directly from the master (Rose), who, under the Winding-up Acts had placed the names of Henry Self Sharp and John James on the list of contributories of the company, in respect of 400 shares each, in addition to 100 shares each, to which they had been before adjudged liable, and to which they admitted their liability.

The facts were these: In the month of September, 1845, the committee of management passed the following resolution:—

"That 250 shares be offered to each member of the provisional committee, and that the secretary be desired to write to that effect to each member of the committee, and request him to state, on or before Wednesday next, the 24th inst. whether or not he will take that or any less number, and that 250 in addition be offered to each member of the committee of management."

The petitioners were members of the provisional committee and members also of the committee of management. The petitioner James first attended the meetings of the committee of management on the 23rd of September, 1845, and the petitioner Sharp on the 3rd of October following.

On the 30th of September, James being present, it was resolved, "That the secretary do send letters of allotment to the provisional committee for 100 only for the present, accompanying the letter with an intimation that that number is part of the 250 offered to them by the committee of management, and that it was their intention to reserve the remainder, and it was also resolved that twenty shares should be the qualification of a director."

This second resolution was the occasion of some complaints by some of the provisional committee that they had not received their 250 shares as promised.

On the 7th October, James being present, it was resolved, with reference to the last resolution, "That the secretary do accompany the letter of allotment with a communication to the effect that if when the committee of management shall have finally completed their arrangements they shall find themselves in a position to adhere to their original intention of apportioning to each member of the provisional committee 250 shares they will be happy to make up that number."

At a meeting of the committee of management on the 10th of October (James being present) the secretary having reported, "that he had summoned both the finance and allotment committee for Wednesday, the 8th inst. but in consequence of there not being a quorum of either committee present, no business had been transacted," the following resolution was carried:—"Resolved, that the committee of allotment be requested to make the allotment in accordance with the accompanying scheme, and that the capital of the company be reduced to 100,000 shares in accordance therewith."

The following is a copy of the scheme alluded to: (a)

To this resolution were affixed the name of the chairman and two of the committee.

It was requested that three of the committee of management should certify to the committee of allotment that that scheme of allotment had been adopted by the board by signing it; accordingly the word "carried" is written on the paper with the initials of Peter Morrison (chairman), John James, and J. J. Jerdin,—three members of the committee being necessary to form a quorum.

This scheme was not entered in the minutes of the company's books, but was on a separate piece of paper.

The following is a copy of the letter of allotment:—

"Not transferable.

"Sir,—The committee of management having at your request allotted to you shares of 20*l*. each in this undertaking, I am directed to request that you will pay the deposit of 2*l*. 2s. per share thereon, amounting to l. to the account of the company with any of the undermentioned banks, on or before Friday, the 24th day of October inst. otherwise this allotment will be cancelled, and the shares disposed of to other applicants.

"This letter must be produced at the time of payment of the deposits, and the scrip certificates will be delivered in exchange for the banker's receipt, upon your attending with the same at this office, and executing the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement.

"I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"To Mr. ."

On the 21st of October a meeting of the committee of management was held, at which both Sharp and James were present, when the secretary reported that the committee of allotment had completed the allotment of the shares, and in so doing had carried out the views of the managing committee. veyed to them at the last meeting. All the share allotted by the allotment committee were entered in a book by the secretary, called the allotment-book, and the entry contained the names and addresses of the applicants for shares, and the number of shares allotted, arranged alphabetically.

The names of Sharp and James appeared as allottees for 100 shares each.

On the 9th of December a committee of management was held, James being present, when it was resolved that the directors should be requested, without delay to execute the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement in respect of the 100 shares allotted to them; and it was also on the same day resolved that, under the depressed state of the money-market, and the consequent defalcation in the payment of deposits, the further prosecution of the company should be postponed.

Sharp signed the deed in the month of November, 1845, for the 100 shares allotted to him, and paid 200 guineas thereon. James subsequently signed the deed for the 100 shares allotted to him, and paid a deposit of 100 guineas only thereon, as the committee of management were at the time returning one guinea per share to all those allottees who had paid the deposit of 2*l.* 2*s.* per share. Upon payment of the deposit and signing the deeds of the company, scrip certificates were issued. The following is a copy of the scrip certificate

"Oxford and Worcester Extension and Chester Junction Railway, with Branches to Shrewsbury and Northwich. Capital, 250,000*l.* in shares of 20*l.* each. Deposit, 2*l.* 2*s.* per share. Scrip certificate for ten shares, Nos. to , on which the deposit of two guineas per share has been paid. The holder of this certificate having signed the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement under the date hereof, and having agreed to pay all future calls, is the proprietor of ten shares in the above undertaking. } Two members of the committee.

The projected railway was subsequently directed to be wound up under the Act.

The Master ordered the names of the appellants to be placed on the list of contributories in respect of 500 shares. From that order the petitioners appealed, and as the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce in Ex parte Morrison, in the matter of the same railway, 16 Law T. 431, had decided a similar question, by permission of Lord Truro they were allowed to bring the present case at once before the Court of Appeal.

Daniel and T. H. Terrell, were for the appellants.

The following cases were cited: —Ex parte Davis's Executors, 15 Law T. 541; Re Oxford and Worcester Extension and Chester Junction Railway Company, ex parte Morrison, 16 Law T. 431, Re Oxford and Worcester, &c. Railway Company, ex parte Barber, 20 L. J. 146; Upfill's case, 2 Ho. of Lords cases, 675.

In the course of the argument the Lord Chancellor complained of the manner in which this case had been presented; it was almost impossible, said his lordship, to ascertain what were the real facts. He suggested that counsel in such cases should agree upon a given state of facts to be submitted to the Court; that this should be perused by counsel, and signed by them, if found to be sufficiently correct: such a course would enable the Court to have possession of the facts of the case without being obliged to sift through all the documents in order to see what the facts really were.

His Lordship took time to consider the question and look into Upfill's case and other authorities. Having looked through the minute-book and other papers, on Wednesday, April 21.—The LORD CHANCELLOR delivered the following judgment:—This case came before the Court in such a state as to render it very difficult for me to deal with it: no statement of the facts of the case is to be found; and I have had to go through the minute-book and many other papers in order to ascertain for myself what the facts really were. This is the last case that I will hear in such a shape. The Court has a right to expect that all the facts are clearly and accurately stated, and ought not to be left to find them out in the best way it can. The Court has been put to a great deal of unnecessary trouble in collecting the materials on which it has to found its judgment. Cheap and speedy justice is desirable, but it cannot be attained unless the Court knows the facts upon which it is called to decide. One great inconvenience to which in the present case, the Court has been subjected has arisen from facts having been stated which were found not to exist. Now, as far as I can understand this case, the question is not whether the appellants are liable in respect of the 100 shares each for which they executed the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement, but whether they are liable for 400 shares in addition, which it is said were agreed to be allotted to them; these gentlemen were not members of the allotment committee, but members only of the provisional and managing committees. Now it appears that at an early meeting it was resolved that 250 shares should be offered to each of the members of the provisional committee, and 250 in addition to each member of the managing committee. It appears also that there was a great application for shares in the company, and it was resolved at a meeting early in October 1845, at which neither Mr. James nor Mr. Sharp was present, that the secretary should send a letter of allotment of 100 shares only to each provisional committee-man, with an intimation that they were part only of the 250 which were offered, and that it was desirable to reserve the remainder for the present. It was therefore proposed to limit the number of shares originally ordered for the present, and it is apparent that there was a wish on the part of the managing committee to reserve the right of allotting or not allotting the remainder. At first it was optional to the parties to accept—there was no compulsion to accept. The resolution was, that "250 shares be offered to each member," &c. It is quite clear, therefore, that there was an option tendered to these parties. Then, by the resolution of the 30th of September, the secretary was directed "to send letters of allotment to the provisional committee for 100 only for the present." This letter was to be accompanied "with an intimation that that number was part of the 250 offered, and that it was their intention to reserve the remainder." Then, by the resolution which was passed at the meeting of the 7th of October, it appears "that if, when the committee of management shall have finally completed their arrangements, they shall find themselves in a position to adhere to their original intention of apportioning to each member of the provisional committee 250 shares they will be happy to make up that number." Then you come to that meeting of the 10th of October, at which it was resolved "that the committee of allotment be requested to make the allotment in accordance with the accompanying scheme." Now, then, what is said to be the scheme referred and sworn to by Mr. Dutton. Now, this scheme, which has been held to be binding, in another case, on a managing committeeman, is to this effect. It is proposed that the number of shares, 112,000, be reduced 12,000, leaving for capital 100,000. There are some calculations which are not accurate; but it shews that 1,000 shares were to be reserved for the directors. The deposits for Parliament were to be 121,000*l.* and a fraction. These facts appear in the minute-book; and from that book, and the various other papers which I have taken the trouble to examine, I have been enabled to collect them. Now, so far as this relates to the scheme, it is impossible, I think, to say that there is an absolute and binding contract on the parties to take these shares, because, first of all, the resolution is, that the committee of allotment is only "requested" to make the allotment in accordance with that scheme. The scheme is mentioned only the minute-book; but the original I have had before me. It appears to have been a scheme of device only, and not to have been carried out. For example, it was proposed, among other things, that 30,900 shares should be set apart for the public; but the public were wise,—they took only a small portion of that number. Then 5,000 were set apart for Mr. Jackson and his friends; but they were wiser still,—they took none. The sixteen managing directors were to have 8,000 shares between them: now, I do not find that the allotment of the 500 shares was ever made to the members of the provisional and managing committees, although they are assumed actually to belong to them, and the whole of them are left on hand unclaimed. On the 21st of October, the secretary states that the committee of allotment had completed the allotment. I do not find any further allotment to these gentlemen, neither I find that these gentlemen ever signified their intention to take the larger or any other number of shares than those upon which they paid a deposit, if they had been allotted. I would have thought it almost impossible that what has been termed the scheme should have been considered a binding contract, it was a mere proposal, which does not appear to have been acted on. I do not find any letters of allotment to have been sent out, nor are any reported to have been so sent: I find nothing but the secretary's statement. As soon as matters began to assume a disagreeable aspect, a meeting of the managing committee was convened; at that meeting, at which Mr Sharp and Mr. James were both present, and which was held on the 9th of December, 1845, it was resolved that the directors should be requested to execute the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement in respect of 100 shares each. The result of that was, that Mr. Sharp and Mr. James executed the deeds for the 100 shares actually allotted to them by that first letter to which I have referred. Now, there is no proof of any further allotment except in that statement in the report of the secretary, "that the committee had allotted;" and there being no proof of any actual allotment of any further shares having taken place, the case appears to me to be of this sort,—that there being a scheme for the division of all the shares in the company, many of them being reserved for individuals, members of the public who had an interest in the concern, and the public generally, there had been an offer to the provisional committee and the managing committee of a certain number of shares each: I do not find anywhere an acceptance of those shares, and in that respect this case is entirely distinct from the other cases which were cited during the argument. There is no acceptance any where of any of these shares, but there is a letter from the secretary qualifying the first, and that, as far as I can discover, is never withdrawn: "that for the present 100 shares be offered," and that it was "desirable to reserve the rest." Well, so things seem to have gone on (as far as the evidence goes), without any shares being paid on, although great expense was incurred, and money borrowed in order to meet the obligations incurred. Then there was something like a crash, and the parties think it right to come here and ascertain the liability of the company generally. The parliamentary contract is executed with a view of the company going to parliament: in this they fail. They do execute the parliamentary contract, and a joint deed is also executed by them; and they call the shareholders together and offer them the number of shares set opposite their names. Now, coming to these gentlemen, 100 shares were all that were actually directed (according to the evidence) to be offered to them: there is no acceptance except by the execution of this deed. To the extent of 100 shares they were liable. They have paid their liability in respect of those shares, and it is insisted that they are liable to the 400 shares in addition. There is a case arising out of the same transaction with another gentleman, a Mr. Morrison, which is reported 20 L.J. 296, before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, and in that case it was decided, that under similar circumstances each member of the managing committee was liable for the whole of the shares so reserved for them, and the present case has been brought before me, with a view of indirectly reviewing that decision. Now, the decision in that case appears to have proceeded on Upfill's case, and without giving any opinion on that case, I think that the circumstances upon which I have to decide are materially different. There there was not only an offer but an acceptance of shares; here there was no offer in reality, and no acceptance beyond the 100 shares which are admitted to have been accepted. The House of Lords held in Upfill's case, that two letters, the one containing the offer, and the other containing the acceptance of shares, constituted a contract, which was binding on the party accepting, and that therefore a provisional committee-man accepting shares was liable as a contributory; but, besides that circumstance there is on the face of the report a strong reason, independently of the others, why Mr. Upfill should have been made a contributory, independently of any question of liability; it appears there that the managing committee received authority, by the prospectus under which they were all acting, to carry on the concern, and to incur all necessary expenses before the Act of Parliament was obtained. Well, but has the being a party to that no weight with it? The man who makes himself a party to that transaction must contribute of course to the expenses, as the expenses are incurred according to his own dealing under that contract; being a provisional committeeman, he must be taken to have known what was the constitution of and what was proceeding in the company; and the man who has made himself a party to sanction such an expenditure, and who knew the terms on which the company in Upfill's case was proceeding, could not under the circumstances, which are mentioned in the report of that case be heard to say that he was not liable for the expenditure he had so sanctioned, under a contract, as a provisional committee-man. [His Lordship here read a part of the report of Upfill's case, and having repeated his view of the position of Mr. Upfill said,]—Independently of the position of that gentleman as a receiver of shares and provisional committeeman, there were circumstances which, if that case were examined, would be found rendered him additionally liable as a contributory: that case did not establish the fact that because a man agrees to be a provisional committeeman, and has accepted shares without any other act done or liability incurred (except those two circumstances), he is to be a contributory. But in this case I am of opinion that each of these gentlemen having had only 100 shares offered to him out of those 500 which were within the scope of the scheme—(which I do not consider a concluded transaction, because I do not see any intention of its ever having been carried into execution)—and which 100 shares he accepted, and for which he executed the subscription deed and parliamentary contract, his liability must be limited to those 100 shares only—and I shall order the names of the appellants to be struck off the list as to all the shares except the 100. I shall make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

IN LUNACY.

Friday, April 30.

Re JOHN ROSE SWINDELL.

Committee of lunatic—Liability of committee for arrears of rent.

A committee of a lunatic let a house, &c. belonging to the lunatic, to a person who had shortly before been made bankrupt, but had obtained his certificate, and who, both previously and subsequently to the bankruptcy, acted as solicitor to the committee, both in the lunacy and in his own private affairs; the committee having suffered the solicitor to remain some years in the house before he took any steps to obtain payment of the rent, or to eject the tenant:

Held, that there had been wilful neglect and default on the part of the committee, and that his administrator was bound to make good the loss occasioned thereby.

The question which arose in this matter was whether the administrator of Edward Ordish, a deceased committee of the estate of the lunatic, John Rose Swindell, should be charged with a sum of 345*l.* 4s. 2d. which it was alleged he had lost by wilful default, in letting a mansion-house, &c. belonging to the lunatic, to a gentleman of the name of Bryan Thomas Balguy, who had acted as solicitor both to himself personally and in the lunacy. The Master in Lunacy, by his report, dated the 20th of December, 1850, made in pursuance of an order of Lord Chancellor Truro, found that such sum was not lost by the wilful default of the committee, and that, consequently, his administrator ought not to be charged with it.

The following facts appear on the Master's report. John Rose Swindell was, on the 21st day of February, 1828, found to be a lunatic, and on the 3rd July, 1828, the custody of his person, and the care and management of his estate, were granted to Thomas Pearsall, who continued as such committee until his death, on the 21st of November, 1838. Mr. Balguy, who was a solicitor of the town of Derby, and for many years held the office of town-clerk, and other offices under the corporation of that town, was the solicitor acting for Thomas Pearsall in the matter of this lunacy. In the month of February 1838, Mr. Balguy being in pecuniary difficulties, and his affairs embarrassed, a fiat in bankruptcy was issued against him, upon which he was made a bankrupt, but in the month of May, in the same year, he obtained his certificate, and, notwithstanding his bankruptcy, the corporation of Derby retained him in all the offices which he held previous to his bankruptcy, namely, the offices of town-clerk, clerk of the peace, coroner's clerk of the Court of Requests, and solicitor to the corporation, from which office he derived a considerable income independent of his private practice; and Thomas Pearsall, up to the time of his death on 21st of November, 1838, continued Mr. Balguy as his attorney. On the death of Thomas Pearsall, Edward Ordish presented a petition in this matter, and retained Mr. Balguy as his solicitor, and an order was made on such petition dated the 6th day of December, 1838, whereby it was referred to the Master to approve of a new committee of the lunatic, with liberty to the said Edward Ordish to propose himself as such committee; and pending the said order a Mr. and Mrs. Keen also presented a petition in this matter, for liberty to go in and propose themselves as committees of the lunatic; and the said last-mentioned petition led to much litigation, and after considerable discussion was at length, on or about the 2nd of March, 1839, dismissed by the then Lord Chancellor, and, on the 12th day of March, 1839, an order confirming the Master's report, which approved of the said Edward Ordish as committee, was made in this matter. Upon the appointment of the said Edward Ordish as committee, he continued to employ Mr. Balguy as the solicitor in the said lunacy, and also employed him as his own private solicitor, and continued so to employ him until the month of October 1842. Shortly after the appointment of the said Edward Ordish as committee, namely in the month of October 1839, the mansion-house and premises called Borrowash House, part of the estate of the lunatic, became untenanted, and from the situation of the said house, and from the circumstance of its being a large mansion, it was difficult to find a suitable tenant. Whereupon Mr. Balguy proposed to the said Edward Ordish to take the said mansion-house and premises from Michaelmas 1839 as yearly tenant, at the rent of 132*l.* being the rent which the previous tenant had paid; and the said Edward Ordish agreed to let him the said premises, of which he entered into possession accordingly. It appears that, besides the bill of costs, for which the said Edward Ordish was liable to Mr. Balguy for procuring his appointment as committee (and which was subsequently taxed at the sum of 98*l.* 3s.), Mr. Balguy had other claims for costs against the said Edward Ordish, not only in respect of his business done in the said lunacy, but in respect of his own private affairs; and the said Edward Ordish paid to Mr. Balguy, on account thereof, from time to time, between the month of May 1839, and July 1842, both inclusive, various sums of money, but no bills were delivered to the said Edward Ordish by Mr. Balguy down to the month of October 1842, about which time the said Edward Ordish, finding reason to be dissatisfied with the conduct of Mr. Balguy, dismissed him as his solicitor, and obtained an order, dated the 11th of February, 1843, for the delivery and taxation of his bills of costs. Whereupon Mr. Balguy delivered to the said Edward Ordish his bills of costs both in the said lunacy and in the said Edward Ordish's own private affairs, amounting in the whole to the sum of 1,050*l.* 16s. 2d.; and after considerable difficulty, the taxation of the said bill was only completed in the year 1845; and upon such taxation the said bills were reduced to the sum of 601*l.* 14s; and upon an account being taken of the sums of money actually received by Mr. Balguy, on account of the said Edward Ordish, it was ascertained that Mr. Balguy had been overpaid by the said Edward Ordish, and was indebted to him in the sum of 130*l.* 11s. 5d. which said sum the said Edward Ordish was unable to recover; and of the said sum of 601*l.* 14s. the amount of the said taxed costs of Mr. Balguy, only a portion thereof was in respect of his costs for business done in the matter of the lunacy. Upon an inspection of the accounts passed by the said Edward Ordish, as such committee as aforesaid, the only sum allowed to the said Edward Ordish in respect of Mr. Balguy's bill of costs for business transacted in the matter of the lunacy, was a sum of 256*l.* 6s. 4d. which sum was part of the sum of 111*l.* 18s. costs charged in the account of the said Edward Ordish, passed in the year 1845 (the remainder of such sum of 411*l.* 18s. being in respect of bills of costs of Mr. Francis Jessopp, who acted as solicitor for the said Edward Ordish after the discharge of Mr. Balguy), and was allowed in the said account of the said Edward Ordish, in pursuance of orders in this matter dated respectively the 3rd day of November, 1842, the 4th day of November, 1843, the sum of 98*l.* 3s. 6d. as the amount of Mr. Balguy's taxed costs in procuring the appointment of the said Edward Ordish as committee, had not been charged by the said Edward Ordish against the estate of the said lunatic in any of the accounts passed by him as committee, but an order had been made for the payment of the said sum of 98*l.* 3s. 6d. The tenancy of Mr. Balguy of the said mansion-house and premises, called Borrowash-house, continued from the month of October 1839, until Michaelmas-day 1843, when it was determined by notice to quit having been given him on behalf of the said Edward Ordish; but Mr. Balguy paid no rent down to the period when he was so discharged as solicitor, in the month of October 1842, though two several sums of 100*l.* and 79*l.* were subsequently recovered from him. It appears that the said Edward Ordish, who was formerly a yeoman, had become of unsound mind, and no explanation could be satisfactorily obtained from him as to the measures which he took for the purpose of obtaining payment of such rent, but John Pearsall Ordish, who is one of the sons of the said Edward Ordish, deposed by his affidavit, sworn on the 23rd of April, 1850, that he was intimately acquainted with the transactions of his said father in the affairs of the said lunacy, and that for several years previously to the affliction of his said father he assisted in the management of the business connected therewith; and that the said Mr. Balguy pretended to his said father that the sums which were due to him in respect of the bills of costs against the said Edward Ordish would be amply sufficient to cover such arrears of rent, and that for a considerable time he put off his said father with such excuses, and that he did not believe that the said arrears of rent could have been realised by any diligence on the part of the said Edward Ordish. Mr. Balguy also by his affidavit, sworn on the 4th of July, 1851, deposed, amongst other things, that during the time of his occupying the house at Borrowash, as well as after his removal therefrom, the said Edward Ordish and Sarah his wife on his behalf, when they called upon him, Mr. Balguy, at Derby, on business which they were in the habit of doing generally once, and frequently twice, in the week, . . continually pressing him for a settlement of the rent, but that he did not pay the same, stating to them as his reason, that the estate of the said John Rose Swindell was indebted to him in a much larger amount than the rent due from him; and which he believed then to be the case, and still believed would have proved to be so had it not been that his books were destroyed by a fire, which took place in the town-hall of Derby, in the month of October 1841. Mr. Balguy further deposed by his affidavit, sworn on the 1st day of November, 1850 (amongst other things), that he had his offices in the said town-hall, at Derby, upon the occasion of the said fire, and that his books, papers, and documents of every description were utterly destroyed, and that one of the boxes in his said office contained all his papers, drafts, vouchers, and other materials for his bills against the said committee, and was included in the destruction, and that he was thus deprived of the means of making out his bill of costs otherwise than from memory and from his agent's bill of costs, and that afterwards, when called upon to make out his bill of costs against the said committee, from the circumstance of his papers composing the materials being destroyed, he was obliged to make them out from memory, rendered imperfect from having kept a regular diary of his attendances and business done for the said committee, and, when submitted to the Master for taxation, the same bills were reduced several hundred pounds,—the sum allowed being, according to his, the said Mr. Balguy's recollection, somewhere about the sum of 600*l.* —and that the loss of his papers in this business, by the destruction of the said town-hall, by depriving him of the means of making out fair and reasonable and unobjectionable bills of costs against the said committee, was a great advantage to the estate of the said lunatic, and a gain to it of several hundred pounds; and that Mr. Henry Power,—the opposing solicitor as to the removal of the committee of the said lunatic, and also Mr. William Blow Collis, the solicitor of the next of kin of the said lunatic, on learning the sums allowed to him, the said Bryan Thomas Balguy, on taxation, expressed to him their astonishment at the amount, and declared it to be a very inadequate remuneration for the trouble and expenses incurred by him in various suits and transactions in which he was professionally concerned for the said Edward Ordish as such committee. Between the years 1839 and 1842, both inclusive, the said Edward Ordish having in the month of November 1842 dismissed the said Mr. Balguy as his solicitor, instructed Messrs. Jessopp, whom he then employed as his solicitors in the place of Mr. Balguy, to use their best exertions to recover the rent, and to give Mr. Balguy notice to quit the said premises and the steps thereupon taken by the said Francis Jessopp for the purpose of recovering the rent from the said Mr. Balguy are set forth in the affidavit of the said Francis Jessopp, sworn in this matter on the 8th day of April, 1851, in which (amongst other things) he deposes that he was applied to by the said Edward Ordish respecting the arrears of rent due from Mr. Balguy, and requested by him to enforce payment thereof, whereupon he immediately caused a distress to be levied on the goods of Mr. Balguy, but in consequence of their being greatly insufficient to satisfy the said arrears, and upon the assurances of Mr. Balguy that he would speedily make arrangements for payment, it was thought most prudent not further to enforce the said distress at that time; and after many ineffectual attempts to obtain payment of the said rent, in the month of March 1843 Mr. Balguy gave a warrant of attorney for securing payment in the month of September then following, of the sum of 395*l.* being the amount of rent then in arrear; that the said Mr. Balguy, as the said Francis Jessopp believed, quitted the said house and premises at Michaelmas, 1843; that the said Edward Ordish was then about to enforce his judgment against the goods of the said Mr. Balguy for the said arrears of rent, but as his goods were of little value, and he having proposed to pay the sum of 100*l.* which was more than the value of the said goods, forthwith, and to pay the rest of the said debt by instalments of 100*l.* a-year, he, the said Francis Jessopp, considered that it would be better to accept such terms than run the risk of losing the whole of the said arrears by forcing Mr. Balguy to extremities; and he the said Francis Jessopp so advised the said Edward Ordish, who accordingly agreed to the proposition of Mr. Balguy; and that the said Mr. Balguy afterwards paid the said sum of 100*l.* on account of the said arrears, and a further sum of 79*l.* was also received in respect of the said arrears, by the sale of a rick of hay and other goods of Mr. Balguy; and that he, the said Francis Jessopp, did not believe that the said arrears of rent, which he had been informed, and believed to be then due, could have been realized by any diligence on the part of the said Edward Ordish. The said judgment which had been entered up against the said Mr. Balguy, upon his warrant of attorney, as security for the said arrears of rent, was still in force; and the said Edward Ordish, on passing his annual accounts before the Master, which he had done from time to time since the year 1845, through his solicitors, called the attention of the Master to the said arrears of rent due by the said Mr. Balguy, but with a knowledge of some of the circumstances before mentioned with respect to Mr. Balguy, he acquiesced in the course adopted by the said Edward Ordish, in delaying to put in execution the judgment against the said Mr. Balguy. The said Edward Ordish died on the 24th of August, 1851; and letters of administration were granted to the said John Pearsall Ordish on the 17th day of March, 1852.

The case now came on before their Lordships.

Swanston and Smythe, for the administrator of Edward Ordish, contended that the Master's report was right, and that the rent not being lost by the wilful default of Edward Ordish, his estate ought not to be charged with it.

Rolt and J. V. Prior, for the representatives of the lunatic, John Rose Swindell, contra, but they were willing to allow 98*l.* costs paid by Edward Ordish.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—This is a very distressing case; but we feel very much the justice of the observations made by Lord Truro. The case is very objectionable. This committee chooses to employ as his solicitor a gentleman who had been but a few months before a bankrupt, and had re-established himself. The first act done after that is, that he lets this house to his own solicitor, a very objectionable proceeding, at a rent of 132*l.* per annum. The solicitor continues tenant for four years, and never pays a sixpence of rent. Being the solicitor to the committee up to nearly the fourth year of his tenancy—or rather to the end of the third year—about the third year he is dismissed, and continues tenant for a year afterwards. The question is, whether, there having been no rent received except a certain sum on account, that was not lost through the fault of the committee in not enforcing its payment. The only excuse is, that there were accruing costs, which is put into his mouth by the solicitor himself, putting that as a sort of set-off against the payment of rent. Eventually there are no costs, except 98*l.* which they are willing to allow to be deducted, and the whole of this rent, except two sums of 100*l.* and 79*l.* is lost. No other conclusion can be arrived at, because the committee has been wanting in that vigilance which the Court is bound to require from one holding that fiduciary situation. I am extremely grieved that such is the result at which I am bound to arrive; but, considering how important it is to watch the conduct of persons undertaking to watch over those who, by the visitation of God, are incapable of taking care of themselves, there is no other conclusion to be arrived at but to charge the committee with the whole amount, 395*l.* giving credit for 179*l.* adding another year's rent, and deducting from it 98*l.*

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE concurred.

SHORTRIDGE v. BOSANQUET.

Joint-Stock Banking Company — Shareholder — Contributory—Transfer of shares—Collusion—Action of sci. fa.—Return of share list—Stamp Office—Erasure—New entry—Consent to trans-deed establishing a Joint-Stock Banking Company provided that a shareholder might, upon obtaining the consent of the board of directors, three being a quorum, transfer his shares in the manner thereby pointed out, that a certificate specifying the shares, should be given by the Board, and a receipt of the holder for the same as therein mentioned, and thereupon the proposed shareholder or purchaser should be entitled to have his name entered in the share register book as the holder of those shares: that the directors alone should have power to make any entry, erasure, or alteration in the share register book: that after the entry of the name of a purchaser in the share register book, the former owner, &c. should cease to be a share holder, and be discharged from the covenant, &c. of the deed; that every entry, erasure, or alteration made in the same register-book should, as between the company and the last holder, be conclusive and binding on such last shareholder: that the share register book should, as between the company and the shareholder, be conclusive evidence as to a party being a shareholder: and that the share register book should be open to the inspection of no one without the permission of the board.

A shareholder applied to have a transfer, and had regularly taken the necessary formal steps, and the purchaser's name was entered in the share register book, and the usual return was made to the Stamp Office, in which the shareholder was stated to have ceased to be a shareholder. Subsequently the bank suspended payments, and in order to make the shareholder responsible, the company made an entry in the share register book, to the effect that the transfer was invalid because it had not been made with the consent of the board duly constituted, but only by three directors individually, and so returned it to the Stamp Office, but it appeared that transfers were usually made without such consent. In an action of sci. fa. by a creditor of the bank against the shareholder, he was held to be liable, on the ground that as he appeared on the share register book, that was conclusive. The shareholder then filed his bill for relief in equity:

Held, that though the shareholder was liable at law, yet in equity he must be considered to have ceased to be a shareholder, and therefore not to be a contributory.

That application for transfer being made, and the certificate having been obtained, and the receipt given in the usual way, and signed by three directors, the shareholder was under no obligation to see that the transfer was sanctioned by the board in the formal manner required by the deed.

That the clause authorising the directors to make entries, erasures, or alterations, did not justify them in putting on the list a name which had been taken off in the ordinary way, and thereby affect the liability of the shareholder at their will and pleasure.

That the action of sci. fa. by the creditor was in fact the action of the bank, brought at the instance of the bank, and for its own objects and purposes.

That, therefore, a perpetual injunction must be granted against the creditor to restrain that and every action against the shareholder, and the bank must also be compelled to remove the entry the share register book, and be restrained from putting the name on it again: and the shareholder to have his costs from the bank, and also the creditor's costs, to be paid by him in the first instance.

This was a suit instituted by the plaintiff, Richard Shortridge, against Henry Bosanquet, as the public officer of the London and Westminster Bank, and against Joseph Mather, as the public officer of the Newcastle, Shields, and Sunderland Union Joint-Stock Banking Company, George Pringle Thew, John Millar Chapman, and others, to compel the latter bank to erase from their books the name of the plaintiff as a shareholder or partner, and to restrain both banks from commencing or prosecuting any action at law against the plaintiff as a shareholder in the Union Bank after the month of August 1847, and for an account between the two banks, and an indemnity to the plaintiff as against all creditors of the Union Bank. The facts of the case sufficiently appear in the judgment.

Roupell, Lloyd, and Stevens, for the Union Bank.

Tuesday, April 20*th*.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I have had occasion to consider this case from the great length of time that it has lasted, and as I entertain no doubt that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree, I will state the grounds on which I consider that he is entitled to the decree which I am going to give. The suit is one of this nature. It is a suit instituted by the plaintiff praying a declaration, or in effect a declaration that he is no longer a shareholder in the company, and for an injunction to restrain execution being levied against him in respect of an action brought by the London and Westminster Banking Company, alleging, that in fact there is collusion between the Union Banking Company and the London and Westminster Bank, and that the action is, in fact, the action of the Union Bank; and that being no longer a shareholder of the Union Bank, he is not liable in respect of that action. Now, there are two questions in this case: one—and the first and main question—is, whether the plaintiff is a shareholder of the Union Bank as between himself and the Union Banking Company itself; and if it shall be settled that he is, then there is no other question in the case—the whole of the question is determined against him, and in favour of the defendants. But if it shall be determined that he is not, then the second question arises—against the London and Westminster Bank, whether in that case the action is bona fide the action of the London and Westminster Bank, and they ought to be permitted to enforce execution upon it, or whether it is in fact the action of the Union Bank, and they ought to be prevented from recovering upon it. Now, the facts upon the first point of this case are to this effect. The Banking Company was established in the year 1836, and the plaintiff was an original shareholder in the company. In addition to that he purchased a considerable number of other shares, and in the month of May, 1847, he was the owner of 620 shares. The bank seem to have paid 10 per cent. dividend on all occasions up to the month of May, 1847. Having 620 shares up to that time, this gentleman (the plaintiff) thought proper to get rid of his shares, and to sell them every one. I will consider in a later part of the observations I have to make, whether anything could be raised upon a question of fraudulent disposal of the same, by reason of his knowing that the bank was in a failing situation. At present I will assume that no such case appears, and that no such case can be made, but that these were bona fide sales. He sells all the shares that he has in the banking company; 200 of them he sells to a gentleman of the name of Thew. In respect of 100 of these shares, the sale takes place, and the transfer takes place in the books of the bank previously to the general meeting, and the declaring of a dividend, which takes place, I think, on the 27th of July, 1847. With respect to another 100 of these shares, fifty I think were sold on the 6th of July, fifty on the 13th. I am not quite sure about the dates of those; but at all events the transfer of these shares did not take place till the month of August, 1847, subsequent to the general meeting. The shares sold to Mr. Miller were forty shares, which were sold on the 20th of July, 1847, and the transfer in the books took place in the month of August, 1847, subsequent to the general meeting. Now the relief is sought in respect of these 240 shares. No question is raised with respect to the remaining shares which this gentleman possessed; the remainder of the 620 shares which he disposed of, no question is made respecting them. Mr. Thew, or his agent, applied to the public officer to know if the transfer was permitted, and received a certificate of his being an owner in respect of those shares, and so did Mr. Miller; and it is proved that the transfers of these shares from the plaintiff to Mr. Thew and Mr. Miller were made in the books of the bank. The shares were sold in both cases to Mr. Thew, and Mr. Miller, with the dividend of July; that is to say, the purchaser was entitled to receive the dividend whether it were paid to Mr. Shortridge, the plaintiff, or whether it were not. In fact, with regard to 100 of the shares, it was paid to Mr. Thew; with respect to the remaining 140 it was paid to Mr. Shortridge, and paid over by him to the purchasers. Many of these facts I am stating appear from passages read from the answer; and it appears also that Mr. Thew, though he was a shareholder in other respects, yet attended the public meeting in respect of all his shares in the concern, and Mr. Miller, who had no other shares, attended the public meeting in respect of the shares he had so bought. This took place in the month of August 1847. A report was made in July 1847, speaking of the favourable state of the concerns of the bank, and recommending a dividend of 10 per cent. After this a return was made to the Stamp Office, I think, on the 6th of October—in the early part of October 1847, in which it was stated that the plaintiff had ceased to be a shareholder of the Union Bank; and on the 21st of October 1847 the bank suspended its payments. Upon this state of the case, several steps were taken for the purpose of arranging the affairs of the bank, by the persons unquestionably remaining the directors and shareholders of the company; and in December 1847, and in January 1848, various communications took place between the Union Banking Company and the London and Westminster Bank, which I shall have occasion to refer to presently more particularly, in a later stage of the observations I am about to make. On the 8th January, 1848, the Union Bank informed the plaintiff that they intended to contest the validity of the transfer of the shares to Mr. Thew and Mr. Miller, and in answer to that, he writes a letter of remonstrance, stating that if they had disputed the transfer at the time, he should, under the provisions of the clauses of the deed, have required the directors to purchase at the price which was then the last market price, which he was entitled to do. The Union Bank, notwithstanding, on the 14th, I think, of that month, make an entry in the book, in which they declare that, in fact, the entries made of the shares from the plaintiff to Thew and Miller, were void entries, in consequence of not having received the consent of a board of directors; and they send a return to the Stamp Office, in which they insert the name of the plaintiff as a shareholder in the concern. Then the London and Westminster Bank bring an action on the sci. fa. against the plaintiff, to recover in the action against him; and it is clearly and decisively settled in the action at law, that the plaintiff is liable to the London and Westminster Bank; and if the plaintiff is entitled to recover against the Union Bank or against the London and Westminster Bank, it must be by reason of some equity flowing out of the contract which he has entered into, and not by reason of any legal rights he may have, which have been determined in the action at law. Before I proceed to consider the whole of the case, I shall first consider this question—how the matter would stand if the books were now before me exactly as they were on the 8th of January, 1848; and having considered that, I shall then consider whether the subsequent alteration of the books will alter or vary the equity between the parties. And therefore, in the first place, I assume, in the observations I am about to make, that the books remain unaltered, and that the name of the plaintiff appears no longer as a shareholder in the concern, but that these shares are transferred to Mr. Thew, and that also the last return to the Stamp Office omits his name as the holder of the shares. I shall afterwards consider whether what has since taken place makes any difference in that respect. In that state of the case, it is obvious, if it is considered on that assumption, that the burthen of proof lies exactly the other way in the cause to what it does in the action. In the action in the case of Bosanquet v. Shortridge, the case was this:—It was a creditor of the concern suing a shareholder; and he produced the books of the bank to shew that the shareholder's name was in the books of the bank, and to shew that he was in the last return to the Stamp Office, under the Banking Act, returned as a shareholder in the concern. That was all that was necessary for him to do. It therefore threw the burthen of proof on the defendant Mr. Shortridge to prove that he was not a shareholder in the Union Bank, and accordingly what he attempted to do was to shew that the transfers which had been made were valid and legal transfers; and the Court was of opinion that those transfers not having been made with the consent of the board of directors, as required by the deed, were not valid and legal transfers so as to discharge him from being a shareholder: and it is to be observed that in that case which I have read two or three times, it was a fact found by the special verdict that the transfers had been made without any such consent of any such board, and Mr. Baron Rolfe in giving judgment, expressly states that that is an admitted fact between the parties. Well, in the assumed case that I was taking, the case is this:—The plaintiff's name does not appear in the books—the plaintiff's name is returned as not being a member in the list to the Stamp Office, and therefore the burthen of proof lies upon the Union Bank. I am throwing entirely out of consideration now any question of the London and Westminster Bank. The burthen of proof lies upon the Union Bank to shew that, notwithstanding his name not appearing as a shareholder in the books,—not appearing in the list sent to the Stamp Office,—that notwithstanding all that, he is still a shareholder, and therefore the burthen of proof lies on them to establish that fact. Well, then, I will consider how far either the evidence establishes it, or whether in fact they are at liberty, by reason of the contract which they have entered into, to give any evidence for the purpose of shewing that that fact is not so. Now on that part of the case it becomes very material to look at the provisions of the deed. The provisions of the deed on this part of the subject are certainly of very considerable importance, and I will refer shortly to some of the provisions which I think it material to point out. By the 83rd section the board of directors are to cause to be delivered to every person executing these presents, and to every person approved by the board as fit to be a shareholder in the company, at the expense of such persons, certificates specifying the number of shares which he holds. Well, these are the certificates which were delivered to Mr. Thew and Mr. Miller, at their request. Then the board of directors are, by the 84th clause, to keep the name and place of residence of every person for the time being entitled to be registered, in a book called the share register book, and they alone are to have power to make any entry, erasure, or alteration, in the share register book. Therefore they are to keep the book, and it is only to be kept by their direction, and under their orders. Well, then, the 144th, 145th, and the 148th sections, which I will refer to presently, are very material for the purpose of shewing how a person may obtain a certificate from the directors, certifying their consent to the shares numbered being transferred to certain other persons; but the 144th section states that no person shall become or be registered as a shareholder, without the consent of the board of directors. Therefore the books are not only to be kept under the direction of the board of directors, but no person shall become, or be registered therein, except by the order of the board of directors. Well, the shareholders themselves cannot, by another section, ascertain anything respecting the mode in which it is kept. They have no means of ascertaining it by actual inspection of the books. The only means they have of ascertaining it is, that they may require the board of directors to give them a certificate; but if they have a certificate signed by three persons, under the 83rd section, of their holding a certain number of shares, that is all, in fact, they can do to ascertain that the name has been duly registered on the register; but they get their certificate, which shews that a person has been so registered. Then by 158th section, which is exceedingly material, it is stated that the share register book shall, as between the company and every person claiming to be a shareholder in, respecting of any shares, be conclusive evidence on behalf of the company to shew, whether he or she is a shareholder in the company, in respect of such shares. This, no doubt, is one of the reasons why this course has been adopted. A person enters into a contract for the purpose of ascertaining—not being able to ascertain by actual inspection—whether his name is put there, by obtaining a certificate, and having a clause which states that the share register book shall be conclusive evidence of the truth, of whether a person is a shareholder or no. I am still on the assumption which I made of the state of the register book. Then the book, on the assumption upon which I now proceed, expressly states that Mr. Thew is the shareholder, in respect of these 200 shares; but the 158th section expressly states, this is to be conclusive between him and the company; and Mr. Thew is conclusively, therefore, as between him and the company, the shareholder in respect of these 200 shares which the company now say have never been transferred from the plaintiff. But is that the contract, which has been entered into between them? Is it possible that the shareholder can tell whether the board of directors have actually complied with all the provisions of the deed in their mode of keeping the share register book. This is not a clause that the share register book, provided it be kept in the manner and under the directions hereinbefore contained, shall be conclusive evidence between them; but it is an express statement that this share register book shall be conclusive evidence in respect of any shares on behalf of the company, to shew whether he is or not a shareholder in the company. Then that is conclusive evidence that Mr. Thew is at this moment, no alteration in the entry being made, a shareholder in the company. It is conclusive evidence that Mr. Miller is a shareholder in the company. But, then, can I allow the board of directors now to come forward, and say, "all the entries in that book were entirely fictitious; we kept them in a most irregular and improper manner; and although we may be very much to blame, and you may have an action or suit against us, yet the company who confided their interest to us are not liable, and we cannot be bound by an entry, which we or some unauthorized person has made in the share register-book." The answer which the plaintiff makes is, "you should have told me that that was the contract; that I was to be liable for any irregularity in the mode of keeping the books; but the contract I made was, that this book was to be conclusive evidence between us. I ascertained that the name had been entered in the book, and I received, or the person to whom I transferred the shares received, a certificate from the transfer clerk, that the transfer clerk had duly made the entry accordingly." Then that is conclusive evidence, and the plaintiff may well say, "I should never have entered into the contract, if that were not to be conclusive evidence, because I should, in case you had not consented to these shares being transferred, have proceeded on the other clause in the deed, which was for my protection, and enabled me, in any manner I thought fit, to get rid of the shares." The case, therefore, as it appears to me, makes it improper that the directors, or the board of directors—the company—can now be allowed to give evidence that those entries were not valid, and that this clause is to be wholly disregarded. It was suggested that the plaintiff might have adopted this course. Why did he not apply for the certificate under sect. 144, because that would have shewn the consent? But assuming that he had applied in the first place, it is to be observed, on the construction of that clause, that after Mr. Thew had received the certificate, that the transfer had been made, and that he was the shareholder in respect of those shares, the plaintiff could not have applied for them, because, as I read that section, it is only a person who is desirous to transfer—who is still a shareholder—who can apply for and obtain that certificate; and, therefore, when once the other party—the transferee—has obtained the certificate, they might properly have refused, and said, "You have nothing to do with the certificate." The certificate, when given, is to be deposited with the company. But how would he have been advanced, supposing he had applied for and obtained the certificate? The answer would have been, "It is true the certificate was given, but not by the board of directors; it was given by three directors, but they did not meet as a board, and the certificate does not advance you more than the 83rd section, which directs the certificate of transfer to be given by a board of directors; though you have entered into a contract which enables you to see that these things are done, if we dispense with them, we may make use of them just as we please for our own advantage." The only check on that is, that the share register book is to be conclusive evidence between the parties, and that that book bound the parties who made the entries therein, and that they shall not be permitted to say, "That is how I read that section; we, the board of directors, have not kept the book in the way we ought to have kept it, but we have allowed unauthorized persons to make entries therein by the simple individual authority of the different directors, and not by the authority of the board." I am of opinion, therefore, that on that part of the case, if it stood there alone,—the books being unaltered, and the book being produced in court without any alteration being made therein, and the name of Mr. Thew appearing as the holder of these shares, and not the name of the plaintiff; and the name of Mr. Miller appearing therein, and not the name of the plaintiff; and also the return from the Stamp Office appearing, not putting in the name of the plaintiff as a shareholder,—that they could not in that state of the case have said to the plaintiff, you are a shareholder and you are liable to make contribution as to these shares. Now I come to the next consideration. The books being produced do not so appear, but they appear with a special entry made therein that the transfer made to Mr. Thew was an invalid transfer, by reason of not having had the consent of the board of directors; and the same with respect to Mr. Miller. When was this entry made? It was made after a letter by Mr. Woods to the plaintiff, saying, "We contest the validity of this transfer,—we are going to contest it,—we are going to say that that shall not be allowed,—in fact, we are going to say this:—You are now a shareholder of the company;" and the plaintiff says, "I am not; I take issue upon that point." Then there is the lis mota, and after that the defendants alter the books for the purpose of introducing his name again in the books; and send a return to the Stamp Office with his name as a shareholder. But is that to benefit them? Is it probable that a banking company can in that point of view determine the question at issue between the plaintiff and them by their own act, because the cause was at issue between them the moment they wrote that letter to the plaintiff, or, in fact, the moment they determined to contest the transfer of the shares, for I do not think it very material if the alteration had been made with the view of asserting the fact of the plaintiff being a shareholder, even if it had taken place immediately before that letter. At what stage of the case are they to be allowed to do it? If they are to do it, then may they do it after they have put in their answer, after they have had consultation with counsel, after the case has been in the paper, after the cause has been heard, and before the appeal. I can see no period of time, if they might do it then, at which they might not do it up to the very time when the cause is heard, or between the actual decree and the next hearing. If they may do it, it is only saying they may alter the books for the purpose of suiting their own individual case, at their own individual pleasure. It is possible, undoubtedly, they may have the power to do that, and that that may be the contract entered into between the parties, but then I should require very strict proof that that is the contract between the parties. I called Mr. Lloyd's and Mr. Stevens's attention to that; and I must say that I must express my obligations to counsel for the great assistance which I have received in the discussion of this case; and the arguments on the part of the two banks have really cleared my mind very much as to the various points which have been made, and I do not think that it could have been more ably argued; but I put to Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Stevens, where is the authority for this alteration by the board of directors. Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Stevens both gave the same answer. They said, an express and distinct authority to make the alteration does not appear except from the 85th section, which states that the board of directors shall alone have power to make any entry, erasure, or alteration; which merely means, as was admitted, I think very properly, at the bar, that all the entries, erasures, and alterations to be made in the books must be made by the board of directors, and by no other person; and the section, which I think is the 156th, which states that every entry, erasure, or other alteration, which, upon the taking, purchase, or acquisition of any shares shall have been made, shall be conclusive on the last shareholder. Well, but it is clear that that confines the entry, erasure, and alteration, to the occasion of the taking, purchase, or acquisition of any shares, and that it is not intended by that clause to give the board of directors a power of transferring shares from one person to another, as they may think fit, at their own will and pleasure. It would require, therefore, a very strong and distinct clause in the contract to be pointed out, empowering the board of directors to make such an alteration as this in the books of the bank, in the book containing the share-list, and was urged, I think, with propriety and truth, by Mr. Stevens, that it was incidental to their power, as directors, to make alterations for the purpose of preventing errors; that, for instance, supposing a person had been entered under a wrong name, such as Walter instead of William, or the like, they would have power to set that right, and I think that would be incidental to their office as a board of directors; but that does not extend to say that they may vary the rights between parties. Observe what the alteration in this book amounts to. Mr. Thew is the shareholder in the share register. The board of directors say, "We will make Mr. Shortridge the shareholder with respect to these shares." But can they put Mr. Thew or Mr. Shortridge in the same position they were in before there was a contract entered into for them, and before one had paid a large sum of money for them Assume that Mr. Thew says, "I insist on being a shareholder of the bank: I think it likely to be profitable, and I wish to receive the dividends." It is obvious that the fact that the bank is in a failing condition, and is not likely to pay dividends, cannot alter the question; but if they have the power to make these alterations they might, from their own will and pleasure, or from any motive they thought fit, not having made the entry in the first place according to the directions and the mode pointed out by the deed of settlement, afterwards alter it as they thought fit, for any motive whatever, in favour of any other person; and it is settled, as it appears t[illegible] by a variety of cases, that Mr Thew could not, in respect of this matter, have resisted the fact of being a contributory. He had, in fact, paid for the shares he had applied for, and got the certificate of being the holder of the shares; he had received the dividend on all the shares—on half of them direct from the company, and on the other half through Mr. Shortridge, the vendor; and Mr. Miller had received in the same mode as the latter, part of the shares and the dividends also; and both of them had acted at public meetings as being the owners of these shares. If it were the case of making a contributory under the Winding-up Act, could either Mr. Thew or Mr. Miller contend that they had not acquiesced in this, and had not thereby become contributories to this company? and if so, and Mr. Shortridge can be made a contributory also, you have double contributories with respect to the same shares. Nothing that I shall say—at least nothing that I mean to say—will in the slightest degree affect the validity of the case of Bosanquet v. Shortridge, which I consider to be perfectly good law; and nothing that I say will in the slightest degree affect Morgan's case in Re the Vale of Neath Brewery, which I also consider to be perfectly good law. It is a perfectly different question whether the contract entered into between the plaintiff and the company, is not such as at the time when this contract arose between them—that is, at the end of 1847—he had not ceased as between him and the company to be a shareholder of the company, and whether they by any act of theirs can make him a shareholder of the company subsequently to that period. I am of opinion that they cannot. I do not minutely examine the evidence with respect to several observations which have been made upon that part of the case; I rather put it upon the construction of the contract they have entered into, because, in my opinion, this is a case that must be tried by the contract, and the equities arising out of the contract which has been entered into between the plaintiff and the Union Bank. The conclusion which I come to on the first question is, that the plaintiff is not a shareholder of the company, and that the fact of their having put his name in it does not make him so; and, therefore, with respect to that I am prepared to make a declaration to that effect. Then comes the next question—but that really seems to me to require very little indeed to be said about it, for that this was the action of the Union Bank is manifest. The letters are conclusive upon the subject. It is a proposal by Mr. Watson, on behalf of the Union Bank, to Mr. Roy, on behalf of the London and Westminster Bank, to bring the action; and he says he will send him a list of their names. Now if I use the word "collusion," I do not at all use it in an invidious sense by any means whatever. It was a mode of endeavouring to enforce and establish the liability of the plaintiff to the Union Bank; but it was done at the request and at the instance of the Union Bank; and there was no concealment about it, and there was no concealment in their answer, or in the documents they have brought forward. They have come forward quite openly, to state exactly what the transactions were between them. The whole of the proceeding is a proceeding in which the London and Westminster Bank act by the desire of the Union Bank. They send them a list, - the London and Westminster Bank send to ask them whether they can usefully do it,—the fact being that at that time the name of Mr. Shortridge does not appear in the return to the Stamp Office. That is suggested by Mr. Roy; and that, in fact, disposes of an observation which I think Mr. Stevens made to me, that neither the share register book nor the Stamp Office return were at all necessary to enable the London and Westminster Bank to recover in the action; and that all that would have been necessary would have been to shew that Mr. Shortridge was an original shareholder in the concern. But I think there is this answer to that observation, that if the share register book had been unaltered by the Union Bank, and if the return to the Stamp Office had been what it was in October 1847, those being given in evidence would have rebutted the presumption to arise from the circumstance of Mr. Shortridge being the original owner; and we would have therefore thrown the burthen of proof on the persons contesting those entries to have shewn that Mr. Shortridge was to be considered to be a shareholder. But to return to the question, whether this was not the action of the Union Bank. It is throughout stated in every respect that it is their action; and there is only one single point in which it is contested. They say the money was paid to the London and Westminster Bank, and not to the Union Bank; that the Union Bank applied to receive the money to be recovered in this action, and that the London and Westminster Bank declined; and therefore you must try it by this test, that it is the action of the parties who recover the money. The money went to pay a debt of the Union Bank; and in what respect does it differ if it was paid to the Union Bank direct, or if it was paid to the creditor of the Union Bank, and thereby pro tanto discharged the liability of the Union Bank? It was, in fact, exactly i[illegible] ame way as an action instituted by the London and Westminster Bank, indemnified against all consequences and against all costs by the Union Bank, for the purpose of trying this question. The Union Bank got great advantages, no doubt, because they tried the question as if they stood in the place of a creditor; but, in my opinion, in this Court they cannot do so, but that they are parties bound by the equities upon which I have already expressed my opinion. The result is, that I entertain no doubt whatever but that this was, from the beginning to the end, the action of the Union Banking Company, brought by the London and Westminster Bank, at their desire, for their purposes, and in order to effect their object. The result is, that there must be a perpetual injunction to restrain the levying execution upon this judgment obtained at law; that Mr. Shortridge must pay the London and Westminster Bank their costs of the suit, and add them to his own costs, and have them over again against the Union Banking Company; and that the rest of the decree must be to the effect I have stated. A declaration that on the 28th of March, 1847, he ceased to be a shareholder of the Union Banking company, and let the Union Banking company be perpetually enjoined from placing or continuing the plaintiff's name on their share register, or returning his name to the Stamp Office, in respect of the shares in the bill mentioned, and from continuing his name in such return to them.

Some discussion then followed as to the costs of the action at law, and as to the question of a fraudulent purpose in Mr. Shortridge in selling his shares and getting rid of his liability; but the Court refused to give any direction as to the costs of the action at law, leaving the London and Westminster Bank to recover their costs under their indemnity; and as to the question of fraud in the sales, by Mr. Shortridge, the Court was of opinion that the allegation of fraud was not distinctly put in issue; and even if it had, there was no evidence to support it, or any thing to shew that the plaintiff knew, or had the means of knowing, that the concerns of the company were not in such a condition as to verify the truth of the report made by the directors at the general meeting on the 27th of july.

VICE-CHANCELLOR PARKER'S COURT.

Reported by Geo. S. Allnutt, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Wednesday, Feb. 25.

Elvy v. Norwood.

Mortgagor and mortgagee—Arrears of interest.

A. B. in 1830, mortgaged land in fee and covenanted fo payment of principal and interest. A. B. died intestate, and his heir filed a bill to redeem. Held, that although the land was only charged with six years' arrears of interest the heir was, under the covenant, liable to twenty years' arrears, and that the mortgagee might, as against the heir, tack the liability upon the covenant.

This was a suit by the two sons and co-heirs, according to the custom of gavelkind, of the mortgagor, for the redemption of certain hereditaments in the county of Kent. By indentures of lease and release dated the 22nd and 23rd days of February, 1830, W. Elvy, in consideration of 100*l.* conveyed unto and to the use of the defendant, W. Norwood, and his heirs, the hereditaments in question, upon certain trusts in the indenture of release mentioned for securing the repayment of the said sum of 100*l.* and interest thereon at 5*l.* per cent. per annum, and upon trust to sell the same premises in case of default in such payments as therein mentioned; and the said indenture of release contained the usual covenant by W. Elvy for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, with the defendant, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for payment of the said principal money and interest. No part of the principal or interest was paid to the defendant. W. Elvy, the mortgagor, died in the year 1832 intestate, leaving a widow and two sons, who were his co-heirs according to the custom of gavelkind.

On the 25th of May, 1850, the present suit was instituted by the two sons, and a question arose as to the amount of interest to which the defendant was entitled.

Bird, for the plaintiffs, contended that only six years' arrears of interest could be recovered, and referred to the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 42, and the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 3. He also cited Hughes v. Kelly, 3 Dru. & War. 182; Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, 326; and Hunter v. Nockolds, 1 Mac. & G. 640.

Speed, for the defendant, referred to Henry v. Smith, 2 Dru. & War. 381; Harrisson v. Duignan, 2 Dru. & War. 295.

Bird, in reply.

The Vice-Chancellor said, that he did not think this case was decided by either of the cases which had been referred to. It was a mortgage which had been executed in February 1830, for the security of a principal sum and interest, with a covenant therein for payment of the interest. The mortgagor was since dead, and the present plaintiffs were his co-heirs, seeking to redeem that security. There was a long arrear of interest unpaid, and the question was as to the amount of interest which the plaintiffs were bound to pay; whether the arrears to be paid were to be limited to six years, or were to go beyond that period. Upon the construction of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, it had been decided that, as regarded the land, there was only a right to recover the arrears for six years. On the other hand, there was the other statute, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, which left the personal liability on the covenant open for twenty years. The covenant in this case was one in which the heirs of the mortgagor were bound, and the present plaintiffs were his co-heirs, and were consequently bound by his covenant to the extent of the assets descended to them. The case, therefore, stood thus: as regarded the land, there was a mortgage security for only six years' arrears of interest, and the heirs, who were the persons interested in the land, were liable, by means of the covenant, to pay twenty years' arrears. Suppose that, instead of the covenant, the heir had been liable on a bond given by the mortgagor; by the settled course of this Court, the heir could not redeem the mortgage of his ancestor without submitting to pay all his obligation to the arrears secured by a specialty of the ancestor in which the heir was bound. So in the case of a collateral mortgage debt for which the ancestor had given a covenant, on the ancient authorities the mortgagee would have had a right to tack the special obligation against the heir. Beyond all doubt he could not tack a mere covenant against the ancestor, but having a covenant in which the heirs were bound he was right in tacking it against the heir. In deciding that the plaintiffs could not redeem, unless upon the terms of paying twenty years' arrears of interest, his Honor said that he was not deciding anything contrary to the cases of Hughes v. Kelly and Hunter v. Nockolds. Having here a covenant of this nature, and this being a suit to redeem the land, which was another security for the same debt, he considered that the Court had a right to tack these securities, and that, by so doing, the Court was acting in accordance with the view taken in Du Vigier v. Lee.

Ware v. Polhill.

Land-tax—Rent-charge.

Decree that A. B. was entitled to an annuity to be charged on and issuing out of real estate, to the amount of the land-tax redeemed thereon, and that C. D. should execute proper deeds for securing the same:

Held to be a legal charge upon the estate.

In the suit of Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 257, an order on further directions was made on the 17th of July, 1805, whereby it was declared that the plaintiff in that suit, as administratrix of N. Polhill, an infant, was entitled, as part of the deceased's personal estate, to four several annuities or rent-charges to be charged on and issuing out of the several estates, to the amount of the land-tax respectively redeemed thereon, the said annuities to be redeemable by any person or persons having or being entitled beneficially to any estate or interest in succession, reversion, or expectancy, under the will of the testator in the cause; and the Master was directed to settle proper deeds for securing the annuities, which were to be executed by the tenant for life, and, upon his attaining twenty-one, by the tenant intail of the estates. Indentures of lease and release were, under this decree, executed by the tenants for life and in tail, but no recovery was suffered, and in 1828, upon the death of the tenant in tail, the legal charge upon the land ceased. The present suit was instituted by the administrator de bonis non of N. [illegible] Polhill [illegible] mainder [illegible] for the [illegible] decree against him, and obtaining an effectual security for the annuities upon the estates.

Glasse and Ware appeared for the plaintiff.

Willcock and Bird for the defendant, contended that the decree did not bind the land, and cited Fox v. Crane, 2 Vern. 306; Lloyd v. Johnes, 9 Ves. 55; Giffard v. Hart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 409; and Cockburn v. Thompson, 16 Ves. 321.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that if the trustees who redeemed the land-tax had complied with the terms of the Act (38 Geo. 3, c. 60), there would under the Act have been a legal charge upon the estates; and Lord Eldon said (11 Ves. 283) that he would give the plaintiff a similar charge as nearly as he could. That could only be done by directing a proper conveyance. This was not properly carried into effect, and the rent-charge expired in 1828. But the land still remained bound by the effect of the decree. The defendant must pay the costs of the present suit, but the plaintiff must bear the expense of the necessary conveyance.

Re HORNER'S ESTATE.

5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 69 —Real estate.

Stock in which purchase-money for land taken under the above Act was invested:

Held, to be real and not personal estate.

John Horner, by his will, devised certain real estate to Maria Horner, his daughter, for life, with remainder to other persons, and an ultimate remainder to the right heirs of Maria Horner. The testator died shortly after the date of his will. In 1839, under the provisions of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 69, part of the land devised was taken by the guardians of the West Ham Poor-law Union, and the purchase-money (800*l.*) was paid into the Court of Ex. This sum was afterwards, upon the petition of Maria Horner, the tenant for life, invested in the purchase of 880*l.* Three and a Quarter per Cent. Reduced Annuities, and it was ordered that the dividends thereon should be paid to Maria Horner during her life. In January 1852 Maria Horner died, having previously made her will. The present petition was presented by the heir-at-law of Maria Horner, and one of the questions raised was whether the 880*l.* stock was to be considered as real or personal estate.

Bristowe appeared for the petitioner, and contended that the stock was to be treated as real estate. He referred to the 1st and 2nd sections of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 69, and asked, upon the authority of the latter section, that the guardians of the union should pay the costs of the present petition.

Prendergast, for the executors of Maria Horner's will, referred to Ex parte Flamank, 1 Sim. N.S. 260, as an authority that the stock was personal estate.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that the stock was money subject to be invested in the purchase of lands, and must be treated as real and not as personal estate. As to the costs, the Act gave the costs of one purchase, payment, or application; that had already been done when the money was invested, and therefore the costs of the present application must come out of the fund.

Re THE WINDING-UP ACTS and THE WOLVERHAMPTON, CHESTER, AND BIRKENHEAD RAILWAY COMPANY.

STOCK'S CASE.

Winding-up Acts—Contributory.

The rule established in Upfill's case (2 House of Lords cases, 674, and S. C. 15 Law T. 449), not to be extended.

Where, therefore, a person applied for shares, had signed a written assent to act as a provisional committeeman, had paid a deposit, and a sum of money in addition by way of contribution to the expenses, but had not accepted shares:

Held, not to be a contributory, and his name ordered to be taken off the list of contributories.

This came on by way of appeal from the decision of the Master (Brougham), who had placed the names of the legal personal representatives of the late Joseph Stock, esq. on the list of contributories to this company.

The name of the late Mr. Stocks was originally placed on the list of contributories by the Master, on the ground that he had signed a consent to act and take shares in the company, but on appeal the Vice-Chancellor ordered the name to be taken off the list "without prejudice to any application that might be made to the Master to restore his name, on further evidence than that originally before the said Master, and the Master was to be at liberty to [illegible] or rather his personal representatives, he having died in the interim, upon the list of contributories. The evidence before the Master was as follows:—1. A written consent signed by Mr. Stocks, dated the 1st of November, 1845, whereby he agreed "to be a provisional committeeman of the proposed company, and to take one or more share or shares in the proposed undertaking, upon such share or shares being allotted him." 2. A letter from the solicitor of the company to the provisional committeemen, accompanied by a letter of allotment of shares, as follows:—

Wolverhampton, Chester, and Birkenhead Junction Railway Company, 40, Upper Temple-street, Birmingham, Nov. 20, 1845.

Dear Sir,—By desire of the managing committee of the Wolverhampton, Chester, and Birkenhead Junction Railway Company, I beg to inform you for your satisfaction that the surveys are now completed, and will be lodged on or before the 30th November in the proper places, before going to Parliament. I have also the pleasure to state that arrangements have been made by the acting committee which render it more than probable that one of the competing lines will be withdrawn, leaving the field open to this company. Under these circumstances the acting committee request that each member of the provisional committee should at once take up the accompanying allotment of twenty-five shares, which the acting committee have already done. The remaining seventy-five shares allowed to the committee may be taken up at any time previous to the 12th January next. As the different provincial banks appointed by the company, with the exception of the Midland Banking Company in this town, have closed their accounts, you are requested to transmit a cheque to the said Midland Banking Company within six days from this date. —I am, &c."

Annexed to this letter was the letter of allotment, in the following words:—

"Wolverhampton, Chester, and Birkenhead Junction Railway Company (provisionally registered pursuant to 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110). Capital, 1,000,000*l.* in 50,000*l.* shares of 20*l.* each. Deposit, 2*l.* 2s. per share. Allotment No. —, 25 shares. Deposit, 52*l.* 10s."

"Birmingham, 20th Nov. 1845.

"Sir,—I am directed to inform you that the committee of management have, in compliance with your application, allotted to you twenty-five shares in this undertaking, and that the deposit of 2*l.* 2s. per share, amounting to the sum of 52*l.* 10s. must be paid to one of the undermentioned bankers, who upon receipt thereof will sign the voucher at the foot of the letter. This letter, with the banker's receipt, must be exchanged for scrip certificates, which will be granted upon your executing the subscribers' agreement and parliamentary contract, without which no person will be recognised as a subscriber or be entitled to any interest in the undertaking.—I am, &c."

Then followed a list of bankers, with a form of receipt. 3. An affidavit made by Mr. Smith, the company's solicitor, on the 19th November, 1851, to prove that on the 20th November, 1845, he, in accordance with a resolution of the acting committee, dated the 19th November, sent to the several persons, including the late Mr. Stocks, the letter and letter of allotment above set forth. 4. A resolution passed by the acting committee on the 26th December, 1845, of which the following is a copy:—"That a letter be written to the gentlemen acting as provisional committeemen, requiring them to pay 52*l.* 10s. being the amount of the deposit on twenty-five shares, by the 7th January, 1846." 5. A letter dated the 5th January, 1846, from the secretary to the provisional committeemen, as follows:—

"Wolverhampton, &c. Railway Company, January 5, 1846.

"Sir,—I am directed by the committee of management to inform you, that after mature deliberation they have come to the determination to suspend operations for the present, and to return to the shareholders the amount of their deposits, deducting a rateable proportion for expenses. The managing committee have also resolved that each member of the provisional committee be called upon to pay to the credit of the company, with the Birmingham and Midland Banking Company, on or before the 17th inst. the sum of 52*l.* 10s. in order that the engagements of the company may be met in an honourable manner. Of course you are aware that each member of the provisional committee is liable to the full extent of his property for the whole of the debts contracted by the company; and it is to avoid the possibility of any extreme measures being resorted to that this call is made, and the managing committee feel assured that you will see the necessity of responding to it immediately.—I am, &c.

"E. EDWARDS, Secretary."

6. A letter, dated the 21st January, 1846, also [illegible] structed me to call your attention to their previous request to pay the sum of 52*l.* 10s. being the deposit upon twenty-five shares. The committee have many claims upon them which they are unable to discharge without a fair contribution by the members of the provisional committee; and as legal proceedings will certainly immediately be taken for the recovery of the debts due, the acting committee have determined to allow the creditors to proceed, so as to make every member of the provisional direction pay equally with themselves. Unless the amount now claimed be paid on or before Tuesday, the 27th inst., you must incur the undivided responsibility of the several demands which, if once made against you, will not be interfered with by the executive of this company.—I am, &c.

"E. EDWARDS, Secretary."

8. A letter sent by the secretary as above, with a copy of a resolution passed that day:—

"February 19, 1846.

"Sir,—Annexed is a copy of the proceedings of this day. I should respectfully urge upon you the propriety of responding at once to the call made in Resolution No. 3. The accounts of the company may be inspected at this office by yourself, or any person you may depute.

"I have the honour, &c. &c."

(Copy resolution.)

At a meeting of the provisional committee of the Wolverhampton, Chester, and Birkenhead Junction Railway, convened by circular, and held at Dee's Royal Hotel, Birmingham, February 19, 1846, it was unanimously resolved—1. That all the acts and deeds of the managing committee be confirmed and adopted by this meeting. 2. That the sum of 12s. per share be retained from each share taken up, and that the balance of 30s. per share be returned to the shareholders at as early a period as possible. 3. That a call be now made upon each member of the provisional committee for an additional sum of 52*l.* 10s. making a gross sum of 105*l.* and that, on payment of the sum of 105*l.* or of the additional sum of 52*l.* 10s. as the case may be, to the Birmingham and Midland Bank, at Birmingham, on or before the 26th inst. the parties so contributing shall be protected from the claims of creditors. (Resolutions 4, 5, and 6 are not material to be here repeated.) 7. That a record of this day's proceedings be transmitted to each member of the provisional committee."

9. The payment of the additional sum of 52*l.* 10s. was proved to have been made by the late Mr. Stocks on the 11th of March, 1846. 10. A letter to the provisional committeemen from the secretary, with a copy of a report and resolutions as follow:—

"Wolverhampton, &c. Railway Company, July 10, 1846.

"Sir,—On the other side I send you a copy of the report and resolutions passed at the meeting to-day, accompanied by a statement of accounts, by which you will perceive that a large sum of money is still owing both to creditors and allottees. The members of the committee attending the meeting are exceedingly anxious to free the provisional committee and themselves from the liabilities and annoyances to which they are in common exposed, and they therefore respectfully request that the further subscription agreed to in the 2nd resolution be paid on or before the day mentioned to the Birmingham and Midland Bank at Birmingham. The accounts, books, and papers are at all times open for inspection, either by yourself or any person you may authorise for that purpose.

"I am, &c. "E. EDWARDS, Secretary."

"Wolverhampton, &c. &c. Railway Company.

"At a meeting of the provisional committee, convened by circular, and held at the office, No. 108, New-street, Birmingham, July 10, 1846, the following report was read:—'The acting committee regret to state that the neglect of many of the provisional committee to meet the call made upon them in February last, has entailed considerable loss upon the company, inasmuch as those creditors who, in the expectation of early payment, had consented to large reductions from their respective accounts, afterwards repudiated these agreements and brought actions for the full amount, thereby not only depriving the company of the discount agreed upon, but entailing additional expense in legal proceedings. If those of the committee who have not paid had promptly contributed the 105*l.* called for, it would have been sufficient to have discharged all the demands upon the company; but as many of those are abroad, and others are in a state of comparative poverty, the executive cannot now hold out the hope that a sufficient sum can be procured from them to meet the remaining liabilities. The shareholders, acting under the authority given by the recent decisions in law, have threatened legal proceedings for the recovery of their deposits in full, and there is reason to suppose they will act upon their threats. Under these circumstances, the managing committee thought it advisable to call the provisional committee together, with a view to the adoption of such measures as may be thought expedient. They are of opinion that if a sum of money could be raised at once, to pay off the shareholders, the committee would, in many cases, be able to make terms which would be very advantageous to the company.' The following resolutions were then unanimously agreed to:—1st. That all the acts, deeds, and accounts of the managing committee be approved, confirmed, and adopted. 2nd. That a call be made upon each member of the provisional committee for a contribution of 60*l.* in addition to the 105*l.* already called for; and that a full statement of account be sent to each member with the circular announcing this resolution. 3rd. That the call be payable on or before Saturday, August 1, 1846.

11. It was also proved that the late Mr. Stock paid the additional sum of 60*l.* (making, with the previous payments, 165*l.*) on the 5th August, 1846. Mr. Stocks never attended any of the meetings of the provisional committee, nor did he act in any way in the matters of the company.

Under the circumstances above stated and proved the Master again decided that Mr. Stocks was a contributory, and placed the names of the administratrix and the administrators of that gentleman on the list of contributories. They now moved to have their names expunged from that list.

Follett and Smythe appeared in support of the application.

C. P. Cooper and Roxburgh opposed the motion on behalf of the official manager. The only question was, whether there was an implied acceptance of shares. There was no doubt that Mr. Stocks was a provisional committeeman, and having actually taken up and paid for shares, there could be no doubt as to his liability. The decisions were conflicting, but the principle laid down was, that shares taken up by a provisional committeeman was a sufficient fact to constitute liability. In Dale's case, 16 Jur. 207, that principle was particularly recognised. Upon the facts as they appeared it was distinctly shewn that the payment of 52*l.* 10*s.* was made in respect of twenty-five shares, and there was therefore in this case all the necessary elements. Added to these facts, there was the signature of the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement. Mr. Stocks paid, in fact, no less than three calls without any observation as to the purpose for which he paid it, and therefore leaving it quite open to be assumed, as it must be, that he had so paid those three sums in respect of shares allotted to him.

The cases cited were:—Cottle's case, 2 McN. & G. 185; 14 Jur. 703; 2 Ho. of Lords Cases; 15 Law T. 471; Carmichael's case, 17 Sim. 163; S.C. 16 Law T. 189; Roberts's case, 2 McN. & G. 192; Sickell's case, 1 Sim. N.S. 187; Barber's case, 15 Jur. 51; Besley's case, 3 McN. & G. 287; Britain's case, 1 Sim. N.S. 281; Carrick's case, 1 Sim. N.S. 505; Tanner's case, 16 Jur. 214; Mainwaring's case, 16 Jur. 263, 292.

JUDGMENT.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, the real question was whether the first payment of the deposit of the 52*l.* 10*s.* in respect of the twenty-five shares was an acceptance of those twenty-five shares. Now, it had been contended before him that the consent to act as the provisional committeeman, and the letter of allotment, irrespective of the payment of the deposit, was sufficient to charge the party so agreeing to act as provisional committeeman. But he could not go that length, as it would carry the decision in Upfill's case much beyond the limit within which the rule therein laid down ought to be confined. In Upfill's case, there was an actual allotment and actual acceptance of the allotment of the shares. Rightly or wrongly, the House of Lords held Upfill to be liable. But if he (the Vice-Chancellor) were to determine that this previous consent to act as provisional committeeman, followed by a letter of allotment were sufficient, he should be extending the principle of Upfill's case. Another reason was, the committee in the present case might have been bound to take 5,000 shares, or any indefinite number. But there was no allotment here, in the strict sense of the term. (He referred to the document of the 20th November, 1845.) This does not say that they have allotted, &c.; but they "request that each member should at once take up the accompanying allotment of twenty-five shares, which the acting committee have already done." This is communicated in a way very convenient: the secretary sends a form of allotment, as upon an application. This is not very irregular; but there was no harm in it. There was, therefore, no allotment. A second ground had been argued, viz. that the letter of Nov. 20, 1845, followed by the payment of the 52*l.* 10*s.* the deposit amount to an allotment and an acceptance of shares. But upon that he (the Vice-Chancellor) had come to a clear conclusion that it was not an acceptance of the shares. The letter did not purport that Mr. Stock was under an obligation to take these shares, nor does he pay the deposit or do any act of acceptance within the six days (the 7th January) limited by the letter; in fact he did not pay the 52*l.* 10*s.* till the 24th January, until after the letter of the 5th January, whereby he had been informed that the intended company had "suspended all further operations." Now, what was the position of Mr. Stocks on this 5th January, 1846. In the interval he had done nothing—nothing to lead to a conjecture that he meant to take up the shares—he was then informed the thing was abandoned, and the subsequent resolution was not that each member should be bound to accept twenty-five shares, but he was called upon "in order that the engagements of the company may be met in an honourable manner," the reason being that "of course he was aware that each member of the provisional committee is liable to the full extent of his property for the whole of the debts contracted by the company," &c. No answer was sent by Mr. Stocks to that letter of the 5th January. Now, as to that of the 21st January, Mr. Stocks had been informed that the project was at an end, and clearly up to this point he had not accepted any shares. It is not to be supposed that when he was told the company was at an end he agreed to accept shares, but the company insisting that he should pay a sum of 52*l.* 10*s.* which was a similar amount as the deposit, Mr. Stocks might have imagined that as a matter of justice, or as a matter of prudence, it would be advisable to pay the same as others had done; but can I say that he was then for the first time taking up twenty-five shares in this abandoned company? What he meant to do was to pay in honour or under a notion of justice. All this is still stronger as to the other payments made by Mr. Stocks; they were merely contributions towards satisfying what he was told were the demands against the abandoned undertaking. He (the Vice-Chancellor) was of opinion, therefore, that there was not sufficient ground to put the names of the representatives of Mr. Stocks upon the list of contributories.

Order to expunge the names accordingly.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Thursday, May 27.

LOWE v. THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Corporation—Railway Company—Assumpsit for use and occupation.

Assumpsit for use and occupation may be maintained against an incorporated railway company which has actually occupied the plaintiff's land by his permission, for unless it is proved by negative evidence that there was no contract made or signed by the directors according to sec. 90 of 8 Vict. c. 16, the Court will presume that there was such a contract.

Assumpsit for use and occupation, tried before Jervis, C.J. at Derby, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff. The principal question of fact at the trial was, whether the piece of land in question, which was situate by the side of the Rugby and Stamford Railway, in the parish of Morcott, in the county of Rutland, and had been taken for temporary use during the construction of the line, had been so taken by the contractor, or by the railway company. The cause had been tried three times. On the first trial the plaintiff was nonsuited; on the second the plaintiff obtained a verdict, but the case was sent down to a third trial in order that new matter might be submitted to the jury. During last term a rule nisi was obtained to enter a nonsuit on the ground that the action of assumpsit could not be maintained, or for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. The learned judge reported that he was dissatisfied with the verdict; and the jury had included in the damages rent accruing since the action was commenced.

Wednesday, May 26. — Miller, Serjt. and G. Hayes, shewed cause.—This rule was obtained on two grounds: first, that use and occupation will not lie against this company for the occupation of the land, because there was no contract under seal, and, secondly, because the verdict was against the evidence. 1. Though the general rule is, that a corporation can only contract under seal, yet it may render itself liable without such contract both at common law and by 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 14, on an implied obligation resulting, in this case, from the occupation of the land by the permission of the plaintiff. Here the law raises the legal obligation to pay for the enjoyment of the land. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Where the law raises the promise, it cannot be under seal.] In the Dean and Chapter of Rochester v. Pierce, 1 Camp. 466, it was held that an action for use and occupation might be maintained by a corporation aggregate, although there was no demise by deed; and the case of the corporation suing is stronger than that of being sued, for the occupation of the defendant was by the permission of the corporation plaintiffs, which was presumed, although there was no deed. And in Finlay v. The Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 21 L.J. 117, Parke, B. expressed an opinion that use and occupation would lie against a corporation who had occupied. Besides, by the 8 Vict. c. 20, s. 32, railway companies are empowered to enter on lands adjoining a railway for certain purposes without any previous payment, tender, or deposit. A great number of cases were cited in support of the above argument, but which are collected in the recent case of Finlay v. The Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 21 L.J. 117, Ex.

Thursday, May 27.—Macaulay and Mellor, in support of the rule.—1. This action cannot be maintained. The general principle, that corporations can only contract under seal, cannot be disputed; but it is subject to certain exceptions, which are well explained in Church v. The Imperial Gas Company, 6 Ad. & Ell. 861, and the Mayor of Ludlow v. Charlton, 6 Mee. & W. 822, and are there placed upon the ground of convenience, amounting almost to necessity. There are, indeed, some cases in which corporations have been permitted to sue in assumpsit for use and occupation (The Dean and Chapter of Rochester v. Pierce, 1 Camp. 466; The Mayor of Stafford v. Till, 4 Bing. 75); but in the case of The Fishmongers' Company v. Robertson, 5 Man. & G. 192, those cases are put upon a ground which will not apply to a similar action against a corporation, because it is said that the corporation, by suing upon the contract, would estop themselves by an admission on record that the contract was duly entered into on their part, so as to be obligatory upon themselves. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—But if the corporation have actually occupied with the permission of the plaintiff, does not the law imply a promise to pay a reasonable compensation for that occupation?] The law only implies that promise by presuming a contract to pay; and no contract to pay, except under seal, can be presumed against a corporation. It is the incapacity of the corporation to contract by parole that creates the distinction; and the rule, though apparently technical, is founded upon very substantial reasons, as Rolfe, B. points out in The Mayor of Ludlow v. Charlton. It is clear that this question is not determined by the fact that the contract is executed, and that the corporation have received the benefit of the consideration; because, in the recent case of Lamprell v. The Billericay Union, 3 Exch. Rep. 283, the plaintiff failed to recover for work done by him, and accepted by the defendants on the very ground that there was no contract under seal; and there the Court refer to the case of Sanders v. The St. Neots Union, 8 Q.B. 810, as well as to Paine v. The Strand Union, Ib. 338, and Arnold v. The Mayor of Poole, 4 Man. & G. 860. [COLERIDGE, J.—But if it depended upon the capacity to contract, corporations could not sue for use and occupation any more than they would be liable to be sued. Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—In Finlay v. The Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 21 L.J. Ex. 117, Parke, B. expressed a clear opinion that assumpsit for use and occupation would lie against a corporation who had actually occupied.] In that case the corporation were held not to have actually occupied, and the judgment was in their favour on that ground; and all that is really said there is that a corporation may be liable for what they have actually occupied. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Hall v. The Mayor of Swansea, 5 Q.B. 526, is in accordance with that opinion.] That case was decided on the ground that it fell within the exception of cases of necessity, and that the corporation was there made liable for a wrongful act, and it was likened to Yarborough v. The Bank of England, 16 East. 6. [CROMPTON, J.—But no contract under seal was necessary in this case; because, by the Companies Clauses Act three directors might make a binding parole contract on behalf of the company; and why should we not presume that everything was regularly done?] It is not quite clear that three directors could make a contract of this description—that is, a contract for the temporary occupation of land; but the presumption of such a contract cannot be made in this case; because it was proved at the trial that whatever contract was made was made by an agent of the company by word of mouth. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Was any negative evidence given?] Only by shewing how the contract was made, not by calling the secretary or any of the directors to shew that in fact no contract was signed by them. In Cope v. The Thames Haven

Dock and Railway Company, 3 Exch. 841, the plaintiff was held not entitled to recover for his work and labour, on the ground that the contract was not under seal, and not executed with the formalities required by the clause in the special Act, enabling three directors to sign contracts on behalf of the company. They also referred to Diggle v. The London and Blackwall Railway Company, 5 Ex. Rep. 442; and to the Copperminer's Company v. Fox, 20 Law J. Q.B. 174. 2. Upon the facts the verdict was really perverse.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—My opinion is, that this rule ought to be discharged. First, as to the question of law, it is contended that this action for use and occupation cannot be maintained against these defendants, they being a corporation aggregate. Now in arguing this question we must assume that the company did occupy and enjoy, with the permission of the plaintiff, the land in question; and according to decided cases a corporation may, as plaintiffs, maintain an action for use and occupation where the defendant has enjoyed the land with their permission. (The Dean and Chapter of Rochester v. Pierce; and The Mayor of Stafford v. Till.) But then is not the right reciprocal? The same objection may be started equally whether the corporation sues or is sued; but the question does not rest upon the reason of the thing, because in Hall v. The Mayor of Swansea, this Court held that an action for money had and received would be against a corporation, where a promise to pay was implied by law. It is said that Lord Denman put that as a case of necessity; but it was not otherwise a case of necessity unless the duty of the corporation to pay its debts was to be regarded as a species of moral necessity, and if so, the same necessity exists here. Then we ought also to pay great respect to the clear opinion expressed by my brother Parke in Finlay v. The Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, that the action for use and occupation may be maintained against a corporation where the corporation has actually used and enjoyed the land, although it was held that it would not lie, where there was no such actual occupation. But in the present case we are greatly relieved from any difficulty which might otherwise have been felt by finding that according to the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act the directors have power by parole to enter into such a contract as this for the occupation of land necessary for the purpose of the undertaking. As they had this power, and as they have occupied and enjoyed the land, why should we, for the sake of defeating the justice of the case, suppose that no parole contract by the directors was entered into. No negative evidence was given to shew that no such parole contract was made; it may have been made; and I think that it ought to be presumed from the fact of enjoyment. Therefore the technical objection fails; and, upon the merits of the case, I think we should not be justified in disturbing the verdict after three previous trials, unless it stood wholly unsupported by any evidence in the cause; otherwise we should be making the verdict that of the judges, and not that of the jury. Now, I cannot say that there was no evidence to sustain the verdict; and therefore I think that it ought to stand, the plaintiff remitting the excess.

COLERIDGE, ERLE, and CROMPTON, JJ. concurred.

Rule discharged, the plaintiff consenting to reduce the damages to 162l.

HOWES v. BARBER.

Taxation of costs—Expenses of party as witness.

If a plaintiff, a seafaring man, is necessarily detained in England for the purpose of being examined as a witness on his own behalf, the Master, upon taxation, may in his discretion allow the plaintiff subsistence money, as he would in the case of another witness.

A rule had been obtained to review the Master's taxation herein. The plaintiff was a master mariner; who brought this action for wages, and from the service of the writ had been detained on shore, in order that he might be called as a witness on his own behalf at the trial. The plaintiff's employment to bring home the defendant's ship took place at Valparaiso; and it was sworn that if the plaintiff could not have been called it would have been necessary to send out a commission there. The Master had, under these circumstances, allowed the plaintiff 40l. as subsistence money from the issuing of the writ; and the question was, whether that allowance was right.

Saturday, May 8.—Lush shewed cause. There is no real distinction between the personal expenses of the plaintiff occasioned by the necessity for his appearance as a witness at the trial and those of any other witness. They are a part of the costs and charges by him expended in and about the suit. (McAlpine v. Poles, 1 Cr. & M. 795.)

Unthank, contrà.—The difference is this: that the plaintiff or defendant is attending to his own business; and has no more right to be paid for his trouble than he would for the trouble of conducting his own case throughout without the aid of attorney or counsel. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—In this case a question arose whether costs were to be allowed to a plaintiff, who was a witness for himself, in respect of being a witness. We are of opinion that the Master's taxation of costs in this case was proper. No doubt the practice of allowing costs to a successful party in respect of having been a witness for himself may lead to inconvenient consequences; but we do not think we can lay down a rule that such costs can never be allowed. A party is now, by law, permitted to be a witness; he may be a material and necessary witness, and his attendance may not only obtain justice for himself, but may lessen the expense which would otherwise fall upon the opposite party, by obviating the necessity of requiring the attendance of other witnesses, or the issuing of a commission to examine witnesses abroad, and the full payment must, therefore, be thrown on the wrong-doer. Again, if an undefended action is brought, and the evidence of the party suing is necessary, he is not indemnified, but his own expenses as a witness are not allowed. Here the plaintiff, the captain of a ship, had a demand against the owner for wages, and this he could only make out by his own evidence, or by sending out a commission to a distant country. Remaining in England for the purpose of being examined at the trial, the Master has made him the like allowance for maintenance, from the service of the writ till the day of the trial, which would be made to a third person as a witness under similar circumstances. Berry v. Pratt, 1 B. & C. 276, and other decisions, shew that to a third person so remaining in this country as a witness such an allowance would be proper; and the Legislature having been pleased to permit parties to be examined on their own behalf, we cannot say the expense of the successful party should not fall on the party who, by resisting a legal demand or making an unlawful one, has caused that necessity; and in the analogous case of an indictment removed by certiorari, if the prosecutor be a material witness, and has been examined, it has been usual to allow his expenses, though not by way of making compensation for loss of time. We must trust to the intelligence and the vigilance of the taxing officers to detect and to frustrate attempts that may be made to swell costs unnecessarily, under the pretext that the party is one of the material and necessary witnesses. The simple fact of parties being examined as witnesses must by no means be considered as sufficient to establish a claim for expenses as witnesses, and if it appear that their attendance be unnecessary, and the statements they give in evidence irrelevant to the conduct of the cause, their claim ought to be rejected. In the present case, the plaintiff seems to have acted with perfect good faith, and to have been necessarily detained in England that he might be a witness; therefore this rule, that the Master should review his taxation, must be discharged.

Knowles.—Does your lordship say anything as to the costs of the rule?

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—No. Rule discharged.

REG. v. LILLS.

Certiorari—Indictment—Central Criminal Court—Middlesex Sessions.

By the central Criminal Court Act, 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 16, an indictment may be removed into that Court from any Sessions within the jurisdiction of that Court by certiorari, or other process, by application to this Court:

Held, that this Court might make an order for the removal of an indictment for false pretences into the Central Criminal Court found at the Middlesex Sessions, although by the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53, the certiorari was taken in cases of false pretences.

Doyle moved for a certiorari to remove an indictment for false pretences found against the defendant at the Middlesex Sessions. Two previous indictments had been removed, and the affidavits in this case were the same, and shewed that the indictment was founded upon the same facts as the other two.

Metcalfe, who appeared to shew cause in the first instance, suggested to the Court that by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53, the certiorari was taken away in this case.

Doyle.—It is proposed now to remove the indictment into the Central Criminal Court, by the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 16 (the Central Criminal Court Act), which empowers the Court of Q. B. or any judge thereof, or any commissioner of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery under this Act, being a judge of any of the Superior Courts of Westminster, or any judge of the Court of Bankruptcy, or the Recorder of London, to issue any writ or writs of certiorari or other process to the justices of London, Westminster, Southwark, Middlesex, Essex, Kent, Surrey, or either of them, commanding them to certify and return into the Central Criminal Court indictments found before them, &c. And the indictment may then be removed from the Central Criminal Court into this Court, by a second writ of certiorari. (Reg. v. O'Brien, 19 L. J. 121, M C.)

Metcalfe.—The 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 16, is general in its terms, and cannot overrule the express enactment of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53, that no such indictment shall be removed by certiorari. There is no express repeal of the latter statute, and if it was intended by the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 16, to repeal it, there would probably have been some words to that effect. And in the absence of such words, it is submitted that the operation of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53, taking away the certiorari, is left unaffected. Then assuming the power to remove, as suggested, this Court would never lend itself to a palpable and avowed evasion of a statute. Will the Court do indirectly that which a statute says shall not be done directly?

Doyle in reply.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Knowing what we do of the case, we should certainly wish that this indictment should follow the others. But there are difficulties suggested,—that the statute takes away the certiorari in indictments for false pretences, and that the Central Criminal Court Act does not override that enactment. No doubt the general rule is, that an express enactment like that in the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53, shall not be overruled by a general enactment like that of the Central Criminal Court Act, without words shewing an intention to repeal or override it; but it seems to us that the Central Criminal Courts Act does not speak of a writ of certiorari strictly so called, but only of an order in the nature of such writ. By granting such order, therefore, we shall not be infringing the former Act; but we can go no further. We shall order the indictment to be removed to the Central Criminal Court, but we certainly shall not lend ourselves to evade an Act of Parliament, and therefore we give no countenance to any further step for bringing the indictment into this court.

COLERIDGE, J.—I also think that the Central Criminal Court Act speaks of an order, and not of the writ of certiorari, and that we may grant such an order to remove the indictment into the Central Criminal Court, but that is all that we can do.

ERLE and CROMPTON, JJ. concurred.

REG. v. SCAIFE.

Practice—Writ of procedendo—Jurisdiction of judge at chambers.

Any judge of the Superior Courts of Common Law sitting at Chambers in vacation, has jurisdiction to grant a writ of procedendo, to send back an indictment removed by certiorari into the Q. B. from sessions.

This was an indictment for felony, which had been removed by certiorari into this Court, from the Hull Quarter Sessions. One trial had taken place at the York Assizes, and a new trial had been ordered; but after last Hilary Term the Lord Chief Baron at Chambers, upon the application of the prosecutors, without summons, granted a writ of procedendo; by virtue of which the record was carried back to the Hull Quarter Sessions, where the prisoners had been since convicted and sentenced.

Dearsley now moved for a rule to set aside the writ of procedendo, on the ground,—First, That the Lord Chief Baron had no jurisdiction to issue it. Secondly, That under the circumstances it ought not to have been issued. Upon the first point he cited Inst. 73; 1 Burr. 488; 4 Burr. 2456; stat. 6 Hen. 8, c. 6; 2 Chitt. Archb. 1432, and cases there collected; stats. 1 Wm. 4, c. 70, s. 4; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, s. 1.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that there is no ground for this application. It is admitted that there is for this purpose no distinction between a judge of this Court and a judge of any other of the Superior Courts of Common Law; and under the stat. 1 Vict. it is clear that a single judge of this Court sitting at Chambers, would have authority to issue a writ of procedendo; because it is according to the practice of this Court, as certified to us by the Masters, that a single judge should exercise that power; and in the stat. of Henry 8 there is nothing which requires that the application should be made exclusively to the full Court. The jurisdiction then being unquestionable, no ground has been laid for saying that it has not been properly exercised. It is said that the writ ought not to have been issued without a previous summons; but that is always a matter for the discretion of the judge.

REG. v. LEGGATT.

Habeas corpus—Marital control of wife.

The Attorney-General (Needham with him) appeared to shew cause against a rule for a writ of habeas corpus to issue to H. B. Leggatt, to require him to bring up the body of his mother to this court. The application was made on the part of Mr. Sandilands, the husband of the lady. There is a preliminary objection to this application. A habeas corpus is issued on the assumption that the party is improperly restrained, that something like imprisonment has taken place, and that the party is improperly detained against her will. It has been decided that no habeas corpus can be granted to bring up the body of a wife separated from her husband, and living apart from him of her own free will. In the case of Reg. v. Wiseman, 2 Sm. Rep. 617, which was a case of that kind, the Court decided that, in order to sustain the application, the affidavits must shew that the wife was detained against her will. The husband said that if he had the opportunity of conversing with his wife, he could induce her to return and live with him; but the Court held that that was not sufficient. In the present case it was shewn that the wife had separated herself from her husband and was living apart from him of her own free will and consent, and that she was freely residing in the house of her son, against whom this application was made. There was no case whatever where the writ had been granted, except where there was some restraint on the liberty of the wife. Whatever might be the other circumstances under which she had left him, this Court would not interfere to compel her to .. turn if she was not under any restraint. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—At the time this case was moved the case of Cochrane, 8 Dowl. 630, was mentioned, and we were under the impression that it was an authority for doing what we are now asked to do.] That case, if it applied at all, was an authority against the husband. There the husband had by stratagem obtained possession of the person of his wife, and she being under his roof, an application was made for a habeas corpus; but the Court held that having possession of her person, he was entitled to restrain her liberty in a fair and proper manner till she consented to return to her conjugal duties, and the Court thought that in that case she was not improperly restrained. That case was entirely different from the present. Here she had left the husband's house voluntarily, and was of her own free will living in the house of her son. [Lord CAMPBELL.—Suppose she was brought up here by habeas corpus, we could only ask her what she wished to do, and leave her to pursue her own inclination.] Certainly that must be the course, and here the affidavit of the lady shewed most distinctly that the whole proceeding had been taken by her brother and her son with her consent and at her desire, in order to protect her against what she deemed the tyranny of her husband.

The Solicitor-General (Raymond with him) in support of the rule said, they were bound to say that there was no suggestion that the lady remained away from her husband under any restraint, or that any coercion was employed against her, so far as the affidavits could be relied on, and that she was acting of her own free will. But the question was, whether this Court would not issue a habeas corpus that she should, at all events, be brought before the Court in order that the Court might be satisfied that she was in truth acting with that entire free will which the affidavits intimated. He might admit, too, that he did not know any direct authority for the Court's interference where it was clear that there was no restraint. But he contended that the question of free will or restraint did not here arise. No such answer could be made where a father sought a writ to obtain custody of the person of his child. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—There is a great difference between the two cases; between the case of an adult married woman, and a child of tender age. The latter could not give a consent.] The question here was, whether in the eye of the law a wife could be said to have a will of her own. There was Mead's case, 1 Burr. 542, which favoured his argument; and therefore he contended that the Court would have the lady brought up, in order to be assured that no restraint or improper influence had been exercised over her in order to make her swear this affidavit. But for the purpose of obtaining satisfaction on this point, he admitted that, as the affidavits now stood, this Court would decline to interfere, and would leave the matter for discussion in the Ecclesiastical Court.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—The Court granted this rule with great reluctance. It was granted against the impression of every member of the Court; but we were strongly pressed with what was s[illegible] be a precedent; and as we have the great[illegible] in dealing with the invaluable wri[illegible] corpus, we thought it right to let the matter be discussed. The matter has now been discussed, and we think that the rule for the habeas corpus ought not to have been granted. The writ of habeas corpus is to be granted where a person has been improperly deprived of his liberty, in order that he may be restored to it. From the most ancient times, long before the Habeas Corpus Act of Charles II. it was well known in the Common Law that every person deprived of his liberty might be brought before the Court, and the reason of his being so deprived of it might be inquired into. But that was on the supposition that the party had been deprived of his liberty. Here it appears that the wife was living with her own free consent with her son. She is not under any restraint. Whether her husband, under such circumstances, has any remedy to recover possession of the custody of his wife, is not a question for us now to decide—it is a question altogether alieni fori. We have no jurisdiction in such a subject. It is only where a person has been improperly deprived of liberty that that person may by this Court be restored to it. If this writ could go, and the lady could be produced in court, she would be at liberty to return to her son and to live under his protection, and we could make no order on her to return to her husband. The constitution of this country has pointed out the proper tribunal where such a subject may be treated of and determined, and where it may be decided whether or not she has good cause for the separation, a matter on which we give no opinion. That question can be decided in the Ecclesiastical Court, and if that Court gives judgment against her, she must return and live with her husband; but here it is clear that we cannot impose such a restraint upon her. Reference has been made to the case of an infant; but that is totally different, for a father has a right to the custody of his child; and where there is no ground to impeach his title, this Court will order the child to be restored to him, if it is of tender years. But this Court has no power to order a wife to be restored to her husband; and this writ will, therefore, be wholly nugatory. We have no power to grant what has been applied for; and this rule, which ought not to have been granted, must be discharged.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am of the same opinion. I had no doubt on the argument, except on that point which the Solicitor-General raised, whether we should take as true the statement made in the affidavit, or should have the lady here, to be satisfied by her affirming those statements by her own mouth. If that question had been suggested by anything that appeared in the affidavits, if it had been suggested that she was under any restraint, that would have been a proper course to pursue; but as not merely her own affidavit asserts her perfect freedom from restraint; but as all the circumstances of the .. confirm the statement, we should be but directing a useless proceeding, if we ordered her to come up here.

Ejectment — Writ of possession returnable immediately.

Stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 67, s. 2 applies to the writ of possession in ejectment as well as to other writs of execution, and it may therefore be made returnable immediately after the execution thereof.

A rule had been obtained, calling upon the lessor of the plaintiff to shew cause why the writ of possession herein should not be set aside, and restitution made of the lands taken under it.

This action was brought in the early part of 1849, judgment obtained, and a writ of possession issued soon afterwards, but not executed till April 1852. The above rule was obtained on the ground that the writ had been made returnable immediately after the execution thereof, and also upon facts to which it is unnecessary to advert.

Bramwell and Brewer shewed cause.—The stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 67, s. 2, applies in terms to all writs of execution; and the preamble to that section will also include the action of ejectment; but it is said that that Act and 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, are confined to writs in personal actions. There is, however, no ground for that contention. Lewis v. Holmes, 10 Q. B. 896, has no application to this case, though it was cited when this case was before a judge at chambers.

Petersdorff, contrà.—The general words of s. 2 are controlled by the language used in other parts of these statutes, which shew that they apply to personal actions only.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I think that there was no irregularity here. Sec. 2 of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 67, has in the enacting part words large enough to embrace ejectments, because it in terms applies to "all writs of execution;" but can [illegible] passed in the second Year of the Reign, for Uniformity of Process in Personal Actions;" but then, under such a title there may well be a clause applying to the action of ejectment, and the preamble to sec. 2 is clearly sufficient to embrace that action. There seems, therefore, no ground for limiting the general words of sec. 2; and convenience certainly requires that all writs of execution should be included in it. We are informed that it is usual to make writs of fi. fa. for costs in ejectment returnable immediately; and if those writs may be made so returnable, so may the writ of habere facias possessionem.

BOSTOCK v. THE NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Costs—Discharge of jury—Consent of counsel.

If a judge, in consequence of the consent of counsel discharges a jury, who are unable to agree, earlier than he would without such consent, the party who succeeds upon the second trial is not on that account entitled to the costs of the first.

This was a rule to review the taxation of costs. The cause had been tried twice. Upon the first trial the jury, after remaining in deliberation one hour and twenty minutes, announced that they could not agree; whereupon the judge at first refused to discharge them, but afterwards did so by the consent of counsel on both sides. Upon the second trial the plaintiff obtained a verdict; and the Master had taxed the plaintiff his costs of both trials.

Welsby now shewed cause.—If the judge discharges the jury of his own authority, neither party has costs (Seeley v. Powers, 3 Dowl. 372; Brown v. Clarke, 12 M. & W. 25); but here it was done by consent of counsel. It was the same as if there had been no trial, and the case made a remanet; or as if a juror had been withdrawn. (Harrison v. Bennett, 1 Cr. & M. 203.)

Honeyman, contrà, was not heard.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—If the judge, of his own authority, discharges the jury, there are no costs; and it would be highly inconvenient to make a distinction because the counsel do not require the jury to be kept together until the health of some of them should be in danger. If the counsel so consent, the judge still discharges the jury of his own authority; and the distinction suggested cannot be supported.

COLERIDGE, J. concurred.

ERLE, J.—I think it would be very pernicious to introduce any such distinction; but if the matter were res integra, I should be at a loss to know why in both cases, all the costs should not fall upon the losing party. Rule absolute.

BETTS v. BETTS.—Case for the infringement of a patent. J. Brown moved for leave to amend the notice of objections herein. Rule nisi.

ROBINSON v. JONES.—This was an action founded upon s. 26 of stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, by the clerk to the visitors of the North Wales Lunatic Asylum, against the treasurer of the county of Merioneth, for payment of a sum of 28*l.* pursuant to the order of the committee. At the trial before Williams, J. at Chester, a verdict was found for the plaintiff, damages, 28*l.* It appeared, that upon the order of the committee of visitors there had been supplied to the North Wales Lunatic Asylum some new capstan pumps, which were required for the more convenient supply of water throughout that establishment; and that 28*l.* was the proportion payable by the county of Merioneth, and for payment of which an order had been made upon the defendant. It was objected that the committee had exceeded their authority in making the order, because the new capstan pumps were not "ordinary repairs" within the meaning of s. 26; and upon that objection a rule was obtained to reduce the damages to 40*s.* Welsby shewed cause. E. Beavan, contra. The COURT thought it too clear for argument that these were not "ordinary repairs." Rule absolute.

REG. v. LLOYD.—Mandamus commanding the justices of Merionethshire to make a county rate in order to pay a [illegible] pay to the treasurer of the asylu[illegible] Return (inter alia), that the justices had not made any rate for the purposes in the writ mentioned, and that a rate now made would be retrospective. Demurrer thereto. Welsby in support of the demurrer. Willes abandoned the return; but [illegible] it commanded the justices to make a rate, which they might in their discretion think unnecessary for the purpose of raising the money; and that the writ ought to have simply commanded the justices or the treasurer to pay the money. (He referred to ss. 33 & 34 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126; and R. v. Ledgard, 1 Q. B. Rep. 616.) Per curiam. There is nothing in the objection. Judgment for the Crown.

R. v. LLOYD.—The writ of mandamus mentioned in the last case, averred an agreement between four counties of North Wales to unite for the purpose of providing a common lunatic asylum, which agreement was traversed by the return; and issue being joined, the case went down for trial before Williams, J. at Chester, when a verdict was found for the Crown. At the trial the prosecutors offered in evidence an agreement in the form contained in schedule A. to stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, stamped with a 2s. 6d. stamp; it was objected that the stamp was insufficient, as the agreement contained more than 1,080 words; in answer to which it was said that the agreement required no stamp, because it was the mere adoption of a former agreement. It appeared that the other three counties of the union had entered into the statutory agreement two years before the time, when the county of Merioneth joined the union; and that original statutory agreement was stamped with a 1*l.* 15s. stamp. The Merioneth justices signed a separate paper instead of signing the original agreement: but it was contended no fresh stamp was necessary. Welsby and Coxon shewed cause against a rule for a new trial, which had been obtained on the ground of the misreception of evidence. They referred to Peate v. Dicken, 1 Cr M & R. 422. Willes and Bearan contrà. By the COURT.—In the case cited the two papers formed one agreement. Here the Merioneth justices were not parties to the original agreement; and the agreement produced at the trial was a new and separate agreement, requiring therefore a fresh stamp. Rule absolute for new trial on payment of costs.

Rule discharged, and rule made upon the Board to pay the railway company.

REG. v. THE VICAR, &c. OF HAMMERSMITH.—C. Clark and Hance, shewed cause against a rule for a mandamus to the vicar and churchwardens of Hammersmith, to summon a vestry to determine the application of certain funds arising from the sale of a part of Wormwood Scrubs to the Great Western Railway Company. The answer was, that a meeting had been held, at which ample opportunity was afforded to every parishioner to offer any proposition which he might think fit, and that the vestry, after two days' poll upon two propositions submitted to it, had decided the matter. Pashley, Keane, and Lush, contrà.—No opportunity was afforded at the proper time for moving a second amendment, i.e. after the poll had been taken upon the first, and a scrutiny of the poll was refused. (Faulkner v. Elger, 4 B. & C. 449.) By the COURT.—The sense of the vestry was fairly taken, and full opportunity given to bring forward every proposition. The poll was taken upon the only two which were proposed or thought of until after the decision of the vestry was announced; and a scrutiny by the presiding officer is not demandable as a matter of right.

The commissioners had declined to consider the present wants of the parish in consequence of a general resolution adopted by them not to recognise local claims in such a case until the period arrived at which the purchase-money put out at interest would amount to a sum equal to the value of the fee-simple at the time of the sale. COUNTY COURT APPEALS.

(Before WIGHTMAN and CROMPTON, JJ.)

KIRBY v. WILLIAMSON.—This was an appeal from the County Court of Durham in an action for money paid by the attorney of a proposed mortgagor against his client to recover a sum paid by him to the attorney of the proposed mortgagee for his professional services in connection with the negotiation for a mortgage, which had gone off. The plaintiff relied upon evidence of usage: and the case stated that it was proved to be the usual course for the mortgagee's attorney, under such circumstances, to charge the attorney who set him in motion; but the learned judge held, that the defendant could not be liable for money paid, whatever the usage was, and declined to leave any question to the jury. Lush, for the appellant. Milward, for the respondent. (Strace v. Whittington, 2 B. & C. 11; Pratt v. Vizard, 5 B. & Ad. 808, Hallett v. Chamberlayne, 12 Law T. 272; Newton v. Chambers, 1 D. & L. 869; Bayliffe v. Butterworth, 1 Ex 425, Bayley v. Wilkins, 7 C B. 886.) By the COURT.—This certainly was not a pure question of law, and the judge ought to have left it to the jury. Lush applied for costs. (Stancliffe v. Clarke, 21 L. J. 129, 135, Ex.) By the COURT.—The general rule that the successful party gets his costs is not inflexible; and we think he ought not to have them in this case.

Judgment reversed without costs, and new trial ordered.

SHILLIBEER v. SINCLAIR.—This was an appeal from the County Court of Middlesex in an action for taking the plaintiff's goods for arrears of assessed taxes. The question was, whether certain carriages of the plaintiff were liable to a duty of 6*l.* or of 3*l.*; but the plaintiff had given no notice of action, to which he was entitled. Joyce, for the appellant. Motteram, for the respondent.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

Reported by DANIEL THOMAS EVANS and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

SHOULBRIDGE v. CLARK.

Custom—Presumption—Vicars choral.

Where it is proved that it has been the practice for a long series of years for the vicars choral of a cathedral during their year of probation to be excluded from a share in some of the emoluments of their office, and it can be gathered from the documents in existence that some person had the power of regulating the manner in which the vicars choral were to be maintained, it will be presumed that some regulation was made, out of which the practice originated.

In this case a verdict had been taken for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of this Court, upon a special case. The question raised was, whether a vicar choral of St. Paul's Cathedral was entitled, during his year of probation, to share in a sum of 1,100*l.* paid by a lessee on the renewal of a lease for a term of years theretofore customarily granted, of an estate at Steeple Bumstead, in Essex, by the dean and chapter and vicars choral of the said cathedral of St. Paul's, London. During the plaintiff's year of probation, the lease of a farm at Steeple Bumstead fell in, and was renewed, on payment of the usual fine, which was divided among the other five vicars. The plaintiff now claimed one-sixth of the 1,100*l.* the amount of the fine, the defendant being one of the vicars choral, and the pittansary, an officer appointed by the vicars, and whose duty it was to receive the money and pay it over to the persons entitled. The emoluments of the vicars choral were derived from annual rents and fines on renewal. In addition to the main question in the cause, it was also contended at the trial, that even if this should be decided against the defendant, still he would only be answerable for that part of the plaintiff's share which he had received for himself, that is, one-fifth of one-sixth of 1,100*l.* It appeared from the entries in the books that from the year 1660 to 1755 the leases had been granted by the vicars choral, including the probationers, although some doubt was attempted to be thrown upon this arising out of its not clearly appearing whether in the dates the old or new style had been used. Since the year 1750 the probationers had not joined in the leases or shared in the fines. Many of the books and documents had been burnt in the fire of London, and it appeared that for some time the vicars choral had lived in houses set apart for them rent free, but that afterwards these premises were let on lease to other parties, and the vicars received the rents. It also appeared that in some old documents that mention was made of the bishop having power to regulate the maintenance and stipends of the vicars choral.

Manning, Serjt. (with whom was Sumner) argued on the part of the plaintiff that the custom of excluding the vicars choral during their year of probation from all participation in the profits arising from fines on the renewal of leases was bad, and not supported by the evidence, it having only existed since 1750; and that in the face of the evidence which shewed that prior to that time the probationers joined in the leases (it being presumed that those who joined in the leases would share in the fines; and there being some evidence that they did), the fact of their being excluded for the last 100 years was not sufficient to support a custom in variance with what appeared to have been the practice before. The probationers were entitled to the fines, for the vicars choral, including the probationers, at one time lived in some of the houses, and it was only upon their being burnt down that the premises were leased. The probationers were entitled to and did receive their share of the rents of the premises, and fines are not distinguishable from rent, being part of the annual profits. (Taylor and Horn, 1 Burrow, 121.)

Sir A. Cockburn contrà.—There are three questions to be disposed of,—1st, Does the custom in question exist; 2ndly, Is it good; 3rdly, If these points are decided in favour of the plaintiff, is he entitled to recover. Since the year 1756 it must be admitted that the probationers have not shared in the fines. Up to that time, partly from the loss of documents and partly from their obscurity, everything is in doubt, and we contend that the uninterrupted course of practice which has existed since must be taken to throw light upon the practice which existed before, and which by itself is ambiguous. The probationer is not to be admitted full vicar choral unless, during his year of probation, he is found habilis. There might, therefore, be very good ground for not giving the probationers during that year a full share in the emoluments of the office. We find that the probationers had a sufficiency for their support, independently of the fines, sharing in the common table and other smaller emoluments, it being borne in mind that in former times the fines were the principal profits in ecclesiastical leases. The two first points must, therefore, be decided in favour of the defendant. As to the third, the practice is for Mr. Hudson, the chapter's clerk, to receive the amount of the fines and hand it over, not to the pittansary, but to the person who acts for the vicars choral, for the purpose of its being distributed. It therefore never comes to the defendant, and he cannot, under any circumstances, be liable for the whole amount claimed.

Manning, Serjt. was heard in reply.

The COURT were of opinion, looking at some of the old documents, that those to whom the regulating of the vicars choral was intrusted were empowered to made provisions as to how and in what proportions they should be paid. No document had been found shewing that any regulation had been made, but it appearing in the special case that a course of practice had existed for at least 100 years, according to which the vicars choral, during their year of probation, were excluded from the number of those who executed the leases or shared in the fines, they ought to infer from that that some such regulation had been made, and that, although no document shewing that such regulation had been made could now be found, that the practice had originated in such a regulation; that there was nothing unreasonable in such a practice, the probationers being maintained in competence during their year of trial; and that therefore, upon the two first grounds, it being unnecessary to consider the third, the defendant was entitled to their judgment.

Re SCALES and WIFE.

Completion of fines under 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 82. s. 3. The Court will not now direct the officer of the court to complete a fine, unless the state of the property and the consent of parties be shewn.

—— moved that the officer of the court should be directed to complete a fine. The fine in question had passed the King's Silver Office in 1832, but had not been entered and enrolled in consequence of the deed being lost. It had now been found, and the Court was asked to direct the officer to enrol it according to 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 82, s. 3, which directs that where proceedings have been commenced prior to the Act abolishing fines and recoveries, they should be completed by the officer of the Court of C. P. [JERVIS, C.J.—Have you any authority to shew that the officer has been directed to do what you ask so long after?] I can find none.

JERVIS, C.J.—The difficulty is, that if we were to grant a rule it would be absolute, there being no one to shew cause. There may have been dealings with the property since, and as the fine would operate from the date of it, you ought to shew the state of the property and the consent of the parties who would be barred.

Rule refused, with leave to move again.

LOTT v. BOOTH.

Where there is a pretended sale of goods between two persons, but a secret understanding between them that what appears on the instrument is not to operate as a sale, and the pretended vendee afterwards gets possession of the goods for another purpose, that is not a delivery in pursuance of the contract, and the property does not pass. A being indebted, receives an advance of money from B. on the security of her goods. To prevent the goods being seized by the landlord, A. signs a paper, which on the face of it is a sale to B. The goods are afterwards delivered to him to keep for A. B. sells them:

Held, that he is liable to A. for their value in an action of trover.

The plaintiff was a young lady, who had taken a house, and furnished it for the purpose of keeping a school. She afterwards fell into ill health, and becoming indebted for her rent, received an advance of money from the defendant, a furniture-broker, to whom she executed an instrument purporting to be a sale of her furniture; and another memorandum was signed, which purported to be a hiring of the furniture by her from the defendant at 3s. per week. It appeared in the evidence, that at the time of this transaction the plaintiff was an infant, and that she had not, since attaining her majority, done anything to ratify the contract; and also that the pretended sale was executed for the purpose of protecting the goods against any subsequent claim on the part of the landlord, and that the 3s. per week was to be paid, not for the use of the furniture, but as interest for the money. The plaintiff afterwards gave up the house in which the furniture was, and took lodgings, that she might look out for another house, and all her furniture, including what was set down in the schedule attached to the pretended memorandum of sale, was delivered to the defendant to keep for her. He thereupon sold it without giving the plaintiff any notice of his intending to do so. She brought an action of trover against him, in which she recovered a verdict for 102*l.* 4s. 3d. the value of all the goods less the amount advanced by the broker with interest. A rule nisi had been obtained by Hawkins to reduce the verdict by 80*l.* the value of the goods contained in the schedule.

Byles, Serjt. now shewed cause; and after stating the facts, contended that the verdict was supported by the evidence, and that the jury having found that no real sale was intended, and that there was a secret understanding between the parties to that effect, no property in the goods passed to the defendant, and that he was liable in an action of trover. [JERVIS, C.J.—We granted the rule on the ground that there might have been a misdirection, if the learned judges had directed the jury that the contract was void in consequence of the plaintiff being at the time an infant, inasmuch as the plaintiff might have had an authority from her by reason of something that happened afterwards. What you now state as found by the jury would make it no sale as between adults.]

The COURT then called on Raymond, who contended that the question was, whether there being a sale and delivery, with a secret understanding the property really passed, and that if it did the plaintiff's remedy, if any, would not be by an action of trover. And that assuming that the property passed, the contract by the infant was not void but voidable, and that nothing had been done to avoid it.

The COURT were of opinion that the finding of the jury did not warrant the raising of the point on which the rule had been granted. That the delivery of the goods to the defendant was not in pursuance of the sale, whether a good contract or not, but for another purpose, namely, that the plaintiff might afterwards get them back, and that, therefore, the property did not pass.

Rule discharged.

DALTON v. THE MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Interpleader—Forged transfer of shares.

Where a company has registered what is alleged to be a forged transfer of shares, and an action is brought against it by the original shareholder for dividends, and another is threatened by the alleged transferee, the Court will not grant an interpleader.

Wandsworth shewed cause against a rule nisi, which had been obtained by Bovil for an interpleader. The plaintiff had been duly registered a shareholder; some time afterwards a transfer of the same shares had been registered, and this transfer was alleged to have been forged. The company asked that the two claimants of the dividends on the shares should try the question between themselves. It was contended that the Act only applied to cases of mere shareholders, and not where the party seeking the interpleader is in one event liable on a contract, and therefore interested. (James v. Prichard, 7 M. & W. 216; and Palauni v. Campbel, 12 M. & W. 277; and Turner v. The Corporation of 13 M. & W. 171, were cited.)

Gray appeared for the other claimant.

Bovil was heard in support of the rule.

MAULE, J.—If the transfer is not forged, the company has a defence to the action; if it is, it has been negligently registered, and the company is answerable, not having employed a proper secretary.

CRESSWELL, J.—The dock company cases are not in favour of the defendants, for there the dispute does not arise out of the act of the company; here it does.

Rule discharged, with costs.

EDWARDS and ANOTHER, Assignees, v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Costs—Preparing notice of trial—A plaintiff is not to be allowed the costs of acquiring the information required for giving notice of trial, that being, in fact, the getting up of the plaintiff's case.

The Master had allowed 300*l.* as costs for the notice of trial, that is to say, 100*l.* for preparing the notice, 170*l.* for a fair copy, and 30*l.* for paper, printing, &c.

Channell, Serjt. had obtained a rule calling on the Master to review his taxation, 1st, on the ground that the notice was unnecessarily long; and, 2ndly on the ground that in the 100*l.* costs had been given for what was, in fact, the getting up of the plaintiff's case.

J. Brown shewed cause, 1st, the notice is not longer than was necessary; if it had been shorter, it would have been objected to as insufficient. (The Court expressed themselves as satisfied upon that point.) As to the 2nd point, it had cost the plaintiff much more than 300*l.* to give this notice of trial, and he ought to be allowed for the labour necessary to be gone through in preparing it. Costs ought to be looked upon as a kind of damages, and an indemnity to the plaintiff.

Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule.

JERVIS, C.J.—I lay it down as a principle that nothing is to be allowed for obtaining the information communicated in the notice of trial.

Rule absolute to review the taxation as to the 100l.

ANONYMOUS.—Needham moved for a distringas to compel an appearance. The calls and appointments required had been duly made. Rule granted.

LOTT v. BOOTH.—Edwin James, Q.C. moved herein for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the damages in this case should not be reduced by 80*l.* The COURT referred to Williams, J. who tried the cause, and ultimately granted a Rule nisi.

WINCH v. WILLIAMS.—Birnie shewed cause against a rule obtained by Byles, Serjt. why the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside and a verdict entered for the defendant, or why a nonsuit should not be entered. He took a preliminary objection, that the addition of a deponent's address was not made to his name in the affidavit on which the rule was moved. (The case will be duly reported.) Rule discharged.

DOE dem. FIELD v. MASON.—Hawkins shewed cause against a rule obtained by Wroth, why judgment against the casual ejector, and execution signed thereon, should not be set aside, and the costs taxed in this cause as between party and party. He objected that there was in this case no affidavit by Mason the defendant, that he never had knowledge of judgment having been signed in this cause. All that there was to satisfy the Court on that point was an affidavit of an attorney's clerk, who swore that he believed that the defendant never had notice that judgment was signed. [JERVIS, C.J.—The fact is, you want to have two actions instead of one: you commenced a second action for mesne profits, and the object of the rule was to deprive the plaintiff of that.] The affidavit of plaintiff negatives a desire to have two actions instead of one. The action for mesne profits was not begun merely for the sake of costs, as has been alleged, but for the value of the premises during the term wherein the defendant held over. [JERVIS, C.J.—The defendant is willing to pay the costs, and that ought to be sufficient. Let the Master inquire into and decide the question of costs, and whether the action for mesne profits is unnecessary. Let the matter be referred generally to the Master.

Referred to the Master.

COZENS v. GRAHAM.—Hawkins, for the defendant, shewed cause against a rule obtained by Quain to set aside a nonsuit, and for a new trial. It was an action for debt upon an attorney's bill, to which the defendant pleaded No signed bill delivered. The cause was tried before the Under-Sheriff of Middlesex. There was an objection that the plaintiff was nonsuited, as appeared by a note of the Sheriff, "by misapprehension and against his will." This, however, was waived, and the case argued on the point whether the letters which passed between plaintiff and defendant were sufficient evidence that a signed bill had been delivered so as to satisfy the statute. The case will be duly reported.

Rule absolute, to enter verdict for 2l. 3s. 8d. No costs to be allowed which would not have been paid if a new trial were granted.

Saturday, June 12.

CANNON v. REMINGTON.—Hill, Q.C. and Unthank, shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained by Spinks for a review of the taxation of costs. Spinks and Willes were heard in support of the rule.

Cur. adv. vult. to be reported.

DOE dem. ROBERTON and OTHERS v. GARDINER.—Jervis, C.J. delivered the judgment of the Court in favour of the lessor of the plaintiffs. Clark moved for judgment against the casual ejector. There had been a service on the servant, and the son of the defendant had afterwards said that the defendant had had it. Rule to show cause.

MINCHENER v. MARTIN.—Byles, Serjt. shewed cause, and stated that there was a technical omission in the affidavits on which the rule had been obtained.

Rule discharged, with costs.

WILLIAMS v. BUTLER. Rule to compute made absolute.

STEADMAN v. CHAPPELL.—No cause being shewn, Powell moved to make Rule absolute.

ANDERSON and ANOTHER v. HEYWOOD and ANOTHER.—Bramwell shewed cause against a rule obtained by Bovill for the payment by the plaintiffs of the costs of a mandamus to examine witnesses in India. It appeared that the defendants had asked the plaintiffs to admit what they wished to prove by means of the mandamus. This the plaintiffs had refused to do, and the defendants came to the Court for a mandamus, which was issued, but did not prove what they wished to be admitted. It appeared that the defendants might have ascertained this, by sending out a letter to India, in time for the trial.

Rule discharged.

HAINES v. PAYNE.—Duncombe moved for a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground that the case had been called on during the temporary absence of the counsel and attorney. The case had been called on in the inconvenient court appropriated to the trial of causes at Nisi Prius in this court, at the top of the tower. The attorney had gone into Westminster-hall to look after his witnesses, and the counsel had left the court for not more than ten minutes to speak to the attorney respecting the cause. If the court had been fit for the purpose to which it was applied, this would not have happened, as there would have been room for witnesses either in court or close at hand. The Court expressed their strong disapprobation of the present Nisi Prius court, and granted a Rule nisi, with stay of proceedings.

Trover by assignees—Notice of act of bankruptcy. A party previous to his bankruptcy deposited a quantity of timber on the wharf of defendants to be kept by them for him and redelivered on the payment of the wharfage; subsequently, on the 7th Feb. 1848, a fiat in bankruptcy issued against him; on the 9th Feb. 1848, an official assignee was appointed; 13th Feb. 1849, the adjudication was published in the Gazette: and on the 23rd Feb. 1849, the creditor's assignee was appointed; between Sept. 1848 and Jan. 1849 the defendants, at the request of the bankrupt, delivered the timber to a purchaser thereof from the bankrupt, without notice of fiat, adjudication, or act of bankruptcy to the defendants:

Held, that they were not liable in an action of trover by the assignees for the value of the timber, but were protected by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 84; also, that the issuing of a fiat in bankruptcy is not ipso facto notice to all the world of its issuing, nor on the same footing as was the old commission in bankruptcy.

This was a special case stated for the opinion of this Court; it was argued on the 11th June, 1851, but the Court, entertaining some doubt upon a point in the case not argued, it was this day again discussed. It appeared that a fiat in bankruptcy issued against one John Nash on the 7th Feb. 1848; on the 9th Feb. 1848, Cannan was appointed official assignee; on the 13th Feb. 1849, the adjudication was published in the Gazette; and on the 23rd Feb. 1849, the creditors' assignee was appointed. The bankrupt Nash, before the date of the fiat and before the act of bankruptcy, deposited with the defendants, who were owners of a wharf, a quantity of timber to be kept at the wharf by them, and delivered on payment of the wharfage; after the fiat, the bankrupt, without the knowledge of the official assignee, sold the timber, and between Sept. 1848 and Jan. 1849, it was delivered by the defendants to the purchasers at the request of the bankrupt without any notice to the defendants of the fiat, adjudication, or act of bankruptcy. The acts of conversion complained of were the delivery of the timber after the appointment of the official assignee, the property being then vested in him, and before the appointment of the creditors' or trade assignee, and the question for the opinion of the Court was whether the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the value of the timber from the defendants.

Willes appeared for the plaintiffs.

Hoggins, Q.C. for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Friday, May 7.—PARKE, B. delivered judgment.—This was an action of trover, brought to recover the value of a quantity of timber deposited with the defendants. The declaration alleged that the plaintiffs were possessed of the timber as assignees of John Nash, a bankrupt. The pleas were, Not guilty, and Not possessed. The facts were, by consent, stated for the opinion of the Court on a special case, and were as follow:—The defendants were owners of a wharf, and the bankrupt, before the date of the fiat, which it must be understood was before the act of bankruptcy, deposited the timber with them to be kept at the wharf, and delivered on payment of the wharfage; on the 7th of February, 1848, a fiat in bankruptcy duly issued against Nash, and he was duly adjudged a bankrupt, and the plaintiff Cannan appointed official assignee. On the 13th of February, 1849, the adjudication was, for the first time, notified in the Gazette, and the other plaintiffs were afterwards appointed trade assignees. After the issuing of the fiat, the bankrupt, without the consent or knowledge of the official assignee, sold the timber, and between the 11th of September, 1848, and the 15th of January, 1849, it was delivered by the defendants to the purchasers on a delivery order given by the bankrupt to them. The defendants had no notice of the fiat or adjudication, nor, as it must be understood, of the act of bankruptcy. The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the value of the timber from the defendants. For the plaintiffs it was argued that by the operation of the bankrupt laws in force at the time when these transactions took place, the property in the timber vested in all the assignees by relation from the time of the act of bankruptcy, and that the delivery by the defendant to the purchaser from the bankrupt was a conversion of the property. The cases of Cooper v. Chitty, 1 Bur. 20; Maggs v. Howell, 9 Bing. 471; Garland v. Carlisle, 9 M. & W. 152, and 4 Bing. N.C. 7, were cited, which conclusively shew that from the time of the act of bankruptcy the goods of the bankrupt cease to be his, and become the property of his assignees, who may maintain an action of trover against the sheriff who issues a writ of fieri facias against the bankrupt, subject, of course, to the various limitations created by the enactments of the various statutes on this subject. Three points were made for the defendants: first, that they were protected by the 84th section of the Bankrupt Act, the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16; secondly, that the delivery of the timber was in conformity with the contract on which it was deposited with them, and without notice of any change in the property of or title to the timber, and was not a conversion; and they were excused from any action by reason of such delivery; thirdly, that there was a variance between the declaration and the facts stated, for that the official assignee alone was possessed of the timber at the time of the conversion (that is, the delivery to the purchaser), and that the averment that all the assignees were then possessed was not made out, and the defendants were entitled to the judgment of the Court on the issue on the plea of Not possessed. There is no doubt whatever of the truth of the position advanced on behalf of the plaintiff. As a general proposition, the title of the assignees to goods has relation back to the act of bankruptcy, and, notwithstanding the great extent to which the application of this rule has been cut down, and restricted by modern enactments, it still remains a fundamental rule and principle of the bankrupt laws. (Note to Cooper v. Chitty, Smith's Leading Cases, 236; and Kynaston v. Crouch, 14 M. & W. 266.) But we think the defendants are protected by the operation of the 84th section of the Bankrupt Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, which section enacts that no person or body corporate, or public company, having in his or their possession or custody any money, goods, wares, or merchandises or effects belonging to any bankrupt, shall be endangered by reason of the payment or delivery thereof to the bankrupt or his order (not stating before the date of the commission), provided he or they had not at the time of the delivery notice of the act of bankruptcy committed. It was argued that the operation of this section was restricted to delivery before the issuing of the commission (that is now the fiat), until which time the goods might more properly be said to belong to the bankrupt. But we do not think that this is the proper construction of the section. In truth, the goods might in some sense be said to belong to the bankrupt up to the time of the appointment of the assignees. But in our opinion the words "goods belonging to the bankrupt" mean goods which belonged to the bankrupt at the time they are deposited in the possession or custody of the person or body corporate or public company delivering them, and would have continued to be his property unless an act of bankruptcy had occurred. That section was meant by the Legislature to protect wharfingers, warehousemen, or dock companies, and other parties whose trade it is to hold possession of other men's property for their convenience, which is the character the defendants filled in the present transaction. It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that their view was proved to be correct, by reason of the preceding section of the statute. This is an error. The 84th section is a perfectly independent section, and has nothing whatever to do with the preceding one. It is taken from and intended to be a substitute for the 56 Geo. 3, c. 151, which consists of two sections, and in substance contains what is contained in the 84th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 6, which consolidated all the existing bankrupt laws; and it seems to be perfectly clear that the 56 Geo. 3, c. 137, which was to extend a provision of the 1 Jas. 1, c. 15, s. 4, namely, that no debtor of a bankrupt should be endangered by the payment of his debt to the bankrupt (which must be understood to mean before he has become bankrupt), was meant to protect the wharfinger or dock company who delivered the goods to or the order of a person from whom they were received before they had knowledge that such person had become bankrupt. We are, therefore, of opinion that the defendants are protected by the operation of the 84th section. But it was contended, for the plaintiffs, that the issuing of the fiat was ipso facto notice to all the world of its issuing. If it had been a commission, it would have been such notice, according to the case of Collett v. De Gols and Ward, Cases tempore Talbot, 65; and after such a notice there might be a difficulty in saying the defendant would be excused under the 84th section. But we think that a fiat is not on the same footing as the old commission of bankruptcy was. At the time when this bankruptcy took place the statute 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, was in force; and by the 12th section, in lieu of a commission, a fiat issued under the hands of the Chancellor or Master of the Rolls, or other judge or Master of the Court of Chancery which was afterwards entered of record in the Court of Bankruptcy. In our opinion, that was not a proceeding of the same public notoriety—certainly not until it was entered of record—as the issuing of the commission under the Great Seal, and does not itself operate as a notice; and we certainly think unless compelled by authority, we ought to hold notice of an act to be knowledge of it brought home to the mind of the person to be affected by it. This being our opinion, it is unnecessary to consider the other two points raised on behalf of the defendants. The judgment of the Court, in pursuance of the authority given to us by the special case, is, that a

Nolle prosequi be entered.

FOQUET v. MOORE.

Lease—Surrender—Parol agreement.

To an action for rent the defendant pleaded an agreement for a lease, and, in the meantime, a right to occupy from year to year, but there was no averment that such agreement was in writing nor was it so proved at the trial:

Held, that the plea was bad, and that a parol agreement could not operate as a surrender of the lease by operation of law.

Debt for rent.—The first count of the declaration alleged a demise by the plaintiff to the defendant for seven years from 6th April, 1845, at a rent of 60*l*. Breach. — Non-payment of 45*l*. for three quarters' rent to January 1852. The second count alleged that defendant being tenant to the said plaintiff, applied to plaintiff to make certain alterations, which plaintiff consented to do at his own expense, in consideration the defendant would pay an additional rent of 15*l*. Breach.—Non-payment of 11*l*. 5*s*. for three quarters' additional rent to same date. There were also counts for work and labour done, and materials provided, and for goods sold and delivered, and for money paid, and on an account stated. The defendant pleaded, first, to the first count of the declaration, non est factum; second, to the first count, that after making the said indenture, and whilst the same was in full force and effect, and before the said sum of 45*l*. became due, &c. it was agreed between the plaintiff and defendant that the plaintiff should, at his own cost and charges, make certain alterations in the said premises, and that in consideration thereof he, the defendant, should give up and relinquish to the plaintiff all his, the defendant's, estate, right, title, and interest whatsoever under the said indenture, and of and in the residue then to come and unexpired of the said term, and should accept a fresh lease at a certain increased rent, to wit, 75*l*. for the four first years, and 80*l*. for the residue of the said term; and until the lease should be tendered to the defendant, he, defendant, should hold the said message and premises as tenant from year to year at the rent of 75*l*. a year for four years, and at 80*l*. for the residue of the tenancy. That the plaintiff did execute the repairs, and that the defendant in pursuance of the said agreement gave up to the plaintiff his estate, and entered upon the premises under the agreement. And that by means of the said premises the defendant was tenant from year to year, and that his title under the lease was surrendered.

Third plea to the second and third counts—Never indebted.

Replication to the first and last plea joining issue; to the second plea—De injuriâ.

The cause was tried at the Wilts Spring Assizes, before Talfourd, J. when, in support of the second plea, the facts stated were proved, but no agreement in writing was produced. A verdict passed for the defendant, with leave reserved to move to set aside the same and enter the verdict for the plaintiff on two grounds: 1st, That the agreement pleaded by the defendant was not a surrender by operation of law; and, 2nd, That the agreement proved at the trial was not the same as that pleaded. A rule to shew cause having been obtained accordingly,

Crowder (Barstow with him) shewed cause, and contended that the plea was a good plea, and was sufficiently proved at the trial; that the lease was put an end to by the acceptance of the tenancy from year to year; and that the plea was sufficient to establish a surrender by operation of law—a subsequent demise differing from the lease destroys the former demurrer. [PARKE, B.—You have stated that he became a tenant, not by a demise, but by an agreement; but you must prove that agreement in writing, otherwise if a man allowed his tenant 10 per cent. off his rent, it might be contended that that was sufficient to constitute a fresh demise at a smaller rent, and was to operate to put an end to the lease.] Hamilton v. Stead, 3 B. & C. 478; 2 Taylor on Evidence, 675; Lyon v. Read, 13 M. & W. 285; were cited.

Kinglake, Serjt. (C. Saunders with him), were not called on.

POLLOCK, C.B.—We are all of opinion that the rule in this case ought to be made absolute. The rule was obtained to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 56*l*. 5*s*. or for a verdict non obstante veredicto. We think judgment should be for the plaintiff, as the plea in question does not present a legal answer to the claim. The plea set out an agreement for a lease for seven years, and in the meantime a right to occupy from year to year, but there is no averment that such agreement was in writing, which it clearly must be to be legal under the Statute of Frauds, and it must so have been proved at the trial. If the plea were to be taken as proved by the fact of proving a parol agreement, I am not prepared to say that it would not be good after verdict, but as no writing was produced, we think the plea was not made out. It would be most dangerous to permit leases to be got rid of by a constructive tenancy from year to year by such parol agreements as this, for which no written evidence exists. There must, therefore, be a verdict entered for the plaintiff for 56*l*. 5*s*. It appears to me that there is no pretence for entering the verdict merely non obstante veredicto.

PARKE, B.—I am of the same opinion. I have heard no answer to my proposition that the defendant must shew to the Court and jury the facts alleged in his plea, in order to constitute a surrender by operation of law. The plea states an agreement that the plaintiff should do certain repairs, in consideration whereof the defendant should relinquish the then existing and should accept a fresh lease for seven years, and that in the meantime he should hold as tenant from year to year. That the plaintiff did execute the repairs, and that the defendant, in pursuance of the said agreement, gave up to the said plaintiff his estate and entered upon the premises under the agreement, concluding that by means of the said premises, the defendant was tenant from year to year, and that his title under the lease was surrendered. That agreement, therefore, must be proved, and it must be proved by writing, according to the Statute of Frauds. But there was no writing produced. The sole question is, whether the plea was proved, and it certainly has not been proved. The plea might have been demurred to, for not alleging the agreement to be in writing, but it might be good after verdict, and the agreement alleged might be taken to be proved. But here there was no such proof. There ought, therefore, to be a verdict entered for the plaintiff.

ALDERSON, B. concurred.

MARTIN, B.—I am of the same opinion. I think that this plea was not proved at the trial. At first I was impressed with a notion that Mr. Barstow's argument, that the objection was on the face of the plea, and that the plea as proved, was correct. But, on consideration, I think differently. I am of opinion clearly that the tenancy from year to year is a tenancy created by the agreement, and that the agreement is of the essence of the plea, and must have been proved by a writing, according to the provisions of the Statute of Frauds. Therefore I think that the plea is not proved, and I am also clearly of opinion that the plea itself is bad. For these reasons a verdict ought to be entered for the plaintiff for 56*l*. 5*s*.

Rule absolute accordingly.

PHILLIPS v. POUND.

Privilege from arrest.

Where an attorney's clerk was arrested on a ca. sa. whilst going from the Master's office to Judge's Chambers for the purpose of making an application having reference to a pending suit:

Held, that he was properly arrested. The privilege from arrest, eundo et redeundo, does not extend to the clerk of an attorney.

Hannen shewed cause against a rule to discharge the defendant out of the custody of the Sheriff of Middlesex, he having been arrested on a ca. sa. at the suit of the plaintiff. The defendant, who was an attorney's clerk at the time the arrest was affected, was on his way from the Master's office in the Temple to Judge's chambers, in Clifford's-Inn, for the purpose of applying for an order having reference to a suit then pending. This rule had been obtained on the ground that under such circumstances his person was privileged from arrest In answer to the affidavit on which the rule had been obtained, it was shewn that the defendant had been twice before arrested, and that he had on each occasion claimed his privilege on the production of writs of subpœna in different actions, and it was contended that this application, if granted, would injuriously extend the cases on which parties attending courts had been allowed the exemption from civil process. He cited Newton v. Constable, 2 Q B. 157.

Hawkins, in support of the rule, referred to a case in Chancery where a learned Vice-Chancellor had held the privilege extended to a parliamentary agent while attending on a committee of the House of Lords. He cited also Meekins v. Smith, 1 Hy. Bla. 636.

By the COURT. — The defendant was properly arrested, and the rule must be discharged. The privilege now claimed was one for an attorney's clerk while attending chambers, but no such privilege existed. The benefit of exemption from arrest in civil process had always been confined to parties filling characters in which they were necessarily called upon to attend courts of justice - such as counsel or attorney engaged in a cause, or witnesses under subpœna, and had never been extended to an attorney's clerk going to the chambers of a judge to do business which might be done at any other time and by any other person. If this rule were to be made absolute, a barrister's clerk would be privileged also while he was taking his master's bag down to Westminster-hall and on his return to chambers. This was absurd; and as for some attorneys' clerks, if this application were to prevail, they would enjoy a perpetual privilege, for they might be said to be always either at the judge's chambers, or going thither or returning thence. Rule discharged.

BENHAM, P.O. v. THE UNITED GUARANTEE AND LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

Where in an action on a guarantee policy to the question "In what capacity do you intend to employ A. B. and when and how often will his accounts be examined and closed, and what salary do you intend to give him?" the plaintiff answered that "the accounts would be examined every fortnight," and in the policy it was recited that these questions having been answered, and such answers being believed to be true, they formed the basis of the contract

Held, that such answers did not amount to a warranty, and were not intended to be more than a declaration of the course intended to be pursued, and that if bonâ fide made the plaintiff was entitled to recover on the policy, although the loss was mainly occasioned by his neglect to examine the accounts.

This was an action on a policy for 200*l.* effected by the plaintiff on behalf of the Marylebone Literary Institution with the defendants, as surety to that amount for the honesty and good conduct of R. Weir as secretary of the institution. The defendants paid 11*l.* 8s. 11d. into court, and as to the residue (188*l.* 11s. 1d.), they pleaded in substance that when the policy was proposed certain questions were submitted by them to the Institution respecting the risk, and among them, this—"In what capacity do you intend to employ A. B. and when and how often will his accounts be examined and closed, and what salary do you intend to give him?" To this question the Institution answered in writing that "A. B. would be employed in the capacity of secretary, and that the Finance Committee would examine the secretary's accounts every fortnight." In the policy which was effected it was recited that such questions having been answered, and such answers being believed to be true, they formed the basis of the contract. The plea then alleged that as to the said residue, the loss was occasioned by the neglect and default of the institution itself, inasmuch as the accounts of the secretary were not examined for a long time, and so he was allowed to become in arrear. To this plea the plaintiff demurred.

Bovill now appeared in support of the demurrer, and contended that the plea was no answer to the action, as the answers to the several questions did not amount to a warranty, but were mere representations, which, unless fraudulently false, did not affect the liability of the defendants, even though they might not have been carried out, as was the case. (He cited Shaw v. Roberts, 6 A. & E. 75.)

Lush was called on to support the plea, and contended that the case cited differed from this; the answers having been introduced into the body of the policy, became a warranty of the facts and representations therein set forth. This is a similar case to a marine policy, where the shipowner allows a statement to be inserted in the policy that the ship would sail with a convoy or a specified crew; and it has been held that in such cases the underwriters were exempt from liability if the ship sailed without convoy, or with a less complement of men than that set forth. (De Hahn v. Hartley, 1 T. R. 343.) If these answers had not been introduced into the policy, it was true that they would not amount to a warranty; but having been so introduced, they assumed the character of a warranty, and the plaintiff could not recover if the mode of examination proposed was neglected. The defendants have executed many policies in this form under the bonâ fide belief that the law was as was now contended for, and it was very desirable that a deliberate judgment should be pronounced on the point as a guide for the future, it being obvious that if a man's accounts were properly examined every fortnight, the risk would be lessened, and the premium reduced in proportion.

POLLOCK, C.B.- I am of opinion that this plea is no answer to the claim of the plaintiff under this policy. Looking at all the circumstances of this case the answers to the questions only indicate the probable course to be adopted by the employers of the party whose honesty was the subject of insurance, and if they were meant to be treated as a direct warranty, the observance of which was to be a condition to the validity of the policy, the company could very easily so state it in the policy. The nature of the question so put, and the other questions associated with it, are enough to shew that it was not expected by the office, nor intended by the institution, to be more than a declaration of the course intended to be pursued, and if it was bonâ fide made, the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

ALDERSON and PLATT, BB. concurred.

MARTIN, B.- I am of the same opinion. The difference between a warranty and a representation is pointed out in Wms. Saund. 200, c. n. c. I think this was a mere representation. If the representation was false the defendants have their remedy. The Court will not construe a contract so as to defeat it, but will leave the parties to their cross action.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

PADWICK v. KNIGHT and OTHERS.

Prescription—Custom—Profit à prendre—Repairing highways—Surveyors.

The right to take soil from the close of another, for the purpose of repairing highways, by the surveyors of such highways, cannot exist by custom. Per Martin, B. Quære, whether there might be such a right by prescription in the inhabitants of a parish.

Trespass quare clausum fregit. The declaration alleged a trespass, by breaking and entering a close of the plaintiff's, called Beach Common, situate in the parish of Hayling, in the county of Southampton, and by digging up and carrying away sand, gravel, and soil there being. The second plea alleged that all persons whose office and duty it was to repair the highways in the parish of Hayling had, and that the defendants, as the surveyors of the highways within the parish of Hayling, for the full period of thirty years, before, &c. had the right of entering the plaintiff's close, and of raising and digging up, and carrying away the sand, gravel, and soil for the purpose of repairing the highways within the said parish of Hayling. The third plea alleged the prescription to be sixty years, and the fourth alleged the custom to be from time immemorial.

To these pleas the plaintiff demurred.

M. Smith, in support of the demurrer.- The prescriptive right alleged in the pleas cannot be claimed either by the inhabitants or by the surveyor of highways. They are not a corporation, and, therefore, cannot acquire the right themselves. The stat. 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 1, did not intend to give a new head of prescription, but extends only to claims cognisable at the common law. This is no prescription; if anything it is a custom, and a bad custom. A prescription by the common law can only be in a man and his ancestors, or in a corporation, which has succession. (Co. Litt 113, b.) These surveyors are mere statutable officers. As a claim by custom, this is a claim of a profit à prendre, and to support it it ought to be laid in the inhabitants, but they cannot enjoy by custom such a right in another man's soil. (Clewitt v. Tregonning, 3 A. & E. 554.) But even if they could, they can only claim it by prescription. A right of this sort cannot subsist by custom. (Gateward's case, 6 Rep. 59, b; Grimstead v. Marlowe, 4 T. R. 717; Mellor v. Spakeman, 1 Saund. 57; Rogers v. Brenton, 10 Q.B. 26.) These pleas are framed under 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 5, but that enactment was not intended to apply to a right of this description; it only provides for a case where a party claims an estate in fee, and in that case alone is it applicable.

Kinglake, Serjt. and R. Clarke, contrà. — The construction of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71, contended for is not the correct construction; that Act extends the rights which could be enjoyed by common law in the lands of another. (He read the first section of the Act.) [ALDERSON, B.—The preamble shews that it was not intended to establish a fresh prescription.] But the enacting part goes beyond it and is not to be controlled by the preamble, and the question depends on the proper construction of the enacting part. He cited Salkeld v. Johnson, 1 Hare, 196; 6 Jur. 210; and contended that although that case was decided on another Act (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 100), yet the same argument was applicable. This is a right such as might be enjoyed by common law. The cases cited on the other side for the purpose of shewing that a custom in the inhabitants of a parish to take the soil of a close is bad, are distinguishable; in those cases the alleged custom was for their individual use, but this is for a public benefit; this is a custom in all persons whose duty and office it is to repair the roads, to take a part of the soil or waste between high and low water-mark, to make and repair the roads of the parish. The parishes are liable to repair, because they are the portion of the public on whom the law has cast the obligation, and the custom for the surveyor to make the repairs may well exist. (Mayor and County of Lyme Regis v. Taylor, 3 Lev. 160; Blundell v. Caterall, 5 B. & Ald. 268; Pearson v. Smith, 9 A. & E. 106; Com. Dig. tit. Prescription, A.)

By the COURT. The pleas are bad. No such right as that claimed can exist by custom.

MARTIN, B.—I concur with the rest of the Court, but I am not so clear but that there might be a prescription in the inhabitants of a parish to take soil from the close of another for the repair of roads repairable by them.

DAY v. CARR.—Lush shewed cause against a rule obtained for an attachment against one T. W. Thomas, for rescuing goods seized by the sheriff, under a writ of fi. fa. for 182*l.* odd, issued against the defendant Carr. The affidavits in support of the motion were defective, and did not shew that the goods alleged to be rescued were the goods of the defendant, and seized by the sheriff. HILL v. PHILP.—Chandler moved for a rule that the Master review his taxation herein, double costs having been allowed under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 105. Rule nisi.

NORTON v. WELLS.—Jos. Addison shewed cause against a rule obtained for payment of a sum of money pursuant to an award, and the Master's allocatur. He contended that this rule, as drawn up, did not give him the requisite number of days' time to appear to shew cause against it, according to the practice of this Court. (See Arthur v. Marshall, 2 D. & L. 376.) By the COURT—The Court have power to order a return of a rule like this when they please; the report of that case is wrong. (See it corrected in the report belonging to the Court.) There were other objections to the award, and he submitted the party should be left to bring an action, and not have summary redress. Rule absolute.

BUTLER v. ALDON.—A person, in his lifetime, had, it was alleged, made an arrangement with the plaintiff that the plaintiff should bury him after his decease, in the same manner, by furnishing necessaries for his funeral, as the plaintiff had for that person's brother; a time was agreed for payment, and a sum of money to be put away for the purpose; the person subsequently died intestate, leaving about 500*l* he having before his death made a settlement of some 8,000*l.*; 50*l.* was found in an envelope in one of his drawers. The plaintiff furnished all things necessary for the funeral, and charged 53*l.* 1s. The defendant obtained administration, and the plaintiff sued him for the amount in his own right, not as administrator; the cause came on for trial before Platt, B. when a verdict was given for the defendant; a rule nisi was obtained to set it aside, and enter it for the plaintiff for the amount claimed. Willes and Phinn shewed cause, and referred to Corner v. Shew, 3 M. & W. 350; Price v. Wilson, and Green v. Salmon. Robinson, contrà. There was no contract proved to have been made by the plaintiff with the intestate in his lifetime, the defendant was liable personally. The COURT said that the question as to whether there was a contract or not, must be submitted to the jury, and, therefore, a new trial must be had. Rule for a new trial.

COOK v BATTY.—This was an action against the defendant, in consequence of one of his horses at the Hippodrome, at Kensington, having kicked and injured the plaintiff's son; a verdict was returned for the plaintiff The cause was tried before Martin, B. and a rule nisi having been obtained to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial. James, Q C. and Wordsworth shewed cause. Shee, Serjt. and Hodgson, contrà, in support of the rule. The COURT said the learned Baron who tried the cause thought the injury was a mere accident, but a new trial may be had on payment of costs. Rule absolute accordingly.

Affidavits—Sworn before the attorney in the case.

Affidavits sworn before an attorney (a commissioner) in the country, who is at the time retained to obtain a rule founded upon those affidavits are bad.

An attorney in the country, who was retained on behalf of a client to obtain a rule calling upon an attorney to pay over money and answer the matters of certain affidavits, was the commissioner before whom four of those affidavits were sworn:

Held, that for this reason, they could not be read.

This was a rule calling upon an attorney to pay over a sum of money, and also to answer the matters of certain affidavits. The rule nisi was obtained upon reading certain affidavits, four of which were sworn in the country before an attorney (a commissioner) who was the attorney for the applicant in this matter actually engaged in obtaining and supporting the rule.

Maynard shewed cause, and took a preliminary objection that as the four before-mentioned affidavits were sworn before the attorney who, at the time, was engaged in obtaining this rule, they could not be received, citing 2 Arch. Prac. 1456, and the rules and cases cited therein.

Prideaux, contrà, contended that the rules in question applied only to cases where the attorney was the attorney on the record, and not to a case like the present, which was only a motion, and where there was no record. (Reed v. Cooper, 5 Taunt. 89; 5 Dowl. 409.)

WIGHTMAN, J. (after conferring with Master Bunce) said, that the Master reported that the practice was against the reception of such affidavits, and that he felt himself bound by such practice, and that he must, therefore, exclude those affidavits, though he did so, under the circumstances, with very great reluctance.

Maynard then shewed cause upon the merits.

It was ultimately arranged that the case should, upon certain terms, be referred to the Master, who was to be at liberty to look at the four affidavits above mentioned. Rule accordingly.

CLARK and ANOTHER v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE CUCKFIELD UNION.

Corporation—When liable upon a contract not under seal.

The general rule of law, that a corporation aggregate cannot contract except by deed under seal, admits of an exception in cases where the making of a certain description of contracts is necessarily incidental to the purposes for which the corporation was created; and the result of the cases upon the question is, that whenever a corporation is created for particular purposes, which involve the necessity for frequently entering into contracts for goods or works essentially necessary for carrying the purposes for which the corporation is created into execution, a demand in respect of such goods or works which have actually been supplied to, and accepted by, the corporation, and of which they have had the full benefit, may be enforced by action of assumpsit, and the corporation will be liable, though the contract was by parol only, and not by deed.

The plaintiffs, who were ironmongers, brought an action against the guardians of a poor-law union for the price of certain water-closets, supplied to the union workhouse upon the order of the guardians. There was no contract under seal; and at the trial it was objected that for this reason the guardians were not liable:

Held, however, upon the principles above laid down, that the action was maintainable.

In this case the plaintiffs, who were ironmongers, brought an action against the defendants, who were guardians of the Cuckfield Union, Sussex, for the price of certain patent water-closets supplied to the above union upon the defendants' order, and for work and labour. At the trial before the sheriff of Middlesex, it was objected, on the part of the defendants, that as they were a corporation, and the contract was not under seal, the action could not be maintained. The case, however, was left to the jury, with leave to move to enter a nonsuit, and a verdict was returned for the plaintiffs for 12*l.* 15s. 10d.

Hance moved accordingly, and cited Lamprell v. The Billericay Union, 3 Exch. 283, and Diggle v. The London and Blackwall Railway Company, 19 L. J. 308, Ex.; 5 Exch. 442; and having obtained a rule nisi, Welsby and Pigott shewed cause (in Easter Term, 1851), and they contended that this was not such a contract as was required to be under the seal of the corporation; that the general rule upon the subject is open to exceptions as where the matter is of an every-day nature, or incidental to the nature of the corporation. (They cited Payne v. The Guardians of the Strand Union, 8 Q. B. 326; 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 69, s. 7; Sanders v. St. Neots Union, 8 Q. B. 810; Church v. Imperial Gas Light Company, 6 A. & E. 486; Diggle v. The London and Blackwall Railway Company, 19 L. J. 308, Ex.; 5 Exch. 442; Lamprell v. The Billericay Union, 3 Exch. 283; 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76; The Governor and Company of the Copper Miners v. Fox, 16 Law T. 160; De Grave v. The Mayor of Monmouth, 4 C. & P. 111.)

Hance, in support of the rule, argued that the distinction to be drawn is between trading and non-trading corporations; that if this contract is good because it is incidental to the nature of the corporation, a contract not under seal might be good to build a union workhouse, at an expense of 10,000*l.* (He cited The Mayor of Ludlow v. Charlton, 6 M. & W. 815, 821; Lamprell v. The Guardians of the Billericay Union, suprà; Sanders v. St. Neot's Union, suprà; Diggle v. The London and Blackwall Railway Company, suprà.) Cur. adv. vult.

His Lordship to-day delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I have deferred giving judgment in this case, which was argued before me some time ago, in the hope that the action, which was for the sum of 12*l.* 15s. only, would have been settled, the importance of the question raised being out of all proportion to the amount in difference between the parties. The action was in debt for goods sold, and for work and labour, and upon the trial before the under-sheriff, the sum demanded being under 20*l.* the plaintiff had a verdict for 12*l.* 15s. with liberty reserved for the defendant to move for a nonsuit, on the ground that there was no contract by the defendants under seal. The demand arose in respect of water-closets, for a new description of which the plaintiffs had obtained a patent, and which were put up by them at the union workhouse, by the direction and with the approbation of the defendants, at a meeting of the board, which, it was not disputed, was regularly constructed. There were several questions that arose in the course of the cause as to the liability of the defendants, which was disputed upon other grounds; but they were all disposed of, except that which now remains for consideration,—whether, assuming the supply of the articles to have been such as was proper and useful for the workhouse, and that the defendants ordered them, at the meeting of the board, to be furnished by the plaintiffs, and afterwards approved and kept them, and that if they had not been a corporation they would have been liable to pay for them, yet, that as the guardians of the poor are a corporation, and sued as such, they are not liable, unless they contracted under seal with the plaintiffs? The injustice of allowing the defendants to have the benefit of the work done by the plaintiffs without paying for it, makes it the more necessary to inquire strictly whether the general rule of law applies to this case, or whether it falls within any exception which may enable the plaintiffs to recover. It is no doubt a rule of law that a corporation aggregate can only contract under seal; so much inconvenience, however, arises from the strict application of the rule, that it was in very early times relaxed with respect to small matters of frequent and ordinary occurrence; the instances are mentioned in Bac. Ab. tit. Corporations, E.; Com. Dig. Franchises, T, 12, 13. This relaxation of the rule has been gradually extended, and it may now be considered that the general rule that a corporation aggregate cannot contract except by deed, admits of an exception in cases where the making of a certain description of contracts is necessarily incidental to the purposes for which the corporation was created. In most of the earlier of the modern cases the corporations have been plaintiffs, but these cases were decided upon grounds which would be equally applicable had the actions had been against them. In the case of The City of London Gas Light and Coke Companies v. Nicholls, 2 Car. & P. 365, Best L. C. J. held that indebitatus assumpsit might be maintained by the company for gas supplied—observing that it was quite absurd to say that there was any necessity for a contract by deed in such a case." The case of The Mayor of Stafford v. Till, 4 Bingh. 75, and the judgment of the Court in the subsequent case of The East London Waterworks Companies v. Bailey, in the same volume, p. 287, are direct authorities that corporations may be parties to contracts not under seal. In the latter case the Lord Chief Justice Best took a distinction between executory and executed contracts, which has not, however, been recognised in subsequent cases, considering that if the contract were executed the law would imply a promise, and no deed was necessary, as was decided in the case of The Mayor of Stafford v. Till. The power of a corporation for a particular purpose, to maintain an action of assumpsit for breach of an executory contract connected with the purpose for which the corporation was constituted, was elaborately argued and deliberately determined in the case of Church v. The Imperial Gas Light and Coke Company (in error), 6 A. & E. 846. In that case the company had brought an action against Church, upon an executory contract by them to supply gas, which the defendant (Church) refused to accept. In giving the judgment of the Court Lord Denman assumes that it is established that a corporation may sue or be sued in assumpsit upon executed contracts of a certain kind, amongst which are included such as relate to the supply of articles essential to the purposes for which it is created, and he then considers that there is no sound distinction to be taken in respect of such contracts between those that are executed and those that are executory. In repudiating this distinction, the Court of Q. B. differed from the judgment of the Court of C. P. in the case of The East London Waterworks v. Bailey, but in other respects they agreed in that decision. The case of Beverley v. The Lincoln Gas Light and Coke Company, decided about the same time, and reported in 6 A. & E. 829, is more directly in point, as the action in that case was indebitus assumpsit for goods sold and delivered against the company. The action was for the price of gas meters supplied by the plaintiff to the company under a parol contract. All the previous cases were considered by the Court of Q. B. in an elaborate judgment for the plaintiff, in which it was decided that the action was maintainable, and the company liable, though there was no contract by deed. In The Mayor of Ludlow v. Charlton, 6 M. & W. 815, decided subsequently to the cases of Beverley v. The Lincoln Gas Company, and Church v. The Imperial Gas Compan the Court of Ex. held that a municipal corporation cannot contract to pay money out of the corporation funds for improvements in the borough, except under seal, on the ground that such a contract was not within any of the exceptions to the general rule, nor of ordinary occurrence, or directly necessary for the purposes for which the corporation was instituted. Upon the same ground, the Court of Q. B. held, in the subsequent case of Paine v. The Strand Union, 8 Q.B. 326, that the plaintiff, who brought an action of assumpsit for work and labour against the guardians of the poor of the Strand Union, to recover a demand for making a plan of one of the parishes in the union by direction of the board of guardians, but without any contract under seal, was not entitled to enforce such demand, as the making the plan of a particular parish was not necessary for the guardians of the union generally, nor incident to the purposes for which they were incorporated. But in the subsequent case of Sanders v. The Guardians of St. Neot's Union, 8 Q.B. 810, the Court held that an action of assumpsit for goods sold and work and labour was maintainable in respect of the demand by the plaintiff for iron grates, supplied to the workhouse by the direction of the guardians, and erected there under a verbal order; and in giving judgment Lord Denman observed, that the defendants would not be permitted to take the objection that there was no contract under seal, if the work, when done, was adopted by them for purposes connected with the corporation. In the late case of The Governors and Company of Copper Miners v. Fox and Others, 20 L.J. 174, Q.B. it was held that the company could not maintain an action on an executory parol contract relating to the furnishing of iron rails, on the ground that the contract was not incidental or ancillary to carrying on the business of copper miners, and did not fall within any of the exceptions to the general rule, that a corporation can only bind itself by deed. In giving judgment, Lord Campbell observes, that "had the subject-matter of the contract been copper, or if it had been shewn in any way to have been incidental or auxiliary to carrying on the business of copper miners, the contract would have been binding, though not under seal, for where a trading company is created by charter, whilst acting within the scope of the charter it may enter into the commercial contracts usual in such a business in the usual manner." The result of the cases to which I have referred appears to be, that whenever a corporation is created for particular purposes, which involve the necessity for frequently entering into contracts for goods or works essentially necessary for carrying the purposes for which the corporation is created into execution, a demand in respect of such goods or works which have actually been supplied to and accepted by the corporation, and of which they have had the full benefit, may be enforced by action of assumpsit, and the corporation will be liable though the contract was by parol only, and not by deed. There is, however, a case decided by the Court of Ex. upon deliberate consideration given, which I find it very difficult to reconcile with many of the authorities to which I have referred, and with what I have stated to be the result of the cases. I allude to the case of Lamprell v. The Billericay Union, 3 Ex. 283. That was an action of covenant against the guardians of the union to recover the price to be paid according to the deed for work done under a specification in building a workhouse and for extra work. The deed provided that no extra work should be allowed for unless done by direction in writing of certain surveyors named in the deed. Much extra work was done under the direction of and adopted by the defendants and their surveyor, but no written directions were given, and the extra work could not be recovered under the deed. The defendants had made many payments on account generally in the progress of the work, and the plaintiff proposed to appropriate those payments to the discharge of his claim for extra work, and it was upon the appropriation of payment that the question arose. The Court considered that to entitle the plaintiff to appropriate the payment he must shew that there were two debts, one under the deed and the other under a parol contract, for payment for the extra work, to be implied from its being done with their assent, and they having adopted and taken the benefit of it. But the Court held that no such contract could be implied in this case, as the defendants were a corporation, and incapable of making such a contract as that for the extra work by parol. The Court in that case considered that, notwithstanding the nature of the corporation and the purposes for which it existed, it was incapable of contracting otherwise than by deed, even for such purposes as those in question, which were absolutely necessary for carrying into effect the objects of the corporation. The ground upon which a seal is required to authenticate the acts of corporations is stated in the case of The Mayor of Ludlow v. Charlton, 6 M. & W. 823. It is required as indicating the concurrence of the whole body corporate: "The seal is the only authentic evidence of what the corporation had done or agreed to do. The resolution of a meeting, however numerously attended, is not the act of the whole body. Every member knows he is bound by what is under the corporate seal." This, no doubt, is strictly applicable to municipal corporations and others of a similar character, but not so clearly to such a corporation as the guardians of a union. By the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 38, guardians of a union have the government of the workhouse; and there is a general provision that no acts of the guardians shall be valid, except at a board where three are present. By the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 69, s. 7, for the more easy execution of that Act, and of the laws relating to the poor, the guardians of the poor of every union are made a corporation, and may use a common seal. There is, however, no alteration in the law as to the power of the guardians at a board of less than three. A board of three guardians only would have power both before and after the guardians were made a corporation, to do all such acts as the whole body might do, and before they were a corporation might make all such contracts by parol, as were necessary for the purposes of exercising the powers given to them by the statutes; but after they were made a corporation for the more easy execution of the law relating to the poor, it would seem from that case that they can do no act except the most trivial, nor make any contract except under seal. The case of Lamprell v. The Billericay Union was followed by two others in the same Court; that of Diggle v. The London and Blackwall Railway Company, 19 L. J. Ex. 308; and Homersham v. The Wolverhampton Waterworks Company, 20 L. J. Ex. 193. In Diggle v. The London and Blackwall Railway Company it was held, that indebitus assumpsit for work and labour and materials could not be maintained against a railway company upon a parol contract, though the demand was in respect of taking up old rails and substituting new ones. In that case there was neither a contract under the seal of the company, nor signed by three directors, as required by the Railway Act. Homersham v. The Wolverhampton Waterworks Company was a case very similar to the last. The demand was for extra work under an implied contract, there being no express contract entered into by three directors, as required by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, s. 97. These three cases, and especially that of Lamprell v. The Billericay Union are undoubtedly adverse to the claim of the plaintiff in the present case, and I find it difficult to draw any substantial distinction between them upon the point in question. I may, however, observe, that the Court, in Lamprell v. The Billericay Union, refer to the cases of The Mayor of Ludlow v. Charlton; Arnold v. The Mayor of Poole, 4 M. & Gr.; and Paine v. The Strand Union, as the authorities upon which they rely for the principle of their decision, without adverting to that which seems, according to other authorities, an important and distinguishing circumstance in those cases, that in none of them was the subject-matter of the contract necessary or essential to the very purposes for which the corporation was created, nor is the peculiarity of the constitution of such a corporation as the guardians of a union, the object of its creation, and the powers of a quorum, at a board meeting adverted to. It may be further remarked, that the case of Arnold v. The Mayor of Poole appears to be an authority against the decision in Lamprell v. The Billericay Union, upon the point of appropriation of payments. The reason for which a seal was required to authenticate the acts of a corporation seems hardly to exist in much force in respect to the guardians of a poor-law union, who, by the statute by which they were originally constituted, act by resolutions at a board composed of not less than three. In the present case there is sufficient evidence that the work was ordered at a board of the guardians regularly constituted, that it was performed and adopted, and nothing remained but to pay for it; but the alleged contract under which it was done, though entered into by the proper authority, was verbal only. I greatly regret the present state of the law upon a subject so important. It would, perhaps, have been better, and have avoided the uncertainty which now exists, if the old rule had never been relaxed; but being as it is, the question is, whether the demand in question comes within any of the recognised exceptions to the general rule. I am disposed to think it does, and that whenever the purposes for which a corporation is created render it necessary that work should be done or goods supplied to carry such purposes into effect, as in the case of the guardians of a poor-law union, and orders are given at a board regularly constituted and having general authority to make contracts for work or goods necessary for the purposes for which the corporation was created, and the work is done or goods supplied and accepted by the corporation, and the whole consideration for payment executed, the corporation cannot keep the goods or the benefit and refuse to pay on the ground that though the members of the corporation who ordered the goods or work were competent to make a contract and bind the rest, the formality of a deed, or of affixing the seal, is wanting, and therefore no action lies, as we are not competent to make a parol contract, and therefore avail ourselves of our own disability. I come to this conclusion, though not without much doubt from the authorities in some respects being contradictory, as warranted by the cases of Sanders v. The Guardians of St. Neots, Beverley v. The Lincoln Gas Light and Coke Company, Church v. The Imperial Gas Light and Coke Company, and others of the cases to which I have adverted, by the peculiar constitution and purposes of such a corporation or the board of guardians, and by the apparent justice of the case. I therefore think the rule ought to be discharged.

EDGE v. HILLARY, Bart.

Assumpsit for goods sold and on an account stated. Pleas, except as to 171l. 7s. 6d. non assumpsit; as to that sum, acceptance of a bill then remaining due. The particulars claimed only 171l. 7s. 6d.: Held, that the defendant was entitled to begin.

The action was in assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, and upon an account stated. The pleas were, first, except as to 171l. 7s. 6d. parcel, &c. non assumpsit; 2ndly, as to 171l. 7s. 6d. that the plaintiff had received a bill of exchange, drawn by the defendant on, and accepted by, one John Kempe, payable at three months, which period had not elapsed before the commencement of the suit, on account of the said sum of 171l. 7s. 6d. The plaintiff joined issue on the first plea, and traversed the averments in the second. The particulars of demand claimed 171l. 7s. 6d.

Bramwell, Q.C, for the defendant, claimed the right to begin.

Hoggins, Q.C. contended that the plaintiff was entitled to begin, the affirmative of the issue upon the first plea being upon him.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I think the defendant is entitled to begin. The plaintiff claims only 171l. 7s. 6d. by his particulars of demand, and therefore the second plea of the defendant would, if proved, be substantially an answer to the whole action. The burden of proof of that plea being upon the defendant, he must begin.

Hoggins, Q.C. and Rogers for the plaintiff.

Bramwell, Q.C. and Aspland for the defendant.

Saturday, May 15.

(Before Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.)

COBBETT v. HUDSON.

Plaintiff—Advocate—Witness.

A plaintiff who conducts his own cause cannot also be a witness.

The action was in case against the defendant, as keeper of the Queen's Prison, for a false return to writ of habeas corpus.

The plaintiff appeared in person and conducted his own case. While opening it,

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. asked him whether he proposed to avail himself of the new Act and to offer himself as a witness? If he did, it would give rise to a very important question, whether a party could act as advocate and also as witness in his own cause. He did not know whether the point had yet been decided or raised.

Prentice, amicus curiæ, said, that in Miss Hoare's case the Court of Ex. had refused to allow her to act as counsel and witness also.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. I shall rule in accordance with that decision. To permit a party to address a jury and to excite the feelings of his hearers by commenting upon the evidence to be given, and then to give that evidence himself, would lead to the most inconvenient consequences and would pollute the stream of justice. There is no necessity for such a proceeding in the present case, for the plaintiff is suing in formâ pauperis, and I am sure that the gentleman who certified for him to enable him to appear, would appear and conduct the case for him as zealously as if he had the richest man in England for his client.

Mr. Cobbett said, that after that ruling he would not offer himself as a witness, but would tender a bill of exceptions that the point might be argued.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.--The plaintiff may have his choice to be advocate or witness, but he cannot be both. Verdict for the defendant.

Insolvent Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110—Discharge under Plea of Proof.

A. being indebted to B. and C. in two sums amounting to 80l. gave them a promissory note for 80l. Shortly afterwards he took the benefit of the Insolvent Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, but his schedule did not set forth the note so given, though the original debt to B. & C. was inserted.

Held, on action by the indorsee of the note and a plea of discharge under the Insolvent Act, that the defendant was not discharged from the note, as it was not specified in the schedule.

Debt on a promissory note for 80*l.* drawn by the defendant in favour of J. Daniels.

Plea—that the defendant was discharged from the said note by the Insolvent Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

Willes, for the plaintiff, having proved his case,

Knights, for the defendant, proved that the defendant, being indebted to two brothers named Daniels, in New Brunswick, gave one of them a promissory note for both the debts, and left the colony for England, where he shortly after took the benefit of the Insolvent Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. In pursuance of the 75th section the defendant made a schedule of his debts, in which he inserted the original debts due to the Daniels, in New Brunswick, but without making any reference to the note so given for them both as above mentioned, or to the plaintiff, who was unknown to the defendant. Under these circumstances,

MARTIN, B. was of opinion that the plea was not proved. The defendant, in order to be exempt from further liability, ought to have inserted the note in his schedule, and to have stated his ignorance of the present holder. As it is, the defendant is only discharged from the debts which were the original consideration for the note, but not from the note itse . The verdict ought therefore to be for the plaintiff, but with leave to move to enter a verdict for the defendant on this point.

Verdict for the plaintiff, 81*l.* 4s. 4d.

BRYANT v. SHORT and ELDREDGE.

Attorney and client--Privileged communication—Joint liability of two defendants.

It is not competent to ask a plaintiff on cross examination whether he did not tell his attorney that his drunkenness would be set up by the defendant in answer to the action.

In an action in the case against A. and B. the declaration alleged that A. and B. were jointly possessed of a house, and that the cellar door trap being improperly left open, the plaintiff fell through. It appeared in proof that A. was the tenant of a beer-house, and that B. was employed by the landlord to repair it, and that during the repairs the plaintiff fell through the cellar door:

Held, that there was no joint cause of action against A. and B. and that the plaintiff must elect one of them.

Case.—The declaration stated that both the defendants were possessed of a certain beer-house, and that they so negligently conducted themselves in that behalf as to leave open the trap-door of a cellar of the front thereof, so that the plaintiff fell through the said trap-door into the said cellar, and in so doing received divers injuries.

Plea.—Not guilty.

Prideaux, with him Saunders, for the plaintiff, proved by the evidence of the plaintiff, that the defendant Short having recently taken the lease of the beer-house named in the declaration, the brewers had employed the defendant Eldridge to repair it, and that the plaintiff returning home one night passed the house, fell through the trap-door into the cellar, which was not protected by any hoarding, or sufficiently lighted or watched, and so received the injuries in respect of which this action was brought.

Hawkins, in cross-examination of the plaintiff, put this question to him: "Did you not say to Mr. Hart, your attorney, that drunkenness would be set up as a defence to the action?"

MARTIN, B.—You cannot put that question to the plaintiff. It is the very sort of an inquiry which the rule of professional confidence is meant to exclude.

Hawkins submitted that the object of the question not being to elicit any facts communicated by the plaintiff to his attorney on the progress of his case, it was open to him to put it.

MARTIN, B.—I am of opinion that you cannot put any question to the plaintiff relating to what he communicated to his attorney. Everything which passes between a client and his attorney, relating to his case, ought to be free from inquiry.

Evidence rejected.

At the close of the plaintiff's case, which consisted of the above facts,

MARTIN, B, said he did not see what evidence there was of a joint duty and liability of two defendants. He was of opinion that the learned counsel for the plaintiff must elect one of the two defendants against whom to proceed.

Prideaux submitted that he was at liberty to press for a verdict against both defendants on this evidence; the declaration contained an allegation that the two defendants were jointly possessed of the house, and as that allegation was not traversed the law implied a joint duty so to use the house as not to expose the public to risk and danger.

MARTIN, B.—The allegation of the joint possession has nothing to do with the question. The evidence shows that Short was the tenant of the house, and the defendant Eldridge was employed to do the repairs, and they could not both be liable on this declaration. The plaintiff must, therefore, elect one of the two.

Prideaux contended that he had a right to go against both the defendants, and would decline to elect.

MARTIN, B.—Then I shall direct the jury that it is their duty to find a verdict for both the defendants.

Prideaux.—Then, my lord, I elect to go against Eldridge.

Hawkins then addressed the jury, and called evidence to show that the plaintiff was drunk on the night in question; that the cellar was properly lighted, watched, and hoarded; and that the plaintiff fell in through his own neglect of the caution given to him.

Ultimately the jury found a Verdict for the defendants.

IN LUNACY.

Trustee Act—Practice—Special case.

This was a petition for a vesting order under the Trustee Act, 1850.

The real estate of a married woman was vested in trustees, in trust for the married woman during the joint lives of herself and her husband, for her separate use, with remainder, in case she survived her husband, to her absolutely; but in case she died in his lifetime, to such uses as she should by will appoint. No trusts were declared in default of appointment. The married woman executed a mortgage of her real estate by deed, enrolled under the Fines and Recoveries Act.

One of the trustees had become lunatic.

Toller, on behalf of the married woman, appeared in support of a petition, praying for an order to vest the legal estate in the mortgagee.

The LORD CHANCELLOR refused to make the order, but gave leave to state a case under Sir George Turner's Act. His lordship directed the petition to stand over, and to come on with the special case, which his lordship would hear.

Re The OUNDLE UNION BREWERY COMPANY,

Ex parte CROXTON.

Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts — Contributory — Partnership — Liability of retiring partner where the stipulations of the deed of settlement are inconsistent.

C. was the holder of shares in a joint-stock company, and sold them to A. By one of the clauses of the deed of settlement no member (as between himself and the partnership) was to be liable for any debts, calls, or demands upon the company after he should have ceased to be a member, "save only and except for and in respect of any sum or sums which he shall or may be liable to pay by reason of any forfeiture, penalty, or misconduct;" and by another, after transfer, the former or last proprietor thereof was to be "for ever acquitted and discharged of and from all covenants, agreements, regulations, obligations, and liabilities whatsoever," in respect of the shares transferred, "save only in respect of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability which shall have been previously incurred by him, her, or them in regard thereto." The sale to A. took place two years prior to the order for winding up the company:

Held (deciding that the saving as to liability in the one clause referred to the personal liability of the members, and that such saving in the other referred to the same personal liability), reversing the order of the Master, and affirming the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, that C. was not a contributory.

The Court has no power to give the costs of an appeal against the official manager, if such appeal be brought upon the suggestion and with the sanction of the Master.

This was an appeal by the official manager from an order of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, removing the name of Mr. Croxton from the list of contributories to the above company. The facts were these:—Mr. Croxton, who was an original proprietor of twenty-five years, and who in the year 1836 had executed the deed of settlement, sold and duly transferred his shares to a purchaser. Two years after the sale, the company was wound up, and the Master, in settling the list of contributories, put the name of Mr. Croxton upon it in respect of these shares up to the date of transfer (10th Oct. 1842), and the name of the purchaser from that date. The question was, whether, upon the construction of the deed of settlement, the seller remained liable for any of the liabilities of the company antecedent to the transfer of his shares.

The clauses of the deed of settlement upon which this case depended will be found in the report of this case before the Vice-Chancellor, 17 Law T. Rep. 1.

Roxburgh (in the absence of Bacon) opened the appellant's case, and at its conclusion, without hearing Rolt and Hislop Clarke, who were for the company,

The LORD CHANCELLOR delivered the following judgment.—This point is, I think, open to no dispute. The first question is, what is the intention of the deed of settlement? It was this—that if a man sells his shares, the party buying is to stand in his place. From the time of the purchase he is entitled to take all the benefit, and he must bear all the burthen. In fact, the buyer is to stand in the shoes of the seller. Now, the 13th section of the deed declares "that no member of the company shall in any case or event (as between himself and the other members thereof) be answerable or liable for or in respect of any debts, calls, or demand upon the said company after he shall have ceased to be a member of or to have a share or interest in the capital stock of the said company in his own right or by representation, save only and except for and in respect of any sum or sums which he shall or may be liable to pay by reason of any forfeiture, penalty, or misconduct, under some clause or provision therein contained." By this section the seller, from the time of selling, is clearly exempt from all the future debts of the company; but if he has incurred any personal liabilities, "by reason of any forfeiture, penalty, or misconduct," he is not to be released from that—the debts and liabilities to which he is to remain liable are limited to those which are to arise from the several circumstances which are enumerated in that section. Then comes the 17th section, which declares that "no shareholder of or in the capital stock of the said company shall retire from or cease to be a member of or a co-partner in the same without such consent of other the proprietors or partners therein, and such approval of the person or persons, if any, who shall be or be intended to succeed him therein, as is required by these presents in relation thereto." From this, no person can be released from his liability by retiring from the partnership, nor can another person taken into the partnership be liable in his stead, without the consent of the partners to the retirement of the one, and the admission of the other. The 34th section then goes on to say, "that from and immediately after any such transfer or assignment as last aforesaid shall be made of any share or shares, the former or last proprietor thereof shall thenceforth be for ever acquitted and discharged of and from all covenants, agreements, regulations, obligations and liabilities, whatsoever, under or by virtue of these presents, for or in respect of the share or shares which shall have been by him so assigned or transferred, save only in respect of any penalties, forfeitures, or liability which should have been previously incurred by him in regard thereto. Upon this section there would have been no difficulty, but for the introduction of the words "and liabilities whatsoever, save only in respect of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability." From the first part of this clause, it is apparent that a transferror was to be exonerated from "all liabilities whatsoever," but that could never have been intended to be its meaning; for we find a subsequent exception from exoneration. Now that exception cannot be construed to mean the very same thing from which he had been previously released, and thereby re-create the liability. I consider that that part of the 34th section which exonerates a transferor from all liability, "save only in respect of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability," must be read with and held to have reference to the concluding words of the 13th section. They certainly have the same meaning; both sections refer to the liabilities from which a transferror is already released. The liabilities to which he is to remain subject are spoken of in the same sense, and in the first of those sections to which I have referred, the particular nature of the liability is expressly alluded to, and I consider that the concluding words of the latter clause must be governed by those in the latter part of the former section. The only other part of the deed which is relied upon is sec. 36. That section declares "that every person who shall hereafter purchase any share or shares in the capital of the company, and who, previously to such purchase, shall have executed these presents, or a deed of covenant prepared by the direction of the board of directors, by which he shall covenant to abide by the regulations of the company, and who, at the time of such purchase, shall be a proprietor of the company to all purposes, in respect of the shares then held by him in the capital thereof, shall, as to the share or shares so purchased, be considered from the time of such purchase a proprietor to all purposes in respect of the same shares, and shall not be required to execute such deed of covenant as aforesaid, and shall hold the shares so purchased on the same terms and conditions in every respect as the original holder of the same share or shares would have held the same if he had continued a proprietor of the company in respect thereof." Now it is said that by this clause the liability of the purchaser is limited to the time of purchase. He could not be liable except from that time, and, therefore, the clause properly points out that period as the time from which he is to be liable. The clause merely points out the time at which he is t be liable; but the extent of that liability is not to be calculated from that time. After the date of the transfer, the purchaser becomes liable not only in respect of liabilities to be hereafter incurred, but he becomes liable in the place of the original shareholder, in the same manner as the original shareholder would have been liable had he continued the owner of the shares. I am of opinion that Mr. Croxton is not liable, and that the purchaser must be considered as holding the shares with all the liabilities to which they would have been subject in the hands of the original owner.

Roxburgh asked that the costs of the official manager might come out of the estate, the appeal having been brought upon the suggestion and with the sanction of the Master.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Under the Act, I fear I can make no order on the official manager as to costs.

Appeal dismissed. Costs of both parties to come out of the estate.

Practice—Enrolment of decrees.

James Russell applied for leave to enrol a decree, his Lordship having directed that all decrees, which had not been enrolled for a particular period, should not be enrolled without the leave of the Court.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I will make the order, but I do not consider that this application is necessary. I made the order in question merely to prevent parties from hanging back for years, and then proceeding to enrol their decrees without notice to the other side; but I did not intend to entail upon parties the necessity of coming to the court for liberty to enrol.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES.)
Tuesday, June 1.
HUGHES v. MORRIS.
Contract for sale of ship—Registry Act—Specific performance—Public policy.

According to the proper construction to be put upon the 34th sections of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, a Court of Equity will not enforce specific performance of a contract for the purchase of a ship, although such contract does not affect to make a transfer of the ship, but is merely executory.

Query—Whether an action may not now be maintained at law on such a contract, although it would have been void under the old Registry Acts, 26 Geo. 3, c. 60, and 34 Geo. 3, c. 68.

This was an appeal from the decision of Vice-Chancellor Sir George Turner, under the following circumstances. The bill in this case was filed for the specific performance of an agreement for the sale of forty 64ths of the ship Virtue, formerly the property of William Williams and Joseph Sawtell, trading under the firm of Phillips and Co.; who, in the month of July 1844, became bankrupts. Joseph Morris and Philip Carrol were elected to be creditors' assignees, and Roger Kynaston was appointed to be official assignee under the fiat against them; and in the month of June 1845, Carrol was removed from being assignee. The creditors' assignees appointed W. T. H. Phelps to be solicitor under the fiat. Upon the 18th May, 1846, he served a notice upon the plaintiff, who was owner of the twenty-four other 64ths, in which he described himself as solicitor to Morris and Kynaston, assignees of the estate, and claimed title for the assignees to the forty 64ths in question. In the month of August 1846, Roger Kynaston ceased to be official assignee under the fiat, and A. J. Acraman, a defendant in the suit, was appointed official assignee in his place. In the month of March 1847, Phelps prepared and issued a hand-bill, announcing the intended sale by auction of the forty 64ths of the ship upon the 8th of April, 1847; and this hand-bill purported that the sale was to be by order of the assignees, and in the bill referred to Acraman, who was described in it as official assignee, for further particulars, and copies of the hand-bill were sent to Acraman. In pursuance of the announcement contained in the hand-bill, the forty 64ths of the ship were put up to sale by public auction under conditions of sale in which they are described as belonging to the assignees. The third and sixth of the conditions were these, that the purchaser should pay to the auctioneer immediately after the sale a deposit at or after the rate of 10 per cent. upon the amount of his purchase-money, and sign an agreement for the payment of the remainder to the solicitor of the vendor at his office in Newport upon the 30th April, or earlier if the purchaser was prepared, when the purchase was to be completed by the possession of the vessel being given up to the purchaser, and the sixth condition was that upon the payment of the remainder of the purchase-money, together with all other charges and dock dues, the purchaser should have a bill of sale from the assignees of the interest of the forty 64ths in the schooner, together with the ship's stores, sails, and appurtenances inserted in the schedule prepared, and that the vendor should not be obliged to produce any documents other than except the certificate of registry and the bill of sale from E. Phillips to the assignees of the bankrupts. The plaintiff, through the medium of Mr. Edwards, became purchaser of the forty 64ths at the auction for the sum of 375*l.* and thereupon Phelps and Edwards signed the following memorandum of agreement. Between W. T. H. Phelps, agent of the vendors of the one part, and H. Edwards of the other part: 'The said H. Edwards hath this day become purchaser of the share in the premises comprised in the annexed particulars, subject to the conditions of sale also annexed, for the price of 375*l.* and has paid unto W. T. H. Phelps, the vendors' solicitor, the sum of 37*l.* 10*s.* as a deposit of 10*l.* per cent. upon the purchase-money in part payment, and the said H. Edwards agrees to pay the remainder of the purchase-money at the time of payment mentioned in the said conditions, and upon payment thereof the vendors will execute to H. Edwards a transfer or bill of sale of such shares according to the said conditions." The deposit was, in fact, paid, as it appears upon the evidence, to the auctioneer and not to Phelps, as stated in the memorandum, upon the 28th April, 1847. Phelps, as solicitor of the vendor, wrote a letter to the plaintiff, reminding him that the transaction was to be completed upon the 30th of April, and upon the 29th of April the plaintiff paid the sum of 210*l.* to Phelps further on account of the purchase-money, and upon the 10th May, 1847, he paid him a further sum of 50*l.* The residue of the purchase-money, however, was not paid, and the bill of sale was not executed. Upon the 3rd July, 1847, Mr. Acraman, who was the official assignee under the commission, under the fiat wrote to Phelps to ascertain the name of the purchaser of the share of the vessel, and the answer to that by Phelps, on the 8th July, was, that the purchaser of the share of the vessel was Captain J. Hughes; that he was at present at sea; that he had deposited 300*l.*; and that upon his return he would complete his purchase. Upon the receipt of that letter, announcing that 300*l.* had been deposited, Mr. Acraman appeared to have written on the 12th to Phelps, when he stated that 300*l.* was deposited by the purchaser On the 13th July, 1847, Phelps answered that letter, and stated that this money not having been paid into the account of the assignees, could not be remitted until the return of the purchaser, when the whole matter would be settled together, and the bill of sale executed. Several subsequent applications appear to have been made by Acraman to Phelps for the payment of this sum of 300*l.* but no result followed from it, and it appeared, that Phelps was in difficulties, and ultimately, in October 1848, he was removed from the solicitorship. In this state of circumstances, upon the 13th of September, 1849, the defendant, the assignee, arrested the ship in the Admiralty Court. The plaintiff then offered to pay the balance of the purchase-money, and made a tender of that balance; the defendant refused to accept the tender, and therefore this bill was filed for specific performance, for an injunction, and for damages which had been incurred by the detention of the ship by the proceedings taken by the assignees in the Admiralty Court. Upon the 4th December, 1849, an injunction was granted by the Vice-Chancellor of England on the terms of the money being paid into court.

On the case coming on to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Turner, two points were taken by the defendant, in opposition to the decree sought for by the plaintiff: First, that the purchaser was not justified in paying the purchase-money to Phelps, as, according to the Bankrupt Act, he was bound to pay it to the official assignee, for whom Phelps could not be considered as an agent; that according to the condition of sale, the payment of the purchase-money and the execution of the bill of sale were to be contemporaneous acts, and that the purchaser was not justified in paying the purchase-money to Phelps without obtaining the bill of sale, which the official assignee would not have executed, without receiving the purchase-money. The second point raised by the defendants was, that the Court of Equity, could not without acting in violation of the Ship Registry Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 89) enforce performance of the contract. With regard to the first point, his Honour said that had the purchaser acted strictly according to the conditions of the sale by paying the balance of the purchase-money, and requiring the bill of sale to be executed, no question would have arisen, and that as he had created the mischief which had arisen by deviating from the conditions of sale, his Honour could not, at the suit of the purchaser, decree specific performance, upon the payment of the balance of the purchase-money. His Honour also being of opinion that the official assignee had not recognised the receipt of the purchase-money by Phelps, and upon these grounds the bill was dismissed with costs. With regard to the second point his Honour said that he thought it would be improper in him to give any opinion upon it, as he found that in Davenport v. Whitmore, 2 My. & Cr. 177, where the plaintiff's claim was founded upon an alleged equitable title in a ship by contract, Lord Langdale allowed the demurrer to the bill, and upon an appeal Lord Cottenham, though he overruled Lord Langdale's decision upon another point, declined to give any decision upon the general point.

When the case came on to be heard before the Lords Justices, counsel were desired in the first instance, to confine their arguments to the second point, on which, if their lordships took an adverse view to the plaintiff (which was the case), it would be unnecessary to consider the first point, upon which the decision of the Vice-Chancellor rested.

This point turned upon the construction of the 34th section of the last Registry Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 89), which enacts, "That when and so often as the property in any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, belonging to any of her Majesty's subjects, shall, after registry thereof, be sold to any other or others of her Majesty's subjects, the same shall be transferred by bill of sale, or other instrument, in writing, containing a recital of the certificate of registry of such ship or vessel, or the principal contents thereof, otherwise such transfer shall not be valid or effectual for any purpose whatever, either in law or in equity. Provided always, that no bill of sale shall be deemed void by reason of any error in such recital, or by the recital of any former certificate of registry, instead of the existing certificate, provided the identity of the ship or vessel intended in the recital be effectually proved thereby."

Sir W. Page Wood and W. Collins, for the plaintiffs, who appealed, contended that the language of the 34th section of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, which is the same as that made use of in 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 55, and 6 Geo. 4, c. 110, was very different from that made use of in the old Acts, 26 Geo. 3, c. 60, and 34 Geo. 3, c. 68, under which it had been decided that a Court of Equity could not decree specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of a ship; that such an agreement as that in the present case ought, under the law as altered, to be enforced, as the provisions of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, were not intended to apply to executory contracts, as was the case in 26 Geo. 3, c. 60, and 34 Geo. 3, c. 68. [Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—Public policy requires that the late Act of Parliament should be construed so as to carry into effect the intention of the Legislature. In Davenport v. Whitmore, 2 My. & Cr. 177, the Lord

Chancellor gave effect to the contract, as to the freight, yet refused to do so as to the ship itself.] Lord Tenterden, in his "Treatise on Shipping," clearly thought that the distinction between the language of the modern and the old Acts was intentional and material. (Abbot on Shipping, 50, 5th ed.; Langton v. Horton, 5 Beav. 9.) [Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—I suppose you do not contend that you can register this contract; what in effect the bill seeks is to compel the defendants to sign such an instrument as the custom-house will register.] Precisely so. (Brewster v. Clarke, 2 Mer. 75; Mestaer v. Gillespie, 11 Ves. 629, 636; Batterby v. Smyth, 3 Madd. 110; Follett v. Delany, 2 De G. & S. 235; Whitfield v. Parfitt, 17 Law T. Rep. 161; Thompson v. Leake, 1 Madd. 39.) It was contended, also, that an agreement for the sale of a ship might be enforced upon the same principle as contracts for annuities, where the provisions of the Annuity Act had not been complied with. (Ex parte Wright, 1 Rose, 308; Pritchard v. Ovey, 1 J. & W. 396.) [Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—I am not satisfied that Pritchard v. Ovey came within the Annuity Act; but if it did, I am not satisfied that it was rightly decided.] At all events, a decision which would have the effect of laying down a rule that a contract to purchase ships, which are continually being sold by auction, could not be enforced in equity, would be a great surprise upon the commercial world, and would be detrimental to the shipping interest.

Rolt and Lewis, for the defendants, were not called upon by the Court.

Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—The question before us, as to this part of the case, turns upon the construction of the 34th section of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, assisted, more or less, by the residue of the Act. It is a section which differs, in its phraseology at least, from the law upon the same part of the subject as it had at some time before existed. And it has been plausibly contended that that difference ought to have a material effect upon the construction of the language used in this section. It certainly is not to be disregarded, and it is a fair subject of observation; but, still, if the language used in the statute in force is language plain, and necessarily attended with a plain effect, according to the principles of law, it must be expounded according to that interpretation and upon those principles. It is plain that the Legislature considered itself as providing for that which was a matter of public policy,—of general interest, in this provision, and with a view to the general interest, and with a view of supporting and affecting the public policy with regard to this particular subject, it required that when and so often as the property in any ship or vessel, or any part thereof belonging to any of her Majesty's subjects, shall after registry thereof be sold to any other or others of her Majesty's subjects, the same shall be transferred by bill of sale, or other instrument in writing, containing a recital of the certificate of registry of such ship or vessel, or the principal contents thereof, otherwise such transfer shall not be valid or effectual for any purpose whatever, either in law or in equity; provided always that no bill of sale shall be deemed void by reason of any error in such recital, or by the recital of any former certificate of registry, instead of the existing certificate, provided the identity of the ship or vessel intended in the recital be effectually proved thereby. Now, this is the case of part of a vessel, belonging to some or one of the Queen's subjects, and it has been registered, and it has been sold to another of the Queen's subjects, in this sense, that it has been contracted to be sold by an agreement in writing, one of the provisions of which is that the purchaser shall be at the risk of the vessel and stores, from the time of the knocking down of the hammer, which is the time either simultaneous, in effect, with the signature of the contract, or previously to it. Any provision, therefore, which should make the property (being the risk of the vessel and stores on the one side, and the profit upon the other), at all different, or as from a different time, would be to change the contract. Now, this contract does not, to any extent, or in any sense, either accurate or inaccurate, recite the certificate of registry. It is said that this is of no importance, because this is not a bill of sale, and although it is an instrument in writing, yet it does not effect a transfer. It appears to me that that is immaterial with regard to the equitable principles, which are here called into action. What the Legislature had in view was not merely, as I apprehend, the passing or not passing of what we call the legal estate, but it had in view substantially this, that whenever property in a vessel was to be changed under certain circumstances, it was to be changed in a particular way. Now, whether it was a sale, or a contract for a sale, can make no difference. A contract for a sale is, in the view of a Court of Equity, a sale: whether an actual transfer is made is of no importance, if an actual transfer is agreed to be made, because that which is agreed to be done is in the view of a Court of Equity, for many and most purposes, held to be done. If the argument were to prevail, that that which this Act directs with respect to a sale or transfer should not extend to a contract for sale or a contract to transfer, we should, in effect, as it seems to me, be repealing the provision of this Act of Parliament, because the legal title might remain unchanged upon the registry, and the equitable interest might be continually the subject of transmission, made from hand to hand and from person to person, in a manner utterly disregarding the provisions of the Act of Parliament, and I must say that in my opinion upon a question such as this, affecting public policy and the general interest, it would be in fact to repeal the Act of Parliament. A Court of Equity is bound to follow the law where the public interest is concerned, and where provisions are given for such a purpose it must give effect to them. The case appears to me to stand exactly upon the same footing, or even stronger, against the plaintiff than the case would be of a parol contract for the sale of land without part performance. A parol contract for the sale of land, though all the money be paid, without part performance (for the payment of the money is no part performance), cannot be carried into effect if the person sued choose to avail himself of a defence; and this, as I have already said, appears to me to stand upon a principle at least as unfavourable to the plaintiff as a case of this description, because in suing upon a contract in an action, or in equity, in my opinion, the Legislature has forbidden this or any other Court to recognise it; an opinion certainly at variance with that which a very eminent common lawyer and a most distinguished Common Law judge, either has published, or permitted to be published, in a most valuable work; and it may possibly be at variance with one decision of a learned judge, the late Master of the Rolls, upon this subject, from whom also another decision has proceeded plainly in contradiction of any such opinion. Upon the whole, I am of opinion that a Court of Equity is bound to follow the law in this respect, and to declare here that there is no contract which can be recognised. How the case would be if there had been a fraud, it is not necessary to say. Fraud is as much out of the question, as in the simple case, under the Statute of Frauds, where performance is resisted, although all the money has been paid There is no fraud in the sense in which the Court is held to use the term, with reference to subjects of this description. It appears to me that relief cannot be given, and that the plaintiff must be left to such remedy by action as he may think fit, as far as the parties to this record are concerned. There may be a person off the record liable to be seriously affected by what has come under the view of the Court in this case, but at present I would rather not say any more upon that particular topic.

Lord Justice Lord Cranworth.—I am of the same opinion. I had the opportunity last night of considering the matter more fully, and I was confirmed in the opinion I had when the matter was first mentioned, and which, until doubts were ingeniously raised, I confess I never was aware that the subject was involved in any doubt; and I thought it had been perfectly clear that under the present statute, as under the old statute, there could be no transfer in equity that was not a transfer in law of the ship. The only question is this, whether the law has been altered since the year 1816, when Lord Eldon decided the case of Brewster v. Clarke, 2 Mer. 75, because there Lord Eldon distinctly decided that there can be no bill for specific performance for the transfer of a ship upon a contract of sale. That was the necessary result of that decision. Has it been altered in any way so as to alter the principle—so as to affect the principle upon which that decision went? The suggested alteration is, that whereas originally the Legislature had said no transfer shall be valid that is not in a particular mode, a few years after the original statute it was said doubts had been entertained whether it extended to contracts; and then it was enacted that contracts and agreements for sale were also void. That was the state of the law when Brewster v. Clarke was decided. But, then, it is said, since that case was decided, namely, first, by the statute of 6 Geo. 4, c. 110, when the navigation laws were consolidated; and subsequently by those of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 55, when they were again consolidated; and ultimately by the Act of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, when they were lastly consolidated, that the provision as to agreements has been omitted. That is so; and Lord Tenterden undoubtedly says—having no doubt in his eye several decisions at law that had taken place during the time that he was Chief Justice, shortly before the passing of the first Consolidation Act of Geo. 4,—he says that alteration makes a difference, for that now contracts are not prohibited,—not in terms. I am not clear that he may not be quite right in that. It may be, that now an action may be maintained upon a contract for a sale of a ship, which would have been void before, under the laws as they were before they were consolidated in the reign of Geo. 4. That may be so, but what we have to consider is, what is the effect of the recent enactment upon equitable consideration with regard to ships? I confess it seems to me that it leaves the matter exactly where it was before, because what is said here is, "so often as the property in any ship shall be sold." The language altogether in this statute is very informal, "property in a ship to be sold;" the proper expression would be, "the ship sold," that so often as any property in any ship or vessel, or any part thereof belonging to any of her Majesty's subjects shall be sold, the same shall be transferred by bill of sale," "containing such and such particulars, otherwise such transfer shall not be valid for any purpose whatsoever." What is said is, that a contract although not valid to transfer the property, may make the party the owner in equity. That would be to get rid of the whole policy of the statute, which is (whether a sound policy or not we need not inquire), but the object is, that there should be the means of seeing conclusively, by tracing from the original grand bill of sale, as it is called, from owner to owner, the ownership for all time. But if this doctrine be right that is contended for, there never need any thing appear in any document, from the very first sale, because it may well be a sale in equity (which would be just as good), and handed from party to party, and I do not see why the whole policy of the statute may not be got rid of entirely and effectually, even supposing there be an alteration in the law by the omission in the statute, which is merely an alteration with respect to a right of action and not an alteration that can affect the question of equity. I would observe, moreover, that the notion of a bill for a specific performance of the sale of a ship is a doctrine that rather stands on its own footing. It is a sale of a chattel; and I am not clear (if Lord Tenterden is right) that the remedy by action at law does not give complete relief. But I do not, however, rest upon that; it has a great deal pressed upon my mind; but, supposing I am wrong in that, still the effect of the present statute is the same in effect as the old statute, and prevents any transfer in equity either by contract or otherwise.

The Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—The respondent will take the deposit, and no other costs. It will be understood that it is to be without prejudice to an action.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by J. Macaulay, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Feb. 14 and 21, and March 31.

Holliday v. Overton.

Will, construction—Appointment—Equitable estate—Fee simple—Words of limitation.

Certain real and personal property belonging to D. was upon her marriage conveyed and assigned to trustees "in trust to pay the income thereof to D. for life, and after her decease to stand possessed thereof upon trust for such persons and purposes and in such manner as D. in and by her last will and testament, or instrument testamentary or in the nature of a will, in writing, to be signed and published by her in the presence of three or more credible witnesses, upon testamentary considerations only, during the intended coverture, should direct or appoint;"

Held, that the power was limited as to the time of its being exercised to the coverture of D. the words "during her intended coverture" qualifying all the preceding words of the clause, and that, therefore, an appointment after the determination of the coverture by the death of the husband was unauthorised by the power, and invalid.

The property was, in default of appointment, limited in trust for the children of D. equally to be divided between them as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants.

Held, that, for want of words of limitation, the children, in default of appointment, only took life estates in the property.

This was a claim filed by three of the children of Mrs. Mary Drayton, to establish the validity of an appointment made by her in their favour of certain property over which she had a general power of disposition. Mrs. Mary Drayton had, by her first husband, Mr. Heathcote, six children, of whom the plaintiffs, Mary Henry Holliday, widow, Julia Henry Oukama, widow, and Laura Henry Heathcote, were three, and, on the second marriage of Mrs. Drayton, a settlement was executed, bearing date the 23rd of September, 1835, whereby certain real estates, the property of Mrs. Drayton, then Mrs. Heathcote, and certain personal property also belonging to her, were respectively conveyed and assigned to Thomas Ventom, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust, after the solemnization of the then intended marriage, to pay the rents, issues, and property of the said real estate, and the interest, income, and annual payments of the said personal estate," to the said Mary Drayton (then Mary Heathcote) during her natural life, for her separate use and benefit, without power of anticipation, from and after the decease of the said Mary Drayton; then to stand seised and possessed of the said premises, in trust to and for such person or persons, and to and for such trusts, interests, ends, and purposes, and in such manner respecting the same, and of all and every part thereof, as the said Mary Drayton, in and by her last will and testament, or instrument testamentary, or in the nature of a will, in writing, to be signed and published by her in the presence of three or more credible witnesses, upon testamentary considerations only, during the intended coverture, should direct or appoint; and for want, and in default of such last-mentioned direction or appointment, or as to so much and such part of the said premises whereof no complete direction or appointment should have been made, in trust for the children of the said Mary Drayton equally to be divided between them, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants." William Overton was afterwards duly appointed a trustee in conjunction with Thomas Ventom. Mrs. Drayton, in pursuance of her power of appointment, duly executed a will or testamentary instrument in the life-time of her husband, Mr. Drayton, bearing date the 24th day of January, 1832, and she also duly executed a codicil thereto, dated the 11th of April, 1843. The will and codicil remained unrevoked and uncancelled at and after the death of Mr. Drayton; and Mrs. Drayton thereby gave, devised, bequeathed, and appointed all and every of her estate and effects real and personal, and of what nature or kind soever, unto and for the use of her daughters, the plaintiffs, and her daughter, the defendant, Sabina Henry Wenman, their respective heirs, executors, and assigns, as tenants in common. After the decease of Mr. Drayton, however, Mrs. Drayton having been advised that in consequence of the husband of the plaintiff, Julia Henry Oukama, being one of the attesting witnesses to the will of the 24th of January, 1832, the said Julia Henry Oukama could not derive any benefit from it, she destroyed the will and codicil so executed by her in her husband's lifetime, and duly executed another will, bearing date the 13th of November, 1845, and thereby, after revoking all wills and testamentary dispositions theretofore made by her in exercise of the power reserved to her by the said indenture of settlement, and of all other powers and authorities enabling her on that behalf, gave, devised, bequeathed, and appointed all the said trust estates and premises unto and among the said plaintiffs, and the said defendant, Sabina Henry Wenman, in the same manner as she had done by her former will and codicil, except that on consideration of her daughter, Mary Henry Holliday, having had the sum of 500*l.* left her by the late brother of Mrs. Drayton, she stated that it was her wish and desire that the said plaintiff, Mary Henry Holliday, should receive 500*l.* less than her three sisters. The testatrix thereby also nominated the said William Overton and Thomas Haywood executors of her will. Mrs. Drayton died on the 16th May, 1848, and on the 6th November following her executors proved her will of 1845 in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. After the death of Mrs. Drayton, Thomas Ventom and William Overton, the trustees of the marriage settlement of the 23rd September, 1835, disputed the title of the plaintiffs and the defendant, Sabina Henry Wenman, to the trust property of which they were the appointees, on the ground that Mrs. Drayton had no power under the clause in the marriage settlement creating the power to appoint the trust property by a will executed by her after the death of her husband, Mr. Drayton, and that the appointment was invalid and the property was divisable among all the children of Mrs. Drayton as in default of appointment. The plaintiffs accordingly filed a claim to establish the validity of the appointment and praying a declaration by the Court that the will or testamentary appointment of the 13th November, 1845, was a valid execution of the power of appointment given to Mrs. Drayton in and by the indenture of settlement of the 23rd September, 1835, and that the plaintiffs and defendant, Sabina Henry Wenman, or she and her husband in her right, might be declared to be entitled in equity to the trust estate, moneys, funds, and premises comprised in and conveyed and assigned by the indenture of settlement, and to the rents and profits, interest, dividends, and annual proceeds thereof, accrued due since the death of the testatrix, Mrs. Drayton.

Lloyd and Speed, for the plaintiffs, contended that the power could be exercised after the determination of the coverture. Mrs. Drayton, at the time of making the settlement in question, was a widow with children by her first husband, and the property settled belonged to herself. The object of the settlement, therefore, was merely to protect herself against the marital right of her second husband, and after the coverture was determined she was at liberty to do as she pleased. There was no reference, moreover, in the recitals to the time during which the appointment was to be made; and as to the testamentary considerations spoken of, they meant considerations of pure bounty; Mrs. Drayton was not to give a bond nor execute any contract for sale. (Onions v. Tyrer, 1 P. W. 343, 345, was referred to.)

R. Palmer and Sheffield, for the defendants Mr. and Mrs. Wenman, insisted that for the proper construction of the clause creating the power it was necessary to divide it into two branches, one before and the other after the word "or," that is, the first "or." It would thus be found that the power contemplated two modes of appointment, first by will and the second by instrument testamentary, or in the nature of a will in writing to be signed, &c. And in support of that view of the case they contended that a will executed by a married woman during coverture is not properly a will, but it is a testamentary instrument; and, besides, the form prescribed as to the signing and publication in the presence of three witnesses had reference to the testamentary instrument, for the law required the will to be attested by three witnesses.

The MASTER of the ROLLS had no doubt whatever as to the proper construction. It would be contrary to all principle to make a distinction between the two modes of appointment. The words "during the coverture" were intended to apply to the whole clause, and not merely to the latter branch of it, to which it appeared to his Honour, it would be inconsistent with all the rules of construction to restrict it; and he could not, from any consideration of inconvenience that might result from the larger construction, so restrict it. He entertained not the least doubt that the appointment in 1845, made, or purporting to be made, in exercise of the power, was wholly invalid, and there must be a declaration that there was no valid execution of the power, and an inquiry must be directed as to the receipt of the rents.

Saturday, Feb. 21.—The appointment having been held void, the cause now came on again to be heard on the question as to who were the parties entitled in default of appointment.

Lloyd and Speed, for the plaintiffs, contended that, as the clause in the settlement giving the property to the children of Mrs. Drayton in default of appointment contained no words of limitation, they took only a life-interest therein, and that, subject to that life-interest, the fee-simple in the real estates and the absolute interest in the personalty were vested in Mrs. Drayton, and would therefore pass to the plaintiffs and defendants, Wenman and wife, under the gift to them contained in her will.

Amphlett, for Ann Heathcote, the widow and executrix of Henry Spencer Heathcote (Mrs. Drayton's only son) and for Alfred Spencer Heathcote, his heir-at-law, contended that the clause in question gave a fee and not merely a life estate. A use in fee might have been raised before the Statute of Uses without words of limitation, but after the passing of that statute the common law rule was held to apply to uses, and therefore the words here would have conferred a fee. But however that may be, where there is a contract between parties for a valuable consideration, and the intention is that a fee should pass, the Court will give effect to the contract. The intention is apparent from the recital to pass the whole fee, and the children of the first marriage are within the consideration of the settlement on the second marriage. The limitations may be defective, and if the estates were legal, it might be necessary to rectify them; but this is a mere declaration of trust. He cited Shelley's case, 1 Rep. 100; Moore v. Cleghorn, 10 Beav. 423; Challenger v. Shepherd, 8 T. R. 597; Newstead v. Searles, 1 Atk. 264; Knight v. Selby, 3 Scott, N.R. 409; Shep. Touch. 521, 522.

Lloyd, in reply, contended, that the distinction taken between legal and equitable estates was not well founded; and as to the intention of the parties, that was merely a ground (if such intention appeared) for applying to the Court to have the settlement rectified. Then, as to the rights of the children under the deed of settlement, they were not parties to it, and did not come within the marriage consideration; and though the father is under an obligation to provide for his children, the mother is not, and a meritorious consideration is not sufficient to support their claim on the footing of contract. [The MASTER of the ROLLS referred to Johnson v. Legard, T. & R. 281.]

Tuesday, March 30.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—In this case I reserved my judgment on one point only. The question originally raised by the claim was whether the power given to the wife was one which could be executed by her when not under coverture; and I am of opinion that the words of the deed limited the service of the power to the period of coverture. But in the course of the argument it appeared that the gift over in default of appointment was in these words, namely, "in trust for the children of Mary Heathcote, equally to be divided between them, share and share alike, as tenants in common and not as joint tenants," and not containing any words of inheritance; and which, therefore, according to the ordinary rule of construction in such cases, would have restricted the interest taken by the children to life interests. The claim stood over for the purpose of Mr. Amphlett considering whether any distinction could be found in the circumstances of this case to alter or prevent the application of the general rule, and accordingly several arguments and authorities were adduced for this purpose; but after an attentive consideration of them I am of opinion that they do not affect this case. It was first endeavoured to bring this case within the rule which applies to executing instrument, on the ground that this was a contract to convey the fee, and that the children were purchasers within the contract. There is, however, nothing executory in the frame of this instrument; it is to all intents a deed executed, and which does not require any further or additional instrument to give it validity or force. It was further contended, that upon the true construction of this instrument the children must be considered as purchasers, and that, being purchasers, this gives a construction to the declaration of trust, which will vest the fee in those children, without the necessity of employing any words of inheritance for this purpose; and Sheppard's Touchstone, and a passage in Shelley's case, 1 Rep. 100, are cited to establish this position. The passage in Sheppard's Touchstone, 521, 522, is to the effect, that in the case of a purchaser for valuable consideration, and a declaration of the use to the purchaser, omitting the word "heir" would not deprive him of the fee. The passage in 1 Rep. 100, is to the same effect. It refers to a case where the words of the instrument are governed by the interest of the parties for the purpose of shewing that a use before the stat. 27 Hen. 8 was merely regarded as a trust. It is to this effect—"That a man shall not have a fee-simple by a feoffment or grant without these words, 'his heirs,' and yet the law is plain, that if a man had, before stat. 27 Hen. 8, bargained and sold his land for money without these words 'his heirs,' the bargainee hath a fee-simple, and the reason is because, by the common law, nothing passeth from the bargainor but a use, which is guided by the interest of the parties, which was to convey the land wholly to the bargainee; and forasmuch as the law intends that the bargainee paid the very value of the land, therefore, in equity and according to the meaning of the parties, the bargainee had the fee-simple without these words, 'his heirs,' as it is held in;" and then he refers to several cases in the year-book to establish that proposition. Undoubtedly, if these children mentioned in the settlement could be considered as purchasers within the meaning of the words employed in these passages, some arguments might be founded upon these authorities; but, in truth, the observation that the children are purchasers within the meaning of the settlement does not advance the argument a single step. They are not purchasers of the fee-simple or of any estate of inheritance, under any contract; though they may be purchasers within the consideration of the marriage contract, they are purchasers only of such interest as the settlement gives them, which brings it back to the former question, namely, what the interest is which is given them by that settlement; and this is a mere question of intention. The case of Newstead v. Searles, 1 Atk. 264, to which I was also referred, does not advance the case beyond what I have already stated. It is there attempted to control the effect of the limitations contained in the deed by force of the recital contained in the earlier part of the deed; but even if this were admissible, it would not advance the argument, for in this recital, there is, in my opinion, nothing leading to the conclusion that the children were to take the fee; on the contrary, the recital is simply for the purpose of making a provision for the children upon the trusts after mentioned. The words of the recital are these,—"And after her decease, for the further purpose of making of the reversion"—there is some error in the copying of the deed,—"for making of the reversion and principal thereof, a provision for the children of her former marriage, subject, nevertheless, to the power of appointment on the part of the said Mary Heathcote, by will or testamentary instrument to be executed in manner hereinafter provided, upon such trusts and with, under, and subject to such powers, provisoes, and declarations as hereinafter contained;" that is to say, the recital is for the purpose of making a provision for the children by a reversion or principal. It is then limited upon the trusts, and, according to the provisions and declarations contained in the subsequent part of the instrument. This obviously leaves the trusts, declarations, powers, and provisions to be construed according to such import as the Court shall consider to be the true import to be applied to these words when you look at the limitations themselves. The cases of Challenger v. Shepherd, 3 T.R. 597; Knight v. Selby, 3 Scott, N.R. 409; and Moore v. Cleghorn, 12 Jur. 591; were all cases of wills, where, upon the true construction of the words of the will, the Court held that the fee passed to the devisee, although the word "heirs" was omitted. But the rules applicable to the construction of wills or of executory instruments are not, in truth, applicable to the present case, which is the simple case of a deed executed, where I am bound by the strict rules which are applicable to a case of that description; and I must therefore hold that the children only take life estates in the property under these limitations in default of the due execution of the power. I am very much disposed to believe that it is a stop in making the settlement.

[N.B.—This decision has since been affirmed by the Lords Justices on appeal.]

VICE-CHANCELLOR TURNER'S COURT.

Reported by J. HENRY COOKE, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

March 12, 16, and 27.

JONES v. MAGGS.

Bequest—Accumulation portion—Thellusson Act.

A sum of money was bequeathed to trustees to accumulate the same at compound interest until a child of A. B. should attain the age of twenty-one years, and then to divide the accumulated fund among all the children of A. B. who should be then living, and if but one, the whole to be paid to that one. The residue was given to A.B. A. B. had one child living at the date of the will and at the death of the testatrix, which died under twenty-one. A. B. filed a claim for the payment to him of the dividends on the sum, and the accumulation of such dividends beyond twenty-one years from the death of the testatrix:

Held, that the sum of money bequeathed was not a portion within the meaning of the statute 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98; and that a portion means a sum of money secured to a child out of property, the income of which is given to its parent, and that a gift to a parent of a residue does not make a previous gift to his child out of the general personal estate a portion within the meaning of the Act:

Held also, that the parent was entitled to a decree according to the claim.

This was a claim raising a question under the Thellusson Act, 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98. Ann Jones by her will, dated in August, 1826, bequeathed certain specific legacies, and then proceeded thus: "And I give, devise, and bequeath unto Ambrose Eyles and Charles Maggs, and the survivor of them, his executors and administrators, all the residue of my estate and effects whatsoever, upon trust, to invest in the 4*l.* per cent. Consolidated Annuities, the sum of 200*l.* sterling, and to receive and invest the dividends arising therefrom, from time to time, in the same stock, to form an accumulating fund, until a child of my brother, Thomas Potter Jones, shall attain the age of twenty-one years; and on such event taking place, upon trust to divide the said stock, with its accumulations, in equal shares, between all the children of my said brother who shall then be living; and if only one child of my said brother shall then be living, upon trust to pay the same unto such only child. And as to the residue of my estate and effects, after investing the 200*l.* sterling in the 4*l.* per cent. Consolidated Annuities, upon trust, after paying my debts, funeral expenses, and the expenses of proving this my will, to pay the same to my said brother, to whom I give the same, as soon as conveniently may be after my decease; and I appoint the said Ambrose Eyles and Charles Maggs executors of this my will." Ann Jones died in October following, and her will was proved by the executors in November in the same year. The 200*l.* was invested in December, in the names of the executors, in the purchase of 203*l.* 6s. 1d. New 4*l.* per Cents. Mr. Eyles died in 1841. Mr. Thomas Potter Jones, the testatrix's brother, had one child born in 1825, and which died in 1827, and he never had any other child up to the time of filing the claim in 1852. This claim was for payment of all the dividends on the sum of 200*l.* beyond those which accrued within twenty-one years from the death of the testatrix. By the 1st section of the Thellusson Act, it is enacted that "no person shall by deed or will settle any real or personal property so that the rents or interest shall be wholly or partially accumulated for any longer term than the life of the settlor, or the term of twenty-one years from the death of the settlor, or the minority of any person living at the time of the decease of the settlor, or during the minority of any person who, if of full age, would under the deed or will be entitled to the rents or interest directed to be accumulated; and in every case where accumulations shall be directed contrary to these provisions, such directions shall be void, and the rents or interest directed to be accumulated shall, so long as the same shall be directed to be accumulated contrary to the provisions of this Act, go and be received by the person who would have been entitled thereto if such accumulations had not been directed." For the plaintiff the above section was relied on; and it was contended that the words of the statute, "during the minority," &c. must be taken to mean some person in existence when the deed or will creating the trust for accumulation came into operation, that is in this case at the time of the death of the testatrix. In support of this point, the cases of Longdon v. Simpson, 12 Ves. 295; and Haley v. Barmister, 4 Madd. 275, were cited. It was also argued that no period could be allowed between the death of the testatrix and the birth of the person on whose minority the accumulations were to depend, the life of such person being intended to be then existing. (Ellis v. Maxwell, 3 Beav. 587.) On behalf of the defendant, the surviving executor of the testatrix's will, it was contended that the case came within the exception contained in the 2nd section of the statute, which exempted for its operation "all provisions for raising portions for any child or children of any grantor, settlor, or devisor; or any child or children of any person taking any interest under such conveyance, settlement, or devise," for that the plaintiff took an interest under Mrs. Jones's will, and moreover the 200*l.* was taken out of the residue. The cases of Shaw v. Rhodes, 1 Myl. & Cr. 159; Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Keen, 573; O'Niell v. Lucas, id. ib. 313; Holland v. Prior, 1 Myl. and Keen, 237; Elborne v. Good, 14 Sim. 165; Corporation of Bridgnorth v. Collins, 15 ib. 538; Holford v. Stains, 16 ib. 488; Beech v. Lord St. Vincent, 19 L. J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 131; Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 288; and Bourne v. Buckton, 2 id. ib. 91 were cited and commented on.

E. F. Smith, for the plaintiff.

Karslake, for the defendant.

Saturday, March 27.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This will directs the accumulations of the dividends "until a child of my brother, Thomas Potter Jones, shall attain the age of twenty-one years;" and there is no doubt but that the accumulation is condemned by the 1st section of the Act, unless it be saved by the 2nd section, the only part of which applicable to the present case are the words "provisions for raising portions for the children of any person taking any interest under the devise, gift, or settlement." The question then is, whether this sum here given of 200*l.* and the dividends and accumulations, be or be not a portion. I see no reason for putting a strained construction on the word "portion," as used in the Act, 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98; it would be contrary to the policy of the Act to do so. Is this provision, then, a provision for raising portions within the fair meaning of the Act? I do not conceive that it is. Portions for children are sums of money secured to them out of property, out of the income of which a provision is made for the parents; and although gifts have been held protected, as being portions within the meaning of this exception, in some cases, where the parents took no interest in the subject-matter of the gift, still this will only be where there is some settlement on the parent, and where the nature of the gift or of the context shews that the gift ought to be so held to be within the exception, and this was so in the cases cited of Bourne v. Buckton, and Eyre v. Marsden. Here the whole fund is given to the children; and there is nothing in the gift itself to impress the character of a portion on this legacy. It was said that the context shewed it to be a portion, because it was raiseable and payable out of the residue, and that the residue was given to the parent. It is payable out of the residue, but in this sense only, viz. that it is a deduction from the residue; but it is not payable out of the residue specifically, but out of the general personal estate. If such a construction were to be put upon a gift of this description,—if every gift to a child of a person who took anything under a residuary bequest were to be held a portion within this exception, nothing would be easier than to evade the Act, by giving legacies to the children of residuary legatees, and then bequeath the residue to the parent, and direct the children's legacies to be accumulated. But I do not think this is the right construction. The case of Beech v. Lord St. Vincent, which was quoted, does not seem to be in point; and I must declare the plaintiff entitled, as residuary legatee, to the dividends which have accrued due subsequent to the period of twenty-one years from the decease of the testatrix.

HYDER v. COLEMAN.

Unnecessary statements in petition—Costs.

Where in an unopposed petition unnecessary statements were introduced, the Court directed the Taxing Master on taxing the costs, to have reference to such statements.

In this cause a petition, which was unopposed, was presented for the purpose of having certain property sold by the Master by private contract.

Steere appeared for the petitioners.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the petition contained several statements immaterial to the prayer of the petition. He should, therefore, insert in the order a direction to the Taxing Master that in taxing the costs, he should have reference to the statements contained in the petition, and allow costs for such of the statements only as were required for the object of the petition.

REECE v. TAYLOR.

1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14—Charge of stock.

B. a judgment creditor of A. obtained a judge's order charging a sum of stock standing in a suit to A.'s annuity account. B. filed a claim against A. but at the hearing A. did not appear. To make the annuity fund available, it was Held, that a petition in the suit was necessary, and the Court directed that the claim should stand over and come on with the petition, but considered it unnecessary to serve A. with the petition.

This was a claim filed by Reece against the defendant Taylor for the purpose of making available a judge's order obtained under the 14th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, charging a sum of stock in Court standing to Taylor's account as follows. Under the will of a testator whose estate was being administered under the direction of the Court, Taylor was entitled to an annuity, and to meet this a sum of stock was carried to an account in the cause entitled as Taylor's annuity account. From the time of filing the claim the defendant, Taylor, had been out of the jurisdiction, but he was duly served with process. The claim coming on to be heard,

Pole appeared for the plaintiff.

The defendant did not appear.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR made the order.

Pole said that as it would be necessary to present a petition in the administration suit, in order to render the annuity fund available, it might be necessary to serve Taylor with the petition.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that such a petition must be presented, but it would be merely a matter of form, and Mr. Taylor need not be served with it. It would be better that the claim should stand over, so that the claim and petition should come on together and one order be made upon both.

HARTLAND v. DANCOCKS.

Practice.

Course of proceeding where issue directed at the hearing was abandoned by the defendants.

At the hearing of this case, which was that of a claim for foreclosure, an issue was directed upon a question of notice. Afterwards the defendants abandoned the issue, and Torriano now applied to the Court to have the claim restored to the paper.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he considered the proper course was that the plaintiff should give notice of motion that the issue should be taken pro confesso. On this motion coming on, an order would be made, the effect of which would be that the trial of the issue would be dispensed with, and the claim would be in the same situation as if the issue had been tried and found in favour of the plaintiff.

MARTIN v. PYCROFT.

Specific performance—Statute of Frauds.

A. by writing agreed to grant a lease to B. and by parol it was agreed that B. should pay 200l. premium. B. filed a claim for specific performance, offering to pay the 200l.; but the Court holding that, consistently with the Statute of Frauds, specific performance could not be decreed, dismissed the claim without costs.

This was a claim for the specific performance of an agreement, dated the 1st of August, 1849, and which was in the following terms:—"The said James Pycroft, J. W. Pycroft, and Joseph Pycroft severally agree with the said William Martin at any time hereafter at his request, costs, and charges, by a good and sufficient deed to demise and lease the messuage or tenement known by the name of 'The Ship Alehouse,' together with the messuage or tenement adjoining thereto, formerly used as a coffee-house, both situated in Chichester Rents aforesaid, with the appurtenances thereto belonging (as the same are now in the occupation of the said William Martin, for the term of twenty-one years wanting two days), from the expiration of the said lease under which the said William Martin now holds the same, viz. from the 27th of September, 1852, at the yearly rent of 70*l.* payable quarterly, and under and subject to such and the same covenants, clauses, and agreements as are contained in the lease under which the said William Martin now holds the said premises."

The claim stated a lease of the publichouse by Mrs. Pycroft to Mr. Calvert for a term which would expire on the 29th of September, 1852; a lease dated the 6th of April, 1832, whereby, in consideration of 200*l.* Mr. Calvert demised the publichouse to Martin, the plaintiff, for a term expiring on the 27th of September, 1852, at a rent of 70*l.* and whereby Martin, covenanted to lay out 200*l.* in repairs, that Mrs. Pycroft's interest became vested in the defendants, who entered into the before-mentioned agreement with the plaintiff; and "that it was agreed between the parties that 200*l.* should be paid by W. Martin as a premium in consideration for the lease;" it was then prayed that, on the payment of 200*l.* by Martin by way of premium, which payment he was ready and willing and offered to make, a lease might be granted to him according to the terms of the agreement.

Daniel and Dauney appeared for the plaintiff.

Malins and W. R. Ellis, for the defendants, objected that the plaintiff was precluded by the Statute of Frauds from obtaining the specific performance of this written agreement with a parol addition.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR could not see how this objection upon the Statute of Frauds could be met. The agreement was for a lease "under and subject to such and the same covenants, clauses, and agreements as are contained in the lease under which the plaintiff now holds." These words appeared to prescribe the terms upon which the property was to be held after the lease was granted, and were not applicable to the consideration to be paid before. The premium of 200*l.* was not a "covenant," a "clause," or an "agreement" to be contained in the lease. There was then a written agreement for a lease without a premium. But the plaintiff said that it was always the intention of the parties that a premium should be paid, and he offered to pay the same sum as that which he had paid to Mr. Calvert. If the plaintiff had refused to perform the agreement, the defendants could not have compelled him to take a lease and pay a premium of 200*l.* A material part of the agreement had been omitted from the written agreement, and his Honour did not see how, consistently with the Statute of Frauds, the Court could decree a specific performance.

Claim dismissed, without costs.

Re THE OXFORD AND WORCESTER EXTENSION AND CHESTER JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act—Discharge of order for call, some of the contributories having, upon appeal, been struck off the list.

Daniel, on behalf of Mr. Sharp and Mr. James, renewed a motion to discharge the Master's order, dated the 10th July, 1851, for a call upon the contributories. The motion was made on the 26th of January last, but was ordered to stand over until the result of an appeal upon a question relating to the company, then about to be heard before the Lord Chancellor, was known. The Lord Chancellor having delivered his judgment upon that appeal (see 19 Law T. Rep. 193), the motion was now renewed.

Cairns, for the official manager, did not oppose the cancellation of the call. The matter must go back to the Master for a fresh calculation, as the principle of the Lord Chancellor's decision would strike off the whole of class 6 of the contributories. He would propose that it should go back to the Master with a declaration.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said he did not see any necessity for a declaration: the thing would speak for itself. Upon reading the Lord Chancellor's order, let the present order be discharged, without prejudice to any application of the official manager to the Master.

Daniel asked for costs; but

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that he had not sufficient before him to decide upon giving costs.

PERRY v. WALKER.

Practice—Proceedings in the Master's office.

The Court will not make a peremptory order that the Master shall proceed with a particular reference de die in diem, but his course of proceeding must be left to the Master's discretion.

Russell and W. R. Ellis, on behalf of the plaintiff in this case, moved that the Master should be directed to proceed de die in diem, in the accounts which had been directed to be taken by him. The decree bore date on the 28th of April, 1842, but in consequence of the changes of Masters, the death of the defendant, and other circumstances, no report had yet been made, and the decree was still being prosecuted before the Master.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without hearing Bacon and Wright, who appeared for the defendant) said that the Court must regret very much the time that had been spent in this reference; but his Honour thought the course of proceeding in the Master's office must be in the Master's discretion. The order was, that the Master should be at liberty to proceed de die in diem according to his discretion. In Purcell v. Macnamara, 11 Ves. 362, Lord Eldon considered the matter, and said when the order was made that the Master should be at liberty to proceed de die in diem, "the Master is not to conceive the order to be imperative upon him. He has complete discretion to avail himself of it or not, as the circumstances passing before him call upon him in the exercise of a sound discretion." It was impossible for the Court to know what inconvenience might be occasioned to the other suitors, if such an order were made peremptory on the Master to proceed de die in diem. As the motion was against the practice of the Court, it must be refused with costs. His Honour added, that he could not make the order, and he did not believe that any such order was ever made upon a Master to proceed de die in diem.

REG. v. THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY, ex parte GENERAL SIR C. NAPIER.

Mandamus—Military pay—Prize money.

By royal warrant, prize booty taken in the Scinde campaign in 1843 was granted to the East-India Company, to be distributed among the officers and soldiers. The prize money was distributed in two divisions. Subsequently, an order was issued by the Indian government, stating that certain charges debitable to the Scinde prize money had not been deducted from the second dividend, and ordering the amount of those charges to be deducted from the pay of the officers, which was accordingly done:

Held, that as a mandamus would not lie to enforce the pay from the company, so neither would it for the payment of such deductions, even presuming them to have been improper.

Byles, Serjt. (Willes with him) moved for a rule calling upon the East-India Company to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding them to pay to General Sir Charles Napier the sum of 20,198 rupees (2,019*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*). It appeared that in 1843 Sir Charles Napier was appointed Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's and the East-India Company's forces in Scinde, and that the campaign terminated in the annexation of the territory of Scinde to the British dominions. A large booty was taken in that campaign, consisting of gold and silver bars, jewels, ornamented arms, and other articles of great value, amounting in the whole to between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 rupees. The Crown, by a Royal warrant dated the 11th of November, 1845, granted that sum to the East-India Company, in trust, to be distributed among the officers and soldiers who served in the campaign. Sir C. Napier returned to England before the distribution of the money took place; but he again returned to India in the year ... At that time he held four different appointments: 1, that of Commander-in-Chief of the Queen's troops in India; 2, that of Commander-in-Chief of the Company's troops in India; 3, the local rank of general in India, to which no pay was attached; and, 4, that of Extraordinary Member of Council. To this latter office, when held by the Commander-in-Chief, no pay was attached. The only pay, therefore, which General Sir Charles Napier was entitled to was that attached to the office of Commander-in-Chief, amounting to 11,300 Company's rupees a-month. It was provided by the 33 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 128, that the expenses of the Queen's troops in India should be repaid by the East-India Company. Sir Charles Napier arrived in India in the month of May, 1849, and soon after his arrival, the prize money in question was distributed in two dividends. The first dividend was paid in the year 1848, and no question arose respecting that payment. In the month of July, 1849, the Indian Government ordered the payment of a second dividend, and this was accordingly paid to the officers and soldiers who had served in Scinde. But in the month of April in the following year it appeared that an order was issued by the Indian Government stating that certain charges debitable to the Scinde prize money had not been deducted from the second dividend, and ordering the amount of those charges to be deducted from the pay of the officers. In May, 1850, the pay of all the officers was stopped, and they received nothing; and the pay for a large portion of the month of June was also stopped. Sir Charles Napier then addressed a protest to the Indian Government against this deduction, the consequence of which was, that the deductions which had been made from his salary were paid to him in the month of July, 1850; but in the following months of October and November the East-India Company deducted the same amounts from Sir Charles Napier's salary as Commander-in-Chief for those months. The amount so deducted amounted, as it was stated, to 20,198 rupees, or 2,019*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* In the protest presented by Sir Charles Napier to the Indian Government in the month of May, 1850, he objected to the deductions on the following grounds:—

1. That her Majesty had given him a certain share of the Scinde prize money, and the Governor-General in Council could not legally deduct any portion from the sum without a detailed and specific account being given of such deductions. 2. That the Governor-General in Council published in his orders that certain sums, with certain deductions, were to be paid to the captors of the prize booty according to her Majesty's warrant; that the said sums were paid accordingly, and were received by the parties, in perfect confidence in the correctness of the calculations made by the Government. 3. That the present unjust surcharge created great astonishment, and shewed that no confidence could be placed in any calculations of the Indian Government. 4. Protesting against the pay of the officers being retrenched upon the vague assertion that "certain charges" had been omitted five years before, and calling upon the Indian Government to state what those charges were, and by whose neglect they had been omitted, before making such demands. 5. That a number of the Queen's officers were in Europe, and some of the Company's officers had since died, and all of these would of course refuse to refund a single farthing; they were beyond this arbitrary exercise of power by the Indian Government, and therefore a portion only of the captors suffered by these "certain charges" brought forward seven years after the booty was taken. 6. The retrenchment of pay was as unjust in detail as it was in principle and the concealment of items; it made a portion pay for the whole; it could not take from the two European regiments gone to England, and it did not venture to commit such an act of injustice on the Sepoys; therefore the officers in the power of the Government were to pay for the whole, because some Government subordinates made a mistake. 7. That such conduct deprived the officers of all security for prize money or pay; and saying that certain unknown omissions were made by certain unknown accountants, and therefore the Government retrenched their pay, shewed a strange contrast with the exact details and vouchers so imperiously and so properly exacted from individuals in their accounts with the Indian Government.

That was the protest which General Sir Charles Napier made to the Indian Government; but, as the East-India Company in England had overruled it, and ordered the pay to be deducted, this was done accordingly in the months of October and November 1850. In the following year (1851) General Sir Charles Napier arrived in England, and made an application to the East-India Company on the same subject, intimating, at the same time, that he had a legal right, and if his claim was not attended to he should take the opinion of a court of law upon the subject. The company refused to accede to the claim, and, therefore, the present application was made. Sir Charles Napier stated that he was induced to make this application, not so much on his own account, as for the sake of those other officers who were not in a position to maintain their rights. The sum in dispute was 2,000*l.* but that was only a small portion of the prize money (about 68,000*l.*) which had been awarded to Sir Charles Napier.

Three points will have to be considered:—1. Whether the company had any right to recover back any portion of this prize money after it had been distributed and paid over? 2. If the company had the right, could they stop it out of the officers' pay? 3. If they could not, was there any other remedy for recovery, except by mandamus, and would that writ lie? [Lord CAMPBELL.—The main question is, whether the writ will lie.] The 3 & 4 Vict. c. 37, s. 35, precludes the company from making any deductions from the pay of the officers: "No paymaster or other person shall receive any fees or make any deductions whatsoever out of the pay or allowances of any officer or soldier (without his consent be obtained thereto), other than the usual deduction, or such other necessary deduction as shall from time to time be required to be made, according to the regulations of the service." The last clause refers to the case where soldiers' accoutrements are deficient, and allows small deductions to be made from time to time on that account, according to the regulations of the service. But with that exception it is enacted, "that every paymaster or other officer, having received any officer's or soldier's pay and allowances, who shall unlawfully detain for the space of one month the same, or refuse to pay the same when it shall become due, according to the several rates established by the regulations of the service, shall upon proof thereof before a court-martial be discharged from his employment, and shall forfeit 800 company's rupees, and be liable to such other punishment as shall by the court-martial be awarded," &c. Sir Charles Napier was the Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's forces and of the company's forces in India, and his pay in such capacity was pay within the meaning of the Act. The company had no right to stop anything from the pay of an officer, even in respect of a legal demand. It has been decided in the case of Gibson v. The East-India Company, 5 Bing. N. C. 262, that an action would not lie for recovery of pay. If an action would lie, it must be upon contract; but the company being a corporation, could not contract except under its common seal. In the case referred to, the action was for a retiring pension in the nature of half-pay. The demand here is for pay which the company were ordered by the Act to pay. It is a contract of imperfect obligation. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—How can this Court compel the performance of a duty of imperfect obligation?] The 128th section of the 33 Geo. 3, c. 52, in effect provides that the expenses of the troops in India should be paid by the company, and that the money so to be paid should be paid by the company. The Act said, "You shall pay my troops, and that without any deductions." This entitles Sir Charles Napier to the interference of this Court in a case where the company refuses to discharge a duty imposed upon them by the Act. The following cases were cited: Gidley v. Lord Palmerston, 3 B. & B. 275; R. v. The Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, 4 A. & E. 286; Same v. Same, 4 A. & E. 976; Ex parte Ricketts, 4 A. & E. 999; and R. v. The Lords of the Treasury (in Re the Queen Dowager's Annuity), 20 L.J. 305, Q.B. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Saturday, June 5.—Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—This was a motion for a rule to shew cause why a mandamus should not be issued, directed to the East-India Company, commanding them to pay to General Sir Charles Napier the sum of 20,198 rupees, which he alleges is the amount of an improper deduction from his pay as Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's forces, and as commander of the forces of the East-India Company, in the months of October and November, 1850, which is due from the company as arrears of such pay. The first question to be considered is, whether, if it is payable and is retained without any reason being assigned, there is any jurisdiction in this Court to order a mandamus for the arrears to be paid by the East-India Company? If there be not, we cannot entertain the question whether the East-India Company were justified in making the deduction. The appellant must make out that there is a legal obligation on the East-India Company to pay him the sum demanded, and that he has no remedy to recover it by action at law. The latter point becomes immaterial only when the former is established, for the existence of a legal right and obligation is the foundation of every writ of mandamus. But it seems to us that the attempt to shew that there was any obligation on the East-India Company which the law would enforce to pay any sum of money to Sir Charles Napier, either as commander of the Queen's forces, or as commander of the native troops, has failed. The legal obligation, which is the proper substratum of a mandamus, can only arise from common law or from contracts. Of course the obligation here contended for cannot arise from the common law, and is not rested on a contract. We have, therefore, to see whether there be any enactment of the Legislature by which it can be supported. It was not contended that an officer in the Queen's army at home could apply to us for a mandamus on the ground that his pay had been improperly detained, and the application is entirely founded on certain statutes respecting the East-India Company as governors of the dominions belonging to the Crown in India. I will examine these statutes in their chronological order. The first statute relied on is the 33 Geo. 3, c. 52, for continuing in the East-India Company the possession of the British territories in India, and for establishing other regulations for the government of the said territory. By sec. 128 of that statute it is enacted, "that all sums issued by the said paymaster-general of his majesty's forces for and on account of his majesty's forces serving in India, or for raising and supplying recruits for the same, shall be repaid by the said company, and that the actual expenses only which, since the 24th day of December, 1792, have been or which hereafter shall be incurred for the support and maintenance of the said troops shall be borne and defrayed by the said company." But this is an arrangement between the East-India Company and the British Government, and establishes no privity between the company and any officer of the company. Then comes the 53 Geo. 3, c. 155, by which, in common language, the charter of the East-India Company was renewed, and which enacts by sec. 55 that the revenues of the company shall be applied first to defray all the charges and expenses of the "raising and maintaining the forces as well European as native, military, artillery, and marine, on the establishments in the East Indies." Still this appropriates no part of these revenues in particular to the Commander-in-Chief of the forces. The next statute we have is the Indian Mutiny Act (the 4 Geo. 4, c. 81). This enumerates a great number of offices of which military men may be deprived by court-martial in the East Indies, and by secs. 43 and 44 enacts "that no paymaster shall receive any fees or make any deductions out of the pay or allowances which shall be due to any officer or soldier in the company's army other than the usual deductions; and if any officer or paymaster shall unlawfully detain or withhold for the space of one month the pay and allowances of any officer or officers after such pay and allowances shall be by him or them received, then upon proof thereof, before a court-martial, every such paymaster or officer so offending shall be discharged from his employment, and shall forfeit to the informer, upon conviction before the said Court, eight hundred Sicca rupees, and be liable to such further punishment as shall by the court-martial be awarded: Provided always, that it shall and may be lawful for the Governor-general in Council, or the Governor in Council, at the said presidencies respectively, to give orders for withholding the pay of any officer, non-commissioned officer, or soldier, for any period during which such officer, non-commissioned officer, or soldier, shall be absent without leave." But as yet no amount of pay is assigned to the Commander-in-Chief or any officer, and no directions are given to the Governor to issue any order for pay or allowances, and no time is mentioned for any pay or allowances which become due. We were then referred to the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 85, under which India is now governed, and will continue to be governed, until the 30th of April, 1854. By sec. 79 of that statute it is enacted "that the return to Europe of any Governor-General or Commander-in-Chief shall be deemed a resignation of his office, and that the salary and other allowances of any such Governor-General or other officer respectively shall cease from the day of such resignation." This certainly supposes the Commander-in-Chief is entitled to some pay or allowance from his retirement and resignation, but is entirely silent as to what shall be the amount, or by whom or when paid. Nor is the applicant's case at all advanced by the statutes 7 Wm. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 47, on which reliance was placed. This Act provides that the prohibition of the payment of salaries to officers in the service of the East-India Company their absence from duty shall not extend to during sickness, and says the directors shall have power to order the refunding of any part of the salary or allowance received by any officer or servant of the company, if it shall appear that the permission to such officer to quit the presidency was granted or obtained, and that the sum so to be refunded shall be a debt due and recoverable by the company; but without giving any officer any right which he had not before possessed. Chief reliance was, however, placed on the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 37, s. 35, which was asserted to be a statutable recognition of the right of the Commander-in-Chief to be paid his salary by the company without any deduction. But that statute, when examined, turns out merely to be a new edition of the Indian Mutiny Act, and sec. 35 is no more than an addition or consolidation of secs. 42 & 43 of the 4 Geo. 4, c. 81, and therefore merely renders the paymaster liable to be tried by a court-martial for receiving fees or making improper deductions, or retaining in his hands any pay or allowances for more than a month after the receipt thereof. The statutory obligation upon the company to pay the salary is in no degree established. Sir Charles Napier in his affidavit says, that the pay of the forces serving in India has been and is payable and paid by the said company, and that during the filling of the said offices the proper pay and salary of this deponent as Commander-in-Chief, under his said commissions from her Majesty and the East-India Company, was the sum of 14,305 rupees per calendar month, which is equivalent to 1,480*l.* 11*s.* sterling, and was payable monthly, on or about the third day of each month, for the next preceding month, according to the usual practice of this deponent with the East-India Company. He thus relies merely on facts which may amount to an honourable, but it does not amount to a legal obligation. We will now examine the authorities quoted by the learned counsel who made the motion. He began with the case of Gibson v. The East-India Company, in which the Court of C. P. held that the retiring pension of a military officer does not on his bankruptcy pass to his assignees. But this was cited with a view (as we thought at the time) to shew that no action will lie for the arrears in question at the suit of Sir Charles Napier against the East-India Company, and it is no argument to shew a legal obligation. Chief Justice Tindal there says, "It is clear that no action could be supported against any one to recover the arrears of half-pay granted by the Crown, at least, unless the money has been specifically appropriated by the Government, and placed in the hands of the paymaster or agent to the account of the particular officer. And there is no ground upon general principle to hold that an action could be maintained against any one, unless under the same circumstances in the present case." "If a retiring pension, which is given for former services, can be recovered by action, why should not the pay and allowances for actual services be equally so during their continuance? And yet how frequently is it not only expedient, but absolutely necessary, that military pay should be suspended and kept in arrear beyond the day when it becomes due, and until the service in respect of which it is earned has been entirely completed? Not to mention the expense and inconvenience which must arise if a suit might be instituted by each individual officer, and the prejudice which such litigation would necessarily occasion to the military service." "The grant in question, therefore, appears to us to range itself under that class of obligations which is described by jurists as imperfect obligations,—obligations which want the 'vinculum juris,' although binding in moral equity and conscience; and to be a grant which the East-India Company, as governors, are bound, in foro conscientiæ, to make good, but of which the performance is to be sought for by petition, memorial or remonstrance, not by action in a court of law." These observations seem to us to be equally applicable to the full salary of a commander-in-chief as to the half-pay of a lieutenant-colonel, not only to an action, but to a proceeding in a court of law for a mandamus. We have been also referred to the case of Reg. v. The East-India Company, 4 B. & Ad. 532, where a mandamus was actually granted, ordering them to transmit to India a despatch in the political department, as altered by the Board of Control. But this was under an Act of Parliament, the 33 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 12, which expressly imposed on the directors a legal obligation to do so. Reliance is then placed on the case of Reg. v. The Lords of the Treasury, in which this Court granted a mandamus to the Lords of the Treasury to pay to Mr. Carmichael Smyth the arrears of a pension granted by the Crown, for services performed. But it has been rightly stated that this decision went entirely on the ground that the Lords of the Treasury had admitted that they had in their hands the sum of money in question, and that they had appropriated it to his use. The last case cited was that of Reg. v. The Lords of the Treasury, re The Queen Dowager's Annuity, which is to be found in 20 L. J. 305, in which this Court intimated an opinion that if the arrears of the annuity claimed had been due, a mandamus would have been the proper remedy to recover it. But the ground was, that in fact the right existed, and was a legal right, and there was no mode of enforcing it except by a mandamus, for the annuity was charged on the consolidated fund, and the stat. 4 & 5, Wm. 4, c. 15, s. 13, enacted that the payment of such an annuity can only be obtained by the warrant of the Lords of the Treasury, and imposed on them the duty of granting a warrant, when the payment of the annuity became due. Thus, upon a full examination of the statutes, and decisions relied upon, it is quite manifest that the distinguished officer, who now seeks redress by a writ of mandamus, has mistaken his course, and therefore the rule to shew cause, for which he has applied, cannot be granted. Rule refused.

REG. v. THE TRUSTEES OF BIRKENHEAD DOCKS.

Poor-rate—Liability of dock trustees—Public purposes—Surplus funds.

Trustees, who occupy land for public purposes only, are nevertheless rateable to the relief of the poor, unless they occupy under some Act of Parliament, which either expressly or impliedly prohibits the application of any portion of their funds to the payment of poor rates. Where, therefore, a corporate body created by Act of Parliament was in occupation of land, used as docks, with power to take dues, &c. which they might lower or raise from time to time, as they thought fit, below a certain amount, and their Act of Parliament provided that all sums received by them should be applied to the costs and expenses of keeping the docks in repair, paying officers, and otherwise carrying the Act into execution, and also to the payment of the principal and interest of money borrowed, under such regulations as they should from time to time think fit:

Held, that this did not amount to a prohibition against the payment of rates; and that the trustees were not exempt.

This was a case stated after notice of appeal by the trustees of the Birkenhead Docks against a rate for the relief of the poor made by the overseers of Birkenhead.

The trustees are the owners and occupiers of land converted into docks under the provisions of several Acts of Parliament—viz. 7 & 8 Vict. c. lxxix; 8 Vict. c. iv.; and 11 & 12 Vict. c. cxliv.

By the first of those Acts commissioners were appointed for the construction and management of the docks and basins. By s. 39 they might borrow money on mortgage of the tolls and property vested in them; by s. 55 the soil of the shore was vested in them; and by s. 57 they were empowered to purchase lands to be conveyed to them in fee for the purposes of the Act. By s. 153 they were authorised to take certain dues and levy rates not exceeding a specified amount. By s. 225 they had power to alter the rates from time to time at their discretion within the limited amount; and s. 227 required that all sums received by the commissioners should be applied to the expenses of keeping the docks in repair, paying officers, and otherwise carrying the Act into execution, and also to the payment of principal and interest of money borrowed, under such conditions and regulations as the commissioners should think fit.

By stat. 8 Vict. c. iv. further powers for raising money were conferred; and by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. cxliv. the property in the docks was transferred from the old commissioners to a new corporation, thereby created for the purpose of completing the works, &c. which new corporation consisted of a certain number of the mortgagees of the tolls under the previous Acts. The only question was, whether the trustees were rateable in respect of the dock property.

Saturday, May 1.—Archbold, for the respondents.—The docks are clearly rateable property, and the appellants are found to be the occupiers.

Pashley, contrà, was then called upon.—This case falls within R. v. Liverpool, 7 B. & C. 61, where the Liverpool Docks were held not rateable.

Archbold then resumed his argument. R. v. Liverpool is distinguishable from this case; because there was in the Act of Parliament, upon which that decision turned, a clause obliging the commissioners to lower their dues as soon as their debt was paid off, so that they should not exceed the amount necessary to keep the docks in repair; and the Court held that that was tantamount to a prohibition against the application of the dues to the payment of rates. In the Birkenhead Dock Acts there is no such clause. (He referred to secs. 39, 55, 57, 125, 153, 216, 225, 227, of 7 & 8 Vict. c. lxxix.; 8 Vict. c. iv.; and 11 & 12 Vict. c. cxliv.) There is no clause requiring them to diminish the amount of their rates. In fact, the present trustees are mortgagees in possession, and they are raising money for the payment of their own debt and that of the other mortgagees. The appellants come within the very words of the stat. 43 Eliz. for they are the actual occupiers of the land.

Pashley, contrà.—There is nothing in the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. cxliv. to shew that these trustees are mortgagees in possession. That Act transfers the powers of the commissioners to a new corporation; but the reason is not explained. The corporate body is kept perfectly distinct from the body of mortgagees. Then, how is this distinguishable from R. v. Liverpool, 7 B. & C. 61,—the principle of which has been frequently recognised in other cases? It is said that there is no express provision requiring the trustees to reduce their rates; but ss. 225 and 227, taken together, do in effect prohibit them from keeping up the rates beyond the amount absolutely necessary for the purposes of the Act. The whole of their funds must be applied to the purposes of the Act, which are of a public nature; and they are bound, therefore, as the occasion arises, to lower the rates, so as to prevent any surplus. The purposes are certainly public; because the works benefit the whole community generally, and the town of Birkenhead in particular. (He cited R. v. The Mayor of Liverpool, 9 Ad. & Ell. 435; and R. v. Badcock, 6 Q. B. Rep. 784.)

Archbold, in reply. The trustees are invested with the option of reducing the rates or not, as they please. If they chose not to reduce them, neither this Court nor a Court of Equity could compel them to do so. (R. v. St. Giles, York, 3 B. & Ad. 573.)

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.(a)—We are of opinion that the rate in question is valid. The appellants are primâ facie liable to it under 43 of Elizabeth, c. 2, s. 1, which enacts that every occupier of land, houses, &c. shall be rated to the relief of the poor. They are seised in fee, and are actually in possession of the Birkenhead Docks, from which they receive a large revenue. Their exemption from rateability would operate as a great hardship upon the ratepayers within the township. This property before it was applied to the construction of the docks was rateable, and rated to the relief of the poor, and from it being applied to this great commercial speculation, the number of destitute persons within the township must be considerably increased. Still we are only to consider what the law upon the subject is, and we are bound to pronounce in favour of the exemption, if it has been conferred by any subsequent statute. The appellants do not, and could not rely upon the mere circumstance of their being trustees, and so not entitled to any personal advantage from the property vested in them. They contend that the dues to which they are entitled are appropriated to public purposes, and therefore they are exempt from rateability according to the decision of this Court in Rex. v. The Inhabitants of Liverpool, 7 B. & C. 61. Where no one can be found who may be considered the occupier of lands and houses, the stat. of Eliz. does not extend to them; but where there are occupiers of lands and houses within the meaning of that statute the exemption must rest on some subsequent enactment of the Legislature. We observe that this doctrine was admitted to be acted on in R. v. The Commissioners of Salter's Load Sluice, 4 T. R. 730, from the marginal note of which the exemption on this ground of public purposes takes its origin. The question argued at the bar, and to be considered as decided there, was, whether the Legislature by the local Act intended impliedly to exempt tolls from rateability? I find that Lord Kenyon, in delivering the judgment of the Court, uses some expressions about there being no occupier, because the commissioners were merely trustees, but the decision rested only on the clause in the local Act, which directed the tolls to be applied and disposed of for the several uses and purposes of the said Act, and to no other use or purpose whatever. The question was, whether this amounted to a prohibition from applying the tolls to the payment of poor-rates, and the Court adopts this construction instead of holding the meaning of the words to be, that the clear produce of the tolls, after deducting the expense of collecting them, and all the charges to which the property was liable, such as poor-rates, was to be applied to those purposes. We think that the decision in the Liverpool case can only be supported by similar reasoning. There the local Act directed that the rates and dues received for the use of the dock should be applied to paying off the debt incurred in making it and to keeping it in repair, and that these purposes having been effected the rates should be lowered for the benefit of those using the docks. Lord Tenterden would not adopt that construction of the statute, that this charge is a deduction from the fund so to be applied; but still he proceeded on the special statutable right, saying the statute under which the dock rates in question are levied, does not contain an express direction that the tolls shall be applied to the purposes specified and no other, but it directs that certain burthens shall be discharged, and that then the rates shall be lowered; and therefore that any application of those rates to other purposes not specified would be a direct violation of the statute. It follows that if we recognise this case, we must look to see whether by the local Acts respecting the Birkenhead Docks the Legislature has conferred the exemption or not. By the 7 & 8 Vict. c. lxxix. s. 153, the commissioners who occupy the property are empowered to levy certain rates, upon trust; and by section 225, to lower, to alter, and again to raise the rates, at their discretion, provided they do not exceed a specified amount. By sec. 227, all sums received from dues, or from the sale of land, or from other rates are to be applied to the costs and expenses of keeping the docks in repair, and paying the officers and servants employed in them by the commissioners and others carrying the Act into execution, and paying the interest and repaying the principal of any sum of money which shall be borrowed by the commissioners, under such regulations and conditions as the commissioners may from time to time think fit. We are of opinion that these enactments are not affected by any evidence of an intention on the part of the Legislature to exempt the Birkenhead Docks from liability to contribute to the relief of the poor. Assuming that the purposes enumerated in sec. 227 were public purposes (but about which there may be considerable difficulty) the obligation to lower the tolls, so much relied upon in the Liverpool case, is entirely wanting. There is nothing amounting to a prohibition against the payment of other charges than those specified; and we can find nothing to shew that the commissioners may not pay poor-rates along with other charges before the net amount of the funds is ascertained, which may be applied to the purposes of the rate. There has been no statement, and there has been no suggestion that the rates, at the scale to which they may be lawfully raised, would not, after the payments are discharged, be sufficient for all these purposes. We therefore consider that the present case is distinguishable from those relied on, and that the property of the appellants not being expressly or impliedly exempted by the Legislature, ought to bear its share of the public burdens with other lands and houses in the township. It is unnecessary to examine whether the case of Rex v. Liverpool is affected by Rex v. Badcock, 6 Q.B. 787; or Reg. v. Longwood, 13 Q.B. 116; and Reg. v. Harrowgate, 20 L.J. 25, M.C. or any more subsequent decisions. We have now only to give judgment for the respondents.

Rate affirmed.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF DENTON.

Highway—Statute—Repeal.

An indictment framed under 59 Geo. 3, c. xxii. s. 4, which enacted that in any indictment against, &c. for not repairing any highway, it should be sufficient to allege generally that such township ought to repair and amend, &c. without setting forth any custom or prescription, &c. was preferred and found by the grand jury. Before the trial, the 59 Geo. 3, c. xxii. was repealed by the 14 & 15 Vict. c. x. relating to the same highways, but the provision allowing the general pleading was not re-enacted. At the trial, the verdict was found for the prosecutor:

Held, that inasmuch as the counts of the indictment were bad at common law, and the 59 Geo. 3, c. xxii. was repealed, the judgment upon them must now be arrested.

The defendants were indicted for the non-repair of a highway within their township. The indictment contained four counts, the first two upon the common law liability to repair, and the third and fourth were framed upon the 59 Geo. 4, c. xxii. s. 4.

Third Count.—That there hath been and still is in the township of Denton, in the parish of Manchester, in the county of Lancaster, a certain common and public Queen's highway, to wit, the Stockport and Ashton turnpike road, leading, &c. used by and for all the liege subjects, &c. with their horses, coaches, carts, and carriages, to go, return, &c. and that a certain part thereof, situate in Denton, aforesaid (describing it particularly), on the said day, &c. and thence continually afterwards, until the taking of this inquisition, at the township of Denton aforesaid, was, and yet is, very ruinous, &c. for want of due reparation and amendment of the same, so that the liege subjects, &c. in, through, by, and over the said last-mentioned part of the said Queen's highway, from the said day hitherto could not, nor yet can, go, return, pass, ride, and labour as they were wont and ought to do, &c. That the said highway is not a highway, in respect whereof certain proceedings mentioned in the 59 Geo. 3, c. xxii. entituled, "An Act for providing that the several Highways within the Parish of Manchester, in the County Palatine of Lancaster, shall be repaired by the Inhabitants of the respective Townships within which the same are situate," or any of the said proceedings, have been had, or in respect whereof certain verdicts in the said Acts of Parliament mentioned, or any of them, have been given, or in respect whereof any verdict had, before the passing of the said Act of Parliament, been obtained against the inhabitants of the parish of Manchester aforesaid at large. That the inhabitants of the township of Denton aforesaid ought to repair and amend the said part of the said highway so being in decay, when and so often as it shall be necessary.

The fourth count of the indictment differed from the third only in the omission of the averment that the highway was not one of those mentioned in the 59 Geo. 3, c. xxii. in respect whereof the proceedings set out had been taken.

On the trial of the prosecution at the last Liverpool Assizes, it was proved that the road was out of repair, and that it had been repaired for more than fifty years, not by the inhabitants of Denton, but by the neighbouring township of Haughton. The only question left to the jury was, whether the road in question was in the township of Denton or Haughton, and the jury found that it was in Denton.

The 59 Geo. 3, c. xxii. in

Sec. 1 recited, "That the parish of Manchester consisted of twenty-nine townships; that with the exception of two of them (Denton not being one) they had always had separate surveyors of highways, and that there were none for the parish at large; that repairs of all highways, with certain exceptions, were performed by the inhabitants of the townships in which they are respectively situate; and then, after the recital of proceedings against several of the townships, proceeded to enact that the inhabitants of the parish of Manchester should not be liable to the repairs of any highways in respect of which the recited indictments had been preferred, and verdicts obtained; nor of any other highways in respect of which verdicts had been given against the parish at large, if any such there should be."

Sec. 4 enacted, "That in any indictment, &c. against the inhabitants of any of the said townships for not repairing any highway within such township, it shall be sufficient to allege generally that the inhabitants of such township ought to repair and amend such highway, without setting forth any custom or prescription for that purpose, or referring to the authority of this Act."

After the indictment was preferred and found, but before plea pleaded, the 59 Geo. 3, c. xxii. was repealed by the 14 & 15 Vict. c. x. "An Act for Relief to the several Townships in the Parish of Manchester from the Repair of Highways not situate within such Townships respectively."

A rule nisi was obtained in Easter Term for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against the evidence, or to arrest the judgment on the third and fourth counts of the indictment.
